[8061] ● Private complaint—Maintainability.—Court is barred from taking cognizance of offences mentioned in Sections 172 to 188, I.P. Code except on a written complaint by the public servant concerned—Private complaint not maintainable. If the public servant concerned does not or refuses to make a complaint,, some other public servant to whom he is administratively subordinate can prefer a complaint. State of U.P. v. Mata Bhikh, AIR 1994 SC 1901 : (1994) 4 SCC 95 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 831.

[8062] ● Complaint—Institution of.—A complaint under Section 20 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 could be instituted apart from Central or State Government, by a person authorised in that behalf. Such a person who is authorised to institute complaint could, "give his written consent for the prosecution by the Food Inspector," A.K. Roy, Chief Medical Officer, Chandigarh undisputedly, and as is clear from Notification No. 5210-UTF-4-67/9461 issued on 29th April, 1967 by the Chandigarh Administration in exercise of powers conferred by sub-section (1) of Section 20 of the said Act was a person authorised to institute a complaint. Therefore, he could give his consent as well for launching of prosecution. In doing so he was neither delegating his power nor acting contrary to Section 20. He was acting within the scope of authority as a person authorised to institute complaint under Section 20(1) of the Act and has been placed at par with other authorities designated in the sub-section for purposes of granting consent. Food Inspector, Health Deptt., U.T. Chandigarh v. Krishna Dhaba, AIR 1994 SC 664 (665) : 1994 CrLJ 624 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 172.

[8063] ● Complaint by Revenue Court—Offence of forging documents.—The appellants in all these appeals were tried for offences punishable under Sections 466, 468, 471 read with Section 120-B, I.P. Code, as well as under Section 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947. The object of the conspiracy was to frustrate the provisions of the newly notified Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act, 1961 insofar as the provisions affected the interest of the conspirators and thereby to retain the large areas of lands with the leaders of the conspiracy and their relatives, etc. To achieve this object, it is alleged that certain revenue records and the records of the concerned sugar factory were forged and some incorrect entries were made. Regarding the offences committed before the start of the proceedings, no complaint is necessary by the Court concerned either in the old Code or in the new Code. Therefore, the contention that the absence of a complaint by the Revenue Court was a bar for taking cognizance by the criminal Court in respect of these offences which were committed even before the start of the proceedings before the Revenue Court cannot be sustained. Mahadev Bapuji Mahajan v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1994 SC 1549 (1550) : 1994 Supp (3) SCC 748 : 1994 CrLJ 1389.

[8064] ● Complaint—Framing of charge—Prima facie case when made out.—If on the basis of materials on record, a Court could come to the conclusion that commission of the offence is a probable consequence, a case for framing of charge exists. To put it differently, if the Court were to think that the accused might have committed the offence it can frame the charge, though for conviction the conclusion is required to be that the accused has committed the offence. It is apparent that at the stage of framing of charge, probative value of the materials on record cannot be gone into; the materials brought on record by the prosecution has to be accepted as true at that stage. State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, AIR 1996 SC 1744 : (1996) 4 SCC 659 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 820 : 1996 CrLJ 2448 : 1996 (2) Crimes 64 (SC).

[8065] ● Order of ASJ not to be construed as complaint.—The application under Section 482, CrPC was not filed against filing of complaint but against direction to file complaint. It could not be treated as complaint. Further, Section 340(3) of the CrPC requires that a complaint made under the section could be signed in cases other than the one filed by the High Court by the Presiding Officer of that Court. The order of the Additional District and Sessions Judge, thus, could not be construed as complaint. No appeal could be filed against it under Section 341, CrPC. Surinder Gupta v. Bhagwan Devi, AIR 1996 SC 509 (510) : (1994) 4 SCC 657 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1318.

[8066] ● Quashing of FIR and complaint by High Court.—The settled principle of law is that at the stage of quashing an FIR or complaint the High Court is not justified in embarking upon an enquiry as to the probability, reliability or genuineness of the allegations made therein. Of course as has been pointed out in Bhajan Lal's case AIR 1992 SC 604, an FIR or a complaint may be quashed if the allegations made therein are so absurd and inherently improbable that no prudent person can ever reach a just conclusion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused but the High Court has not recorded such a finding, obviously because on the allegations in the FIR it was not possible to do so. For the aforesaid reasons, we must hold that the High Court has committed a gross error of law in quashing the FIR and the complaint. Rupan Deol Bajaj v. Kanwar Pal Singh Gill, AIR 1996 SC 309 (315) : (1995) 6 SCC 194 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 1059 : 1996 CrLJ 381.

[8067] ● Complaint—Delay in disposal of.—The counsel for the appellant on the strength of decision of this Court in Santosh De v. Archana Guha, (1994) 2 SCC 420 contents that the appellant could not be blamed for not producing evidence after the appearance of the accused because of the dilatory tactics adopted by the accused in raking up a vexatious enquiry under Section 340, CrPC and then to be faulting that no evidence was produced, when there existed preliminary evidence disclosing commission of offence. It appears that the accused deliberately delayed the matter and would not, thus, be entitled to the beneficial employment of Section 245(3) of the CrPC. It shall not be in the interest of justice to discharge the accused for the conduct above exhibited. It is unnecessary to apportion the blame as to the delay in the disposal of the complaint except to state that a substantial part of it was attributable to the accused. Swarnlata Sarkar v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1996 SC 2158 (2160) : (1996) 4 SCC 733 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 855 : 1996 CrLJ 2885 : JT 1996 (3) SC 537.

[8068] ● Private complaint—Production of forged document.—For taking cognizance of an offence, the document, the foundation for forgery, if produced before the Court or given in evidence, the bar of taking cognizance under Section 195(1)(b)(ii) gets attracted and the Criminal Court is prohibited to take cognizance of offence unless a complaint in writing is filed as per the procedure prescribed under Section 340 of the Code by or on behalf of the Court. Surjit Singh v. Balbir Singh, AIR 1996 SC 1592 : (1996) 2 SCC 533 : 1996 CrLJ 2304.

[8069] ● Complaint to Magistrate disclosing cognizance offence.—When a written complaint disclosing a cognizable offence is made before a Magistrate, he may take cognizance upon the same under Section 190(1)(a) of the Code and proceed with the same in accordance with provisions of Chapter XV. The other option available to the Magistrate in such a case is to send the complaint to the appropriate Police Station under Section 156(3) for investigation. Once such a direction is given under sub-section (3) of Section 156 the police is required to investigate into that complaint under sub-section (1) thereof and on completion of investigation to submit a 'police report' in accordance with Section 173(2) on which a Magistrate may take cognizance under Section 190(1)(b)—but not under 190(1)(a). Since a complaint filed before a Magistrate cannot be a police report in view of the definition of complaint referred to earlier and since the investigation of a 'cognizable case' by the police under Section 156(1) has to culminate in a police report the complaint as soon as an order under Section 156(3) is passed thereon—transforms itself to a report given in writing within the meaning of Section 154 of the Code, which is known as the First Information Report (FIR). As under Section 156(1) the police can only investigate a cognizable 'case', it has to formally register a case on that report.

Whenever a Magistrate directs an investigation on a complaint the police has to register a cognizable case on that complaint treating the same as the FIR and comply with the requirements of the above Rules. It, therefore, passes our comprehension as to how the direction of a Magistrate asking the police to 'register a case' makes an order of investigation under Section 156(3) legally unsustainable. Indeed, even if a Magistrate does not pass a direction to register a case, still in view of the provisions of Section 156(1) of the Code which empowers the police to investigate into a cognizable 'case' and the Rules framed under the Indian Police Act, 1861 it (the police) is duty bound to formally register a case and then investigate into the same. The provisions of the Code, therefore, does not in any way stand in the way of a Magistrate to direct' the police to register a case at the police station and then investigate into the same. In our opinion when an order for investigation under Section 156(3) of the Code is to be made the proper direction to the Police would be 'to register a case at the police station treating the complaint as the First Information Report and investigate into the same. Madhu Bala v. Suresh Kumar, AIR 1997 SC 3104 : (1997) 8 SCC 476 : 1997 CrLJ 3757 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 558 : 1997 (3) Crimes 162.

[8070] ● Court at stage of framing charge to consider version of person complaining.—What the Court has to consider at the stage of framing of the charge is whether the version of the person complaining together with his/her explanation is prima facie believable or not. State of Maha- rashtra v. Priya Sharan Maharaj, AIR 1997 SC 2041 : (1997) 4 SCC 393 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 584 : 1997 CrLJ 2248 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 462 : 1997 (1) Crimes 275 (SC).

[8071] ● Non-appearance of complainant.—Reading Section 256, CrPC 1973 in its entirety would reveal that two constraints are imposed on the Court for exercising the power under the section. First is, if the Court thinks that in a situation it is proper to adjourn the hearing then the Magistrate shall not acquit the accused. Second is, when the Magistrate considers that personal attendance of the complainant is not necessary on that day, the Magistrate has the power to dispense with his attendance and proceed with the case. When the Court notices that the complainant is absent on a particular day, the Court must consider whether personal attendance of the complainant is essential on that day for the progress of the case and also whether the situation does not justify the case being adjourned to another date due to any other reason. If the situation does not justify the case being adjourned, the Court is free to dismiss the complaint and acquit the accused. But if the presence of the complainant on that day was quite unnecessary, then resorting to the step of axing down the complaint may not be a proper exercise of the power envisaged in the section. The discretion must, therefore, be exercised judicially and fairly without impairing the cause of administration of criminal justice. In the present case we have no manner of doubt that the Magistrate should not have resorted to the axing process particularly since the complainant was already examined as a witness on the case besides examining yet another witness for the prosecution. Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand, AIR 1998 SC 596 (599) : (1998) 1 SCC 687 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 475 : 1998 CrLJ 856 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 176.

[8072] ● Complaint for dishonour of cheque.—Complainant must be a corporeal person who is capable of making physical presence in the Court. Its corrollary is that even if a complaint is made in the name of an incorporeal person (like a company or corporation) it is necessary that a natural person represents such juristic person in the Court and it is that natural person who is looked upon, for all practical purposes, to be the complainant in the case. In other words, when the complainant is a body corporate it is the de jure complainant, and it must necessarily associate a human being as de facto complainant to represent the former in Court proceedings. Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand, AIR 1998 SC 596 : (1998) 1 SCC 687 : 1998 CrLJ 856 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 176 : 1998 (1) Raj LW 129 : 1998 (1) Crimes 88 : 1998 (119) Pun LR 812.

[8074] ● Complaint not mentioning service of notice under Section 138 NI Act.—Complaint not mentioning that the notice has been served under Section 138 of Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 is not maintainable. Shakti Travel & Tours v. State of Bihar, JT 2000 (7) SC 563 : (2000) 4 Crimes 150 (SC) : 2000 (7) Supreme 90.

[8075] ● Complaint—Filing of in competent Court.—This Court could not have assumed jurisdiction by issue of a notice proposing conviction for forgery and making false statements at different stages in the Court punishable under Section 193, IPC without following the procedure prescribed under Sections 195 and 340, CrPC. Primarily, this Court does not exercise any original criminal jurisdiction in relation to offences arising under Section 193, IPC and, secondly, the seriousness of the charge arising under Section 193, IPC requires an elaborate inquiry and trial into the matter by the competent Criminal Court and a summary inquiry by mere issuing a show cause notice and considering affidavits or inquiry reports would not tantamount to a procedure provided under the Criminal Procedure Code.

The order made by this Court convicting the petitioner under Section 193, IPC is, therefore, one without jurisdiction and without following due procedure prescribed under law. Though it is not clear from the impugned order whether the powers under Article 142 of the Constitution were exercised to convict the petitioner under Section 193, IPC, we have proceeded on the assumption, that it is by exercise of that power that the impugned order had been made for there is no other provision enabling the passing of such an order.

To perpetuate an error is no virtue but to correct it is a compulsion of judicial conscience. We, therefore, unhesitatingly set aside the conviction of the petitioner for the offence under Section 193, IPC. We also, do not, at this stage, consider it expedient to direct the filing of a complaint in the competent Court as envisaged by Section 340, CrPC because the petitioner has already undergone the sentence imposed upon him for an offence under Section 193, IPC although set aside now by this order and we are upholding his conviction and sentence imposed under Article 129 of the Constitution of India for committing contempt of Court.

For the aforesaid reasons, the order made in writ petitions (criminal) Nos. 356-57 of 1996 convicting the petitioner under Section 193, IPC is recalled and set aside. M.S. Ahlawat v. State of Haryana, AIR 2000 SC 168 (171) : (2000) 1 SCC 278 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 193 : 2000 CrLJ 388 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 792.

[8076] ● Complaint—Filing of.—It is open to the appellant to file complaint or complaints before the Magistrate concerned in which necessary allegations or accusations of the various offences committed against him can be described. If any such complaint is filed before a Magistrate, the same shall be looked into and the procedure required by law shall be resorted to by the Magistrate concerned. In order to ensure personal protection for the appellant we permit him to make an application before the Magistrate concerned for affording police protection to him if the Magistrate is satisfied that appellant must be given police protection for the effective prosecution of his case, the Magistrate shall pass appropriate orders thereon. Pinkibasra v. State of Punjab, AIR 2000 SC 1758 : (2000) 9 SCC 46 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1248 : JT 2000 (2) SC 467.

[8077] ● Complaint case—Power of Magistrate.—The High Court should not have made comments on the averments contained in the complaint as the same remains only in the embryo stage because the complaint has not yet been forwarded by the Magistrate to the police as contemplated in Section 156(3) of the CrPC. Even that apart, any finding on the merits of the case at a stage when investigation is pending, would cause prejudice to the investigating agency as well as the accused concerned. Om Prakash Chug v. State of Haryana, AIR 2000 SC 2477 (2479) : (2000) 10 SCC 612 : 2000 CrLJ 3486.

[8078] ● Inherent power—Quashing of complaint.—In the instant case the factual score depicts that the respondents approached the petitioner for the purpose of securing Ethambutol Hydrochloride drug in bulk for sale and use in various pharmaceutical drugs and products being manufactured by the respondent-company. It is at this juncture that the petitioner has come out with a definite case that by reason of a promise of maintaining continuous supply of raw materials to the respondents herein for the purpose of manufacturing Ethambutol Hydrochloride and in such a way so as not to cause any interruption or hindrance to the manufacturing activity of the complainant's factory, the complainant-petitioner entered into an agreement. It is on the basis of the said agreement and failure to comply therewith, it is stated that the petitioner herein has lost a substantial amount of money to the extent of about one crore and the sufferance of loss has been by reason of specific assurance and representation which obviously turned out to be false. Misrepresentation on the part of the respondent-accused persons to the complainant, has been the major grievance and a definite and specific case has been made out that such a misrepresentation was intentionally effected since the accused persons were in the know of things that in the event the supplies are not effected, as per the agreement, the complainant is likely to suffer a wrongful loss which, as the complaint proceeds, in the interest of the transaction between the parties, the accused persons were bound to protect. On a careful reading of the complaint, it cannot be said that the complaint does not disclose the commission of an offence. The ingredients of the offences under Sections 415, 418 and 420, IPC cannot be said to be totally absent on the basis of the allegations in the complaint. Whether or not the allegations in the complaint are otherwise correct has to be decided on the basis of the evidence to be led at the trial in the complaint case but simply because of the fact that there is a remedy provided for breach of contract, that does not by itself clothe the Court to come to a conclusion that civil remedy is the only remedy available to the appellant herein. Considering the factual aspect of the matter, we unhesitatingly state that the issue involved in the matter under consideration is not a case in which the criminal trial should have been short-circuited. Medchl Chemicals & Pharma (P) Ltd. v. Biological E. Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 1869 : (2000) 3 SCC 269 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 615 : 2000 CrLJ 1487 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 301 : JT 2000 (2) SC 426.

[8079] ● Complaints—Investigation of.—All complaints shall be investigated with equal alacrity and with equal fairness irrespective of the financial capacity of the person lodging the complaint.

Financial crunch of any State treasury is no justification for allowing a private party to supply funds to the Police for conducting such investigation. Augmentation of the fiscal resources of the State for meeting the expenses needed for such investigations is the lookout of the executive. Failure to do it, is no premise for directing a complainant to supply funds to the Investigating Officer. Such funding by interested private parties would vitiate the investigation contemplated in the Code. A vitiated investigation is the precursor for miscarriage of criminal justice. Hence any attempt to create a precedent permitting private parties to support financial assistance to the police for conducting investigation should be nipped in the bud itself.

The Police investigation should necessarily be with the fund supplied by the State. It may be possible for a rich complainant to supply any amount of fund to the Police for conducting investigation into his complaint. But a poor man cannot afford to supply any financial assistance to the Police. It is an acknowledged reality that he who pays the piper calls the tune. So he would call the shots. Its corollary is that somebody who incurs the cost of anything would normally secure its control also. In our constitutional scheme, the Police and other statutory investigation agency cannot be allowed to be hackneyed by those who can afford it. Navinchandra N. Majithia v. State of Meghalaya, AIR 2000 SC 3275 : (2000) 8 SCC 323 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1510 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 661.

[8080] ● Privately founded police investigation.—Mere pendency of a civil proceeding before any Civil Court will not be a ground for quashing of the criminal proceeding or not to frame a charge against an accused, even if the assertions in the complaint petition together with the materials produced by the complainant, would constitute an offence. Maratt Rubber Ltd. v. J.K. Marattukalam, AIR 2000 SC 2017 : (2000) 9 SCC 547 : 2000 CrLJ 2780 : JT 2000 (4) SC 387 : 2000 (4) Crimes 29.

[8081] ● Complaint case—Forwarding of—Officer incharge Police station to.—The complaint filed by the appellant before the Magistrate should necessarily be forwarded to the officer-in-charge of the Police Station concerned as provided in Section 156 of the Code. Such officer has to register an FIR on the allegations contained in the complaint. If there is an aggrieved person on account of the investigation so carried on by the local Police, he can approach either the State Government or the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution for appropriate orders in the matter. Om Prakash Chugh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2000 SC 2477 (2478) : (2000) 10 SCC 612 : 2000 CrLJ 3486.

[8082] ● Inquiry—Sessions triable cases.—Section 202 of the CrPC is an enabling provision and it is a discretion of the Magistrate depending upon the facts of each case, whether to issue process straightway or to hold the enquiry. However, in case where enquiry is held, failure to comply with the statutory direction to examine all the witnesses would not vitiate further proceeding in all cases for the reasons that : (a) in a complaint filed by a public servant acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duties, the question of holding inquiry may not arise, (b) whether to hold inquiry or not is discretionary jurisdiction of the Magistrate, (c) even if he has decided to hold inquiry, it is his further discretion to examine the witnesses on oath. If he decides to examine witnesses on oath in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session, he shall call upon the complainant to produce all his witnesses and examine them on oath, (d) it would also depend upon facts of each case depending upon the prejudice caused to the accused by non-compliance of the said proviso (Section 465), and (e) that the objection with regard to non-compliance of proviso should be taken at the earlier stage when the charge is framed by the Sessions Court.

At initial stage, if objection is raised and it is found by the Sessions Court that by non-holding of inquiry, prejudice is caused to the accused, he may direct the Magistrate to follow the procedure prescribed under the proviso. It is no doubt true that by the use of the word "shall", it appears that language used in the proviso is of mandatory nature. At the same time, it is a procedural law and it is to be read in context of Section 200 which enables the Magistrate to issue process without holding any inquiry and that inquiry under Section 202 is itself discretionary one giving option to examine or not to examine witnesses on oath. Hence, proviso to the said sub-section is required to be read accordingly though couched in mandatory term by using the word "shall". Normally, the procedure prescribed therein should be followed, but non-observance of the said procedure may not vitiate further proceedings in all cases. Rosy v. State of Kerala, AIR 2000 SC 637 (648-649) : (2000) 2 SCC 230 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 379 : 2000 CrLJ 930 : JT 2000 (1) SC 84.

[8083] ● Case instituted on complaint—Committing of to Court of Sessions.—If a case instituted on complaint is committed to the Court of Session without complying with the requirements in Clause (i) of Section 208 of the CrPC how is it possible for the public prosecutor to know in advance what evidence he can adduce to prove the guilt of the accused? If no inquiry under Section 202 is to be conducted, a Magistrate who decides to proceed only on the averments contained in the complaint filed by a public servant (who is not a witness to the core allegation) and such a case is committed to the Court of Session, its inevitable consequence would be that the Sessions Judge has to axe down the case at the stage of Section 226 itself as the Public Prosecutor would then be helpless to state "by what evidence he proposes to prove the guilt of accused". If the offence is of a serious nature or is of public importance, the consequence then would be miscarriage of justice. Thus, I have no doubt that the proviso incorporated in sub-section (2) of Section 202 of the Code is not merely to confer a discretion on the Magistrate, but a compelling duty on him to perform in such cases. I wish to add that the Magistrate in such a situation is not obliged to examine witnesses who could not be produced by the complainant when asked to produce such witnesses. Of course, if the complainant requires the help of the Court to summon such witnesses, it is open to the Magistrate to issue such summons, for there is nothing in the Code which prevents the Magistrate from issuing such summons to the witnesses. Rosy v. State of Kerala, AIR 2000 SC 637 (644) : (2000) 2 SCC 230 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 379 : 2000 CrLJ 930 : JT 2000 (1) SC 84.

[8084] ● Complaint—Filing of after expiry of period of limitation.—In the present case, it is the admitted fact that the complaint was filed only long after the period indicated in Section 161 of the Bombay Police Act, 1951 was over, either with or without sanction from the State Government. Therefore, the complaint is irretrievably barred under the said provision. K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2000 SC 3346 (3350) : (2000) 6 SCC 195 : 2000 CrLJ 4592 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 521.

[8085] ● Allegations levelled in complaint not disclosing offence.—In the event, the Court on a perusal of the complaint comes to a conclusion that the allegations levelled in the complaint or charge-sheet on the face of it does not constitute or disclose any offence as alleged, there ought not to be any hesitation to rise up to the expectation of the people and deal with the situation as is required under the law. Frustrated litigants ought not to be indulged to give vent to their vindictiveness through a legal process and such an investigation ought not to be allowed to be continued since the same is opposed to the concept of justice which is paramount. Medchl Chemicals & Pharma (P) Ltd. v. Biological E. Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 1869 : (2000) 3 SCC 269 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 615 (618) : 2000 CrLJ 1487 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 301 : JT 2000 (2) SC 426.

[8086] ● Allegations in complaint not making out case.—Where a company committed offence under Section 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, then not only the company but also every person who at the time when the offence was committed, was in charge of and was responsible to the company for the conduct of the business of the company shall be deemed to be guilty of the offence and liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly. It follows that a person other than the company can be proceeded against under those provisions only if that person was incharge of and was responsible to the company for the conduct of its business. Allegations made in the complaint do not either in express words or with reference to the allegations contained therein make out a case that at the time of commission of the offence the appellant was incharge of and was responsible to the company for the conduct of its business. K.P.G. Nair v. Jindal Menthol India Ltd., 2000 CrLR (SC) 778 : JT 2000 (51) SC 519 : 2001 (2) Crimes 132.

[8087] ● Power of—Magistrate to take cognizance of offence under Section 200, CrPC on complaint.—I. (a) Under Section 200, Magistrate has jurisdiction to take cognizance of an offence on the complaint after examining upon oath the complainant and the witnesses present;

(b) When the complaint is made in writing by a public servant acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duties, the Magistrate need not examine the complainant and the witnesses;

(c) In such case, the Court may issue process or dismiss the complaint.

II. (a) The Magistrate instead of following the procedure stated above, may, if he thinks fit, postpone the issue of process and hold inquiry for the purpose of deciding whether or not there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the person accused. Such inquiry can be held by him or by the Police Officer or by other person authorised by him.

(b) However, where it appears to the Magistrate that the offence complained of is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the direction of investigation by the Police Officer is not permissible and he is required to hold inquiry by himself. During that inquiry he may decide to examine the witnesses on oath. At that stage, proviso further gives mandatory directions that he shall call upon the complainant to produce all his witnesses and examine them on oath. The reason obviously is that in a private complaint, which is required to be committed to the Sessions Court for trial, it would safeguard the interest of the accused and he would not be taken by surprise at the time of trial and it would reveal the version of the witnesses whose list is required to be filed by complainant under Section 204 (2) before issuance of the process.

(c) The irregularity or non-compliance thereof would not vitiate the further proceeding in all cases. A person complaining of such irregularity should raise objection at the earliest stage and he should point out how prejudice is caused or is likely to be caused by not following the proviso. If he fails to raise such objection at the earliest stage, he is precluded from raising such objection later. Rosy v. State of Kerala, AIR 2000 SC 637 (650) : (2000) 2 SCC 230 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 379 : 2000 CrLJ 930 : JT 2000 (1) SC 84.

[8088] ● Magistrate not to take cognizance of complaint on move presentation.—Mere presentation of the complaint in the Court cannot be held to mean that its cognizance had been taken by the Magistrate. If the complaint is found to be premature, it can await maturity or be returned to the complainant for filing later and its mere presentation at an earlier date need not necessarily render the complaint liable to be dismissed or confer any right upon the accused to absolve himself from the criminal liability for the offence committed. Narsingh Das Tapadia v. Goverdhan Das Partani, AIR 2000 SC 2946 : (2000) 7 SCC 183 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1326 : 2000 (4) Crimes 12.

[8089] ● Complaint filed 25 days after expiry of period of limitation.—The mere fact that the complaint was filed 25 days after the expiry of the period of limitation, did not entitle the accused to seek his discharge under Section 245, CrPC because the complainant has, under law, a right to seek for extension of time under Section 473, CrPC. The complainant could satisfy the Magistrate on the facts and circumstances of the case that the delay was explainable which was occasioned on account of their bona fide belief to obtain the sanction for the purpose of filing the complaint. Rakesh Kumar Jain v. State, AIR 2000 SC 2754 (2757) : (2000) 7 SCC 656 : 2000 CrLJ 3973 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 649.

[8090] ● Complaint by petitioner still to be investigated.—In the instant case the petitioner had only filed a complaint under Section 156(3), CrPC before the Court of Special Sessions Judge. It is still to be investigated and found out by that Court whether the complaint lodged before that Court was false and had been made with the necessary intention or knowledge to induce the Court to exercise its lawful power so as to cause injury to the respondents. Once those ingredients are established and the charge is found to have been proved, then alone the Court can take cognizance of the offence and proceed in the manner directed by the High Court by the impugned judgment. But the stage at which such directions have been issued is premature. Subash Chandra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2000) 9 SCC 356 : JT 2000 (2) SC 26 : 2001 (3) Crimes 63 (SC).

[8091] ● Inquiry report by officer of Railway Protection Force under Section 8 of Railways Property (Unlawful Possession) Act mere complaint to Magistrate.—Respondents, who are the employees of the Railways, were caught red-handed on 25-3-1987 while carrying away Railways cement unlawfully for sale. Upon inquiry, offences under the Railways Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966 were held proved against the accused persons. Inquiry report (complaint) under the Act was filed by M.I. Khan, Inspector, RPF, Samastipur, against the accused persons in the Court of Judicial Magistrate. The accused persons filed applications before the Magistrate praying for their discharge on the ground that S. I. of Railway Protection Force, who submitted charge-sheet was not a "Police Officer" within the meaning of Section 173 of the Code and upon his report submitted in the Court, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance. The prayer was rejected by the Magistrate. State of Bihar v. Chandra Bhushan Singh, AIR 2001 SC 429 (430, 431) : (2001) 2 SCC 241 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 338 : (2001) CrLR (SC) 98.

[8092] ● Initiation of inquiry for offence under Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act be only on basis of complaint.—The offences under the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, are non-cognizable which cannot be investigated by a Police Officer under the Code. The result is that initiation of inquiry for an offence inquired into under this Act can be only on the basis of a complaint by an officer of the Force, as was actually done in this case. On plain reading of the order of the Magistrate, issuing summons to the respondents keeping in view the allegations made in the complaint and sworn statement of the appellant, it appears to us that a prima facie case is made out at that stage. There are no special features in the case to say that it is not expedient and not in the interest of justice to permit a prosecution to continue.....The High Court could not say at that stage that there was no reasonable prospect of conviction resulting in the case after a trial. Having regard to the facts of the instant case and in the light of decisions of this Court, we have no hesitation in holding that the High Court committed a manifest error in quashing the criminal proceedings exercising jurisdiction under Section 482, CrPC. M.N. Damani v. S.K. Sinha, AIR 2001 SC 2037 (2039, 2040) : (2001) 5 SCC 156 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 823 : 2001 CrLJ 2571.

[8093] ● Arbitrator cannot be termed to be a Court within the meaning of Section 195, CrPC, as such, question of applicability of Section 340, CrPC in a proceeding before the Arbitrator does not and cannot arise. Manohar Lal v. Vinesh Anand, AIR 2001 SC 1820, 1827 : (2001) 5 SCC 407 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1322 : 2001 CrLJ 2044.

[8094] ● Dismissal of complaint term—Sufficient grounds.—In case of a complaint under Section 200, CrPC or IPC, a Magistrate can take cognizance of the offence made out and then has to examine the complainant and his witnesses, if any, to ascertain whether a prima facie case is made out against the accused to issue process so that the issue of process is prevented on a complaint which is either false or vexatious or intended only to harass. Such examination is provided in order to find out whether there is or not sufficient ground for proceeding. The words "sufficient ground" used under Section 202 have to be construed to mean the satisfaction that a prima facie case is made out against the accused and not sufficient ground for the purpose of conviction. S.N. Palanitkar v. State of Bihar, AIR 2001 SC 2960 (2963) : (2002) 1 SCC 241 : 2001 CrLJ 4765 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 751.

[8095] ● Condition for making complaint under Section 340, CrPC.—The first condition, for filing a complaint under Section 340, CrPC is that a person who has given a false affidavit or evidence in a proceeding before a Court and secondly, in the opinion of the Court it is expedient in the interest of justice to make an inquiry against such a person in relation to the offence committed by him. There is no material or record to show that there was any application of mind by the Court that it was expedient in the interest of justice to make an inquiry and file a complaint against the appellant. The judgment does not show that the Court applied its mind regarding the second condition as to whether it is expedient in the interest of justice to make an inquiry into the false evidence given by the appellant and a complaint is to be filed. In the absence of application of mind in regard to expediency for filing complaint against the appellant, the order passed by the High Court directing the Prothonotary and Senior Master of the High Court to file a complaint against the appellant was vitiated. B.K. Gupta v. Damodar H. Bajaj, (2001) 9 SCC 742 : 2001 CrLJ 3297 : JT 2001 (4) SC 422.

[8096] ● Complainant to file complaint under Section 200, CrPC and then produce relevant material.—Once the trial has come to an end by convicting Rajasekaran under Section 304-A, IPC it could not be open for the investigating agency to further investigate into the matter in pursuance to a complaint of the complainant or a complaint being made by some other person. This being the position, there does not remain any material on the basis of which the High Court could have come to the conclusion that a wrong man has been convicted and the real accused is still at large and then directed criminal proceedings against Govindaraji. The complainant could have filed a complaint under Section 200 and then produced the relevant materials. In that case, the Magistrate could have proceeded with the complainant's case. N.R. Govindaraji v. S. Venkatachalam, 2002 CrLJ 263 (SC) : 2001 (1) CCR 68 : (2001) 1 SLT 267 (2).

[8097] ● Complaint case—Cognizance.—It is well settled that when Police after investigation files a final form under Section 173 of the CrPC the Magistrate may disagree with the conclusion arrived at by the Police and take cognizance in exercise of power under Section 190 of the CrPC. The Magistrate may not take cognizance and direct further investigation in the matter under Section 156 of the CrPC. Where the Magistrate accepts the final form submitted by the Police, the right of the complainant to file a regular complaint is not taken away and in fact on such a complaint being filed the Magistrate follows the procedure under Section 201 of the CrPC and takes cognizance if the materials produced by the complainant make out an offence. Kishore Kumar Gyanchandani v. G.D. Mehrotra, AIR 2002 SC 483 : (2001) 3 Crimes 205.

[8098] ● Court under no obligation to afford opportunity of hearing to claimants before filing complaint.—Reading of sub-section (1) of Section 340, CrPC makes it clear that the hub of this provision is formation of an opinion by the Court (before which proceedings were to be held) that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made into an offence which appears to have been committed. In order to form such opinion, the Court is empowered to hold a preliminary inquiry. It is not per-emptory that such preliminary inquiry should be held. Even without such preliminary inquiry, the Court can form such an opinion when it appears to the Court that an offence has been committed in relation to a proceeding in that Court. Even when the Court forms such an opinion it is not mandatory that the Court should make a complaint. But once the Court decides to do so, then the Court should make a finding to the effect that on the fact situation, it is expedient in the interest of justice that the offence should further be probed into. The person against whom the complaint is made, has a legal right to be heard whether he should be tried for the offence or not, but such a legal right is envisaged only when the Magistrate calls the accused to appear before him. The person concerned has then the right to participate in the pre-trial inquiry envisaged in Section 239 of the CrPC. It is open to him to satisfy the Magistrate that the allegations against him are groundless and that he is entitled to be discharged. The scheme delineated above would clearly show that there is no statutory requirement to afford an opportunity of hearing to the persons against whom that Court might file a complaint before the Magistrate for initiating prosecution proceedings. Pritish v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2002 SC 236 (240) : (2002) 1 SCC 253 : 2002 CrLJ 548.

[8099] ● Complaint—Lodging of.—It is well settled that in criminal law that a complaint can be lodged by anyone who has become aware of a crime having been committed and thereby set the law into motion. In respect of offences adverted to in Section 195, CrPC there is a restriction that the same cannot be entertained unless a complaint is made by a Court because the offence is stated to have been committed in relation to the proceedings in that Court. Section 340, CrPC is invoked to get over the bar imposed under Section 195, CrPC. In ordinary crimes not adverted to under Section 195, CrPC, if in respect of any offence, law can be set into motion by any citizen of this country, we fail to see how any citizen of this country cannot approach even under Section 340, CrPC. For that matter, the wordings of Section 340, CrPC are significant. The Court will have to act in the interest of justice on a complaint or otherwise. Assuming that the complaint may have to be made at the instance of a party having an interest in the matter, still the Court can take action in the matter otherwise than on a complaint, that is, when it has received information as to a crime having been committed covered by the said provision. Therefore, it is wholly unnecessary to examine this aspect of the matter. We proceed on the basis that the respondent has locus standi to present the complaint before the Designated Judge. N. Natarajan v. B.K. Subba Rao, AIR 2003 SC 541 : (2003) 2 SCC 76 : 2003 CrLJ 820 : JT 2002 (10) SC 1 : 2002 (9) Scale 16.

[8100] ● Second complaint on same facts.—It is settled law that there is no statutory bar in filing a second complaint on the same facts. In a case where a previous complaint is dismissed without assigning any reasons, the Magistrate under Section 204, CrPC may take cognizance of an offence and issue process if there is sufficient ground for proceeding. As held in Pramatha Nath Taluqdar's case (supra) second complaint could be dismissed after a decision has been given against the complainant in previous matter upon a full consideration of his case. Further, second complaint on the same facts could be entertained only in exceptional circumstances, namely, where the previous order was passed on an incomplete record or on a misunderstanding of the nature of complaint or it was manifestly absurd, unjust or where new facts which could not, with reasonable diligence, have been brought on record in the previous proceedings, have been adduced. Mahesh Chand v. B. Janardhan Reddy, AIR 2003 SC 702 : (2003) 1 SCC 734 : 2003 CrLJ 866 : JT 2002 (10) SC 123 : (2003) 1 Crimes 1 (SC).

[8101] ● Power of Court to award compensation.—Sub-section (1) of Section 357 deals with a situation when a Court imposes a fine or a sentence (including sentence of death) of which fine also forms a part. It confers a discretion on the Court to order as to how the whole or any part of fine recovered is to be applied. For bringing in application of sub-section (1) of Section 357 it is a statutory requirement that fine is imposed and thereupon make further orders as to the disbursement of the said fine in the manner envisaged therein. If no fine is imposed, sub-section (1) of Section 357 has no application. In the case at hand no fine was imposed by the trial Court of the High Court. Sub-section (3) on the other hand deals with the situation where fine does not form part of the sentence imposed by a Court. In such a case, the Court when passing a judgment can order the accused persons to pay by way of compensation such amount as may be specified in the order to the person who has suffered a loss or injury by reason of the act of which the accused person has been so convicted and sentenced. The basic difference between sub-sections (1) and (3) is that in the former case, the imposition of fine is the basic and essential requirement, while in the latter even the absence thereof empowers the Court to direct payment of compensation. Such power is available to be exercised by an appellate Court or by the High Court or Court of Session when exercising revisional powers. Sub-section (5) deals with a situation when the Court fixes the compensation in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter. While awarding compensation the Court is required to take into account any sum paid or recovered as compensation under Section 357 of the Code. The power of the Court to award compensation to victims under Section 357 is not ancillary to other sentences but is in addition thereto. Mangilal v. State of M.P., AIR 2004 SC 1280 : (2004) 2 SCC 447 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1085 (1090).

[8102] ● Complaint—Proper person—Defamation—Proper person.—It was submitted that the imputations were mainly against the father of the complainant, and, therefore, a complaint ought to have been made by the father of the complainant. Reference was made to Section 199, CrPC. Held, on perusal of the compound it was found that similar defamatory words were used against the complainant also apart from his father and, therefore, the right of the complainant to move the Court and lodge a complaint before the competent Magistrate could not be challenged. Ram Swarup v. Mohd. Javed Razack, AIR 2005 SC 2005 : (2005) 10 SCC 393 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1549 (1550) : 2005 CrLJ 1725 : 2005 (1) Crimes 345.

[8103] ● Dismissal of complaint.—If the High Court was of the opinion that the order passed by the Magistrate dismissing the complaint was cryptic or without reasons, the Court should have remitted back the case to the Magistrate for redecision with a direction to apply his mind and decide the matter in accordance with law. Mai Koal Fibres Ltd. v. ICICI Bank Ltd., (2005) 12 SCC 229 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 545.

[8104] ● No particular format of complaint.—There is no particular format of a complaint. A petition addressed to the Magistrate containing an allegation that an offence has been committed, and ending with a prayer that the culprits be suitably be dealt with is a complaint. Mohd. Yousuf v. Afaq Jahan, AIR 2006 SC 705 : (2006) 1 SCC 627 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 460 (469) : 2006 CrLJ 788 : 2006 (1) Crimes 81.

[8105] ● Stay of complaint (S. 210 CrPC).—It is clear that before Section 210 can be invoked, the following conditions must be satisfied.

(i) there must be a complaint pending for inquiry or trial;

(ii) investigation by the police must be in progress in relation to the same offence;

(iii) a report must have been made by the police officer under Section 173; and

(iv) the Magistrate must have taken cognizance of an offence against a person who is accused in the complaint case. Sankaran Moitra v. Sadhna Das, AIR 2006 SC 1599 : (2006) 4 SCC 584 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 358 (392) : JT 2006 (4) SC 34.

[8106-07] ● Dismissal of complaint on merits—Second complaint, in identical facts when can be entertained.—An order of dismissal under Section 203, CrPC is however no bar to the entertainment of a second complaint on the same facts but it can be entertained only in exceptional circumstances. The exceptional circumstances are (a) where the previous order was passed on incomplete records (b) or on a misunderstanding of the nature of the complaint (c) or the order which was passed was manifestly absurd, unjust or foolish or (d) where new facts which could not with reasonable diligence, have been brought on the record in the previous proceedings. Poonam Chand Jain v. Fazru, AIR 2010 SC 659 : (2010) 2 SCC 631 : 2010 CrLJ 1423 (1426) (SC) : (2010) 1 Crimes 151. [Pramathanath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876 : 1962 Supp (2) SCR 297 : (1962) 1 Crimes 770 rel. on].

[8108] ● Dismissal of complaint by magistrate—Reasons to be recorded.—Section 203, CrPC empowers the Magistrate to dismiss the complaint if, after considering the statements made by the complainant and the witnesses on oath and the result of the inquiry or investigation, if any made under Section 202(1), he is satisfied that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding. The exercise of this power is hedged with the condition that the magistrate should record brief reasons for dismissing the complaint. Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwari, AIR 2010 SC 2261 : (2010) 7 SCC 578 : 2010 (3) Crimes 188 (SC).

[8110] ● Clubbing of complaint.—In the instant case, keeping in view the totality of the circumstances and the sequence in which the two incidents occurred, taking into consideration the evidence of drivers and conductors/cleaners of the vehicles involved in the first incident and the evidence V.A.O. (PW 7), we reach the inescapable conclusion that the second occurrence was nothing but a fall out of the first occurrence. The damage caused to the public transport vehicles and the consequential burning of the University bus remained part of one and the same incident. Merely because two separate complaints had been lodged did not mean that they could not be clubbed together and one charge-sheet could not be filed. C. Muniappan v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 3718 (3727, 3728) : (2010) 9 SCC 567.

COMPOUNDING

[8111] ● Compounding of offence.—The major offences for which the accused have been convicted are no doubt non-compoundable but the fact of compromise can be taken into account in determining the quantum of sentence. Ram Pujan v. State of U.P., AIR 1973 SC 2418 : (1973) 2 SCC 456 : (1973) SCC (Cri) 870 : 1973 CrLJ 1612.

[8112] ● Permission to compound offence.—The offence under Section 324, IPC is compoundable with the permission of the Court. As it is stated that the parties have amicably settled the matter, it would be in the fitness of things if permission to compound the offence is granted. The permission is accordingly granted. Bhim Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1974 SC 1744 : (1974) 4 SCC 97 : 1974 CrLJ 1285 (1286).

[8113] ● Compounding of non-compoundable offence—Not permissible.—"We reiterate that the course adopted in Ram Pujan v. State of U.P., (1973) 2 SCC 456 : (1973) SCC (Cri) 870 and Mahesh Chand v. State of Rajasthan, 1991 SCC (Cri) 159 : JT 1988 (1) SC 618 was not in accordance with law. However, considering the fact that the parties have settled their dispute outside the Court and the fact that 10 years have elapsed from the date of the incident and the further fact that the appellants have already undergone 3 months' imprisonment as per the sentence imposed by them, we think that the ends of justice would be met if the sentence of imprisonment is reduced to the period already undergone besides imposing a five of Rs. 5000 on each of the accused under Section 326 read with Section 34, IPC." Surendra Nath Mohanty v. State of Orissa, AIR 1999 SC 2118 : (1999) 5 SCC 238 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 998 : 1999 CrLJ 3496.

[8114] ● Compounding.—The incident involving Sections 324/149, 323/149 and 148, IPC took place in the year 1979 and at present parties are having cordial relations and have settled their dispute, this would be a fit case for reducing the period of sentence to the period already undergone. Bachhu Singh alias Surendra Babu v. State of U.P., 2004 SCC (Cri) 1124 (1125).

COMPOUNDING OF OFFENCE/COMPOSITION (SECTION 320, CrPC)

[8115] ● Composition of offence when permissible under law.—If a person is charged with an offence, then unless there is some provision for composition of it, the law must take its course and the charge enquired into resulting either in conviction or acquittal. If composition of an offence was permissible under the law, the effect of such composition would depend on what the law provided for. If the effect of composition is to amount to an acquittal then it may be said that no stigma should attach to the character of the person, but unless that is expressly provided for, the mere rendering of compensation would not amount to the vindication of the character of the person charged with the offence. Biswahan Das v. Gohan Ghendra Hayrika, AIR 1967 SC 895 : 1967 CrLJ 828.

[8116] ● Fact of compromise between accused and injured can be taken into account in determining quantum of sentence even if offence non-compoundable.—The major offence for which the accused have been convicted are no doubt non-compoundable but the fact of compromise can be taken into account in determining the quantum of sentence. Ram Pujan v. State of U.P., AIR 1973 SC 2418 : (1973) 2 SCC 456 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 870 : 1973 CrLJ 1612.

[8117] ● Compounding of offence on grant of permission by Court.—In the instant case, the Court granted permission for compounding of an offence which can be compounded with the permission of the Court and an offence which cannot be compounded. The said permission was one indivisible permission for the offences under Scion 420, IPC and Section 13 of the Maharashtra Act. As no valid permission could be granted for the compounding of an offence under Section 13 of the Maharashtra Act the permission would have to be held invalid its entirety. It is not permissible in such an event to sever the permission into two parts and to uphold it so far as the offence under Section 420, IPC is concerned and hold it to be invalid in respect of the offence under Section 13 of the Maharashtra Act. Ramesh Chandra J. Thakur v. A.P. Jhaveri, AIR 1973 SC 84 : (1973) 3 SCC 884 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 566 (570-571) : 1973 CrLJ 201 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 14.

[8118] ● Offence under Section 324, IPC Compoundable.—The offence under S. 324, IPC is compoundable with the permission of the Court. As it is stated that the parties have amicably settled the matter, it would be in the fitness of things if permission to compound is granted. Bhim Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 1744 : (1974) 4 SCC 97 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 354 : 1974 CrLJ 1285 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 569 : 1973 UJ (SC) 754.

[8119] ● Settlement of subject matter of appeal.—At the hearing of appeal before this Court, there has been a settlement of the subject-matter of the appeal and it has been agreed that the appellant shall deposit in a scheduled bank within four months from today a sum of Rs. 16,000 in the name of respondent No 2 under the guardianship of respondent No. 1. Respondent No. 1 would-be entitled to receive interest every month on that amount for the maintenance of respondent No. 2 till he attains majority. Looking at all the facts, it can be said that the settlement arrived at is reasonable and in the interest of respondent No. 2. The parties are, therefore, allowed to enter into this settlement. Bhoomi v. Leela Rajan, AIR 1977 SC 700 (701) : (1977) 4 SCC 596 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 671 : 1977 CrLJ 342.

[8120] ● Permission to compound offence—Grant of.—If a conviction for non-compoundable offenses is altered to one under compoundable offence in the instant case from Section 307 to Section 326, IPC, permission to compound the offence can be granted. Shakuntala Sawhney v. Kaushelya Sawhney, (1980) 1 SCC 63 : (1979) 3 SCR 639.

[8121] ● Compounding of offence—Permission granted for.—Permission for compound offence.—In the instant case the accused was charged with offences under Sections 325 and 452, IPC. The former offence can be compounded with the permission of the Court. Permission is granted to the parties to compound the said offence. The effect of that is the acquittal of the petitioner in view of the provisions of law contained in Section 320(8) of CrPC for the offence under Section 325. Rajinder Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1980 SC 1260 : 1980 Supp SCC 337 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 277.

[8122] ● Compounding of offence grant of permission for.—The appellant has been convicted of offence under Section 325, IPC and Sections 120 and 121 of the Railways Act and has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months on the first count, a fine of Rs. 25/- on the second and a fine of Rs. 75/- on the third. He has compounded the offence first above mentioned with the injured person whose affidavit in that behalf is on the record. We grant permission to the parties to compound the offence and acquit the appellant of the charge under Section 325, IPC. The appeal is accepted to that extent and is dismissed for the rest so that conviction for offences under Sections 120 and 121 of the Railways Act and the sentence of fine imposed in that behalf shall stand, along with the direction that the appellant shall suffer simple imprisonment for 15 days in case the fines are not paid. Abdul Sattar v. State of M.P., AIR 1981 SC 1775 (2) (1776) : 1981 SCC (Cri) 633 : 1981 CrLJ 1705 (1) : 1981 CrLR (SC) 7.

[8123] ● Permission to compound offence.—In this case, the appellants have amicably settled their dispute and it has been assured to the Court that happy relationship will be established in the student community. For these permission to compound the offences is granted and the composition as for the terms set out in the consent precipe is accepted. In view of the composition both the appeals are allowed and the conviction and sentence of the appellants are set aside. Bhupendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1981 SC 1240 : 1980 Supp SCC 352 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 280 : 1981 CrLJ 751 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 116.

[8124] ● Composition of offences.—In the instant case, the offence disclosed against the appellants is one under Section 324 read with Section 325, IPC. These offences are compoundable with the permission of the Court. The parties have made a request that they should be allowed to compound the case and they have also filed a composition deed in the High Court. In view of this, the permission to compound the offence is granted and in consequence the appeal is allowed. Fahimuddin v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1981 SC 2008 (3) : (1982) 27 SCC 174 (2) : 1981 SCC (Cri) 378 : 1981 CrLJ 1690 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 318.

[8127] ● Offence under Section 324 read with Section 325, IPC compoundable with permission of Court.—The offences under Section 324 read with Section 325, IPC are compoundable with the permission of the Court. Since permission has been granted to the other accused to compound the offences, we grant permission to the parties herein to compound the offence. Mainuddin v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (1982) 3 SCC 367 (2) : 1983 SCC (Cri) 48 (2) : 1983 CrLR (SC) 527 (1).

[8128] ● Permission to compound offence—Grant of.—In view of the fact that the parties are clearly related, permission to compound the offences under Sections 324 and 325, IPC is granted. Hindu Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (1982) 3 SCC 368 (2) : 1983 SCC (Cri) 49 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 528.

[8129] ● Compounding of offence—Sanction of.—In appeal the conviction is converted from one under Section 307, IPC to that under Sections 325/34, IPC the compounding of offence is sanctioned as the parties have settled their differences. Ram Shanker v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1983 SCC (Cri) 60.

[8130] ● Composition of offences.—Victim voluntarily entered into a composition in respect of offences under Sections 323, 324, and 325 read with Section 34, IPC to restore friendly and good neighbourly relations with the accused and rejecting compensation offer. In view of the chastened attitude of the accused and commendable attitude of the victim composition is acceptable. Ramji Lal v. State of Haryana, (1983) 1 SCC 368 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 189 : 1983 CrLJ (SC) 118.

[8131] ● Offences—Compounding of.—Section 320, CrPC, 1973 which deals with "compounding of offences" provides two tables therein, one containing description of offences which can be compounded by the person mentioned in it, and the other containing descriptions of offences which can be compounded by the person mentioned in it, and the other countering descriptions of offences which can be compounded by the person mentioned in it, and the other containing descriptions of offences which can be compounded with the permission of the Court by the person indicated therein. Only such offences as are included in the said two tables can be compounded and none else. The offence under Section 326 is admittedly, non-compoundable and hence we do not accede to the request of the learned counsel to permit the same to be compounded.

Note.—In this case the counsel invited attention of the apex Court to the decision of the Court. Y. Suresh Babu v. State of A.P., JT 1987 (2) SC 361. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Mahesh Chand v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1988 SC 2111 : 1990 (Suppl) SCC 681 : 1989 CrLJ 121.

[8132] ● Permission to compound offence—Grant of permission for.—In this special leave petition challenging the validity of the conviction under Section 307, IPC, the parties wanted to have the offence compounded and they wanted this Court to permit them to do so. The accused were acquitted by the trial Court but convicted by the High Court. The offence is not compoundable under law but the parties wanted to treat it as a special case in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case. One of the accused is a practising lawyer in the lower Court. There was a counter case arising out of the same transaction and that was already compromised. In view of the peculiar circumstances, and the circumstances under which it was committed, it would be proper that the trial Court should permit them to compound the offence. The trial Judge was directed accordingly. Mahesh Chand v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1988 SC 2111 : 1990 Supp SCC 682 : 1989 CrLJ 121.

[8133] ● Compounding of non-compoundable offence of public nature.—If a criminal case is declared to be non-compoundable then it is against public policy to compound it and the agreement to that end is wholly void in law. Union Carbide Corporation v. Union of India, AIR 1992 SC 248 (279) : (1991) 4 SCC 584 : 1991 Supp (1) SCR 251.

[8134] ● Compromise decree—Passing of amounts to compounding of offence of cheating.—In the facts of the instant case, there is enough justification for the High Court to hold that the case was basically a matter of civil dispute. The Banks had already filed suits for recovery of the dues of the Banks on account of credit facility and the said suits have been compromised on receiving the payments from the companies concerned. Even if an offence of cheating is prima facie constituted, cheating compounding of offences of such offence is a compoundable offence and compromise decrees passed in the suits instituted by the Banks, for all intents and purposes, amounts to compounding of the offences of cheating. It is also to be noted that a long time has elapsed since the complaint was filed in 1987. It may also be indicated that although such FIRs were filed in 1987 and 1989, the Banks have not chosen to institute any case against the alleged erring officials despite allegations made in the FIRs considering that the investigations had not been completed till 1991 even though there was no impediment to complete the investigations and further investigations are also pending and also considering the fact that claims of the Bank have been satisfied and the suits instituted by the Banks have been compromised on receiving payments, we do not think that the said complaints should be pursued any further. Central Bureau of Investigation v. Duncans Agro Industries Ltd., Calcutta, AIR 1996 SC 2452 : (1996) 5 SCC 591 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1045 (1061) : 1996 CrLJ 3501 : 1996 (3) Crimes 60.

[8135] ● Compounding of offence—Cannot be claimed as of right.—Sub-section (2) of Section 279, Income-tax Act, 1961 is a provision which enables the Chief Commissioner or the Director General to compound any offence either before or after the institution of proceeding. There is no warrant in interpreting this sub-section to mean that before any prosecution is launched either a show cause notice should be given or an opportunity afforded to compound the matter. The enabling provision cannot give a right to a party to insist on the Chief Commissioner or the Director General to make an offer of compounding before the prosecution is launched. Union of India v. Banwari Lal Agarwal, AIR 1999 SC 196 : (1998) 7 SCC 652 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1702.

[8136] ● Compounding of offences.—In Y. Suresh Babu v. State of A.P., JT (1987) 2 SC 361 case it was specifically observed that the said case "shall not be treated as a precedent" In latter case (MaheshChand) offence under Section 307, IPC was permitted to be compounded with the following observations :

> "We give our anxious consideration to the case and also the plea put forward for seeking permission to compound the offence. After examining the nature of the case and circumstances under which the offence was committed, it may be proper that the trial Court shall permit them to compound the offence".

When the decision in Mahesh Chand State of Rajasthan, 1990 (Supp) SCC 681 was rendered, attention of the Hon'ble Judges was not drawn to the aforesaid legal prohibition. Nor was attention of the Judges who rendered the decision in Y. Suresh Babu drawn. Hence those were decisions rendered per in curiam. Ram Lal v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1999 SC 895 (895) : (1999) 2 SCC 213 : 1999 CrLJ 1342 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 123.

[8137] ● Settlement of dispute by partition.—Considering the fact that the parties have settled their dispute outside the Court and the fact that 10 years have elapsed from the date of the incident and the further fact that the appellants have already undergone 3 months' imprisonment, the ends of justice would be met if the sentence of imprisonment is reduced to period already undergone besides imposing a fine of Rs. 5000/- on each of the accused under Section 326 read with Section 34. Surendra Nath Mohanty v. State of Orissa, AIR 1999 SC 2181 (2182) : (1999) 5 SCC 238 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 998 : 1999 CrLJ 3496 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 324.

[8138] ● Compounding of non-compoundable offence—Not permissible.—"We reiterate that the course adopted in Ram Pujan v. State of U.P., (1973) 2 SCC 456 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 870 and Mahesh Chand v. State of Rajasthan, 1991 SCC (Cri) 159 : JT 1988 (1) SC 618 was not in accordance with law. However considering the fact that the parties have settled their dispute outside the Court and the fact that 10 years have elapsed from the date of the incident and the further fact that the appellants have already undergone 3 months imprisonment as per the sentence imposed by them, we think that the ends of justice would be met if the sentence of imprisonment is reduced to the period already undergone besides imposing a fine of Rs. 5000/- on each of the accused under Section 326 read with Section 34, IPC" Surendra Nath Mohanty v. State of Orissa, AIR 1999 SC 2181 : (1999) 5 SCC 238 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 998 : 1999 CrLJ 3496 : 1999 (3) Crimes 37.

[8139] ● Offences compounding of with permission of Court.—The concept of "plea bargaining" is not recognised and is against public policy under our criminal justice system. Section 320, CrPC provides for compounding of certain offences with the permission of the Court and certain others even without permission of the Court. Except the above, the concept of negotiated settlement in criminal cases is not permissible. This method of short-circuiting the hearing and deciding the criminal appeals or cases involving serious offences requires no encouragement. Neither the State nor the public prosecutor nor even the Judge can bargain that evidence would not be led or appreciated in consideration of getting flu bite sentence by pleading guilty. State of U.P. v. Chandrika, AIR 2000 SC 164 (165) : (1999) 8 SCC 638 : 2000 CrLJ 384.

[8140] ● Offence under Section 326, IPC not compoundable.—Offence under Section 326, IPC, is not compoundable and, therefore, cannot be compounded. Application for compounding of offence is therefore rejected. However, in view of facts that occurrence had taken place about 21 years back and complainant and accused being close relative are now living amicably, sentence is reduced to period already undergone. Jalaluddin v. State of Uttar Pradesh, JT 2000 (10) SC 305.

[8141] ● Permission for compounding of offence—Grant of.—In the instant case, the respondent was convicted under Section 325, IPC. The High Court granted benefit of probation. The order of the High Court was challenged. During pendency of appeal the parties have come to terms and settled their grievances. An affidavit of the Panchayat Pradhan witnessing the settlement has also been filed. Permission for compounding the offence is granted and respondent is acquitted. Reshma v. Jai Narain, JT 2000 (10) SC 279.

[8142] ● Warring spouses coming to terms.—When this appeal was pending for Special Leave the warring spouses came to terms. An affidavit has been sworn to by the aggrieved wife in which she said that she had come to terms with her husband and would prefer to have a peaceful life with him and expressed the apprehension that if the sentence is to be undergone by him for the remaining period, the expected peace would elude the couple. We do feel that in view of the subsequent developments, the sentence already undergone by the appellant can be treated as sufficient for the offence found against him. Raghumunda Satya Narayana v. State of A.P., AIR 2000 SC 3420 (3421) : (2000) 9 SCC 59 : 2000 SCC(Cri) 1161 : 2000 CrLJ 2779.

[8143] ● Compromise between parties.—Some of the appellants in this appeal have been convicted under Section 307, IPC and others under Section 307 read with Section 149, IPC. They have also been convicted under Section 323 and Section 323 read with Section 149, IPC. They have been sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three years for the offence punishable under Section 307, IPC. Only point now urged by appellants is that the appellants and PWs-3, 4 and 5 who were injured in the incident, are close relatives, they have now settled their dispute, their relations have now become cordial and, therefore, their sentence may be reduced. Considering the near relationship of the parties and the fact that there is a genuine compromise between the parties, we reduce the sentence of the appellants to the period already undergone even though we maintain their conviction. Pappu v. State of Punjab, AIR 2000 SC 3633 (3634).

[8144] ● Compounding of offence—Application for.—In this case 2 years' sentence has been awarded by the trial Court. Victim and the appellant have now come to terms and an application for compounding the offence has been filed by the complainant. Matter has been settled and victim's grievance has been redressed. Application for compounding offence is allowed. Vuyyuru Ramachandra Rao v. State of A.P., 2000 (4) CCR 103 (SC).

[8145] ● Compromise by assailants and victim.—The appellant, in the present case, was found guilty of offence under Sections 147, 323/149, 325/149 and 304 Part II/49 by the trial Court. The High Court maintained the order of trial Court except to the setting aside of the conviction under Section 304, Part II. During pendency of SLP, both the assailants and the victim entered into a compromise. A joint application was made by them for condonation of offences. Appeal was allowed on the basis of joint application. Barsati v. State of Uttar Pradesh, JT 2000 (7) SC 380 : 2000 (4) Crimes 40 (SC).

[8146] ● Permission grant of—To compounding offence.—In the instant case, the appellant was convicted under Section 307, IPC by trial Court. Appellate altered the conviction to Section 324, IPC. During the pendency of appeal an application for compounding of offence was filed. Concerned Sessions Judge directed to verify the contents. Seeing the report that the accused is maintaining and treating well his mother/complainant, permission to compound offence is given. Appellant is acquitted and directed to maintain his mother well throughout her life. Mulukuri Seva Prasad v. State of A.P., JT 2000 (2) SC 38 : (2000) 3 SLT 6 : (2001) 3 Crimes 50 (SC).

[8147] ● Permission for compounding offence—Grant of.—In the present case, the appellant was convicted under Section 354, IPC. The appellant and the victim have now come to terms. Permission for compounding offence is granted. Vadhuri Anjaiah v. State of A.P., 2001 (3) Crimes 342 (SC).

[8148] ● Offence under Section 376, IPC non-compoundable.—Both parties have sworn affidavits that matter involving offences under Sections 325/323, IPC has been compounded between appellants and victim. Appellants are acquitted. Offence under Section 376, IPC is not compoundable. Mohammed Balal Mian v. State of Bihar, 2001 (3) Crimes 419 (SC) : 2001 (5) Supreme 470 : (2001) 3 SLT 324.

[8150] ● Compromise under S. 138, N. 9 Act, 1881.—The appellant was convicted for the offence punishable under Section 138 of the N. 9 Act, 1881. The appellant and the complainant settled the matter amicably and memo of settlement was produced by the parties and the statement was signed by the parties. The conviction and sentences were set aside. Kishore Kumar v. J.K. Corporation Ltd., (2004) 13 SCC 494 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 348 (349).

[8151] ● Compounding of offence u/s. 324, IPC.—In the instant case an application for compounding offence under Section 324, IPC was filed. The counsel for the complainant stated that he had no objection to compounding the offence. The compounding was permitted. Avinash Shetty v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 13 SCC 375 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 316 (317).

[8152] ● Complete scheme provided under Section 320, CrPC for compounding of offences punishable under IPC.—For compounding of the offences punishable under IPC, a complete scheme is provided under Section 320 of the Code. Sub-section (1) of Section 320 provides that the offences mentioned in the table provided thereunder can be compounded by the persons mentioned in column 3 of the said table. Further, sub-section (2) provides that the offences mentioned in the table could be compounded by the victim with the permission of the Court. As against this, sub-section (9) specifically provides that "no offence shall be compounded except as provided by this section". In view of the aforesaid legislative mandate, only the offences which are covered by Table 1 or Table 2 as stated above can be compounded and the rest of the offences punishable under IPC could not be compounded. Bankat v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2005 SC 368 : (2005) 1 SCC 343 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 316 (318) : 2005 CrLJ 646.

[8153] ● Compounding permissible only in relation to cases enumerated under Section 320, CrPC.—The counsel appearing on behalf of the respondents submitted that as the parties had settled their disputes and grievances and good relationship had been restored between them, it would be just and expedient to grant the prayer made on behalf of the appellant. The Apex Court held as under :—

> "Compounding is permissible only in relation to cases enumerated under Section 320 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and not the present nature. The present case relates to brutal murder. So far we have heard learned counsel for the appellant, we are tentatively of the view that it was not at all a case for acquittal. In view of this, for the present, it is not possible to permit the appellant to withdraw the appeal which would amount to permit the prosecutor to withdraw from prosecution and it is well settled that the same is not an empty formality. In the facts and circumstances of the case we propose to go on with further hearing of the appeals and examine thoroughly the evidence adduced for coming to final conclusion as to whether it was a case for acquittal or the High Court should have recorded conviction of the respondent. Only thereafter we shall pass final order upon the prayer for withdrawal". Kamma Otukunta Ram Naidu v. Chereddy Pedda Subba Reddy, 2005 SC (Cri) 849.

[8154] ● Compromise reached between parties—Offence allowed to be compounded.— In the instant case, the matter was settled between the parties happily and a joint application was filed by the appellant and the respondent under Section 320(5), CrPC for compounding the under offence Section 500, IPC compromise reached between the parties and the offence was allowed to be compounded. Direction were passed as to the payment of the settled money. K. Kandasamy v. K.P.M.V.P. Chandrasekaran, AIR 2005 SC 2485 : (2005) 4 SCC 349 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1024 : 2005 CrLJ 2597 : 2005 (2) Crimes 167.

[8155] ● Compromise between parities offence permitted to be compounded.—The appellant was convicted by the trial Court under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 and sentenced to undergo simple imprisonment for a period of one month and to pay compensation to the time of Rs. 39000; in default to undergo simple imprisonment for a further period of six months. The Court confirmed the conviction and sentence. When the matter was taken to the High Court, the criminal revision application was dismissed. A joint petition of compromise was filed by the parties before the Supreme Court in which it was stated that they had settled their dispute and grievances. In view of the facts stated in the compromise petition, the Supreme Court permitted the parties to compound the offence. Sailesh Shyam Parsekar v. Baban alias Vishwanath S. Godge, (2005) 4 SCC 160 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1321.

[8156] ● Compounding of offence under Section 326—Not permissible.—Compounding of offence under Section 326 cannot be compounded in view of provision of Section 320(9), CrPC. Bankat v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2005 SC 368 : (2005) 1 SCC 343 : 2005 CrLJ 646 (647, 648) : (2004) 4 Crimes 390.

[8157] ● Compromise, recording of.—A joint petition of compromise was filed on behalf of the parties in which prayer was made for recording the compromise. Held, the offence under Section 307 is a non-compoundable one, therefore, compromise cannot be recorded, but at the same time it is well settled that while awarding sentence, the effect of compromise can be taken into consideration. In the instant case the appellant remained in custody for a period of about 14 months and there was no allegation that he assaulted the deceased. In the facts and circumstances of the case the ends of justice would be met in case the sentence of imprisonment awarded by the trial Court and reduced by the High Court is further reduced to the period already undergone. Badri Lal v. State of M.P., (2005) 7 SCC 55 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1597 (1598).

[8158] ● Offence u/s. 325, IPC—In order to restore relationship between parties compounding of offence was allowed.—The appellant was convicted under Section 325, IPC and sentenced to two years' R. 9 and a fine of Rs. 10,000/- by the order of the High Court. During the pendency of the instant appeal the complainant died. The parties stated that in order to restore good relationship between them, they had compromised the matter. The prayer for compounding the offence was allowed. Pritam Singh v. State of Haryana, (2005) 11 SCC 566 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 120.

[8160] ● Compromise of offence under S. 138, N. 9 Act, 1881.—In the instant case, the appellants-accused were convicted by all the three Courts under Section 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 and sentenced. The appellant-accused stated before the Supreme Court that the offence had been compounded by paying the entire dues to the complainant by the appellant-accused. An application jointly signed was filed seeking permission to compound the offence. It was held that "Section 147, Negotiable Instruments Act, as amended makes the offence compoundable and we find no ground to reject the prayer for compounding the offence." Cochin Hotels Co. (P.) Ltd. v. Kairali Granites, (2005) 12 SCC 234 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 547.

[8161] ● Compounding of non-bailable offence.––Though the offence under Section 457, IPC is not compoundable, but taking into consideration the effect of compounding, it would be just and expedient to reduce the sentence of imprisonment to the period already undergone. Sanjit Datta v. State of Tripura, (2006) 13 SCC 294 : (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 172.

[8162] ● No case made out under Section 384, IPC—Settlement between parties accepted.—Having regard to the facts and circumstances, it is not necessary to go into the contentious issue in the instant case, as no case has been made out for proceeding against the appellant under Section 384, IPC. In that view of the matter there was absolutely no reason as to why the settlement arrived at by and between the parties could not have been accepted as the same would not come within the purview of sub-section (9) of Section 320, CrPC. Dhananjai v. State of Bihar, 2007 CrLJ 1440 (1442) : 2007 (1) Crimes 299 (SC) : 2007 (2) SCR 206.

[8163] ● Offences under N.I. Act are compoundable.—In offences under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, normally compounding of offence should not be denied. Parliament, presumably, also realised this aspect and inserted Section 147 by the Negotiable Instruments (Amendment and Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 2002. Under Section 147 of the said Act every offence punishable under the Act shall be compoundable. Vinay Devanna Nayak v. Ryot Seva Sahakari Bank Ltd., AIR 2008 SC 716 : (2008) 2 SCC 305 : 2008 CrLJ 805 (808).

[8164] ● Sections 320(1) and (2), CrPC—Scope.—Sub-section (1) of Section 320 specifies offences which are compoundable in nature, whereas sub-section (2) specifies the offences which are compoundable with the permission of Court. Rumi Dhar v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2009 SC 2195 : (2009) 6 SCC 364 : 2009 (5) SCR 553.

[8165] ● Object of Section 320.—The object of Section 320 CrPC., which would not in the strict sense of the term apply to a proceeding under the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, gives the parties to the proceedings an opportunity to compound offences mentioned in the table contained in the said section, with or without the leave of the Court, and also vests the Court with jurisdiction to allow such compromise. By virtue of Sub-Section (8), the Legislature has taken one step further in vesting jurisdiction in the Court to also acquit the accused/convict of the offence on the same being allowed to be compounded. Inasmuch as, it is with a similar object in mind that Section 147 has been inserted into the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, by amendment, an analogy may be drawn as to the intention of the Legislature as expressed in Section 320(8) CrPC, although the same has not been expressly mentioned in the amended section to a proceeding under Section 147 of the aforesaid Act. K.M. Ibrahim v. K.P. Mohammed, AIR 2010 SC 276 : (2010) 1 SCC 798 : 2009 (15) SCR 1300 : 2009 (4) Crimes 271.

[8166] ● Non-compoundable offences.—The offences under Section 384 and 506 are non-compoundable. The prayer made by the complainant and the accused jointly for compounding of the said offences cannot be accepted. Kanpi Rasheed v. State of Andhra Pradesh, JT 2009 (3) SC 100 : 2009 (4) Scale 30.

[8167] ● Settlement between parties for reduction of sentence.—The settlement arrived at between the parties regarding sentence can be considered, while maintaining conviction. Puttaswamy v. State of Karnataka, (2009) 1 SCC 711 : 2008 (17) SCR 272.

[8168] ● Offences of criminal breach of trust and cheating—Interim order.—In a case involving offences of criminal breach of trust and cheating, the Court was directed to deal with matter appropriately in case the parties file necessary application for compounding of offences under Section 320, CrPC. The interim order passed by the Court was directed to be continued for 3 months so that necessary steps may be taken. Raja Ram Kashyap v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2009) 7 SCC 84.

[8169] ● Compounding of offence under Negotiable Instruments Act.—In view of the non-obstante clause the compounding of offences under the N.I. Act is controlled by Section 147 of the Act and the scheme contemplated by Section 320, CrPC will not be applicable in the strict sense since the latter is meant for the specified offence under IPC. Damodar S. Prabhu v. Syed Babulal H., AIR 2010 SC 1907 : (2010) 5 SCC 663 : 2010 CrLJ 2860.

CONCEALMENT

[8170] ● Concealment.—It is settled law that levy of penalties and prosecution under Section 276-C of the Income-Tax Act, 1961 are simultaneous. Hence, once the penalties are cancelled on the ground that there is no concealment, the quashing of prosecution under Section 276-C is automatic. K.C. Builders v. Assistant Commissioner of Income Tax, (2004) 2 SCC 731 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1092 (1103) : JT 2004 (2) SC 100 : (2004) 2 Crimes 48.

CONCEALING AN OFFENDER (S. 207, IPC)

CONCEALMENT OF ABDUCTED PERSON (S. 368, IPC)

[8171] ● Concealment of abducted person.—To constitute an offence under Section 368 the prosecution must establish the following three ingredients: (1) The person in question has been kidnapped. (2) The accused knew that the said person had been kidnapped. (3) The accused having such knowledge, wrongfully conceals or confines the person concerned. That the accused had the knowledge, that the child had been kidnapped is an inference to be drawn by the Court from the various circumstances. So also whether there has been wrongful concealment or confinement under Section 368 is a matter to be considered from the facts and the circumstances of a particular case. Saroj Kumari v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 201 : (1973) 3 SCC 669 : 1973 CrLJ 267.

[8172] ● Wrongful concealment of child.—In this appeal by the first accused on certificate against the judgment and order of the Allahabad High Court, confirming the conviction and sentence for an offence under Section 368, IPC, the facts were : A-2 was kidnapped a minor child of Srimathi Gomti Devi on 6.11.63. A-2 was the sister of an Aya working in the hospital where P.W.1 gave birth to a male child on the previous evening. She was noticed on that evening moving near about the bed of P.W.1 and on being accosted by P.W. 12, A-2 told the latter that she was waiting to see some patient in the ward. By about 4-00 A.M. the next day, A-2 took away the new born male child from P.W.1 on the representation, that the staff nurse wanted to do the cord dressing of the child. Believing her representation, P.W. 1 allowed her to take the child. As the child was not returned to the ward even after the lapse of 1½ hours, P.W.1 informed the sister on duty about the same. A search was made for A-2 as well as the child in the hospital premises, in vain. Thereupon the doctor as well as the Superintendent of the hospital were informed. After preliminary enquiries by the Superintendent, the matter was reported to the police. At about 9-00 A.M., the child was recovered from the first floor of the house occupied by the appellant (A-1) as a tenant. At the time of the seizure of the child the appellant was lying on the cot, with the child beside her and A-2 was sitting in their company in the same room. The child was identified by the mother and other hospital authorities as the child was in the hospital's dress and also having the ticket number given in the hospital. A-2 was convicted under Section 363 and A-1 under Section 368. Their convictions were confirmed by the High Court. The appellant denied that the child had been recovered from her room and further pleaded that A-2 was not at all with her in her room. She further pleaded, that the case was foisted on her by the landlady of the house who was inimical to her. It was contended for the appellant that she had nothing to do with A-2 as established by the evidence and that the child might have been brought to her room by A-2 and she came on a visit, and that the prosecution had not established that she had any knowledge that the child had been kidnapped and that, less in any event, she was not guilty of having wrongfully concealed or kept the child in confinement.

The contentions of the counsel for the appellant could not be accepted in the face of the concurrent findings by both the Courts that at the time of the recovery the child was in the same bed occupied by the appellant and in their company in the same room where A-2 was also present. When the police party went to that room, she had absolutely no explanation to offer for the presence of the child with her. The three ingredients of the offence of Section 368 were fully established. That the child was kidnapped by A-2 was amply established. That the appellant had the knowledge that the child had been kidnapped was an inference to be drawn by the Court from the various circumstances. The child was less than 15 hours old. The appellant admittedly had no child of her own and A-2, it had been established, had not delivered a child within 15 days of 5-11-63. On account of the false denial of the appellant regarding the recovery of child from her room and A-2 not being present in her room at the material time, the only legitimate inference that could be drawn, as done by the two Courts, was that the appellant should have had the knowledge that the child had been kidnapped from the lawful custody of its mother. Wrongful concealment of the child was clearly established by the evidence. Hence the conviction was upheld. Saroj Kumari v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 201 : (1973) 3 SCC 669 : 1973 CrLJ 267.

CONCEALMENT OF CRIME

[8173] ● Concealment of crime.—Provided there is affirmative proof of a participation by him in the act charged, evidence of a desire or a disposition on the part of accused to conceal the crime is admissible even though it tends to prove another and distinct crime, this being true as to an act which owing to the circumstances may or may not be criminal. 22 Corp Jur Sec. 955.

CONCEALMENT OF FACTS FROM COURT

[8174] ● Concealment of facts from Court.—Special Judge issued notice requiring the petitioner to show cause why action be not taken against him for concealing the fact that he had earlier filed a complaint in the Court of Chief Judicial Magistrate which was not mentioned by him in his complaint under Section 156(3), CrPC.

Petitioner filed his objections to the show cause notice, but the Special Sessions Judge (DAA), Farrukhabad, by order dated 14/15-01-1999, initiated proceedings against the petitioner for an offence under Section 182 of the IPC, allegedly on the ground that the petitioner had concealed the material facts from the Court and had not mentioned that he had earlier filed an application in respect of the same incident before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Farrukhabad. It was held that mere non-mention of the complaint already filed in the Court of Chief Judicial Magistrate, in the petition filed under Section 156(3), CrPC before the Special Sessions Judge (DAA), Farrukhabad, would not be enough. Subash Chandra v. State of Uttar Pradesh , 2001 (3) Crimes 63 (SC).

CONCESSION

[8175] ● Public Policy bars inquiry as to what transpired in High Court.—The Court cannot launch into any inquiry as to what transpired in High Court. Public Policy bars it. Judicial decorum restrains it. Matters of judicial record are unquestionable. They are not open to doubt. Judges cannot be dragged into the arena. "Judgments cannot be treated as mere counters in the game of litigation".

The Court is bound to accept the statement of the Judges recorded in their judgment, as to what transpired in Court.

The Supreme Court cannot allow the statement of the Judges to be contradicted by statement of Bar or by affidavit or other evidence.

If the Judges say in their judgment that something was done, said or admitted before them, that has to be the last word on the subject. The principle is well-settled that statements of fact as to what transpired at the hearing, recorded in the judgment of the Court, are conclusive of the facts so stated and no one can contradict such statements by affidavit or other evidence. If a party thinks that the happenings in court have been wrongly recorded in judgment, it is incumbent upon the party, while the matter is still fresh in the minds of the Judges, to call the attention of the very judges who have made the record to the fact that the statement made with regard to his conduct was statement that had been made in error.

That is the only way to have the record corrected. If no such step is taken, the matter must necessarily end there. A party may resile and an Appellate Court may permit him in rare and appropriate cases to resile from a concession on the ground that the concession was made on wrong appreciation of the law and had led to gross injustice; but, he may not call in question the very fact of making the concession as recorded in the judgment. State of Maharashtra v. Ramdas Srinivas Nayak, AIR 1982 SC 1249 : (1982) 2 SCC 463 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 498 : 1982 CrLJ 1581 : (1983) 1 Crimes 335.

[8176] ● Trial Court not discussing the relevant evidence at all.—During the arguments, the prosecutor did not think it proper to press for the offence punishable under Section 302 read with Section 34 of Penal Code. According to the prosecutor the only case made out was for offences punishable under Sections 306 and 498A read with Section 34, IPC. The trial Court endorsed the view of the Public Prosecutor and did not discuss the relevant evidence at all on the charge of Section 302 and recorded a finding of acquittal in that behalf. He also held that the charge of Section 201, IPC also did not survive. The State filed an appeal against their order of acquittal and the High Court on appeal castigated the Trial Judge for having gone merely on the statement of the Public Prosecutor without applying his own mind on the evidence. The High Court examined the evidence afresh. Prabhudayal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1993 SC 2164 : (1993) 3 SCC 573 : 1993 CrLJ 2239 : (1993) 2 Crimes 473.

[8177] ● Concession.—A wrong concession made by a counsel before the Court cannot bind the parties when statutory provisions clearly provide otherwise. Union of India v. Mohanlal Likumal Punjabi, AIR 2004 SC 1704 : (2004) 3 SCC 628 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 844 (845) : JT 2004 (2) SC 528 : (2004) 2 Crimes 82.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE

[8178] ● Conclusive evidence.—Where evidence which is made conclusive is adduced, the Court has no option but to hold that the fact exists. If that were not so, it would be meaningless to call a particular piece of evidence as conclusive evidence. Once the law says that certain evidence is conclusive it shutout any other evidence which would detract from the conclusiveness of that evidence. Somawanti v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 151 (152) : 1963 (2) SCR 774 : 1963 (33) CC 745.

[8179] ● Conclusive proof and conclusive evidence—No difference between two expressions.—Statute may use of expression 'Conclusive Proof' where the object is to make a fact non-justifiable. But the legislature may use some other expression such as 'conclusive evidence' for achieving the same result. There is thus no difference between these two expressions the aim of both being to give finality to the establishment of the existence of a fact from the proof of another. Somawanti v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 151 : 1963 (2) SCR 774 : 1963 (33) CC 745.

[8181] ● Certificate of purchase conclusive proof of assignment.—Certificate of purchase issued by the Taluka Board in the conclusive proof of assignment to the tenant of the right, title and interest of the landowner over the holding or the portion thereon to which the assignment relates, which can be discarded only if it is inaccurate or its face or is procured collusively. Cheeranthoodika Ahmed Kutty v. Parambar Mariakutty Umma, AIR 2000 SC 1853 : (2000) 2 SCC 417.

[8182] ● Conclusive proof.—When the Legislature chose to employ the expression that a certain fact "shall be exclusive proof" of another fact, normally, the parties are disabled from disrupting such proof. This can be discerned from the definition of the expression "conclusive proof" in Section 14 of the Evidence Act. But Section 112, Evidence Act itself provides an outlet to the party who wants to escape from the rigour of that conclusiveness. The said outlet is, if it can be shown that the parties has no access to each other at the time when the child could have been begotten, the presumption could be rebutted. Kanti Devi v. Pashi Ram, AIR 2001 SC 2226 : (2001) 5 SCC 311 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 892 (895-896).

CONCURRENT

[8183] ● Concurrent.—It is significant to note that under Section 397, Cr.P.C., 1973 while the High Court and the Sessions Judge have the concurrent powers of revision, it is expressly provided under sub-section (3) of that section that when an application under that section has been made by any person to the High Court or to the Sessions Judge, no further application by the same person shall be entertained by either of them. This is the position explicitly made clear under the new Code with regard to revision when the authorities have concurrent powers. Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1978 SC 179 (183) : (1978) 1 SCC 118 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 41 : 1978 CrLJ 129 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 1137 : (1978) 2 SCR 358.

[8184] ● Concurrent power of revision.—Similar was the position under Section 435(4) of the old Code with regard to concurrent revision powers of the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate. Although under Section 435(1) of the old Code the High Court, a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate had concurrent powers of revision, the High Courts jurisdiction in revision was left untouched. There is no provision in the new Code excluding the jurisdiction of the High Court in dealing with an application under Section 439(2), CrPC to cancel bail after the Sessions Judge had been moved and an order had been passed by him granting bail. The High Court has undoubtedly jurisdiction to entertain the application under Section 439(2), Cr.P.C. for cancellation of bail notwithstanding that the Sessions Judge had earlier admitted the appellants to bail. Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1978 SC 179 (183, 184) : (1978) 1 SCC 118 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 41 : 1978 CrLJ 129 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 137.

[8185] ● Concurrent conclusion.—In the present case the findings of authorities below are arrived at on a reasonable and legitimate assessment of the evidence on record. The High Court however, came to the conclusion that the initial burden of proving that the goods in question were smuggled, lay on the department which according to it, was not discharged by the Department. The conclusion of the High Court is obviously based on a misappreciation of the evidence that was already considered by the lower authorities. The High Court not only erred in re-appreciating the evidence already considered by the authorities below but in that process committed a further error of substituting its subjective opinion in the place of the findings of the authorities below. The finding of the High Court that the concurrent conclusions of the statutory authorities were either not based on evidence or were perverse, is unsustainable. Union of India v. Rajendra Prabhu, AIR 2001 SC 1672 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 745 (750) : (2001) 4 SCC 472 : JT 2001 (4) SC 79.

CONCURRENT FINDINGS

[8186] ● Concurrent findings.—Ordinarily, the Supreme Court will not interfere with a concurrent finding of fact. But when the finding omits to notice an important circumstance which clearly refutes the finding and which swings the balance the other way, it is the duty of the Court not to let that finding stand. The accused in this case was charged with the offence of murder. The prosecution case was that at the time of the incident he was wearing a coat bearing minute stains of blood which had been recovered from his house. This coat had two buttons. One prosecution witness had clearly remembered that at the time when he had seen the accused shortly after the incident, he was wearing a coat having only one button, and another witness was definite that the accused was not wearing a coat at that time. Under these circumstances, the concurrent finding that the blood-stained coat recovered from the house of the accused was worn by him at the time of the offence was put aside in considering the facts proved against the accused. Kashmira Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1952 SC 159 : 1952 CrLJ 839 : 1952 SCA 474 : 1952 SCJ 201 : 1952 SCR 526 : 1952 MWN 402 : 1952 (1) MLJ 754 : 1952 MWN (Cri) 106 : 1952 AWR (Supp) 64.

[8187] ● Concurrent finding of facts.—When the trial Court and the High Court in appeal arrive at concurrent findings of fact based upon the evidence of witnesses whom they find to be reliable, the Supreme Court will not ordinarily disturb such findings. However, if in any case conviction of the accused person is based on findings of fact which rest on the testimony of a single prosecution witness, and the Supreme Court finds that the lower Courts have accepted the evidence of such witness in disregard of various taints and infirmities from which it suffers, and that they have departed from the settled rule of prudence that in the absence of independent corroboration such evidence should not be accepted as being sufficient for the purpose of conviction, it is a fit case for interference with the order of conviction. Hanumant Govind Nargundkar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1952 SC 343 : 1953 CrLJ 129 : 1952 SCA 623 : 1952 SCJ 509 : 1952 SCR 1091 : 1952 (2) MLJ 631 : 1952 AWR (Supp) 109 : 1953 MWN 347.

[8188] ● Concurrent findings of facts.—The Supreme Court is not a third Court of fact, and consistently with its normal practice, it will decline to interfere with concurrent findings and conclusions on facts save in exceptional circumstances in which a grave injustice would otherwise result. In the absence of compelling reasons for doing so, the Court will not interfere with the conclusions of the lower Courts which are based on appreciation of the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, and will refuse to substitute its own appreciation of such evidence for that of the lower Courts unless it finds they have clearly erred in their appreciation of such evidence. Damodaran, K. v. State of Trav. Cochin, AIR 1953 SC 462 : 1953 CrLJ 1928 : 1953 KerLT 295.

[8189] ● Supreme Court accepts concurrent finding of fact by lower Court.—In an appeal by special leave under Article 136, it is the general practice of the Supreme Court to accept concurrent findings of fact by the lower Courts as correct, and the Court will not depart from that practice unless there are strong reasons for doing so.

Hector T. Huntley v. Emp., AIR 1944 FC 66, distinguished on the ground that in that case the High Court had differed from the findings of fact of the lower Court, and hence when the case came up before the Federal Court there were no concurrent findings of fact by the Courts below. Mahadev Dhanappa Gunaki v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 179 : 1953 CrLJ 902 : 1953 SCA 685 : 1953 SCJ 229 : 1953 (1) MLJ 615 : 55 PunLR 307 : 55 BomLR 513.

[8190] ● Supreme Court not to disturb concurrent decisions of Courts below.—The Supreme Court will not in appeal disturb the concurrent decisions of the Courts below merely for the reason that it feels that from the facts on record it might have drawn a conclusion different from theirs. In other words, the Supreme Court will not constitute itself into a third Court of facts. Vijendrajit Ajodhya Prasad Goel v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 247 : 1953 CrLJ 1097 : 1953 SCA 395 : 1953 SCJ 328 : 1953 AWR (Supp) 70 : 1953 MWN 552.

[8191] ● Supreme Court not go behind concurrent finding on question of fact.—If the trial Court and the High Court in appeal came to the concurrent finding on a question of fact, the Supreme Court will not ordinarily go behind that finding in an appeal by special leave under Article 136. In the instant case, the accused was convicted under Section 302/149, Penal Code, and on appeal, the High Court confirmed the conviction. In the appeal to the Supreme Court, the conviction was sought to be challenged on the following grounds, namely, (a) that the name of the accused had not been given in the first information report, (b) that there were no marks of any injury on the person of the accused, and (c) that his plea of alibi had been wrongly rejected. The points urged on behalf of the accused were material only for the purpose of appreciation of evidence, and since the Courts below had accepted the evidence of the prosecution witnesses and had come to a concurrent finding that the accused was a member of an unlawful assembly and had taken part in inflicting the injuries on the deceased, the Court would not go behind those findings in the absence of any adequate reason shown for doing so. The appeal was rejected. Thakur Prasad v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 30 : 1954 CrLJ 261.

[8192] ● Supreme Court will not interfere with concurrent findings of Courts below.—In the instant case, the High Court had on appeal confirmed the order of conviction under Section 406, Penal Code, made by a Magistrate against the accused. The points for determination were all purely of fact, and they depended only on appreciation of oral evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that there was no ground for interference, as the arguments of the appellant all turned on what was essentially a matter of appreciation of evidence as to which the findings of the Courts below were concurrent. Conviction was upheld and the appeal was dismissed. Narayan Tewary v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1954 SC 726 : 1954 CrLJ 1808.

[8193] ● Supreme Court not to differ from concurrent finding of fact.—In the present case both the Courts below had arrived at the finding that the injuries inflicted on the deceased were caused by the accused on a particular date and that, those were the injuries which were responsible for his death. The proceedings had concluded on the basis, that the injuries which resulted in the death of the deceased had been inflicted on that date, and the prosecution case on that point had not been challenged during the trial. The accused could not be allowed to suggest for the first time in the Supreme Court, on the strength of some discrepancies found on the record, that apart from the occurrence of the date which had been deposed to by the witnesses, there must also have been some other later incident which was really responsible for the ultimate death of the deceased after 20 days. Inder Singh Bagga Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1955 SC 439 : 1955 CrLJ 1014.

[8195] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Interference.—In an appeal by special leave, consistently with its well established practice, the Supreme Court will not interfere with concurrent findings of fact of the trial Court as well as the High Court. Applying this principle the Court refused in the present case to interfere with a concurrent finding that the accused had forged a signature on a certain document. Ram Narain v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 322 : 1955 CrLJ 871.

[8196] ● Concurrent findings of fact arrived at by Courts below—Not to be reagitated.—In an appeal by special leave under Article 136, it is not open to the appellant to re-agitate questions of fact. The concurrent findings of facts arrived at by the Courts below must be accepted by him as binding and the Supreme Court will be slow to disturb them in an appeal under Article 136 unless there are special circumstances in the case which require it to do so. Kunjilal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1955 SC 280 : 1955 CrLJ 730 : 1955 (2) MLJ (SC) 96 : 1955 SCJ 592 : 1955 SCR 872 : 1955 NagLJ 84 : 1955 MWN 707 : 1955 AWR (Supp) 97.

[8197] ● Concurrent findings of fact by Courts below—Supreme not to go behind.—When the Courts below have carefully examined the evidence of the eye-witnesses directly incriminating the accused and have accepted that evidence as being true and reliable, the Supreme Court will not, in an appeal by special leave against the judgment of the High Court confirming the conviction of the accused, allow the appellant to go behind the concurrent findings of the Courts below on questions of fact, unless there are some special circumstances which justify such a course. Chhutanni v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 407 : 1956 CrLJ 797.

[8198] ● Findings of fact—Interference.—The Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere with the findings of fact of the Courts below. However, if a clear question of law arises on the findings arrived at by the High Court, and the appellant contends that the conclusion of the High Court was erroneous, the Supreme Court will exercise its power of interference. Ram Shankar Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 441 : 1956 CrLJ 322.

[8199] ● Supreme Court not to interfere with concurrent findings of fact by Courts below.—In an appeal by special leave under Article 136, the Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere with concurrent findings of fact by the Courts below, and it will not interfere with an order of conviction unless it is satisfied that some established principle of law has been disregarded and a grave injustice has been done. In the present case, the conviction of the accused on the charge of murder was based on his retracted confession. The Court examined the evidence on record and found that the confession had been wrongly accepted as being voluntary in spite of circumstances which threw a doubt on its voluntary character, and that in disregard of established principles, the necessity of independent corroboration to a retracted confession had been overlooked. Under these circumstances, it was a fit case for interference. The appeal was allowed, and the conviction was set aside. Nathu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 56 : 1956 CrLJ 152.

[8200] ● Concurrent findings of fact.—Following its usual practice, the Supreme Court will decline to interfere with concurrent findings of fact where there is ample evidence which, if believed, is sufficient to support those findings. The Court refused to allow the appellants in the present case to go into the question of the credibility of the prosecution witnesses on whose evidence the lower Courts had relied or to attack the correctness of the findings of fact which were based on that evidence. Mathew, K.C. v. State of Trav. Cochin, AIR 1956 SC 241 : 1956 CrLJ 444 : 1956 SCA 175 : 1956 SCJ 213 : 1956 (2) SCR 1057 : 1956 AWR (Supp) 34 : 1956 (1) MLJ (SC) 130 : 1956 KerLT 355 : 1956 ALT 506.

[8201] ● Supreme Court not to interfere with concurrent findings.—In an appeal by way of special leave, the Supreme Court does not usually interfere with the concurrent findings of fact arrived at by the Courts below, unless something substantial is shown to persuade it to go behind those findings. Khacheru Singh State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 546 : 1956 CrLJ 950.

[8202] ● Finding of fact when can be reopened by Supreme Court.—When a finding of fact by the trial Court is based on the testimony of eyewitnesses whom that Court considers to be true and reliable, and the High Court in appeal has concurred with that finding, the Supreme Court will not, in an appeal under Article 136, allow such a finding to be reopened, unless it is so perverse or opposed to principles of natural justice as to be revolting to judicial conscience. Niranjan Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 142 : 1957 CrLJ 294 : 1957 SCA 75 : 1957 SCJ 69 : 1957 SCR 734 : 1957 ALJ 233 : ILR (1956) 2 All 745 : 1957 (1) MLJ (Cri) 1 : 1957 AWR (HC) 258.

[8203] ● Concurrent finding—Accused guilty of offence.—When there are concurrent findings of the Courts below that the accused are guilty of the offence of which they are charged, and the facts proved in the case are sufficient to sustain those findings, the Supreme Court will not allow the appellant in the appeal by special leave to attack those findings unless there are some special circumstances in the case to show that those findings were not justified. Ram Chandra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 381 : 1957 CrLJ 559.

[8204] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Interference.—In an appeal by special leave under Article 136, the Supreme Court will not ordinarily allow the accused to canvass the correctness of concurrent findings of the Courts below as regards the degrees of the guilt of the several accused in the case or the offence which has been proved against each accused. However, the question as to the offence which an accused has committed on the facts proved in the case, and as to the particular section or sections of a penal law under which he can justifiably be convicted on the evidence against him, is a question purely of law and not of fact. If in any case the Supreme Court finds that the High Court has erred in arriving from the proved facts in the case at the appropriate section, under which the accused could be convicted, or that the High Court has refused to give him the benefit of any exception to which on proved facts he is entitled, it is a fit case for interference in the exercise of the discretion vested in the Court under Article 136. In such a case, in order to avert the grave injustice which would otherwise be done, the Court must set aside the conviction as it stands and convict the accused of the particular offence of which, on the facts proved in the case, he is guilty. It could not be alleged that in doing so the Court has disturbed a finding of fact. Applying these principles, conviction of the accused in the present case under Section 302, Penal Code, was set aside and was reduced to one under Section 304, Part I. Dharman State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 324 : 1957 CrLJ 420.

[8205] ● Conviction based on concurrent findings of facts.—Interference with.—In a criminal appeal by special leave under Article 136, the Court will not ordinarily allow the appellant to raise questions of fact, and will be slow to interfere with the concurrent findings of fact of the lower Courts on which the conviction is based. However, it would be a fit case for interference if such findings of fact are vitiated by errors of law, or if they are opposed to established principles of judicial approach or of natural justice, or are so wholly unjustified or perverse as to be revolting to judicial conscience. In the present case, the Supreme Court found that the Courts below had grievously erred in two important respects. First, they had failed to take into consideration various material contradictions between the evidence of the approver in Court and his police statement which branded his evidence as utterly unreliable, and secondly they had failed to consider the salient and grave irregularities in recording the confession of an accused which threw a serious doubt upon its voluntary character. It is a fit case for interference. Conviction is set aside. Sarwan Singh Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 637 : 1957 CrLJ 1014 : 1957 SCJ 699 : 1957 AWR (Supp) 99 : 1957 MPC 781 : (1957) 1 MLJ (Cri) 672.

[8206] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Interference by Supreme Court—When.—Ordinarily, the Supreme Court does not interfere with concurrent findings of fact. It will refuse to exercise its extraordinary powers of interference under Article 136 with such findings unless the appellant is able to satisfy it, that such finding involves some substantial question of law on which the Courts below have erred, such as, when evidence which under the law is inadmissible has been accepted and the conviction of the accused has been based upon it. Badri Rai v. State of Bihar, AIR 1958 SC 953 : 1958 CrLJ 1434 : 1958 SCJ 117 : 1959 MLJ (Cri) 25 : 1958 ALJ 909 : 1958 AWR(HC) 861 : 1959 BLJR 50 : 1959 ACrR 44.

[8207] ● Concurrent findings of Courts below—Supreme Court not to go behind.—The practice of the Supreme Court is that ordinarily it will not allow the appellant to go behind the concurrent findings of fact of the Courts below. It will not depart from that practice in any case unless the appellant is able to show valid grounds for its doing so. Mulk Raj v. State of Bihar, AIR 1959 SC 902 : 1959 CrLJ 1219 : 1959 AWR (HC) 18 : 1960 ACrR 37.

[8208] ● Concurrent finding of fact—Supreme Court when refuse to interfere with.—The appellant cannot be allowed to go behind the concurrent findings of the Courts below which are essentially findings of fact, unless he can show that they are vitiated by some error of law. In the absence of any such special circumstance, the Supreme Court will refuse to interfere with a concurrent finding of fact, in accordance with its usual practice. Bhinka v. Charan Singh, AIR 1959 SC 960 : 1959 CrLJ 1223 : 1959 ALJ 557 : 1959 AWR (HC) 440 : 1959 ACrR 337.

[8209] ● Supreme Court not to review evidence on concurrent conclusions of fact of Court's below.—It is the settled practice of the Supreme Court that when the concurrent conclusions of the Courts below are conclusions of fact, it will not normally enter upon a review of the evidence on which they are founded, unless when,

(a) the trial is vitiated by an illegality or irregularity of procedure, or

(b) the trial is held in a manner violative of the principles of natural justice resulting in an unfair trial, or

(c) the trial has otherwise resulted in gross miscarriage of justice.

If, in any case, none of any of these three possibilities could be suggested, and the conclusion of the Court of the first instance that the charge of any offence is proved against the accused is affirmed by the High Court in appeal, then, such conclusion will be accepted by the Supreme Court without allowing the appellant to re-open the case on facts. Shambhu Nath Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1960 SC 725 : 1960 CrLJ 1144 : 1960 BLJR 236.

[8210] ● Concurrent findings of Courts below—Interference by Supreme Court—When.—It is the well established practice of the Supreme Court that in a case in which the trial Court as well as the High Court on appeal have carefully considered the evidence adduced by the prosecution as well as the accused, and have accepted the prosecution case, the Supreme Court will not interfere on questions of fact with the concurrent findings of both the Courts below except under exceptional circumstances. Shri Ram v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 674 : 1961 (1) CrLJ 760 : (1961) 1 SCJ 677 : (1961) AWR(HC) 201 : 1961 ALJ 202 : 1961 ACrR 84 : (1961) 1 MLJ (SC) 221 : 1961 MLJ (Cri) 342 : (1961) 1 AnWR (SC) 221 : 1961 MPC 255 : 1961 BLJR 231 : (1961) 1 KerLR 352 : 1961 MPLJ 1101 : 1961 NagLJ 517 : 63 BomLR 434.

[8211] ● Concurrent findings of Court's below—Exercise of power by Supreme Court under Article 136.—Where there are concurrent findings of all the lower Courts on a question of fact, the Supreme Court will not, in the exercise of its powers under Article 136, be prepared to differ from that finding in the absence of any permissible ground for doing so. Pyare Lal Bhargava v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1963 SC 1094 : 1963(2) CrLJ 178 : 1963 SCD 341 : 1963 ALJ 459 : 1963 BLJR 407 : 1963 AWR(HC) 374 : 1963 ACrR 192.

[8212] ● Concurrent findings of fact by trial Court as well as High Court.—In a case in which the accused is charged with the offence of forgery, if there are concurrent findings of fact by the trial Court as well as the High Court in appeal that the accused put the signatures of another person on the relevant documents and thus made the person deceived, do certain acts in the belief that the documents were genuine, the Supreme Court will, in the appeal under Article 136, follow the usual practice of the Court and accept those findings as they are finding of fact based upon relevant evidence. Bansal, G.S. v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1963 SC 1577 : 1963(2) CrLJ 439 : (1963) KerLR 169 : 66 PunLR 60 : 1964 AWR(HC) 9.

[8213] ● Supreme Court not to re-assess evidence and findings of both Courts below when.—In an appeal under Article 136, ordinarily the Supreme Court does not re-assess the evidence and re-examine the findings of fact reached by the Courts below particularly where there are concurrent findings by both the Courts below.

But where the appeal is from an order of conviction based solely on circumstantial evidence, and the question is whether the circumstances which are established are sufficient to lead to the irresistible conclusion that the accused is guilty and whether the conviction of the accused which is based solely on those circumstances is justified, the Court may in a case consider it expedient to examine the whole evidence for itself in order to satisfy itself as to whether the conviction is rightly based. Raghav Prapanna Tripathi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1963 SC 74 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 70.

[8214] ● Concurrent findings of Courts below —Interference with—When.—In the present case, the question was whether the accused had discharged the burden of proof which rested on him under Section 9 of the Foreigners Act to prove that he was not a foreigner. For this purpose, the accused had led evidence of witnesses who spoke to the fact that the accused was born in India and continued to reside in India after the date of the commencement of the Constitution and was thus an Indian citizen. The trial Court as well as the Sessions Court in appeal considered this evidence in the light of probabilities and rejected the same as being unworthy of credence, and reached the conclusion that the accused had failed to prove that he was a citizen of India and therefore not a foreigner. In revision, the High Court refused to interfere with that finding, and confirmed the conviction of the accused for the offence under Section 14 of the Foreigners Act. In view of the concurrent finding of the Courts below, in the absence of any permissible ground for interference with that finding under Article 136, the said finding cannot be interfered with. Fateh Mohammad v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1963 SC 1035 : (1963) 2 CrLJ 55 : 1963 (2) SCA 441 : (1963) 2 SCJ 687 : 1963 MLJ (Cri) 621.

[8215] ● Concurrent findings of Courts below based on appreciation of evidence.—Where both the Courts below have examined the evidence given by the eye-witnesses and have accepted that evidence, as being consistent, cogent and probable it is not open to the appellant in the appeal to the Supreme Court under Article 136 to contend that the Court should re-appreciate that evidence and decide for itself whether the view taken by the High Court is right or not. The concurrent findings of the Courts below which are based on the appreciation of the oral evidence cannot ordinarily be challenged in an appeal under Article 136. Darya Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 328 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 350 : 1964 SCD 87 : (1964) 3 SCR 397 : (1964) 2 SCJ 319 : 1964 MLJ (Cri) 503 : 1964 AWR (HC) 532 : 1964 ACrR 394.

[8216] ● Appreciation of evidence—Concurrent findings of fact.—It is against the practice of the Supreme Court in an appeal by special leave to embark on an assessment of the evidence when two Courts have already assessed it and come to concurrent conclusions therefrom. Charan Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1967 SC 520 : 1967 CrLJ 525 : 1967 MLW (Cri) 61.

[8217] ● Concurrent finding when already reached—Supreme Court not to consider evidence for third time.—Where the two lower Courts accepted the evidence against the accused and convicted him in a case under Section 302, IPC, the Supreme Court will not ordinarily consider the evidence for a third time but since in the appeal against acquittal of another accused the entire evidence was read over, the Supreme Court had to appraise the evidence in relation to the convicted accused also. State of Rajasthan v. Kartar Singh, AIR 1970 SC 1305 : (1970) 2 SCC 61 : 1970 CrLJ 1144 : 1970 SCD 724 : 1970 SCCrR 499.

[8218] ● Supreme Court not to reappraise evidence concurrently accepted by two Courts below.—Though normally the Supreme Court does not reappraise the evidence concurrently accepted by the two Courts below, in view of the strong suspicious circumstances pointed out regarding the truth of the evidence given by five P.Ws., the Supreme Court considered it necessary in the interests of justice to consider their evidence more critically. D. Dasaradharami Reddy

v. State of A.P., AIR 1971 SC 1461 : (1971) 3 SCC 247 : 1971 CrLJ 1139 : 1971 UJ (SC) 584.

[8219] ● Supreme Court not to interfere with finding of lower Court.—The Supreme Court ordinarily does not re-appreciate the evidence unless it is satisfied that exceptional and special circumstances exist for doing so. The Court must be satisfied that as a result of serious misappreciation of the evidence by the trial Court and the High Court substantial and grave injustice has been done. Yusuf v. State of Bihar, AIR 1971 SC 1405 : (1971) 2 SCC 366 : 1971 CrLJ 1117 : 1971 SCD 1060 : 1971 CrAppR (SC) 366.

[8220] ● Concurrent finding of fact—Finding binding and final.—Where the High Court on appeal, after appraising the testimony of the eyewitnesses and considering the attending circumstances and the probabilities of the case also agreed with the conclusions of the trial Court, the finding on that point on which both the Courts below have agreed is binding on the Supreme Court and must be accepted as final and not open to re-assessment. Raj Kishore v. State of Bihar, AIR 1971 SC 1058 : (1970) 3 SCC 467 : 1971 CrLJ 921 : 1971 SCD 62 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 356.

[8221] ● Current findings of Court below—Interference by Supreme Court—When.—Where the case of the prosecution has been accepted by the trial Court and the High Court and as there are concurrent findings, the Supreme Court does not ordinarily interfere with such findings. However, where it is contended that certain circumstances were either not taken into consideration by the High Court or were not given due weight, and if those circumstances were taken into consideration the concurrent findings could not be sustained, the Supreme Court would interfere. The previous history of a dispute is a neutral factor and cannot displace the oral evidence relied on by the High Court. Shital Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1971 SC 1309 : (1970) 3 SCC 232 : 1971 CrLJ 1090 : 1971 SCD 56 : 1970 UJ(SC) 869.

[8222] ● Concurrent conclusions of Courts below when not tainted with any infirmity.—Concurrent conclusions of Courts below when not tainted with any infirmity are binding on the Supreme Court.

Normally the Supreme Court does not proceed to review the evidence in criminal appeals unless there is some illegality or grave irregularity or some serious lapse on the part of the Court below, in marshalling or evaluating the evidence and feels justified in adopting such a course in the larger interests of justice. The concurrent conclusions of Courts below when not tainted with any infirmity are binding on the Supreme Court. P. Uka Naran v. K. Karsan, AIR 1971 SC 759 : (1971) 3 SCC 232 : 1971 CrLJ 651 : 1971 UJ(SC) 528 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 452 : 1971 CrAppR (SC) 122.

[8223] ● Concurrent unanimity as to appraisal of evidence both by trial Court and High Court.—Where there was a concurrent unanimity as to the appraisal of the evidence both by the trial Court and the High Court, there can be no question of a fresh assessment of that evidence by the Supreme Court in view of its well-established practice not to do so, except on certain exceptional grounds. Janak Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1972 SC 1853 : 1972 CrLJ 1177.

[8224] ● Concurrent findings of fact regarding participation by accused persons.—Where concurrent findings of fact were given on the basis of the evidence of the injured men, corroborated by a previous statements so far as the accused were concerned as also by the evidence of another person employed on the date of the occurrence, they cannot be challenged in an appeal by special leave. Lakshmi Tiwari v. State of Bihar, AIR 1972 SC 1058 : (1972) 3 SCC 122 : 1972 CrLJ 776 : (1972) 2 SCJ 522 : 1972 MLJ (Cri) 653.

[8225] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Supreme Court not to reappraise evidence.—Where there are concurrent findings regarding the credibility of witnesses for the prosecution the Supreme Court will not re-appraise that evidence unless it is shown that the assessment of the said evidence by both the lower Courts is perverse or manifestly unreasonable or they have failed to take into account some crucial and vital piece of evidence. In case the order made by the Courts below is one of acquittal, the Supreme Court would be still more reluctant to interfere with the appraisement of the evidence. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Ram Manorath, AIR 1972 SC 701 : (1972) 3 SCC 215 : 1972 CrLJ 500.

[8226] ● Concurrent findings of fact arrived at by trial Court and appellate Court.—Though the Supreme Court in an appeal under the Article is reluctant to reopen concurrent findings of fact arrived at by the trial Court and the appellate Court, it will interfere in a case where certain Court proceedings and other documentary evidence did not get proper attention resulting in the misjudgment of their respective positions of the parties. Where it is impossible to say that the appellants were not at any rate under a bona fide belief that they were entitled to the possession of the land in question and that being so there was no question of their having trespassed into the said land or formed an unlawful assembly for committing theft of the standing crop therein or of their having committed theft of the said crop. The dispute between the parties was such that a civil Court would have more appropriately decided it. The entire question of possession and even title was thus in an extremely fluid state and therefore the question of the respondent's possession on the date of the incident in question was not beyond controversy. The appeal was, therefore, allowed and the conviction set aside. Ram Ekbal v. Jaldhari, AIR 1972 SC 949 : (1972) 3 SCC 841 : 1972 CrLJ 584.

[8227] ● Appreciation of evidence.—Where the lower Courts did not consider the circumstance under which the noses of the wife of the first appellant and of PW 3 were cut and convicted the appellant for an offence under Sections 326/34, IPC, the Supreme Court altered the same to one under Sections 355/34, IPC, observing that it was more inclined to accept the version of the first appellant, namely, that PW 3 had developed intimacy with the wife of the 1st appellant and because of that enmity the appellants caught hold of the wife of the 1st appellant and cut her nose and that on hearing her cries the PW 3 came near his house and then he was also caught hold of and his nose was cut as well. Dhondey v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1972 SC 1273 : (1972) 4 SCC 729 : 1972 CrLJ 871.

[8228] ● Appraisement of evidence and concurrent acceptance of.—The non-mention of the injuries on the person of the two accused in the prosecution evidence would not justify interference by the Supreme Court with the appraisement of the evidence by the trial Court and the High Court and concurrent acceptance of the same. Ramlagan Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1972 SC 2593 : (1973) 3 SCC 881 : 1973 CrLJ 44.

[8229] ● Supreme Court to examine evidence in appeal when.—Where the judgment of the trial Court and of the High Court proceed principally on assumptions not fully supportable on the material on the record, it is just, fair and proper for the Supreme Court to examine the evidence itself especially when it is found that there is a serious lacuna in the case wholly due to the inefficient and perfunctory investigation by the investigating agency. In cases of road accidents by fast moving vehicles it was ordinarily difficult to find witnesses who would be in a position to affirm positively the sequence of vital events during the few moments immediately preceding the actual accident, from which its true cause could not be ascertained. Apart from the eye-witnesses, the only person who could be considered to be truly capable of satisfactorily explaining as to the circumstances leading to the accidents like the present was the driver himself or in certain circumstances to some extent the person who was injured. In the present case the person who died in the accident was obviously not available for giving evidence. The Bhaiya was also not produced as a witness, on the basis of which it was contended that the bona fides and the fairness of the prosecution as also the trustworthiness of the version given by the other witnesses was questionable. On the non-examination of the Bhaiya alone, it was contended, the prosecution case should have failed and the Supreme Court felt that there was considerable force in that submission. The investigating officer seemed to have acted without the requisite sense of responsibility essential for a fair and just police investigation into serious accidents like the present, with the result that important evidence which was available and should easily have been forthcoming was not brought before the Court for wholly inadequate, if not flimsy, reasons. Examination of the marks of wheels on the road would have been very useful in appreciating other evidence. What was more surprising was that no evidence on the state of the traffic on the road at the relevant time and on the height of the verb was produced by the prosecution which would have given a clearer picture of the position and in more satisfactorily appreciating the circumstances in which the accident occurred. If there was meagre traffic, there was a greater likelihood of the appellant being able to see the running Bhaiya more clearly and otherwise if traffic was heavy. This reflected a high degree of inefficiency on the part of the investigating agency. The High Court itself observed that the road at that time was more than normally crowded. If that were so, the question would be as to from how much distance the appellant was able to see the Bhaiya running in his anxiety to cross the road. The satisfactory nature of the explanation of the driver to absolve him of his criminal liability for the accident should in such circumstances be appraised in the light of the entire evidence on record. The appellants explanation, even though not conclusive, did, in the absence of the testimony of the Bhaiya and of at least some, out of the passengers of the bus who could have thrown some helpful light, left fair scope for reasonable doubt about his guilt. Though the appellate Court thought of examining Bhaiya, that idea was, however, dropped as the appellant's counsel did not agree. He could have been examined as a Court witness. On the existing record, the evidence was inadequate and unsafe for convicting the appellant. It was entirely due to the faulty and inefficient investigation. The appeal was allowed. N.S. Ghobe v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1973 SC 165 : (1973) 4 SCC 23 : 1973 CrLJ 235 : (1973) 2 SCWR 845.

[8230] ● Concurrent finding as to recovery of currency notes.—When the accused was convicted under Section 161 and Section 420, IPC, and also under Section 5(1) read with Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, it was contended that there was no evidence to show that the accused received the amount from the complainant or that it was received as illegal gratification, the Supreme Court refused to interfere with the concurrent finding of the lower Courts that he received the amount as illegal gratification and the currency notes were recovered from the shirt pocket of the accused. It was also observed that it was difficult to believe the version of the accused that the complainant put the currency notes in his pocket forcibly and against his wish and that too in the presence of a number of persons who according to him were present at that time near him, the evidence regarding which was disbelieved by the two lower Courts. Durga Dass v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 1379 : (1973) 2 SCC 213 : 1973 CrLJ 1138.

[8231] ● Concurrent finding of fact—Supreme Court not to interfere.—Where the two Courts below have appraised the evidence correctly, their conclusion is not open to further re-examination by Supreme Court by way of independent re-appraisal of the evidence for itself.

Where the question of statutory presumption in respect of the offence under Section 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act was not available, was not raised in the Courts below and it also escaped the attention of both the Special Judge and the High Court, the Supreme Court would be fully justified in taking notice of that argument as it goes to the root of the matter relating to the conviction of the accused under Section 5(1)(d) and 5(2) of the Act. B.C. Goswami v. Delhi Admn., AIR 1973 SC 1457 : (1974) 3 SCC 85 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 796 : 1974 CrLJ 243 : 1973 SCD 691.

[8232] ● Supreme Court not to reappraise evidence—When.—The Supreme Court does not normally reappraise the evidence especially when the appreciation by the trial Court as well as by the High Court is unexceptionable and it is not possible to hold that their conclusions are open to any serious challenge. Nanhey v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 224 : (1973) 2 SCC 317 : 1973 CrLJ 273.

[8233] ● Concurrent finding as to rash and negligent driving of accused.—Where according to the findings of the three Courts below the accused was found to be both rash and negligent, under Article 136 the Supreme Court will not appraise the evidence to see how far the concurrent conclusion of the Courts below is justified. Jagdish Chander v. State of Delhi, AIR 1973 SC 2127 : (1973) 2 SCC 203 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 770 : 1973 CrLJ 1393.

[8234] ● Concurrent findings of fact in Sessions Court and High Court last word.—Under the Article, re-assessment of evidence is not permissible in the ordinary course. Concurrent findings of fact in the Sessions Court and the High Court must normally be the last word. Mohanlal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 1144 : (1974) 4 SCC 607 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 643 : 1974 CrLJ 800.

[8235] ● Concurrent finding of fact—Interference by Supreme Court.—The power under Article 136, extraordinary inamplitude but exceptional in its exercise, goes into action only to avert miscarriage of justice and rarely operates to undo concurrent findings of fact, if perversity is not present. Som Parkash v. State of Delhi, AIR 1974 SC 989 : (1974) 4 SCC 84 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 215 : 1974 CrLJ 784 : 1974 SCD 249.

[8236] ● Re-appreciation of evidence—Not permissible in absence of manifest injustice or perversity.—The Supreme Court will not ordinarily re-weigh the evidence or re-examine loopholes and lacunae unless satisfied that there has been some perversity, gross misreading or manifest injustice. Where the Court which has seen the witnesses, and the appellate Court which has reviewed the matter over again, have found no good reason to discard the prosecution version, the Supreme Court will not interfere. Gian Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1974 SC 1024 : (1974) 4 SCC 305 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 406 : 1974 CrLJ 789. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Bhoori Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1974 SC 1256 : (1974) 4 SCC 754 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 664 : 1974 CrLJ 929.

[8237] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Interference with.—In an appeal by special leave under Article 136 and in the exercise of its special jurisdiction under that Article, the Supreme Court does not normally disturb concurrent findings of fact or review the evidence unless grave and exceptional circumstances exist and there has been a failure of justice. Nevertheless, if the findings of the Courts below are manifestly vulnerable and unsound in regard to certain matters, the Supreme Court will reopen the case and reappraise the evidence only to the extent necessary for examination of those matters. Bhoori Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1974 SC 1256 : (1974) 4 SCC 754 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 664 : (1974) CrLJ 929.

[8238] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Interference by Supreme Court.—After going through the evidence on record the Supreme Court came to the conclusion that the super-structure of the prosecution case was based on the testimony of two alleged eye-witnesses whose evidence was not only of an inherently unreliable nature but the artificial and incredible version of the shooting put forward by them were too unnatural to be accepted. It was quite unsafe to convict the appellant on their testimony despite some circumstances which raised grave suspicion against the appellant. Suspicion, however grave, could not be a satisfactory basis for convicting an accused person. Inferences from failure to surrender or even absconding of the appellant and the lack of interest shown by his brother or other relations of the appellant in obstructing the prosecution of the appellant could not possibly prove the guilt of the appellant. Sufficient number of very significant features of evidence on record dealt with by the Supreme Court were ignored by the High Court and the trial Court. The Supreme Court was, therefore, compelled to reassess the evidence and allowed the appeal setting aside the conviction of the appellant for murder as well as for the alleged illegal possession of the gun. Dadar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1974 SC 1193 : (1975) 4 SCC 272 : 1974 CrLJ 908.

[8239] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Interference in appeal by special leave.—Where it is difficult to hold, after considering the totality of evidence, that the concurrent findings of fact given by the Courts below as regards the proof of guilt of each accused beyond reasonable doubt are really erroneous, the Supreme Court will not interfere with such findings though one may not agree with the assessment of the evidence of each witness individually either by the trial Court or by the High Court. Guli Chand v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1974 SC 276 : (1974) 3 SCC 698 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 222 : 1974 CrLJ 331.

[8240] ● Concurrent finding of fact about receipt of currency notes.—Where the investigating officer (Assistant Superintendent of Police) deposed in his chief-examination that the "sanction of the competent authority" was obtained and that statement was not challenged on behalf of the appellant, in cross-examination, this objection cannot be allowed to be challenged as invalid in a special appeal.

So also an objection that there has not been a legal investigation in that the Assistant Superintendent of Police who was below the rank of Deputy Superintendent of Police carried out the investigation without the order of a Magistrate of I Class as required by Section 5A of the Prevention of Corruption Act can be allowed to be raised in a special appeal. Further, generally a conviction is not vitiated because of such contravention unless the accused is shown to have been prejudiced.

The concurrent finding of fact that the currency notes recovered from the pocket of the appellant's jacket were not planted there by the investigating officer but were put there by the appellant after receiving them from the complainant, cannot be allowed to be challenged in a special leave appeal. Once the recovery is proved, a presumption arises under Section 4(1) of the Act that the appellant accepted or obtained the currency notes as a motive or reward such as is mentioned in Section 161, IPC. Nanak Chand v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 765 : (1974) 4 SCC 218 : 1974 SCC (Cri)387 : 1974 CrLJ 660 : (1974) 1 SCWR 605 : 1974 CurLJ 127.

[8241] ● Supreme Court not to go into question of fact and appreciate evidence.—One of the witnesses was a share-holder of the society and was not cross-examined by the Prosecution. His evidence was disbelieved because if his evidence was true he would naturally have told the office-bearers of the Society about the payment by the accused to the Secretary and the case would have been asked to be dropped by the society but no such thing has been done. It was not known wherefrom the Magistrate drew that inference. No such question was asked from the witness and there was no material to support that observation. Another witness was disbelieved on the ground that he did not report to the higher authorities when the police did not hear when he represented to them of the false implication of the accused. The criticism was invalid, for it depended upon a person's nature whether he should write or not to high officers in a particular case. As regards the third witness the criticism was that he did not remember any other transaction done at his shop by him on that day when the accused was alleged to have paid the amount to the Secretary and also that he should have advised the accused to obtain a receipt from the Secretary, or got the payment entered in the registers of the Society. The Sessions Court and the High Court disbelieved the DWs. like the trial Court. It seemed that the defence version could not be disbelieved merely because if the money had not been paid, as stated by the appellant, it would have been expected that the non-payment would be known to the President and the Cashier much sooner. The only foolish thing the appellant did was that he delivered the money and did not take the receipt form Mahnga Ram. The evidence to the DWs. had been disbelieved on pure conjectures and surmises. It was not common that the persons who were witnesses to a transaction go about complaining to the higher authorities if the transaction was impugned. A person could not be allowed to be convicted on mere suspicion and hence the appeal was allowed. Des Raj v. State of Punjab, AIR 1974 SC 2292 : (1971) 3 SCC 235 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 443 : 1974 CrLJ 1531 : 1971 UJ (SC) 540.

[8242] ● Assessment of evidence of one and only eye-witness—Concurrent finding of fact.—Where the evidence of the only eye-witness was not properly assessed by the Courts below, the Supreme Court will interfere with a concurrent finding of fact and reverse the finding of guilt.

A serious infirmity from which the evidence of Nakuldeo suffered was that admittedly several people from the neighbourhood met him at his house after the murder of his brother but he did not disclose the names of the assailants to any one whatsoever. The other members of his family also did not mention the names of the assailants to any one of those persons. Nakuldeo was a man of 24 and at the material time he was employed at the Air Force Station, Agra. It was impossible to accept his claim that he was so overwhelmed by grief that he could not even mention the names of the assailants to any one. The incident had taken place on a dark night and there were no lights either in the courtyard or in the house, with the help of which the assailants could be seen and identified. The significant failure on his part was only consistent with the conclusion that he was unable to identify them. In his evidence he deposed that he was able to identify the assailants of his brother with the light of his torch which he flashed while his brother was being assaulted, but it was surprising that he failed to mention about the torch light in his statement in writing to the police given about 9 hours later. But that statement was never disclosed at the trial by the prosecution while the High Court condoned that lapse by saying that the statement tendered by him was copied verbatim in the case diary. On a perusal of that diary, the High Court found that the statement in the diary contained a reference to the torch light flashed by Nakuldeo. If that be so, it was difficult to appreciate how the statement in the case diary could be said to be a verbatim reproduction of the statement submitted by Nakuldeo. The witness had no compunction in implicating one of the accused falsely and if so there should be strong reason available for accepting his testimony implicating the others. The Supreme Court did not agree with the High Court that the statement in the fardbeyan given by the chowkidar that Nakuldeo was overcome by grief, furnished an adequate explanation for the omission on his part and on the part of the other members of his family to disclose the names of the assailants. Further, it was impossible to believe that none from the large crowd of the villagers who had gone to Nakuldeo's house after the murder, had the ordinary courtesy or curiosity to inquire whether the assailants were known. In view of the serious infirmities in his evidence and even assuming that Nakuldeo flashed his torch light, it was a very tall claim to accept that in a frightened state of mind he could identify as many as eight persons and furnish a description of their weapons. The conviction and sentence were set aside. R.P. Thakur v. State of Bihar, AIR 1974 SC 284 : (1974) 3 SCC 664 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 194 : 1974 CrLJ 335.

[8243] ● Concurrent findings case of public servant taking bribe.—There was no dispute on the point that the five rupee currency note was received by the appellant. According to the prosecution it was received as a bribe, while according to the appellant, he had received the same as the complainant wanted five one rupee currency notes in lieu of that currency note. One of the persons present at the time of recovery of the note from the pocket of the appellant deposed that the accused merely kept quiet while no suggestion was put to another witness that he received the currency note from the complainant with a view to give him change. It was also in evidence that the appellant looked perplexed and did not come out with any explanation at the time of search and recovery of the currency note. It was only much later in the day, more than a few hours after the recovery, that he came out with the version of receiving it with a view of give change. The above plea of the appellant was the result of an after-thought. In view of the concurrent findings of both the lower Courts, arrived at, on due appraisement of the evidence adduced in the case, there was no cogent ground to interfere with the same. The appeal was dismissed. Sultan Ahmad v. State of Bihar, AIR 1974 SC 1828 : (1974) 4 SCC 252 : 1974 SCC(Cri) 414 : 1974 CrLJ 895.

[8244] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Normal rule no interference.—Normally, the Supreme Court would not interfere with the concurrent finding of facts recorded by the Courts below. The evidence revealed that the currency note was not recovered from the person of the appellant that the Dy. S.P. did not actually see the passing of the note from the complainant to the accused, but it was produced by the panch witness after the Dy. S.P. had finished the search, saying that the accused threw it on the ground. The offer of bribe was made, according to the prosecution at two places. Evidence about the first offer consisted of the statements of the complainant and another panch witness but the latter turned hostile. Complaints against the present complainant about his overcharging the customers on the sale of stamps, he being a stamp-vendor, were being investigated into by the appellant, a police constable, at that time. So he should be having grudge against the appellant. There was thus no independent reliable corroboration of the statements of the complainant and another as regards the first offer. In that background, there should be unimpeachable evidence as to the passing of the currency note from the complainant to the appellant. The circumstances narrated above, cast doubt on that story. As there was no corroboration of the evidence of the trap witnesses (complainant and the panch witness), the appellant is given the benefit of doubt and appeal is allowed. Darshan Lal v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1974 SC 218 : (1974) 3 SCC 595 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 73 : 1974 CrLJ 307 : (1974) 2 SCJ 236.

[8245] ● Death due to rash and negligent driving—Concurrent findings of fact.—The Supreme Court is not a regular Court of appeal to which every judgment of the High Court in a criminal case may be brought up for scrutinising its correctness. It is not the practice of the Supreme Court to reappreciate the evidence for the purpose of examining whether the finding of fact concurrently arrived at by the High Court and the subordinate Courts is correct or not. It is only rare in and exceptional cases where there is some manifest illegality or grave and serious miscarriage of justice that the Supreme Court would interfere with such finding of fact. Where not only was the appreciation of the oral evidence by all the three Courts below was eminently correct but there were also certain tell-tale circumstances which clearly supported the findings reached by them and as such the Supreme Court refused to interfere. Duli Chand v. Delhi Admin., AIR 1975 SC 1960 : (1975) 4 SCC 649 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 663 : 1975 CrLJ 1732.

[8247] ● Concurrent finding of fact based on evidence.—The Supreme Court will not interfere with a concurrent finding of fact based on appreciation of evidence. Mehtab Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1975 SC 274 : (1975) 3 SCC 407 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 36 : 1975 CrLJ 290.

[8248] ● Concurrent finding of fact—Interference.—As a rule of practice, the Supreme Court is loath to disturb a concurrent finding of fact unless it is shown that the finding is manifestly erroneous, clearly unreasonable, unjust or illegal or violative of some fundamental rule of procedure or natural justice. Kartarey v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1976 SC 76 : (1976) 1 SCC 172 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 803 : 1976 CrLJ 13.

[8249] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Interference by Supreme Court—When.—It was quite surprising that it should have escaped the notice of the trial Court and the High Court that the Head Constable being the first informant could have investigated into the same case. He was not authorised to investigate such an offence being an officer below the rank of a Dy. S.P. After noticing that he was not authorised to do so, he forwarded the papers to the Dy. S.P. who then re-investigated the case and ultimately filed the charge-sheet. Though no importance need be attached to that fact, as that might not affect the validity of conviction, that infirmity was bound to reflect on the credibility of the prosecution case. Then again the Head Constable did not make any effect to get independent respectable witnesses for making the seizure of the bundle of currency notes but the seizure memo was signed by the said Head Constable and his subordinate police constables. These was evidence that two other persons of the village were also present at that time. The seizure memo did not also contain the circumstances in which the cash was seized or any reference made to the conversation supposed to have taken place between the appellant and the Head Constable in connection with the offer of the bribe. The whole episode was shrouded in secrecy and There was nothing but the evidence of police constables to support it. It could not be said to be free from reasonable doubt. The story that when the Head Constable refused to accept the bribe of Rs 40/- or Rs 50/-, the appellant should have immediately taken out the entire bundle of currency notes of Rs 510/- which was with him and offered it by way of bribe, was quite unnatural and the Supreme Court would hesitate considerably before founding a conviction upon it. In view of the above infirmity, the Supreme Court allowed the appeal setting aside the conviction of the appellant. Bhagwan Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1976 SC 985 : (1976) 1 SCC 15 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 737 : 1976 CrLJ 713 : 1975 CLR (SC) 502.

[8250] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Interference by Supreme Court—When.—The Supreme Court is generally loath to interfere with the concurrent findings of fact recorded by the Courts below, reappraise the evidence for itself and then take a view different from that taken by them. But in a gross case where there appears to have been a miscarriage of justice by the wrong application of the well-settled principles of law, then it would be obliged to go into the facts and take its own view of the matter. In this case, the convictions of persons whose guilt had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt and the whole prosecution case was very shaky and doubtful because of some inherent defects and improbabilities, the Court would be unable to sustain their convictions. Though the motive was established and the FIR was lodged at the time and place it purported to have been lodged, there were serious infirmities regarding the arrest of the appellants and the recoveries of the fire-arms from them. It could not be believed that the appellants after the lapse of several hours found the field a convenient place for hiding and went there all armed. The High Court did not deal with the question of the doubtful nature of the arrest of Nachhettar Singh and the recovery of a rifle from him. The recovery memos for empty cartridges have not been proved properly and no explanation was given for the non-examination of the respectable witnesses who signed them. No explanation was given for the delay of five weeks in sending the fire-arms and the empties to the Ballistic Expert. From the evidence of the Expert, four empty cartridges were not fired from the gun said to have been recovered from appellant Balwant Gir. The biggest loophole in the prosecution case was that no rifle injury was found on any of the victims. The Doctors' evidence confirmed the same. The appellant Nachhettar Singh was alleged to have shot dead LP with his rifle but no rifle injury was found on him. So also rifle injuries were not found on the other two deceased persons. There was no answer to the big question as to how the three empty cartridges of 8 mm said to have been recovered from the place of occurrence were found by the Expert to have been fired from Nachhettar's rifle and yet no rifle injury was found on any of the victims and although the rifle was used on two of them according to the FIR and on all the three according to the evidence in Court. The High Court, therefore, committed a grave error in not scanning their evidence in the background of the serious infirmities. It tried to separate the grain from the chaff and thought that it had succeeded in doing so. But it did so wrongly. The various infirmities and defects in the prosecution referred to above had broken the grain of the story and mixed it with chaff to such an extent that it was almost impossible to separate them and find the appellants to be guilty. Nachhettar Singh v. State of Panjab, AIR 1976 SC 951 : (1976) 1 SCC 750 : 1976 CrLJ 691.

[8251] ● Interference with concurrent finding of fact.—Ordinarily, as a matter of fact, the Supreme Court does not go behind a concurrent finding of fact unless such finding is clearly unreasonable or manifestly erroneous or illegal. Chandmal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1976 SC 917 : (1976) 1 SCC 621 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 120 : 1976 CrLJ 679 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 7 : 1976 CrAppR (SC) 32 : 1975 WLN 717.

[8252] ● Interference by Supreme Court with findings of fact.—The Supreme Court not being an ordinary Court of criminal appeal does not interfere on pure question of fact. It is only in very special cases where the Court satisfied that the High Court has committed an error of law or procedure as a result of which there has been a serious miscarriage of justice that the Supreme Court would interfere with the concurrent findings of the High Court and trial Court. The assessment of evidence by the High Court would be taken by the Supreme Court as final, unless it is vitiated by any error of law or procedure, by the principles of natural justice, by errors of record or misreading of evidence, non-consideration of glaring inconsistencies in the evidence which demolish the prosecution case, or where the conclusion of the High Court is manifestly perverse and unsupportable and the like. Dalbir Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 472 : (1976) 4 SCC 158 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 527 : 1977 CrLJ 273 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 417 : 1977 SC CrR 46 : (1977) 1 SCJ 54 : 1976 CurLJ (Cri) 204 : 1977 MLJ (Cri) 50.

[8253] ● Supreme Court not to embark on reappreciation of evidence and interfere with concurrent view.—It would not be right for the Supreme Court to embark on a reappreciation of the evidence and to interfere with the concurrent view taken in regard to the evidence by the Courts below. Ashok Kumar v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 109 : (1977) 1 SCC 746 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 177 : 1977 CrLJ 1641976 CrLR (SC) 473 :

1977 SC CrR 29 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 26 : : 1976 UJ (SC) 873 : (1977) 4 CrLT 4.

[8254] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Practice of Supreme Court.—In the instant case the prosecution alleged that the prosecutrix who was a fully grown up lady and habituated to sexual intercourse and was pregnant, was raped by three persons one after the other against her will and with great force and that as a result she had abortion 4 or 5 days after the occurrence. All the accused were convicted under Section 376, IPC, and the same was confirmed by the High Court. Hence, this special leave appeal. The Sessions Judge as also the High Court completely overlooked some striking facts and glaring defects appearing in the prosecution evidence which vitiated the findings of fact. Ordinarily the Supreme Court does not interfere with the concurrent findings of fact arrived at by the Courts below. None of the Courts below tried to examine the possibility which was clearly suggested by the evidence of the prosecution itself that the appellants might have had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix, not against her will but with her consent and also with the connivance of her husband. The Sessions Judge dismissed the plea of consent on the ground that it was not pleaded by the accused, completely losing sight of the fact that in a criminal case the accused was not bound by his pleading and it was open to him to prove his defence even from the admissions made by the prosecution witnesses or the circumstances proved in the case. The High Court also did not consider that aspect at all. Such a wrong approach by both the Courts below had resulted in a serious miscarriage of justice to the accused calling for the interference by the Supreme Court. Pratap Misra v. State of Orissa, AIR 1977 SC 1307 : (1977) 3 SCC 41 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 447 : 1977 CrLJ 817 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 233 : 1977 SCCrR 258 : 1977CurLJ (Cri) 102.

[8255] ● Supreme Court not to interfere with findings record by Courts below.—Normally the Supreme Court is slow to interfere with the findings of the fact recorded by the High Court and the Sessions Court and if two views of the evidence are reasonably possible the Supreme Court would refrain from upsetting the judgment of the High Court But where the Supreme Court disagrees with the conclusion of the lower Courts that a particular witness was an eye-witness to the occurrence and where there was nothing more in the case against the accused, the conviction could not be sustained. C. Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1977 SC 386 : (1976) 1 SCC 879 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 215 : 1977 CrLJ 243 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 463 : 1975 SCCrR 468 : 1975 CrAppR (SC) 306 : 1975 BBCJ 730 : 1976 Chand LR (Cri) (SC) 66 : 1975 UJ (SC) 576 : 1975 ACrC 282 : 1975 Cur LJ 577 : (1975) 2 CrLT 487.

[8256] ● Concurrent finding of lower Courts that eye-witnesses reliable witnesses.—Where in a case of murder and robbery with deadly weapons, both the Courts below accepted the evidence of the eye-witnesses which was corroborated by the medical evidence and the evidence of the ballistic expert, and certain recoveries of incriminating objects, the Supreme Court declined to interfere with the convictions. Natthu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1977 SC 2096 : (1977) 4 SCC 293 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 571 : 1977 CrLJ 1578 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 378.

[8257] ● Concurrent findings of two Court's below.—Interference with concurrent findings of two Courts, the Supreme Court would be most reluctant in the absence of any special circumstances. Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar, AIR 1979 SC 366 : (1979) 3 SCC 4 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 609 : 1979 CrLJ 154 : (1979) CrLR (SC) 666 : (1979) SCCrR 140 : (1979) 1 SCJ 424 : (1979) 2 SCR 229 : (1979) 2 SCWR 97 : 1979 MLJ (Cri) 361 : 1979 CurLJ (Cri) 35 : (1979) 47 CutLT 385 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 72 : 1979 MLW (Cri) 86.

[8259] ● Concurrent findings of fact—When to be disturbed.—Concurrent findings of fact cannot be disturbed save on enormity improbability. Petition was dismissed. Som Nath v. State of Haryana, AIR 1980 SC 1226 : (1980) 3 SCC 301 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 681 : 1980 CrLJ 925 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 194 (1) : 1980 UJ (SC) 421 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 124 (2) : 1980 CurLJ (Cri) 91 : 1980 ACrR 274.

[8260] ● Concurrent findings of fact—Not to be interfered with by Supreme Court.—Concurrent findings of fact will not be interfered with by the Supreme Court. Mere circumstance that two or more Courts have taken the same view of facts could not shut out all further inquiry into the correctness of that view. Concurrence is not an insurance against charge of perversity though a strong case had to be made out in order to support the charge that findings of fact recorded by more than one Court were perverse, that is to say, they were such that no reasonable tribunal could have recorded them. Merit of the normal rule that concurrent findings ought not to be reviewed by the Supreme Court consisted in the assumption that it is not likely that two or more tribunals would come to the same conclusion unless it was a just and fair conclusion to come. Dudhnath Pandey v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1981 SC 911 : (1981) 2 SCC 166 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 379 : 1981 CrLJ 618 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 353 : 1981 ALJ 228 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 152 : 1981 ACrR 165 : 1981 ACrLJ 1 : 1981 AWC 297.

[8261] ● Concurrent findings of fact acquire deterrent sanctity and finality.—Concurrent findings of fact acquire a deterrent sanctity and tentative finality. Supreme Court should rarely invoke the special jurisdiction under Article 136 which is meant mainly to correct manifest injustice or errors of law of great moment. Rafiq v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1981 SC 559 : (1980) 4 SCC 262 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 947 : 1980 CrLJ 1344 : 1981 BLJR 101 : 1981 (7) ALR 120 : 1981 CurLJ (Cri) 121 : (1981) 1 SCR 402.

[8262] ● Concurrent finding of fact not to be reopened in appeal.—A concurrent finding of fact could not be reopened in an appeal by special leave unless it was established: (1) that the finding of fact was based on no evidence or (2) that the finding was perverse, it being such as no reasonable person could have arrived at even if the evidence was taken at its face value, or (3) the finding was based and built on inadmissible evidence, which evidence, if excluded from vision, would negate the prosecution case or substantially discredit or impair it, or (4) some vital piece of evidence which would tilt the balance in favour of the convict had been over looked, disregarded or wrongly discarded. In the present case the finding of guilt recorded by the Sessions Court as affirmed by the High Court was challenged mainly on the basis of minor discrepancies in the evidence. Over much importance could not be attached to minor discrepancies. Discrepancies which did not go to the root of the matter and shook the basic version of the witnesses, therefore, could not be annexed with undue importance. More so, when the all important "probabilities factor" echoed in favour of the version narrated by the witness. Bhoginbhai Hirjibhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1983 SC 753 : (1983) 3 SCC 217 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 728 : 1983 CrLJ 1096 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 396 : (1983) 2 Crimes 232 : 1983 BujLH 792 : 1983 (2) 24 BujLR 1073 : 1983 IJR (Cri) 126 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 343 : 1983 (2) ChandLR (Cri) 509 : (1983) 2 CrLC 252 : (1983) 2 SCWR 190.

[8263] ● Concurrent finding of fact—Interference by Supreme Court.—Normally, the Supreme Court did not interfere with the concurrent findings of fact of the Courts below, in the absence of very special circumstances or gross errors of law committed by the High Court. But where the High Court ignored or overlooked the crying circumstances and proved facts, violated and misapplied the well established principles of criminal jurisprudence, of decisions rendered by the Supreme Court on appreciation of circumstantial evidence and refused to give benefit of doubt to the accused despite facts apparent on the face of the record or on its own findings, or tried to gloss over them without giving any reasonable explanation, or committed errors of law apparent on the face of the record which resulted in serious and substantial miscarriage of justice to the accused, it was the duty of the Supreme Court to step in and correct the legally erroneous decision of the High Court. Sharad v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1984 SC 1622 : (1984) 4 SCC 116 : 1984 CrLJ 1738 : (1984) 2 Crimes 235.

[8264] ● Offence proved beyond reasonable doubt, Supreme Court not to interfere with sentences passed by Courts below.—Where the accused were convicted by the Courts below on the finding that the offences charged against them had been proved beyond any reasonable doubt and there was no illegality or any question of principle involved in sentencing them, the Supreme Court will not interfere with the sentences passed by the Courts below. Gopal v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1986 SC 702 : (1986) 2 SCC 93 : 1986 CrLJ 801 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 105 : (1986) 1 Crimes 448.

[8265] ● Accused not to escape conviction when.—Where all the accused but one were acquitted, and even though there was no evidence that the remaining accused caused one of the fatal injuries, he cannot escape conviction under Section 302, read with Section 34, IPC, when his participation with three other assailants in the attack on the deceased had been established beyond doubt. Subash v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1987 SC 1222 : (1987) 3 SCC 331 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 573 : 1987 CrLJ 991 : 1987 CrLR (SC)

[8266] ● Common intention—Presence of motive.—In the present case, A-1 and A-2 were convicted for murder, A-1 under Section 302, IPC and A-2 under Section 302 r/w Section 34, IPC, by the trial Court. On appeal to the High Court, the conviction of A-1 was confirmed, while A-2 was acquitted on the grounds that no stab injuries were found on the deceased at the corresponding places where A-2 was said to have stabbed the deceased, and that the doctor had stated that all the stab injuries found on the dead body could have been caused, by one and the same weapon. The acquittal of A-2 (respondent herein) was challenged in this appeal.

The defence of both the accused was one of total denial. Both were interested in getting the ancestral house for themselves, and hence they would have nurtured a common grievance against the deceased for the support we were extending to the other claimants who were not willing to forgo their share in the house. The occurrence took place in broad daylight, witnessed by P. Ws. 10 and 11. The A.S.I. recorded a statement from PW-10 without delay, and it contained a full narrative of the occurrence and the case was registered and the special report had reached the Magistrate with appreciable promptitude. Both the accused were arrested on the same day. In view of the above features, there could be no doubt, that both the accused had jointly perpetrated the crime and they had caused the stab wounds on the deceased. There were absolutely no grounds on the basis of which any differentiation could be made in construing the evidence of the PWs. as between A-1 and A-2, for holding that the evidence was clinching as against A-1 but was of a doubtful nature as against A-2. Coming to the medical evidence, as both the accused had used weapons of the same kind, viz., daggers, all the stab injuries could have been caused by the same weapon and the doctor's opinion could not detract the case against A-2 in any manner. The High Court was in error in taking the view that a person convicted under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC, stood on a very different footing from a person convicted under Section 302, IPC. It failed to see that when an offence was committed in furtherance of the common intention of two or more accused, then every one of them was as much guilty as the other and it was not necessary that every one of them should have participated in the commission of the offence to the same extent and degree, as the other person or persons accused of the offence had acted. Even if injuries 1 and 2, which were the fatal injuries had been inflicted by A-1 and not by A-2, the latter would be as much guilty of the offence of murder as the former, because of the common intention forged between the two. The acquittal of the respondent was set aside, and his conviction and sentence recorded by the trial Court were restored. State of Punjab v. Surjit Singh, AIR 1987 SC 1045 : (1987) 1 SCC 520 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 216 : 1987 CrLJ 845 : (1987)1 Crimes 252.

[8267] ● Concurrent findings of fact by Courts below—That there was fish on board.—Maritime Zones of India (Regulation of Fishing By Foreign Vessels) Act (1981), Sections 13, 22 & 25. Maritime Rules (1982), R. 16.

Where it was contended that at the time of apprehension of the trawlers, no fish was found on board and the net was not wet, that there was no evidence that fish on board was seized nor there was any evidence to show what had happened to the first or who put the fish in the hold of the trawlers and that no presumption under Section 22 of the Act could be drawn, that the trawlers were engaged in fishing within the exclusive Economic Zone of India in contravention of the provisions of the Act and the Rules made thereunder, this contention could not be considered in the appeal by special leave as there had been concurrent findings by the trial Court as well as by the High Court that there was fish on board which included the hold of the trawlers. C.T. Shang v. S.D. Baijal, AIR 1988 SC 603 : 1988 SCC(Cri) 162 : 1988 CrLJ 855 : (1988) 1 Crimes 524 : (1988) 1 SCWR 128 : (1988) 90 Bom LR 56 : (1988) 1 ACrLR 468.

[8268] ● Common intention—Sharing of.—Where two of the appellants were very much known to the eye-witnesses, non-mention of their names in the evidence as to their participation in firing upon the deceased throws a great doubt as to their sharing of the common intention and as such their convictions cannot be sustained. Hare Krishna Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1988 SC 863 : (1988) 2 SCC 95 : 1988 CrLJ 925.

[8269] ● Special leave—Grant of—Does not entitle parties to open out and argue whole case.—Where the appeals are by special leave under Article 136 and the conclusions of the Courts below are supported by acceptable evidence, the Supreme Court will not exercise its overriding powers to interfere with the decision appealed against and will also not consider the contentions to re-appreciate the evidence which has been believed by the Courts below. The grant of special leave does not entitle the parties to open out and argue the whole case and they are not entitled to contest all the findings recorded by the Courts below unless it is shown by error apparent on the record that substantial and grave injustice has been done. Appabhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1988 SC 696 : 1988 Supp SCC 241 : 1988 CrLJ 848 : (1988) 1 Crimes 606.

[8270] ● Common intention—Constructive liability.—Mere presence along with the other accused who committed murder is certainly not adequate to hold that he shared a common intention with the others, especially when he had not assisted them or even uttered any words of instigation. The fact that he surrendered along with the other accused at the police station may well be due to the fact that he might have thought if otherwise he would be incurring the wrath of the other accused and also inviting the suspicion of the police about his complicity. Rangaswami v. State of T.N., AIR 1989 SC 1137 : 1989 Supp (1) SCC 686 : 1989 CrLJ 875.

[8271] ● Acquittal of co-accused by giving benefit of doubt.—In this case though the appellant and the accused Gokul were individually charged under Sections 302 and 436, IPC, they were convicted only under the alternative charges under Section 302 read with Section 34 and Section 436 read with Section 34, IPC by the Sessions Judge. But the High Court acquitted Gokul of both the charges while confirming the conviction and sentences awarded to the appellant. The appellant's convictions can be sustained, only if the High Court had sustained the convictions awarded to accused Gokul also. Inasmuch as the High Court has given the benefit of doubt to accused Gokul and acquitted, it follows that the appellant's convictions for the two substantive offences read with Section 34, IPC cannot be sustained because this is a case where the co-accused is a named person and he has been acquitted, and by reason of it the appellant cannot be held to have acted conjointly with anyone in the commission of the offences. It, therefore, follows that even if the evidence of the PWs. did not suffer from any infirmity, though it was found to be so, the acquittal of the other named accused Gokul would stand in the way of the appellant being convicted constructively under Section 34, IPC, for the substantive offences. The appeal was, therefore, allowed. Sukhram v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 772 : 1989 Supp (1) SCC 214 : 1989 CrLJ 838 : 1989 JabLJ 121.

[8272] ● Common intention—Overt act done in furtherance of.—A few accused persons ambushed the victims and when victim came to the place of occurrence they surrounded him to take retaliation to an earlier incident. One accused stabbed the victim to death. The other accused might not know from before that the stabbing accused was carrying knife. It was held that the second accused cannot be roped by common intention or common object by the aid of Section 34 or Section 149 of IPC. Decision of Patna High Court Reversed. Ramvilas Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1989 SC 1593 : 1989 (3) SCC 605 : 1989 CrLJ 1782 : JT 1989 (2) SC 101 : (1989) 2 Crimes 368.

[8273] ● Supreme Court not to substitute findings of fact.—Ordinarily the Supreme Court exercising jurisdiction under Article 136 is slow in substituting its findings of fact in place of those recorded by the Courts below. However, this does not mean that this Court has no power to do so. The discretion conferred by Article 136 is wide enough to permit this Court to interfere even on facts is suitable cases if the approach of the Courts below has resulted in grave miscarriage of justice. By way of self-imposed discipline, this Court does not ordinarily reappreciate or reassess the evidence unless it is of opinion that the approach of the Courts below has resulted in failure of justice necessitating correction. If the Courts below have misread the evidence or have ignored vital pieces of evidence resulting in miscarriage of justice, it becomes the duty of this Court to interfere in the interest of administration of justice. The present case is one such which calls for interference.

In this case under Section 395, IPC, the approach of the Courts below in doubting the capacity of PWs. 1 and 2 to possess Rs. 73,600/- and requiring them to prove how PW-2 had over a period of 10 years saved the said amount notwithstanding the fine of Rs. 33,600/- by the police at her residence was wrong when their case was that Rs. 40,000/- was robbed from them by the 7 accused. The Supreme Court convicted A-1, 4 and 7 only under Section 392, IPC while confirming the acquittal of the other accused. Suryamoorthi v. Govindaswamy, AIR 1989 SC 1410 : (1989) 3 SCC 24 : 1989 CrLJ 1451.

552 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 701 (706) : 1996 CrLJ 2525 : JT 1996 (4) SC 502.

[8275] ● Concurrent finding of fact—Interference.—As this appeal arises under Article 136, Constitution of India, judgments of the Sessions Court as well as the High Court wherein concurrent findings of fact had been reached by both the Courts on appreciation of the evidence of the injured eye-witnesses as well as other eye-witnesses, cannot be assailed by making an effort to get the entire evidence re-appreciated as if this is a third appeal on facts. In view of the settled legal position, this Court has to see whether the findings of fact reached by the High Court agreeing with the appreciation of evidence by the Sessions Court suffer from any patent error of law or have resulted in miscarriage of justice which can call for this Courts' interference in appeal. Ramanbhai Naranbhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 1 SCC 358 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 113 (118) : 1999 CrLJ 5013 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 138.

[8276-78] ● Constitution of India Article 134—Concurrent findings of fact.—Both the trial Court and the High Court arrived at concurrent findings on the basis of the evidence of PWs 1, 5 and 6 and other witnesses that the appellant was the assailant of the deceased and that concurrent findings of fact arrived at on the basis of evidence by the trial Court and the High Court are not normally interfered with by the Supreme Court in appeal. But as has been held by this Court in A. Subair v. State of Kerala, [(2009) 6 SCC 587 : 2009 AIR SCW 3994 : 2009 CrLJ 3450], when the evidence produced by the prosecution has neither quality nor credibility, it would be unsafe to rest conviction upon such evidence and the judgments of the Courts below will have to be interfered with. This Court has also held in Mankamma v. State of Kerala [(2009) (10) SCC 164 : AIR 2010 SC 499 : 2009 AIR SCW 7053] that ordinarily this Court does not interfere in a matter by reappreciating the evidence but when it is found that the evidence has been appreciated by the High Court in a mechanical manner and without proper consideration of facts and without proper consideration of facts and circumstances on record, this Court will have to reappreciate the evidence in the interest of justice. This is one such case in which both the trial Court and the High Court have mechanically relied on the evidence of PWs 1, 5 and 6 that it was the appellant who had attacked the deceased with an axe in the Court premises without appreciating that it was unsafe to rest conviction upon the evidence of PWs 1, 5 and 6 with regard to the identification of the assailant. Siddanki Ram Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 2010 SC 3000 : (2010) 7 SCC 697 : 2010 CrLJ 3910 (3915) : (2010) 3 Crimes 286.

CONCURRENTLY

[8279] ● Application to High Court under Sections 482 & 427, CrPC that sentences in both the cases be directed to run concurrently.—Where neither the trial Court nor the High Court while passing the judgment of conviction and sentence indicated that the sentences passed against the appellant in both the cases shall run concurrently or Section 427, CrPC would be attracted. The High Court would not order, in exercise of its powers under Section 482, CrPC that sentences shall run concurrently. M.R. Kudwa v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 568 : (2007) 2 SCC 772 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 648 : 2007 CrLJ 763 (765) : 2007 (1) Crimes 50.

[8280] ● Not necessary for Court to direct that both sentences shall run concurrently.—It is not incumbent upon the Court to direct in a case that both the sentences shall run concurrently and not consecutively. M.R. Kudwa v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 568 : (2007) 2 SCC 772 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 648 : 2007 (1) Crimes 50.

CONCURRENT SENTENCE

[8281] ● Concurrent sentence.—Section 427 relates to administration of criminal justice and provides the procedure for sentencing. The sentencing Court is, therefore, required to consider and make an appropriate order as to how the sentence passed in the subsequent case is to run, whether it should be concurrent or consecutive. The basic rule of thumb over the years has been the so called single transaction rule for concurrent sentences. If a given transaction constitutes two offences under two enactments generally, it is wrong to have consecutive sentences. It is proper and legitimate to have concurrent sentences. But this rule has no application if the transaction relating to offences is not the same or the facts constituting the tow offences are quite different.

In this appeal the primary challenge to the sentence is based on the assumption that the two cases against the appellant, under the Gold (Control) Act, and the Customs Act pertain to the same subject-matter. It is alleged that the appellant was prosecuted under the two enactments in respect of seizure of 7,000 tolas of gold. On this basis, reference is also made to Section 428, Cr PC claiming set off.

The submission is misconceived. The material produced by the State unmistakably indicates that the two offences are quite distinct and different. The case under the Customs Act may, to some extent, overlap the case under the Gold (Control) Act, but it is evidently on different transactions. The complaint under the Gold (Control) Act relates to possession of 7,000 tolas of primary gold prohibited under Section 8 of the said Act. The complaint under the Customs Act is with regard to smuggling of gold worth Rs. 12.5 crores and export of silver worth Rs. 11.5 crores. On these facts, the Courts are not unjustified in directing that the sentences should be consecutive and not concurrent. Mohd. A. Hussain v. Asst. Collector, Customs (Prevention), Ahemadabad, AIR 1988 SC 2143 : (1988) 4 SCC 183 : 1989 CrLJ 283 : (1988) 3 SCJ 577 : (1988) 3 Crimes 291 : (1988) 2 ACrR 687 : 1988 AWC 1379 : (1988) 29 GujLR 1436 : (1988) 37 ELT 163 : (1988) ECR 545 : (1988) 18 ECC 341.

[8282] ● Concurrent or consecutive sentence—Subsequent sentence to run consecutive to first one.—The appellant was given the maximum sentences of seven years in the previous case under the Gold (Control) Act. The conviction was based on the plea of guilty. The latter sentence under the Customs Act was also on the plea of guilty. Generally, it is both proper and customary for Courts to give credit to an accused for pleading guilty to the charge. But no credit need be given if the plea of guilty in the circumstances is inevitable or the accused has no alternative but to plead guilty. The accused being caught red handed is one such instance. The first case under the Gold (Control) Act against the appellant falls into the latter category. The plea of guilty in that case was inevitable. The Court was therefore justified in awarding the maximum sentence. But the second case under the Customs Act is not of that type. The prosecution has to prove many things in it. There are 18 other accused facing trial in that case. The appellant, however, pleaded guilty, perhaps on legal advice. The enormity of the crime is relevant for measuring the sentence. But the maximum sentence awarded in one case against the same accused is not irrelevant for consideration while giving the consecutive sentence in the second case although it is grave. The Court has to consider the totality of the sentences which the accused has to undergo if the sentences are to be consecutive. The totality principle has been accepted as a correct principle for guidance. The trial Magistrate in this case has properly considered all aspects including the plea of guilty and given good reasons for awarding four years R.I. That means in all the appellant has to undergo 11 years of imprisonment which by itself is quite long enough in a man's life. The High Court took a narrow view of the whole matter with the enormity of the crime on the forefront. It enhanced the sentence to the maximum of 7 years prescribed under Section 135 of the Act. The result is that the appellant has to serve in all 14 years. The broad expanse of discretion left by legislation to sentencing Courts should not be narrowed only to the seriousness of the offences. No single consideration can definitively determine the proper sentence. The Court must 'recognise, learn to control and exclude' many diverse data. In consecutive sentences, in particular, the Court cannot afford to be blind to imprisonment which the accused is already undergoing. The appeal was allowed restoring the judgment of the trial Court. Mohd. A. Hussain v. Asst. Collector, Customs (Prevention), Ahemadabad, AIR 1988 SC 2143 : (1988) 4 SCC 183 : 1988 CrLJ 283 : (1988) 3 SCJ 577 : (1988) 3 Crimes 291 : (1988) 2 ACrR 687 : 1988 AWC 1379 : (1988) 29 GuJLR 1436 : (1988) 37 ELT 163 : (1988) ECR 545 : (1988) 18 ECC 341.

[8283] ● Subsequent sentence to run concurrently.—Sub-section (1) of Section 427, CrPC provides for the situation when a person already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment is sentenced on a subsequent conviction to imprisonment or life imprisonment. In other words, sub-section (1) of Section 427, CrPC deals with an offender who while undergoing sentence for a fixed term is subsequently convicted to imprisonment for a fixed term or for life. In such a situation, the first sentence, being for a fixed term, expires on a definite date which is known when the subsequent conviction is made. Sub-section (1) says that in such a situation, the date of expiry of the first sentence which the offender is undergoing being known, ordinarily the subsequent sentence would commence at the expiration of the first term of imprisonment unless the Court directs the subsequent sentence to run concurrently with the previous sentence. Obviously, in cases covered by sub-section (1) where the sentence is for a fixed term, the subsequent sentence can be consecutive unless directed to run concurrently. Sub-section (2), on the other hand, provides for an offender "already undergoing sentence of imprisonment for life" who is sentenced on a subsequent conviction to imprisonment for a term or for life. It is well settled since the decision of this Court in Gopal Vinayak Godse and reiterated in Maru Ram that imprisonment for life is a sentence for the remainder of the life of the offender unless the remaining sentence is commuted or remitted by the appropriate authority. This being so at the stage of sentencing by the Court on a subsequent conviction, the earlier sentence of imprisonment for life must be understood in this manner and, therefore, there can be no question of a subsequent sentence of imprisonment for a term or for life running consecutively which is the general rule laid down in sub-section (1) of Section 427. As rightly contended by Shri Garg, and not disputed by Shri Lalit, the earlier sentence of imprisonment for life being understood to mean as a sentence to serve the remainder of life in prison unless commuted or remitted by the appropriate authority and a person having only one life span, the sentence on a subsequent conviction of imprisonment for a term or imprisonment for life can only be superimposed to the earlier life sentence and certainly not added to it since extending the life span of the offender or for that matter anyone is beyond human might. It is this obvious situation which is stated in sub-section (2) of Section 427 since the general rule enunciated in sub-section (1) thereof is that without the Court's direction the subsequent sentence will not run concurrently but consecutively. The only situation in which no direction of the Court is needed to make the subsequent sentence run concurrently with the previous sentence is provided for in sub-section (2) which has been enacted to avoid any possible controversy based on sub-section (1) if there be no express direction of the Court to that effect. Sub-section (2) is in the nature of an exception to the general rule enacted in sub-section (1) of Section 427 that a sentence on subsequent conviction commences on expiry of the first sentence unless the Court directs it to run concurrently. The meaning and purpose of sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 427 and the object of enacting sub-section (2) is, therefore, clear.

In the instant case the only question is of the meaning and effect of the direction in this Court's judgment dated September 30, 1983. It is obvious that the direction of this Court must be construed to harmonise with Section 427(2), CrPC which is the statutory mandate apart from being the obvious truth. The subsequent sentence of imprisonment for life has, therefore, to run concurrently with the earlier sentence of imprisonment for life awarded to the petitioner. The real exercise is to construe the last sentence in the direction which reads as under:

> "We, therefore, direct that in case any remission or commutation in respect of his earlier sentence is granted to him the present sentence should commence thereafter."

It is in the background of this ultimate direction that the preceding portion has to be read. This last sentence in the direction means that in case, any remission or commutation is granted in respect of the earlier sentence of life imprisonment alone then the benefit of that remission or commutation will not ipso facto be available in respect of the subsequent sentence of life imprisonment which would continue to be unaffected by the remission or commutation in respect of the earlier sentence alone. In other words, the operation of the superimposed subsequent sentence of life imprisonment shall not be wiped out merely because in respect of the corresponding earlier sentence of life imprisonment any remission or commutation has been granted by the appropriate authority. The consequence is that the petitioner would not get any practical benefit of any remission or commutation in respect of his earlier sentence because of the superimposed subsequent life sentence unless the same corresponding benefit in respect of the subsequent sentence is also granted to the petitioner. It is in this manner that the direction is given for the two sentences of life imprisonment not to run concurrently.

The ultimate direction contained in the last sentence is obviously for this purpose. So construed the direction of this Court in the judgment dated September 30, 1983 in Criminal Appeal No. 418 of 1982 fully harmonises with Section 427(2), CrPC. This is the clarification we make of this Court's judgment dated September 30, 1983 in Criminal Appeal No. 418 of 1982. Ranjit Singh v. Union Territory of Chandigarh, AIR 1991 SC 965 (970, 971) : (1991) 4 SCC 304 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 965 : 1991 CrLJ 3354 : 1991 CrLR (SC) 799 : JT 1991 (3) SC 550 : 1991 (3) Crimes 414.

[8284] ● Several offences—Benefit of all sentences to run concurrently.—The appellants in this case are two. 1st appellant was convicted in 4 different cases. The occurrence in all of which took place between 27-3-1990 and 7-5-1990. The offence found against him in all the cases was under Section 395 of the IPC and in each case he was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 7 years. If he is not given the benefit in exercise of the discretion conferred under Section 427 of the CrPC, he may have to undergo a very long period of 28 years in Jail. The second appellant was convicted in 5 different cases the occurrence in all of which took place between 21/10/1989 and 7/5/1990. He was also found guilty under Section 395, IPC and was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of 7 years in each case. If the benefit conferred under Section 427 is not extended to him, he may have the undergo imprisonment for a total period of 35 years in jail. On the other hand, we allow the appellants to have the benefit of all sentences to run concurrently, he would be out by now after serving only imprisonment for a period of 7 years awarded in one case. Both course are unacceptable. If the appellants would undergo a total period of 14 years of imprisonment in respect of all the convictions passed against them that will be sufficient to meet the ends of justice. Ammavasai v. Inspector of Police, Valliyanur, AIR 2000 SC 3544 (3544-3545) : (2000) 9 SCC 749 : 2000 CrLJ 4057 : JT 2000 (7) SC 430.

CONDUCT IN BRIBE CASES

[8285] ● Conduct in bribe cases.—It is the prosecution case that after the appellant had come back at 8.00 p.m., the contractor and his son went to the house and met the appellant in his drawing room in the first floor of his house. Thereafter, the contractor's son came down and went to the car. Then Verma and the contractor's son took the fruits and sweets to the drawing room of the appellant. According to the evidence of contractor's son, it took about ten minutes and during these ten minutes the contractor and the appellant were sitting in the appellant's drawing room. It is difficult to believe that the payment of the bribe money could be deferred for ten minutes till the arrival of fruits and sweets. It is also difficult to believe that the appellant would accept bribe in the presence of Verma who had carried the fruits to the drawing room of the appellant. G.V. Nanjundiah v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1987 SC 2402 : 1987 Supp SCC 266 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 77 (86) : 1988 CrLJ 152 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 580 : JT 1987 (4) SC 313 : (1987) 3 Crimes 217.

[8286] ● Person would not accept bribe in presence of stranger.—As per the allegation of the contractors and other members of the raiding party the contractor purchased a basket of fruits and also some cartons of sweets so as to justify the entrance of Verma into the house of the appellant. It was arranged that Verma would also be a witness to the handing over of the bribe money to the appellant. This is also a very unusual and unnatural feature in the prosecution story. It is a common sense that person would not accept bribe in the presence of a stranger. One significant fact that may be pointed out here is that although it is alleged that the appellant had agreed to be present in his house at 7.00 p.m. for the purpose of taking bribe, he was absent and came back at 8.00 p.m.. In this case the foundation of the prosecution case and the subsequent events complied with the unusual behaviour of the contractor in purchasing sweets and fruits for the appellant casts a great doubt on the prosecution story. G.V. Nanjundiah v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1987 SC 2402 : 1987 Supp SCC 266 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 77 : 1988 CrLJ 152 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 580 : JT 1987 (4) SC 313 : (1987) 3 Crimes 217.

CONDUCT OF ACCUSED

[8287] ● Conduct of accused.—There was no direct evidence of the offence and the facts showed that the appellant had greater motive to commit the offence than the other persons, one of them being son-in-law and the other the grandson, and further the conduct of the appellant was far more pre-judicial in view of the daffadar and the chowkidar both preventing him from taking the dead body for cremation because they suspected foul play and the insistence of the appellant to take the body of the old woman for cremation as early as possible, in spite of his being prevented from doing so. The appellant, therefore far from establishing his innocence certainly showed that he was aware of the manner in which the old woman had met with her death and was most anxious to dispose of the dead body so as to avert any suspicion or proof her having met with an unnatural death as it was finally reported by the civil surgeon on postmortem examination. Kutuhal Yadav v. State of Bihar, 1954 SC 720 (723) : 55 CLJ 1802.

[8288] ● Conduct of accused after arrest.—If the prosecution evidence as to the circumstances in which a bribe was accepted is itself unreliable or not free from doubt, the conduct of the accused immediately after his arrest, for example, that he did not rebut the charge that he had accepted a bribe or did not give explanation can be of no avail to the prosecution. Once the substantive evidence is rejected as unworthy of credit, the alleged conduct of the accused must be referred to some innocent reason. Different persons react in differently in the same circumstances, and in the absence of satisfactory evidence the Court cannot treat the case against the accused as proved or further advanced merely because he failed to say anything in his defence immediately after he was told that he had accepted it. Zwingalee Ariel v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 15 : 1953 CrLJ 230.

[8289] ● Evidence in respect of person or his conduct when admissible.—The evidence in respect of a person or his conduct is admissible only if it relates to a person who is a party to the action. Sardul Singh Caveeshar v. State of Bombay, AIR 1957 SC 747 : 1957 CrLJ 1325 : 1958 SCR 161 : 1957 (1) Mad LJ (Cri) 739.

[8290] ● Accused by his conduct when puts trial into jeopardy.—A fair trial being the main objective of criminal procedure, if the Court is satisfied that there has occurred a threat to the continuance of a fair trial by reason of the activities of the accused subsequent to his release on bail, that threat must be removed by committing the accused to custody during the pendency of the trial, whatever be the classification of the offence of which he is charged. An accused who by his conduct puts the fair progress of a trial into jeopardy and indulges in activities which subvert it, cannot be allowed to contend that the Court has no power to look into his activities and must allow him free scope to do whatever he pleases, merely because the offence in respect of which he is being tried happens to fall under the classification of bailable offence. It is the bounden duty of a Court to take all measures necessary for removing obstructions and impediments which tend to defeat the fair progress of a criminal trial, and if necessary for that purpose, to cancel a bail previously granted to an accused, whatever be the character of the offence of which he is being tried. Talab Haji Hussain v. Madhukar Purshottam Mandkar, AIR 1958 SC 376 : 1958 CrLJ 701 : 1958 SCR 1226 : 1958 SCA 672 : 1958 MLJ (Cri) 512 : (1958) 2 MLJ (SC) 37.

[8291] ● Conduct of accused in hiding out of fear of being arrested.—Subsequent conduct of the accused in that he was absconding for several days after the occurrence of murder has no evidentiary value by way of corroboration to the evidence as to his guilt when it is shown that he kept himself in hiding out of fear of being arrested for commission of another offence. Khushal Rao v. State of Bombay, AIR 1958 SC 22 : 1958 CrLJ 106.

[8292] ● Conduct of accused in trial.—A criminal trial of course is not an inquiry with the conduct of an accused for any purpose other than to determine whether he is guilty of the offence charged. In this connection, that piece of conduct can be held to be incriminatory which has no reasonable explanation except on the hypothesis that he is guilty. Conduct which destroys the presumption of innocence can alone be considered as material. Anant Chintaman Lagu v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 500 : 1960 CrLJ 682 : 1960 (2) SCR 460 : 1960 Mad LJ (Cri) 493.

[8293] ● Contemporaneous conduct—Evidence of.—Evidence of contemporaneous conduct is always admissible as a surrounding circumstances; but evidence as to subsequent conduct of parties is inadmissible. Bhaskar Waman v. Shrinarayan, AIR 1960 SC 301 : 1960 SCJ 327 : (1960) 2 SCR 117.

[8294] ● Conduct of accused that of sane person.—Where the plea of legal insanity is set up by the accused, and his defence is that his case comes within the Exception laid down in Section 84 of the Penal Code, what the Court primarily has to consider is whether, at the time of the commission of the offence, the accused, by reason of unsoundness of mind, was incapable of knowing the nature of his act, or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law. The crucial point of time for ascertaining the state of mind of the accused is the time when the offence was committed. But for determining whether the accused was in such a state of mind as to be entitled to the benefit of Section 84 of the Penal Code, the Court has to consider the circumstances which preceded, attended and followed the crime. Factors which are relevant for the purpose are, (a) the motive for the crime, (b) the previous history of the mental condition of the accused, (c) the evidence as to the state of his mind at the time of the offence, (d) the evidence as to what happened immediately before and after the incident which throws a light on the state of his mind, and (e) the subsequent events pointing to the conduct of the accused. The effect of all this evidence has to be considered in arriving at the conclusion whether the accused has discharged the burden which lies upon him to establish that his case comes within the Exception laid down in Section 84 of the Penal Code.

In the present case, there was evidence to show that the accused had taken a disliking to his wife and a few days before the date of the incident he had written to her father asking him to take away his daughter, and that though the father had promised to take her away before Chaitra Sudi 1, he had not done so, and the murder took place on the night before that date.

Though it was stated in the Court that since 4 or 5 years before the incident, the accused was getting fits of insanity, the father of the accused admitted that the accused was not treated by any doctor. Further, only a month and a half prior to the incident, the accused had been called by the father from Ahmedabad where he was working to go to his father's village to manage his father's shop during the absence of his father for some days from the village. These facts showed that in the case of the accused that he had periodical fits of insanity since last 4 or 5 years before the incident was an afterthought.

The subsequent events made it quite clear that plea of insanity put up for the first time at the time of the trial was a belated afterthought and a false case. When he was interrogated at the chora by the police inspector after he was taken there, he said he was willing to make a confession. The officer had deposed that he was completely sane and was giving rational answers to all his questions. A panchnama had been made of the condition of his body and his clothes and there was nothing therein pointing to insane condition which would surely have been noticed by the panchas. Thereafter the accused was sent to the Medical Officer for examination. The doctor had not noticed anything indicative of insanity. On the same day he was sent to a Magistrate for making a confession. The Magistrate asked him the necessary questions and the Magistrate found that he was responding like a normal person. Even during the committal proceeding no suggestion was made on behalf of the accused that he was insane. Finally when he was sent to the mental hospital for being kept under observation, by the Sessions Judge, the Superintendent had reported that he was capable of understanding the proceeding of the Court and making his defence in Court. All these facts clearly established that his entire conduct after the time when he killed his wife right up to the time when sessions proceedings commenced was that of a sane person. Dahyabhai Maganbhai Thakkar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1964 SC 1963 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 472 : (1964) 7 SCR 361.

[8295] ● Subsequent conduct of accused.—Subsequent conduct may also be exculpatory conduct of the accused person which is equally admissible because an admission may be proved by or on behalf of the person making it if it is relevant otherwise than as an admission. A. Nagesia v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 119 : 1966 CrLJ 100 : (1966) 1 Andh LT 430.

[8296] ● Conduct of appellant in absconding.—Mere absconding by itself does not necessarily lead to a firm conclusion of guilty mind. The act is a relevant piece of evidence to be considered along with other evidence but its value would depend upon the circumstances in each case. Normally, evidence for sustaining a conviction it can scarcely be held has a determining link in completing the chain of circumstantial evidence which must admit of no other hypothesis than that of the guilt of the accused. In the present case the appellant was with Ram Chandra till the FIR was lodged. If thereafter he felt he was being wrongly suspected and he tried to keep out of the way, this circumstance can be considered to be necessarily evidence of guilty mind attempting to evade justice. It is not inconsistent with his innocence. The behaviour and conduct of the appellant, Judged by normal standards is not suggestive of his involvement in such heinous crime unless he was an experienced criminal (of which there is no suggestion) with extra-ordinary balance of mind and a disciplined control ever his senses and faculties. Matru v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1971 SC 1050 : (1971) 2 SCC 75 : 1971 CrLJ 913 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 391.

[8297] ● Conduct of accused in absconding.—The disappearance of the accused after the commission of the alleged crime is a circumstance which in the absence of any plausible explanation might be taken against him. Thilamma v. State of Mysore, AIR 1971 SC 1871 : (1970) 2 SCC 105 : 1971 CrLJ 1314 : (1971) 1 SCJ 726.

[8298] ● Fact showing conduct of accused—Admissibility.—Where an accused gives information to the Investigating Officer that he purchased murder weapon from a particular dealer and takes the Investigating Officer and the Panchas to the place of the dealer and points him out, the information is inadmissible under Section 27. However, the evidence of the Investigating Officer and the panchas that the accused has taken them to the dealer and pointed him out and as corroborated by the dealer himself is admissible under Section 8 as conduct of the accused. Himachal Pradesh Administration v. Om Prakash, AIR 1972 SC 975 : (1972) 1 SCC 249 : 1972 CrLJ 606 : 1972 SCD 128 : (1972) 1 SCJ 691 : (1971) 1 SCWR 819.

[8299] ● Conduct of accused when clothes of girl caught fire.—On the other hand, the immediate conduct of the accused tends to negative the possibility of her suicide. When people rushed to the house on hearing her cries, they did not appear to have noticed that anything was being done by the accused which could be regarded as sympathy to the girl. The accused were sitting in the verandah quietly. Being in the house they should have been the first to go near the girl when her clothes had caught fire. But the evidence shows that there were no visible signs on the persons of any of the accused to suggest that they helped the girl when her clothes caught fire. No attempt was made by them to call the Doctor or to send for relations. On the other hand, when girl was telling her interrogators that the three accused had poured kerosene on her and set her clothes on fire the accused did not so much protest and declare that she had committed suicide and was blaming them unjustly. Lallubhai Devchand Shah v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1972 SC 1776 : (1971) 3 SCC 767 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 13 : 1972 CrLJ 828 : 1972 UJ (SC) 177.

[8300] ● Conduct of accused by identifying wrong person.—But for the identification by the appellant that Phulpati was chaukas the sub-registrar would have not registered the document. The conduct of the appellant in denying the factum of identification by him of Phulpati as Chaukas in the Trial Court and his plea in the High Court and in this Court that he identified Phulpati as Chaukas because he thought Chaukas alone could have come alongwith Dharma, Puran and Bhagwani to execute the mortgage deed and that he had no reason to think the lady whom he identified as Chaukas was Phulpati are telling circumstances. Molar v. State of Haryana, AIR 1973 SC 1413 : (1973) 2 SCC 430 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 826 : 1973 CrLJ 1124.

[8301] ● Conduct of accused—Relevancy.—Prosecutor cannot take benefit from merely suspicious circumstances that the accused did not surrender or was not traceable for nearly one year. Datar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1974 SC 1193 : (1975) 4 SCC 272 : 1974 CrLJ 908.

[8302] ● Conduct of accused after occurrence.—The conduct of the accused after the occurrence also as to show that it was he and none else who was responsible for the murder of S. Had it been some one else, who had committed the murder, the accused would have raised hue and cry instead of sitting quietly outside the quarter. The accused would have also in the event rushed to the police station and made a report almost before the occurrence. The accused, however, did nothing of the kind. Sitaram v. State of M.P., (1975) 4 SCC 171 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 384.

[8303] ● Conduct of appellant in not revealing identity of person entrusting gold bars.—The appellant was arrested on April 9, 1967 by the Railway Police at the Bombay Central Railway Station as he was hurriedly trying to get into the compartment of the train. It appears that the manner in which he was trying to enter the compartment and his nervousness on being questioned by a Railway CID, Police Officer, aroused suspicion so the appellant was detained. On search of his person nine gold bars with foreign markings were found secreted. He had put forward an incredible story of having been entrusted with so much gold by one Pannalal whose identity was not established and whose address was not revealed by the appellant. According to the appellant, Pannalal had just met him by chance. It is incredible that any person would entrust gold valued at about Rs. 40,000 on which Rs. 17,000 was payable as duty alone to a youngster who was an utter stranger to him even if the carrier was to get Rs. 100/- for the risk undertaken. Labhchand Dhanpat Singh Jain v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1975 SC 182 : (1975) 3 SCC 385 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 11 (14) : 1975 CrLJ 246 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 105 : (1975) 2 SCR 907 : 1975 UJ (SC) 75.

[8304] ● Absconder—Who is.—To be an "absconder" in the eye of law it is not necessary that a person should have run away from his home. It is sufficient if he hides himself to evade the process of law, if the hiding place be his own home. Kartarey v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1976 SC 76 : (1976) 1 SCC 172 : 1976 CrLJ 13 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 690.

[8305] ● Conduct of accused relevant under Section 8 of Evidence Act.—The conduct of the accused would be relevant under Section 8 of the Act if his immediate reactions to the illegal overture of the complaint or his action in inserting unwanted something in his pocket were revealed in the form of acts accompanied then and there or immediately thereafter by words or gesture reliably established. Mahasingh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1976 SC 449 : (1976) 1 SCC 644 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 135 : 1976 CrLJ 346 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 86.

[8306] ● Conduct of accused in rushing deceased to Hospital.—In the instant case the accused immediately took the deceased to the Civil Hospital which, according to the High Court, was meant merely to cloak his guilt. We are indeed surprised that the High Court should have taken such a perverse view of the matter. If the accused had himself administered the poison to Shantibai he would be the last person to take her to the Hospital and thereby take the chance of the deceased being cured or of regaining consciousness, in which case the deceased would have implicated the appellant. The conduct of the accused in rushing her to the Hospital is more consistent with his innocence rather than with his guilt. Ram Das v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1977 SC 1164 : (1977) 2 SCC 124 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 254 (259) : 1977 CrLJ 955 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 173.

[8307] ● Conduct of appellant in refusing to open door about midnight.—In the instant case, the police went to arrest appellant, he did not open the door for the purpose of letting in the police. But this cannot be regarded as an incriminating circumstance when it is remembered that the time at which the police went to the house of appellant was about midnight and there was nothing unnatural in appellant refusing to open the door at such an unearthly hour. Caetano Piedade Fernandes v. Union Territory of Goa, AIR 1977 SC 135 : (1977) 1 SCC 707 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 154 (160-161) : 1977 CrLJ 167 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 393.

[8308] ● Conduct of appellants waiting near dead body.—It is difficult to believe that during the period of 10 minutes, the appellants should be patiently waiting near the dead body of the deceased. It is not as if the appellants were trying to burn the dead body of the deceased or to bury it. They were, according to the witness, gazing at the dead body as if they were hypnotized or entranced by it. Caetano Piedade Fernandes v. Union Territory of Goa, Daman and Dieu, Panaji, Goa, AIR 1977 SC 135 : (1977) 1 SCC 707 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 154 (159) : 1977 CrLJ 167 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 393.

[8309] ● Conduct of accused not to save wife from further assault.—It is inconceivable that the young couple while alone inside the inner room at night would keep the door of the house open to enable thieves to enter. The accused and his wife were alone inside the room and she was found to have 7 incised wounds, five of which were on the neck. It is impossible to conceive that the accused would not be roused from sleep even on the first assault with a knife on his wife sleeping near him on the floor, if an outsider had attacked her all of a sudden or in the process of snatching her ornaments. It would be natural then that the accused would see the thief or thieves inside the room and would come to her help to save her from further assault. Such a conduct of the accused is not revealed in the evidence. Umedbhai Jadavbhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1978 SC 424 : (1978) 1 SCC 228 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 108 (113) : 1978 CrLJ 489 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 72.

[8310] ● Conduct of accused and statement to Police Officer—Distinction between.—A statement by the accused and his pointing out the corpus delicti may not strictly answer Section 27 of the Act, still then the conduct may be relevant under Section 8 of the Act. Prakash Chand v. State, AIR 1979 SC 400 : (1979) 3 SCC 90 : 1979 CrLJ 329 : 1979 Mad LJ (Cri) 419 : 1979 SCCr R 48 : 1979 UJ (SC) 17.

[8311] ● Conduct of accused in remaining silent.—It is for the prosecution to prove its case affirmatively and it cannot gain any strength from the conduct of the accused in remaining silent. Nagappa Dondiba Kalal v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1980 SC 1753 : (1980) Supp SCC 336 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 278 (279) : 1980 CrLJ 1270 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 160.

[8312] ● Conduct of thieves in leaving biggest article containing loot.—What is natural by the est of common experience is that a biggest article containing the loot would be left by the thieves where it lies. They would not take it with them, while running away in order to escape from the clutches of the people who were chasing them. State of Rajasthan v. Sukhpal Singh, AIR 1984 SC 207 : (1983) 1 SCC 393 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 213 (218) : 1983 CrLJ 1923 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 54.

[8314] ● Conduct of appellant in not calling immediate help of doctors.—In the instant case much reliance seems to have been placed by the High Court on the circumstance that accused No. 1 did not call for the immediate help of doctors Dr. Shrikant Kelkar (PW-26) and Dr. (Mrs) Anjali Kelkar (PW-27) who were residing in the same building. In a matter of this magnitude it would be quite natural for the members of the appellants family to send for their own family doctor who was fully conversant with the ailment of every member of the family. Secondly, Dr. Shrikant Kelkar was a skin specialist whereas Dr. (Mrs) Anjali Kelkar was a paediatrician and the appellant may have genuinely believed that as they belonged to different branches, they were at all suitable to deal with such a serious case. The High Court was, therefore, wrong in treating this circumstance as an incriminating conduct of the appellant. Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1984 SC 1622 : (1984) 4 SCC 116 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 487 (550, 551) : 1984 CrLJ 1738 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 296 : 1984 (2) Crimes 235.

[8315] ● Conduct of accused to take assessee inside house.—Another circumstance upon which the High Court relied was that the accused was not likely to have talked with PWs 2 and 3 for as long as 40 minutes if he accepting a bribe. He would have merely received the money and sent them away. The very fact that he was talking to them for nearly 40 minutes indicated that no bribe was given or taken. On the other hand, we consider that this is a strong circumstance against the accused. The accused knew that PW-2 was an assessee who had a pending case before him. If the assessee paid him a visit after 8.00 p.m. at his residence, one would expect the accused to immediately suspect the reason for the visit and to turn away at once or at least within a few minutes after his coming to his house. Instead of that, he takes them inside the house, talks to them for nearly 40 minutes. This conduct of the accused is clearly against his innocence. State of Gujarat v. Raghunath Vamanrao Baxi, AIR 1985 SC 1092 (1095) : (1985) 3 SCC 45 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 304 : 1985 CrLJ 1357 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 260.

[8316] ● Conduct of husband.—Conversely in a case the murder of the wife was committed in the night of 16/17th of a month; the husband slipped from the house on 17th morning to his sister's house in the morning of 17th; returned in the evening and stayed in the night in a hotel under a pseudonym. The conduct of the husband-accused was taken by the Supreme Court into consideration in deciding whether the charge against him has been proved or not. Ram Avtar v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1985 SC 1692 : 1985 Supp SCC 410 : 1985 CrLJ 1865.

[8318] ● Conduct of accused persons to put end to deceased's life.—The evidence of the witnesses clearly indicates that the accused persons appeared to be indifferent even when Sudha had been aflame. If the mother-in-law was really interested in a child being born to Sudha — an event likely to happen within a few days thereafter — she would have been the most disturbed person at the sight of fire on the body of Sudha. Similarly, Laxman must have been terribly upset and would not have been leaving any stone unturned to bring safety to Sudha. The evidence of the prosecution witnesses is indicative of the position that there was no sense of grief or anxiety in their conduct and, therefore, the neighbours who gathered had to take the lead in the matter and provided relief to her. Thus Sudha died not as an outcome of an accidental fire but on account of a designed move on the part of the members of the family of the accused person to put an end to her life. State (Delhi Administration) v. Laxman Kumar and Indian Federation of Women Lawyers v. Shakuntala, AIR 1986 SC 250 : (1985) 4 SCC 476 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 2 (27, 28) : 1986 CrLJ 155 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 501 : (1985) 2 Crimes 758.

[8319] ● Conduct of accused remaining indifferent when deceased aflame.—It is significant that Subhash had made a statement as reiterated by the prosecution witnesses that he had nothing to do with what happened to deceased, and on that ground had declined to enter into the taxi when Sudha was being removed to the Hospital. Even such statement has been reported earlier. Mr. Garg appearing for the appellant contended that in view of the fact that Subhash stood and waited exhibiting a conduct of indifference when positive action for help to Sudha was warranted, he must be imputed with sufficient motive and be ranked at par with the accused persons. We are however prepared to give the benefit of doubt treating his case to be on the border line. State (Delhi Administration) v. Laxman Kumar and Indian Federation of Women Lawyers v. Shakuntala, AIR 1986 SC 250 : (1985) 4 SCC 476 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 2(29) : 1986 CrLJ 155 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 501 : (1985) 2 Crimes 758.

[8320] ● Unnatural conduct of accused after commission of murder.—The evidence of PW-2 is natural and truthful and amply corroborated by the evidence of the neighbours who had seen the accused coming out to the verandah, the accused washing his hands and putting on a shirt and going over to the house of the Corporation Councillor for seeking his advice.

If someone else who had been the assailant the reaction and the conduct of the accused would have been entirely different. He would have called out the neighbours for help and he would not have washed himself or put on his dress and walked composedly to the house of the Corporation Councillor. State of Kerala v. Bahuleyan, AIR 1987 SC 482 : (1986) 4 SCC 124 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 361 (365) : 1986 CrLJ 1579 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 473 : (1986) 3 Crimes 364.

[8321] ● Conduct of accused in putting out flames.—It is also urged that the appellant would not have put out the flames if he had already set fire to his wife. This argument overlooks the fact that after the arrival of PW-3 on the scene, the appellant could not have remained a passive spectator, to the plight of his wife. Surinder Kumar v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1987 SC 652 : (1987) 1 SCC 467 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 181 (183) : 1987 CrLJ 537 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 567 : 1987 (1) Crimes 250.

[8322] ● Conduct of accused falsely telling villagers including her brother-in-law that deceased gone away from village.—In a murder case where the deceased was murdered in his bedroom by a blow with an axe on the neck while he was asleep, as a result of which, the head was decapitated from the body, the conduct of the accused, wife of deceased, in putting the villagers including her brother-in-law or a false track by telling them that deceased had gone away from the village and had not returned was held clearly admissible under Section 8 of the Evidence Act. Basanti v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1987 SC 1572 : (1987) 3 SCC 227 : 1987 CrLJ 1869 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 302 : JT 1987 (2) SC 281.

[8323] ● Conduct of respondent No. 1 in coating article of pure gold to make it appear as if it was of silver.—The conduct of respondent 1 in coating the article of pure gold to make it appear as if it was of silver was itself a conduct which could have provided the basis for entertaining a reasonable belief that it was smuggled gold inasmuch as gold of this purity is manufactured only in foreign countries which have sophisticated equipment. State of Gujarat v. Mohanlal Jitamlji Porward, AIR 1987 SC 1321 : (1987) 2 SCC 364 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 364 (370) : 1987 CrLJ 1061 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 235 : JT 1987 (2) SC 783 : (1987) 2 SCR 677 : (1987) 2 Crimes 1.

[8324] ● Conduct of accused putting villagers including her brother in law on false track.—There is evidence that Smt. Basanti put the villagers including her brother-in-law Maloo, PW-27, on a false track by telling them that deceased Prabhu Ram had gone away from the village and had not returned. That conduct of her was clearly admissible under Section 8, Evidence Act as a part of res gestae as an evidence of conduct immediately after the occurrence. Basanti v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1987 SC 1572 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 473 (476).

[8325] ● Post crime conduct of accused.—The post crime conduct of the accused cannot also be lost sight of. The plea alibi has not been pursued. It has been proved that the accused was not available in the town after the occurrence till 24 November, 1977. It is on record that the accused could not be traced and proceedings under Ss. 82/83, CrPC were initiated. The warrant of arrest ssued against the accused returned unserved. Thereafter proclamation was made and his property was attached. That was on 23rd November, 1977. He appeared on the next day in the Police Station Kotwali. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Anil Singh, AIR 1988 SC 1998 (2004) : 1988 SCC (Cri) 48 : 1989 CrLJ 88 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 49 : JT 1988 (3) SC 491 : (1988) 3 Crimes 367.

[8326] ● Conduct of accused after committing robbery and murder.—It is strange that the accused-Laxmi Raj Shetty who was merely a clerk in the Bank should have gone and stayed in Hotel chola Sheraton a five star hotel, on the night in question unless it was for purposes of safety as he was carrying the huge amount of about Rs. 14 lakhs in the suitcase and the skybag. There is evidence to show that the accused filled up the application form for reservation of the first class ticket Ex P-37 and signed the same as "K.L.R. Shetty" giving the name and address as Shivaram Shetty, Kodial Bail Bangalore, i.e., of his father. The stay of the accused at Hotel Chola Sheraton at Madras on the night of the both the whole of the 21st till his departure on the 22nd morning under the assumed name of Mohanraj, the act of leaving Madras on the 22nd morning by train in a first class compartment under the name of his father Shivaram Shetty, giving a wrong address, are facts which speak of themselves. Laxmi Raj Shetty v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1988 SC 1274 : (1988) 3 SCC 319 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 633 (657) : 1988 CrLJ 1783 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 305 : JT 1988 (2) SC 180 : (1988) 2 Crimes 107.

[8327] ● Subsequent conduct of accused 3 in surrendering at Police Station.—As regards the subsequent conduct of A-3 in surrendering at the Police Station, it cannot warrant a conclusion that there was a prior meeting of minds between A-3 on the one hand and A-1 and A-2 on the other and it was on account of a consensus reached between them that the victims had been attacked at the Bazar street and thereafter all the three of them went together to the Police Station to surrender themselves. It may well be that A-3 may have thought that if he did not go to the Police Station when A-1 and A-2 were themselves going, he would be incurring their displeasure and also inviting the suspicion of the Police authorities about his complicity in the offences. In such circumstances, A-3 cannot be held constructively liable for the acts of A-1 and A-2". Rangaswami v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1989 SC 1137 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 617 (620, 621) : 1989 CrLJ 875 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 331 : JT 1989 (1) SC 508 : (1989) 1 Crimes 692.

[8328] ● Unusual or unnatural conduct of accused previous or subsequent to occurrence.—"If the conduct of the accused in relation to the crime comes into question, the previous and subsequent conduct are also relevant facts. Therefore, the absence of ordinary course of conduct of the accused and human probabilities of the case also would be relevant." Mulakh Raj v. Satish Kumar, AIR 1992 SC 1175 : (1992) 3 SCC 43 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 482 (486) : 1992 CrLJ 1529 : JT 1992 (2) SC 554.

[8329] ● Conduct of absconding of accused till night.—The circumstances regarding the presence of the respondent in the house of PW-26 and the act of his sending PW-17, PW-26 and PW-27 to the market for making purchases have been sought to be proved by the testimony of PW-17, PW-26 and PW-27. PW-26, has consistently deposed that the respondent was living in her house and on January 12, 1979, he gave Rs. 30 to her and asked her to purchase clothes for the children to be worn on the festival of "Sankranthi". She further deposed that she left the house alongwith her daughter PW-27. PW-17, has deposed that he went to the market to buy "Heralikayi" at the asking of the respondent. The statement of these three witnesses have been relied upon by the Trial Court in proving the circumstance that the respondent was alone in the house with his wife and two children. The Trial Court further relied upon the evidence of these witnesses to prove the circumstance that the respondent manipulated to send the three witnesses out of the house on the pretext of buying clothes and "Heralikayi" from the market. All the above circumstances would prove that the respondent alone had killed his wife and the prosecution brought home the offence against the respondent. State of Karnataka v. Lakshminaiah, AIR 1993 SC 100 : 1992 Supp (2) SCC 420 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 755 (757, 759) : 1992 CrLJ 3997 : JT 1992 (4) SC 326 : (1992) 2 UJ (SC) 565 : (1992) 2 Crimes 1130.

[8330] ● Conduct of accused while deceased burning.—Meera was found on fire at about 2.30 or 2.45 a.m. while she was burning the three accused who alone were inside came out of the room and stood in the verandah chit chatting unconcerned about her plight. None of them tried to help Meera. The accused were totally indifferent to what was happening to Meera. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Ashok Kumar Srivastava, AIR 1992 SC 840 : (1992) 2 SCC 86 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 241 (250) : 1992 CrLJ 1104 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 144 : 1992 (1) Crime 576.

[8332] ● Conduct of accused in approaching Sarpanch.—A sarpanch being a man of authority, it was nothing unnatural in the accused approaching him as to what he had done. Dharma v. Nirmal Singh, AIR 1996 SC 1136 (1139) : (1996) 7 SCC 471 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 444 : 1996 CrLJ 1631 : JT 1996 (4) SC 608.

[8333] ● Conduct of accused on receiving message of death of wife.—"It is also an admitted position that he had news of his wife's death in the Court at 11.00 a.m. He did not disclose the name of the informer. Alongwith another two Advocates, i.e., PW-5 and another, he went to the Police Station at 2.10 p.m. on September 27, 1985 to lodge the written first information report, Ex KA-3. A reading of Ex KA-3 is quite interesting. He merely mentions that while he was in Court at 11.00 am, he received the message that his wife had died and he went to the house and after seeing her dead body he went to the Police Station and lodged his report. There is no explanation as to where he was moving or what he was doing from 11.00 a.m. to 2.10 p.m. and why he had lodged the report at 2.10 p.m. when he had received the message of the death of his wife at 11.00 a.m." State of Uttar Pradesh v. Ramesh Prasad Misra, AIR 1996 SC 2766 (2768, 2769) : (1996) 10 SCC 360 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1278 : 1996 CrLR 4002.

[8334] ● Conduct of husband of delaying in lodging FIR.—After the marriage the deceased was staying with her husband and had spent hardly five months and was having into 6 months pregnancy. There was no suggestion even of her being of loose character. If the stranger had really come and stayed in the house and committed murder by strangulation, would he have burnt the dead body so as to create evidence to alert the neighbour to come and catch him? It would be abhorrent to the common sense to believe it. Yet another circumstances to disbelieve this theory is that having committed the murder at mid-night, would he have waited till 8.00 a.m. and left the house after day break so as to secure evidence of his presence and of having committed the murder? Under these clinching impossible human conduct, the theory of stranger's coming to the house staying with the deceased during the intervening night of 27 September 1985 and of committing her murder is a false one. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Rameseh Prasad Misra, AIR 1996 SC 2766 (2768) : (1996) 10 SCC 360 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1278 : 1996 CrLJ 4002.

[8335] ● Conduct of husband of deceased.—In the instant case it is most distressing to note that the practicing advocates PW-6 and DW-2 with a view to exculpate the first respondent from the clutches of law have without any compunction. spoken false hood and have no regard for truth. DW-2 has spoken falsely that after the first respondent got the news of the death of his wife he was often fainting and swooning which was not even spoken by the first respondent in his S. 313, statement. On his own showing, the first respondent had argued bail applications and attended other cases even after he had the news of the death of his wife. In those circumstances, the plea of fainting and occasional unconsciousness is incompatible with stone-hearted Ramesh Prasad Misra. He did not exhibit normal human conduct of an innocent man, i.e., he should have been shocked to hear the news of the death of his young wife, married just five months back and an expectant mother of his child, in his absence, he should have rushed home to find out the cause for the death and search out whether crime was for gain, etc. and immediately swing into action and make the Police to investigate into the crime. On the other hand, although he had the news at 11 a.m. he went to the Police Station at 2.10 p.m. after finding no escape to further delay the reporting to the Police of the crime. This conduct is inconsistent and incompatible with normal human behaviour of an innocent man but seems to be one of the clever demeanour. The evidence of DW-2 regarding occasional faints and swooning and ultimate unconsciousness is a bunch of tissues of his unsavoury to be accepted. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Ramesh Prasad Misra, AIR 1996 SC 2766 : (1996) 10 SCC 360 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1278 : 1996 CrLJ 4002.

[8336] ● Conduct of accused in giving false information about accidental death of deceased.—"...conduct of the appellants (accused) who gave false explanation that the deceased died due to accidental burn injuries is again an important circumstance against the accused. (DW-4) was asked to go and lodge a report that Pratibha sustained accidental burn injuries. This was done only with a view to misguide the investigating agency and to take a plea that the incident was communicated to the Police at the earlier opportunity without there being any time to concoct the same. Having held the guilty of the appellants proved in the present case, we are of the opinion that the conduct of the appellants in giving false information about accidental burn injuries sustained by Pratibha is a circumstance which prosecution has rightly pressed into service and held proved by the Courts below." Baldev Krishan v. State of Haryana, AIR 1997 SC 1666 (1670, 1671) : (1997) 4 SCC 486 : (1997) SCC (Cri) 575 : 1997 CrLJ 1162 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 361 : JT 1997 (2) SC 39.

[8337] ● Conduct of teacher carrying dagger.—It has rightly been contended that accused No. 2 being a teacher was not supposed to carry a dagger at night and to accompany accused No. 1 also carrying a dagger and wait in darkness for the deceased. Krishnan v. State of Kerala, AIR 1997 SC 383 (387) : (1996) 10 SCC 508 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1375 : 1996 CrLJ 4444.

[8339] ● Conduct of husband in not trying to put out flames.—If the appellant's wife died on account of an accident or by committing suicide, the appellant would have certainly attempted to put out the flames and take her to the hospital. The above answers given by the appellant show that he was totally indifferent. That conduct of the appellant is undoubtedly a circumstances to be taken into account for deciding the question whether the appellant was guilty. C.V. Govindappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1998 SC 792 (794-95) : (1998) 2 SCC 763 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 683 : 1998 CrLJ 1107 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 79.

[8340] ● Conduct of eye-witnesses in chasing accused and proceeding to Police Station.—Mohan Lal and Prabhunarain have stated that while they were standing in front of a shop, the accused came there and snatched the wrist watch and ran away in the car in which they had come. They have further stated that they chased the accused for some time in a jeep but they did not stop the car of the accused and decided to proceed to the police station as they were afraid of the dacoits. They noted the number of the car and went straight to the police station. This conduct of the witnesses cannot be regarded as unnatural.

There is no material to show that the accused knew that they were chased. They had, therefore, no reason to suspect that the jeep would go to the Police Station and Police would be informed. They had already travelled a distance of 23 Kms. and they might have considered it safe to take a halt there. Therefore, the prosecution version cannot be said to be improbable. Om Prakaash v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1998 SC 1220, 1221 : (1998) 3 SCC 183 : (1998 SCC (Cri) 696 : 1998 CrLJ 1636 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 164 : JT 1998 (1) SC 395.

[8341] ● Conduct of accused—No. 1 in Jail as under trial.—Before the Civil Court it was pointed out that A-1 is a graduate in Engineering coming from a good family background and in the Jail also he was running Indira Gandhi National Open University and National Open School Study Centre for the past five years and that he completely dedicated towards this noble cause. By taking into consideration the age, character, antecedents and his conduct during the period of his remaining in Jail as under-trial, the learned Judge has taken a lenient view. In view of the aforesaid background of accused No. 1 and the fact that he was already undergone sentence of six-and-a-half years, we reduce the sentence to the period already undergone. We further set aside the order imposing a fine of Rs. 20,000 each for the offences punishable under S. 5 of TADA Act. If the fine has already been paid, the same be refunded. Ghulam Nabi War v. State of N.C.T. of Delhi, AIR 2000 SC 1799 (1802) : (2000) 9 SCC 13 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1135 : 2000 CrLJ 2223 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 397 : JT 2000 (4) SC 594.

[8342] ● Conduct of accused not divorced from totality of circumstances.—It is an admitted case that the appellant was in a highly inebriated stage when he approached the deceased when the demand for sparing her ornaments was made by him. When she refused to oblige, he poured kerosene on her and wanted her to lit the matchstick. When she failed to do so, he collected the matchbox and ignited one match-stick but when flames were up he suddenly and frantically poured water to save her from the tongues of flames. This conduct cannot be seen divorced from the totality of the circumstances. Very probably, he would not have anticipated that the act done by him would have escalated to such a proportion that she might die. If he had ever intended her to die he would not have alerted his senses to bring water in an effort to rescue her. We are inclined to think that all what the accused thought of was to inflict burns to her and to frighten her but unfortunately the situation slipped out of his control and it went to the fatal extent. He would not have intended to inflict the injuries which she sustained on account of his act. Kalu Ram v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2000 SC 3630 (3631) : (2000) 10 SCC 324 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 18.

[8343] ● Conduct of witness.—"If the witnesses had torches in their hands and they were running towards the well on the village path or through the fields, the natural impulse would be to flash the torches so as to make the path visible and also to attempt to have a view of the place of the incident wherefrom the cries had emanated. If the torches were lighted, the assailants would not keep on standing but would rather take to their heels in which case they would not have been identified. The High Court is right in observing that the case appears to be one of blind murder and false implication of the accused persons who are three real brothers so as to avenge the enmity generated by the land dispute." Surendra Pratap Chauhan v. Ram Naik, AIR 2001 SC 164 (167, 168) : (2000) 10 SCC 226 : 2001 CrLJ 98.

[8344] ● Conduct of appellant suspicious during relevant time.—The conduct of the first appellant also shows that this is a case of murder. PW-8 deposed that on the date of incident at about 3.30 pm the appellant came to him and told that his wife had sustained burn injuries. When PW-8 asked him how she sustained the burn injuries the first appellant told him that she had died also. PW-8 is related to the deceased Narayanibai as she was the sister of the mother-in-law of PW-8. PW-8 went to the house of the first appellant and gave him Rs. 200 to purchase material for the funeral of the deceased. He advised the first appellant to give a statement before the Police before performance of the funeral. It is pertinent to note that the appellant did not tell PW-8 that his wife had committed suicide. His conduct during the relevant time is totally suspicious. Jawahar Lal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 2209, 2210 : (2001) 5 SCC 300 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 887 : 2001 CrLJ 2923 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 592.

[8345] ● Conduct of accused in going to house of prosecution witness.—The conduct of the accused in going to the house of prosecution and giving false news about the commission of offence by some other person further aggravates the guilt pointing finger at the accused. State of Rajasthan v. Kheraj Ram, (2003) 8 SCC 224 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1979.

[8346] ● Conduct of accused.—The incident in question had taken place on 6.4.1986 and the accused was arrested only on 11.4.1986, nearly four days thereafter. It is extremely difficult to believe that a person who is involved in such a serious crime like murder would still be wearing clothes which are blood-stained even four days after the murder which fact is opposed to normal human conduct. Khalil Khan v. State of M.P., AIR 2003 SC 4670 : (2003) 11 SCC 19 : 2004 SCC (Cr) 1052 : 2003 CrLJ 5046 : (2003) 4 Crimes 293.

[8347] ● Conduct of Pardanashin Lady in accompanying deceased.—In view of the fact that PW-4 has admitted that she is a pardanashin lady, her accompanying the deceased alone at the time of incident itself is a doubtful circumstance; more so in the background of the fact that her husband and mother-in-law were available in the house when she left the house. Khima Vikamshi v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2003 SC 1326 : (2003) 9 SCC 420 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1825 (1827) : 2003 CrLJ 2025 : (2003) 2 Crimes 296.

[8348] ● Conduct of accused after incident.—It is true that the conduct of the accused persons after the incident had taken place is very unnatural and creates a strong suspicion against them but that by itself is not sufficient to convict the accused, especially when no strong motive to put an end to the life of a son/brother is made out. State of Orissa v. Babaji Charan Mohanty, AIR 2003 SC 3926 : (2003) 10 SCC 57 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 785 : 2003 CrLJ 3744 : JT 2003 (6) SC 529 : (2003) 3 Crimes 265.

[8349] ● Conduct of accused in not attending funeral of deceased.—One of the circumstances relied by the trial Court is the fact that the accused persons did not attend the funeral of the deceased after their bodies were released from the hospital. From their absence at the time of the funeral, the trial Court has drawn an inference against the appellants which according to the Court indicated the guilty conscience of the appellants. The trial Court herein failed to take note of the fact that in the first information report lodged with the Police by the family of the deceased the appellants and other members of the family who have since been acquitted, were accused of murdering the deceased and her children. A case in this regard was also sought to be registered. PW-14, who is the maternal uncle of the deceased, and also a retired senior IAS Officer in his evidence stated : "My statement before the Police then was that Devinder Kaur and her two children had been murdered by the accused by setting fire to them. This was the information which was given to me that day". In such a situation when a murder charge is levelled against an accused, it is hardly possible to expect the accused to be present at such funeral. Therefore, this circumstance also cannot be taken as an incriminating circumstance or a circumstance which corroborates the other evidence led by the prosecution against the accused. Sakatar Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2004 SC 2570 (2578) : (2004) 2 JCC 78 : 2004 CrLJ 2076 : (2004) 3 Crimes 234.

[8350] ● Different people react differently.—Different people react differently to a given situation and from the fact that the witness did not choose to fall on the body of his father or carry his dead body from where it was lying, by itself cannot be a ground to reject his evidence. His presence at the place of incident also cannot be treated as a chance presence inasmuch as he is a resident of that village though his father stayed in Deoria. Learned counsel for the appellant submitted that it is an admitted fact that this witness has stated that he is an educated person and according to this witness the complaint in question was not written down by him but by his brother-in-law which is also an unnatural conduct indicating that he might not have been present at the time of incident. We do not think that this could not also be a ground to suspect the presence of this witness at the time and place of incident. This witness in his evidence has stated that since his brother-in-law was available who was also a literate, he dictated the complaint to him which was scribed by his brother-in-law and we do not find anything unnatural in this conduct either. Jaishree Yadav v. State of U.P., AIR 2004 SC 4443 : (2005) 9 SCC 788 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 160 (170) : 2004 CrLJ 4826 : 2004 (3) Crimes 286.

[8351] ● Conduct of accused—Relevancy.—The conduct of the accused person is relevant, if such conduct influences or is influenced by an fact in issue or relevant fact. The evidence of the circumstances, simpliciter, that the accused pointed out to the police-officer, the place where the dead body of the kidnapped boy was found and on their pointing out the body was exhumed, would be admissible as conduct under Section 8, Evidence Act irrespective of the fact whether the statement made by the accused contemporaneously with or antecedent to such conduct falls within the purview of section or not. A.N. Venkatesh v. State of Karnataka, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1938 (1944).

[8352] ● No evidence to show that the accused was absconding.—The High Court furthermore commented upon the conduct of the appellant in evading arrest from 4.10.1998 to 21.10.1998. The investigating officer did not say so. He did not place any material to show that the appellant had been absconding during the said period. He furthermore did not place any material on record that the appellant could not be arrested despite attempts having been made therefor. Why despite the fact, the appellant who had been shown to be an accused in the first information report recorded by himself was not arrested is a matter which was required to be explained by the investigating officer. He admittedly visited the place of occurrence and seized certain material objects. The investigating officer did not say that he made any attempt to arrest the appellant or for that matter he had been evading the same. He also failed and/or neglected to make any statement or bring on record any material to show as to what attempts had been made by him to arrest the appellant. No evidence furthermore has been brought by the prosecution to show as to since when the appellant made himself unavailable for arrest and/or was absconding. P. Mani v. State of T.N., AIR 2006 SC 1319 : (2006) 3 SCC 161 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 36 (41) : 2006 CrLJ 1629 : 2006 (2) Crimes 9.

[8353] ● Victim committing suicide—Accused appellant not raising any hue and cry.—The prosecution story was that the Accused No. 1 Guneshbhai poured kerosene oil on the body of the deceased and appellant mother-in-law lighted the match stick. The deceased received burn injuries, and died. Her dying declaration was recorded by the Executive Magistrate in which she named both the accused appellants. The defence case was that the deceased had committed suicide. The defence case to that effect was disbelieved for good reasons as because she was pregnant and she had a daughter aged 2 and 1½ years. The appellants did not raise any hue and cry which would have been their natural conduct if the deceased had committed suicide. The plea of suicide was rejected. The conviction of the appellant mother-in-law under Section 302 IPC was sustained. Maniben v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2007 SC 1932 : (2007) 10 SCC 362 : 2007 CrLJ 3187 (3190).

[8354] ● Wife Committed suicide—Though husband was present in house, he made no effort to save her life.—Where there was evidence that the accused husband tortured her wife for not bringing adequate dowry, though he was present in house, when the deceased committed suicide, he did not make any effort to save her life, even did not call the doctor, the conduct of the accused was apathetic, which was an additional link in the ocular version of PWs, Section 1 Evidence Act was held attracted in the case, the conviction of the husband for offence under Section 306 IPC and Section 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act 1961 was sustained. Arvind Kumar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 2674 (2006) 12 SCC 306 : 2007 CrLJ 3741 (3744).

[8355] ● Accused requesting medical officer to inform police in regard to circumstances in which his wife received injuries.—The conduct of the appellant/accused in not requesting the medical officer in the hospital to inform the police in regard to the circumstances in which he and his wife had received injuries is not a circumstance which point to the guilt of the accused. Vikramjit Singh v. State of Punjab, 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 732 : 2007 CrLJ 1000 (1005) : 2007 (1) Crimes 181 (SC).

[8356] ● Unnatural conduct of witness.—PW 1 had not accompanied the deceased to the hospital and waited at the spot for about 40 minutes before he left for police station to lodge FIR. This is an unnatural conduct. In a normal course he could have either accompanied the deceased or could have, immediately gone to the police station which was not for away from the place of occurrence. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Mushtaq Alam, AIR 2007 SC 2672 : (2007) 11 SCC 215 : 2007 CrLJ 3741 (3741) : (2007) 3 Crimes 262.

[8357] ● Unnatural conduct of accused.—It is against natural human conduct that the act sodomy would be committed at 8 O'clock in the morning and that too continuously for seven days. Gauri Shankara Swamigalu v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2008 SC 2349 : (2008) 14 SCC 411 : 2008 CrLJ 3042 (3045) (SC) : 2008 (2) Crimes 81 (SC).

[8358] ● Criminal trial—Not an enquiry into conduct of accused.—A criminal trial is not an enquiry into the conduct of an accused for any purpose other than to determine whether he is guilty of the offence charged. In this connection, the piece of conduct can be held to be incriminatory which has no reasonable explanation except on the hypothesis that he is guilty. Conduct which destroys the presumption of innocence can alone be considered as material. Sidhartha Vashisht v. State, NCT of Delhi, AIR 2010 SC 2352 : (2010) 6 SCC 1

CONDUCT OF ADVOCATE

[8359] ● Conduct of advocate.—An advocate instead of arming himself with armoury of precedents, was armed with licensed revolver and was attending the Courts with licensed fire-arm. His conduct being not consistent with dignity of legal profession is to be deprecated. U.P. Sales Tax

Service Association v. Taxation Bar Association, AIR 1996 SC 98 : (1995) 5 SCC 716.

CONDUCT OF CLOSE RELATIVES OF VICTIM

[8360] ● Conduct of close relatives of victim.—It is well known that the close relatives of murdered person are most reluctant to spare the real assailant and falsely involve another person in place of the assailant. Had the deceased been killed by some other person, the natural conduct of the witnesses, who were related to the deceased on her parent's side would have been to offer sympathy to the accused and help him in the apprehension of the real culprit rather than to falsely involve him in the murder of his wife. State of Uttar Pradesh v. S. Dass, AIR 1972 SC 677 : (1792) 3 SCC 201 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 275 : 1972 SCCr R 511 : 1972 UJ (SC) 526.

[8361] ● Conduct of children and wife of deceased.—"The deceased alongwith his daughter PW-2 aged 15 years and son PW-3 aged 13 years had gone to his lands for eating Hurda in the morning. On their return when they were passing through the fields of accused-respondents, all the five respondents attacked Umrao and gave him as many as 15 injuries with blunt as well as sharp-edged weapons. PW-2 and PW-3 who witnessed the occurrence, left the deceased on the spot and went back home to inform their mother. The mother thereafter contacted some of her relations including Balapathi and the village authorities and in the process, it took her about 3/4 hours. . . . . .

The conduct of the children and the wife of the deceased was unnatural. In the first instance both the children could not have left their father alone after he had been beaten mercilessly. In any case, after knowing from her children about the occurrence, instinctively the wife should have rushed to the place of occurrence immediately. Thus, the prosecution story sounds improbable." State of Karnataka v. Bahu, AIR 1994 SC 31 (32) : 1994 CrLJ 18.

[8362] ● Conduct of mother.—There was a delay of 5 days in lodging the first information report. On her own admission, PW-2 Tejinder Kaur was told by the appellant while taking away the girls on 18-3-1984 at about noon time that he was going to kill them. She, however, kept quite. She did not protest, let alone raise any hue and cry so as to prevent the appellant from taking away the daughters for killing them. She did not even disclose to anyone as to what the appellant had told her even though the appellant did not return home at night. On 19th March, she learnt at about 6.30 a.m. from her mother-in-law Ajmer Kaur, a co-conspirator with her husband that the appellant had killed the two daughters and thrown them in the canal. She still kept quite and not only did she not raise any hue or cry, she did not inform anyone including her parents and Satya Walia, PW-3, who had admittedly met her on that day about the incident. This conduct is rather unnatural for a mother.

PW-2 also admitted that she alongwith her mother-in-law had visited Gurdwara Rara Saheb on 20th March, 1984 itself and had seen the mortal remains of her child and that the appellant had also told her on returning home on 20-3-1984 that he had killed the girls, but still she did not lodge any complaint with the Police or inform anyone about it. PW-2 could give no explanation for her silence. Balwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1996 SC 607, 609, 610 : 1995 Supp (4) SCC 259 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 59 : 1996 CrLJ 883 : JT 1995 (8) SC 81.

[8363] ● Conduct of sons.—PWs 9 and 10 are the sons of Ram Pal who are alleged to have been present at the time of the incident. But their conduct, as revealed from their evidence shows that they could not have been eye-witnesses to the incident. If they were present on spot and had seen the assault on their father Ram Pal and uncle Kanahiya, they would have accompanied them in the Police Van to the Hospital. That would have been natural conduct on their part. But curiously enough they did not accompany them to the Hospital. Hari Chand v. State of Delhi, AIR 1996 SC 1477 (1484) : (1996) 9 SCC 113 : 1996 CrLJ 1701.

[8364] ● Unnatural behaviour of witness.—PW-3 though closely related to the deceased, did not inform about what he had seen to anyone at all except to PW-4, who has in his deposition belied the statement of PW-3 and stated that PW-3 had not told him as to how the deceased had died. According to PW-3, he did not raise any alarm when injuries were being caused to the deceased and though the Police Station, Sadeq is at a distance of 5 kms. from the village and he besides being relative of the deceased is also the Sarpanch of the village, he did not go to lodge any report. He admitted that he had not informed any lambardar or any other person in the village about the incident. During the cross-examination, he also admitted that he had not even informed the parents of Pritam Kaur about her death and did not even disclose what he had seen at the house of Kartar Singh, to his wife. Not only did he keep quite about it on the date of the occurrence but on his own showing, even on the next day, he did not convey the information to anyone till his statement came to be recorded during the inquest proceedings at the cremation ground. The Trial Court rightly commented upon the unnatural behaviour of the witness and held that he had no occasion to witness the incident and his evidence was not at all reliable. Mukhtiar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1996 SC 836 (838) : (1996) 7 SCC 155 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 239.

[8365] ● Conduct of brother of wife of deceased.—Even regarding the fact that PW-1 did not make a hue and cry at the scene, it cannot be counted against the credibility of his testimony, for, he would have been dumbfounded at the sight of the ghastly attack made on his brother-in-law. That apart, he would have instinctively avoided going forward at that stage. K. Naga Subba Reddy v. Public Prosecutor of A.P. Court, AIR 2000 SC 3480 (3483-84) : (2000) 9 SCC 21 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1140 : 2000 CrLJ 3452.

[8366] ● Conduct of son.—It is contended that the conduct of Hardip Singh was not natural. He took to his heels when his father was being assaulted and he made no efforts to protect his father which was natural for a son. But then Hardip Singh has stated that accused also wanted to assault him and to protect himself, he ran from the spot. Statement of Hardip Singh is cogent and reliable. Narinder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2000 SC 2212, 2118 : (2000) 4 SCC 603 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 855 : 2000 CrLJ 3462 : JT 2000 (4) SC 306.

[8367] ● Family members became dumb founded on account of murder and threats.—Where an account of the threat extended by the accused after they had killed one person of the family and threatened others, the witnesses family members, became dumb founded and could not shout, the conduct of the witnesses would not be unnatural and they would not be called untrustworthy. Shivappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2008 SC 1860 : (2008) 11 SCC 337 : 2008 CrLJ 2992 (2997).

[8368] ● Son of deceased though present on spot made no effort to save his father.—Where the presence of the son of the deceased on the spot is proved, his evidence/presence would not be doubted, merely because made no attempt whatsoever to save his father from being further assaulted. Mahmood v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 515 : (2007) 14 SCC 16 : 2008 CrLJ 696 (701) (SC).

CONDUCT OF CONTEMNOR

[8369] ● Conduct of contemnor.—The conduct and writings of the contemner constitute serious interference with the administration of justice, since his sole object in giving publicity to the defamatory allegation against the High Court Judges is to deter them from deciding cases against him or against those in whom he is apparently interested. The apology tendered by him is an eye-wash, a make belief, and cannot be accepted. In fact, there is no apology to accept because he has resiled from it. He is penitent for having apologised to the High Court Judges whose character he has assailed without the semblance of sincerity of purpose or purity of means. He is not penitent for his conduct. For the reasons above-said the contemnor is convicted under Section 12 of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1971. National Textile Workers Union v. P.R. Ramakrishnan, AIR 1983 SC 759 : (1983) 3 SCC 105 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 572 (576, 577) : 1983 CrLJ 1102 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 314 : (1983) 3 SCR 12 : (1983) 1 Crimes 1161.

CONDUCT OF INNOCENT PERSON OR THIRD PERSON

[8370] ● Conduct of innocent person called by police and interrogated.—Any person even if innocent and not connected in any way with a gruesome crime which had recently occurred and was the talk of the town, if called by Police and interrogated as a suspect, would be scared and be apprehensive of the likelihood of his being implicated in the crime. Placed in such situation if a villager, unaware of the law, happens to ask a person, who he feels knows things better than what he himself does, as to what would be the period of incarceration to be suffered by any person for such an offence, the impulse for enquiry may be the outcome of a feeling of nervousness or mere inquisitiveness; such an enquiry is not necessarily suggestive of the working of a criminal mind. Subhash Chand v. State of Rajasthan, (2002) 1 SCC 702 : 2001 (7) Supreme 585 : (2001) 4 Crimes 315.

[8371] ● Conduct of third person.—The conduct of a third person in any event is wholly irrelevant unless the same has a direct nexus in proving the crime. Vikramjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 12 SCC 306 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 732 : 2007 CrLJ 1000 (1005) : 2007 (1) Crimes 181.

CONDUCT OF JUDGE

[8372] ● Conduct of judge.—Members of Bar Association met and resolved that the Chief was acting in a most partisan manner under the influence of the Allahabad Bar. The text of the resolution was this—"The Action Committee is of the opinion that the Chief Justice is acting in the discharge of administrative power under cl. 14 of the U.P. High Courts (Amalgamation) Order, 1948 in a most partisan manner under the influence of Allahabad Bar quite unbecoming of the office which he holds." The High Court discharged its notice observing "It is a matter of regret that contemners who are prominent members of the Avadh Bar, should have themselves embarked on the path of vilifying the Chief Justice of this Court and that we do not want to be over-sensitive in the matter, keeping in surrounding circumstances in which the contumacious act was .... by them and also keeping in view the fact that it was a single act of Chief Justice for which the attack was made, we do not propose to punish contemnors for the contumacious conduct for which we have adjudged guilty, though we express our strong disapproval of that conduct and hope that the indiscretion will not be repeated."

The members of the Bar did not act with dignity in regard to the resolution. Hargovind Dayal Srivastav v. G.N. Verma, AIR 1977 SC 1334 : (1977) 1 SCC 744 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 175 : 1977 CrLJ 1003 : (1977) 2 SCR 601.

[8373-74] ● Resolution passed by Bar Council against conduct of Judge.—The question cropped up in a case whether any Bar Council or Bar Association has the right to pass resolution against the conduct of a Judge perceived to have committed misbehaviour and if so, what is its effect on independence of judiciary. The Apex Court held that independent judiciary is must essential when liberty of citizen is in danger. It then becomes the duty of the judiciary to poise the scales of justice unmoved by the powers (actual or perceived) undisturbed by the clamour of the multitude. The heart of judicial independence is judicial individualism. The judiciary is not a disembodied abstraction. It is composed of individual men and women who work primarily on their own.

The Judge cannot retain his earlier passive judicial rule when he administers the law under the Constitution to give effect to the constitutional ideals. The extraordinary complexity of modern litigation requires him not merely to declare the rights of citizens but also to mould the relief warranted under given facts and circumstances and often command the executive and other agencies to enforce and given effect to the order, writ or direction or prohibit them to do unconstitutional acts. In this ongoing complex of adjudicator process, the role of the Judge is not merely to interpret the law but also to lay new norms of law and to mould the law to suit the changing social and economic scenario to make the ideals enshrined in the Constitution meaningful and reality. Therefore, the Judge is required to take judicial notice of the social and economic ramification, consistent with the theory of law. Thereby, the society demands active judicial roles which formerly were considered exceptional but now a routine The Judge must act independently, if he is to perform the functions as expected of him and he must feel secure that such action of him will not lead to his own downfall. The independence is not assured for the Judge but to the Judged. Independence to the Judge, therefore, would be both essential and proper. Considered Judgment of the Court would guarantee the Constitutional liberties which would thrive only in an atmosphere of judicial independence. Every endeavour should be made to preserve independent judiciary as a citadel of public justice and public security to fulfil the Constitutional role assigned to the Judges.

Articles 124(4) and 121 would thus put the nail squarely on the projections, prosecutions or attempts by any other forum or group of individuals or Associations, statutory otherwise, either to investigate or enquire into or discuss the conduct of a Judge or the performance of his duties and on/off Court behaviour except as per the procedure provided under Articles 124(4) and (5) of the constitution, and Act and the Rules. Thereby, equally no other agency or authority like the CBI, Ministry of Finance, the Reserve Bank of India [Respondents Nos. 8 to 10] as sought for by the petitioner, would investigate into the conduct or acts or actions of a Judge. No mandamus or direction would be issued to the Speaker of Lok Sabha or Chairman of Rajya Sabha to initiate action for impeachment.

When its allegations are against a Judge of High Court, the Bar Association could take up the matter with the Chief Justice of the High Court and await his response for the action taken thereunder for a reasonable period. In case the allegations are against Chief Justice of a High Court, the Bar should bring them directly to the notice of the Chief Justice of India. On receipt of such complaint, the Chief Justice of India would in the same way act as stated above qua complaint against a Judge of the High Court, and the Bar would await for a reasonable period the response of the Chief Justice of India.

It would thus be seen that yawning gap between proved misbehaviour and bad conduct inconsistent with the high office on the part of a operating Judge/Chief Justice of a High Court could be disciplined regulation through in-house procedure. This in-house procedure would be the constitutional gap and would yield salutary effect. C. Ravichandaran Iyer v. Justice A.M. Bhattacharjee, (1995) 5 SCC 457 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 953 : 1995(5) Scale 142(2).

[8375] ● Conduct of subordinate judiciary.—We must not be understood as meaning that any conduct of a subordinate judicial officer unbecoming of him and demanding a rebuff should be simply overlooked. But there is an alternative safer and advisable course available to choose the conduct of a judicial officer, unworthy of him, having come to the notice of a Judge of the High Court hearing a matter on the judicial side, the lis may be disposed of by pronouncing upon the merits thereof as found by him but avoiding in the judicial pronouncement criticism, of, or observations on the "conduct" of the subordinate judicial officer who had decided the case under scrutiny. Simultaneously, but separately in-office proceedings may be drawn up inviting attention of Hon'ble Chief Justice to the facts describing the conduct of the subordinate Judge concerned by sending a confidential letter or note to the Chief Justice. It will thereafter be open to the Chief Justice to deal with the subordinate judicial officer either at his own level or through the inspecting Judge or by placing the matter before the Full Court for its consideration. The action so taken would all be on the administrative side.

The subordinate judge concerned would have an opportunity of clarifying his position or putting faith the circumstances under which he acted. He would not be condemned unheard and if the decision be adverse to him, it being on administrative side, he would have some remedy available to him under the law. He would not rendered remedies. In the matter of "K" a judicial officer, AIR 2001 SC 972 : (2001) 3 SCC 54 : 2001 CrLJ 1157 : JT 2001 (2) SC 397.

CONDUCT OF POLICE

[8376] ● Conduct of police.—Strongly enough, neither of the constables, going into the house after hearing someone crying in the house of deceased asked the daughter-in-law of the deceased as to who had killed the deceased nor did she tell them as to who were the assailants. It is impossible to understand this conduct on the part of constables. They were policemen and when they were told by the daughter-in-law that the deceased had been killed, their immediate query would have been : how was he killed and who killed him? But according to constables they did not inquire about the names of the assailants at that time, nor did they make any inquiry from the relatives of the deceased. It is only after one of the constables came back to the house of the deceased, after leaving the other constable to guard the dead body, that he asked the daughter-in-law and was informed that the appellants had killed the deceased. This is indeed strange and unnatural conduct on the part of constables and it is difficult to accept the testimony. Caetano Piedade Fernandes v. Union Territory of Goa, Daman and Dieu, Panaji, Goa, AIR 1977 SC 135 : (1977) 1 SCC 707 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 154 (160) : 1977 CrLJ 167 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 393.

[8377] ● Conduct of sub-Inspector to follow Jeep.—On seeing the witnesses, the accused ran away. PW-7 brought his jeep and he alongwith PWs-1, 6 and 10 and others took the injured in the jeep and proceeded towards the primary health unit. On the way they had to pass in front of the Police Station. There they found PW-14, Narayan Devisingh, PSI standing. PW-14 stopped the jeep and saw the injured person who was unconscious. He also accompanied them in the jeep to PW-2, Dr. Sham, Assistant Medical Officer who after examination opined that the condition of the injured was serious and that at that time he could give only some life saving medicines and he advised to take the injured to the Hospital, PW-2 also accompanied them. If on the way PW-14 the Sub-inspector also followed them there is nothing unusual. Nagappa Fakirappa Goudar v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1994 SC 953 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 621 : 1994 CrLJ 1200 : 1994 CrLR (SC) 100 : JT 1994 (1) SC 99 : (1994) 1 Crimes 577.

[8378] ● Custodial death—Police applicable only can explain circumstances.—"Rarely in cases of Police torture or custodial death, direct ocular evidence of the complicity of the Police personnel would be available, when it observed that "direct" evidence about the complicity of these respondents was not available. Generally speaking, it would be Police officials alone who can only explain the circumstances in which a person in their custody had died. Bound as they are by the ties of brotherhood, it is unknown that the Police personnel prefer to remain silent and more often than not even pervert the truth to save their colleagues, and the present case is an apt illustration, as to how one after the other Police witnesses feigned ignorance about the whole matter." State of Madhya Pradesh v. Shyamsunder Trivedi, (1995) 4 SCC 262 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 715 (724, 725).

CONDUCT OF RAPE VICTIM

[8379] ● Statement of prosecutrix after occurrence of rape admissible.—Statement of prosecutrix soon after occurrence of rape is admissible and relevant as evidence of conduct under Section 8 and also as corroboration of evidence of prosecutrix in Court under Section 157. Chander Kala v. Ram Kishore, AIR 1985 SC 1268 : (1985) 4 SCC 212 : 1985 CrLJ 1490 (SC) : (1985) 2 Crime 642.

[8380] ● Character or reputation of victim of rape not relevant for conviction.—"It has been urged by the learned defence counsel that the victim Suman Rani was a woman of questionable character and easy virtue with lewd and lascivious behaviour and as such her version is not worthy of acceptance. After considerable debate on the merits of the case, the argument was confined only with regard to the quantum of sentence. After meticulously examining the entire matter, this Court came to the conclusion that the proviso to S. 376(2), IPC could be invoked having regard to the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case coupled with the conduct of the victim and the mandatory sentence provided under the penal provision is not called for. At this juncture, we would like to point out that the very confirmation of the conviction accepting the sole testimony of the victim Suman Rani rejecting the arguments of the defence Counsel is itself a clear indication that this Court was of the view that the character or reputation of the victim has no bearing or relevance either in the matter of adjudging the guilt of the accused or-imposing punishment under S. 376, IPC. We would like to state with all emphasis that such factors are wholly alien to the very scope and object of S. 376 and can never serve either as mitigating or extenuating circumstances for imposing the sub-minimum sentence with the aid of the proviso to S. 376(2) of the IPC....

We have neither characterised the victim, Suman Rani as a woman of questionable character and easy virtue nor made any reference to her character or reputation in any part of our judgment but used the word "conduct" in the laxigraphical meaning for the limited purpose of showing as to how Suman Rani had behaved or conducted herself in not telling anyone for about 5 days about the sexual assault...." State of Haryana v. Prem Chand, AIR 1990 SC 538 : (1990) 1 SCC 249 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 93 (95) : 1990 CrLJ 454 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 66 : JT 1989 (4) SC 544 : (1990) 1 Crimes 275.

[8381] ● Testimony of prosecutrix—Appreciation of.—A girl, in a tradition found non-permissive society in India would be extremely reluctant even to admit that any incident which is likely to reflect upon her chastity had occurred, being conscious of the danger of being ostracized by the society or being looked down by the society. Her not informing the teachers or her friends at the examination centre under the circumstances cannot detract from her reliability. In the normal course of human conduct this unmarried minor girl, would not like to give publicity to the traumatic experience she had undergone and would feel terribly embarrassed in relation to the incident to narrate to her teachers and others over powered by a feeling of shame and her natural inclination would be to avoid talking about to any one lest the family name and honour is brought into controversy. Therefore, her informing to her mother only on return to the parental house and no one else at the examination centre prior thereto is an accord with the natural human conduct of a female. The Courts must while evaluating evidence remain alive to the fact that in a case of rape no self respecting woman would come forward in a Court just to make a humiliating statement against her honour such as is involved in the commission of rape on her. In cases involving sexual molestation, supposed considerations which have no material effect on the veracity of the prosecution case or even discrepancies in the statement of the prosecutrix should not unless the discrepancies are such which are of fatal nature, be allowed to throw out an otherwise reliable prosecution case. The inherent bashfulness of the females and the tendency to conceal outrage of sexual aggression are factors which the Courts should not overlook. State of Punjab v. Gurmit Singh, AIR 1996 SC 1393 : (1996) 2 SCC 384 : 1996 CrLJ 1728.

CONDUCT OF SYMPATHISER OF ACCUSED

[8382] ● Conduct of sympathiser of accused.—PW-13 did nor at all protest as to why the deceased was being taken out of taxi to a lonely place instead of being taken to the hospital for treatment of injuries. Thus by his deliberate silence he tried to assist the accused in executing their nefarious plan, particularly being a relation of the approver, he was thus if not an accomplice, at least a sympathizer of the accused. Therefore, we are not to place any reliance on the testimony of PW-13. Mukhtiar Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 1871 : (1980) 2 SCC 369 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 456 (458) : 1980 CrLJ 1420 : 1980 UJ (SC) 640 : 1980 Cr App R (SC) 261.

CONDUCT OF UNDERTRIAL

[8383] ● Conduct of undertrial.—Before the trial Court it was pointed out that A-1 is a graduate in Engineering coming from a good family background and in the Jail also he was running Indira Gandhi National Open University and National Open School Study Centre for the past five years and that he completely dedicated towards this noble cause. By taking into consideration the age, character, antecedents and his conduct during the period of his remaining in Jail as under-trial, the learned Judge has taken a lenient view. In view of the aforesaid background of accused No. 1 and the fact that he was already undergone sentence of six-and-a-half years, we reduce the sentence to the period already undergone. We further set aside the order imposing a fine of Rs. 20,000 each for the offences punishable under S. 5 of TADA Act. If the fine has already been paid, the same be refunded. Ghulam Nabi War v. State of N.C.T. of Delhi, AIR 2000 SC 1799 (1802) : (2000) 9 SCC 13 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1135 : 2000 CrLJ 2223 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 397 : JT 2000 (4) SC 594.

CONDUCT OF VICTIM

[8384] ● Conduct of victim.—Although the deceased was conscious at the place of occurrence at the time when he was put on the lorry and also at the time when he was brought to the nursing home and was in a position to speak he did not disclose the names of the assistants to anybody. This conduct of the deceased can be explained only on two hypothesis, namely, either the deceased was not conscious at all and was not in a position to talk to anybody or that even though he was conscious he did not disclose the occurrence to anybody because under the stress and strain of the assault which took place immediately at a time when darkness had set in and there was little moonlight, he was not able to identify the assailants. No third inference can be spelt out from the conduct of the deceased in not disbelieving the name of the assailants on these three occasions. K. Ramachandra Reddy v. Public Prosecutor, AIR 1976 SC 1994 : (1976) 3 SCC 618 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 473 (480) : 1976 CrLJ 1548 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 286.

[8385] ● Culpability of accused not established.—"The prosecutrix cannot be said to have been tied to the bicycle as if a load while sitting on the carrier thereof. She could have easily jumped off. She was a fully grown up girl may be one who had yet not touched 18 years of age, but still she was in the age of discretion, sensible and aware of the intention of the accused—Shyam, that he was taking her away for a purpose. It was not unknown to her with whom she was going in view of his earlier proposal. It was expected of her then to jump down from the bicycle, or put up a struggle and, in any case, raise an alarm to protect herself. No such steps were taken by her. It seems she was a willing party to go with Shyam—The appellant on her own and in that sense there was no "taking" out of the guardianship of her mother. The culpability of neither Shyam, A-1 nor that of Suresh, A-2, in these circumstances, appears to be established." Shyam v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1995 SC 2169 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 851 (852) : 1995 CrLJ 3974.

[8386] ● Conduct of person attacked by dacoits.—"...a person who was attacked by dacoits and had seen his colleagues being shot dead could not be expected to act in a cool and collected manner. He was a frightened person and had thought fit to first go to the tube-well of Raja Ram as he was having a licensed gun. Such a conduct can hardly be regarded as unnatural. Moreover, nothing was suggested to the Investigating Officer in the cross-examination that FIR was prepared later on." State of Uttar Pradesh v. Bhoora, AIR 1998 SC 254 (256) : (1998) 1 SCC 128 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 265 : 1998 CrLJ 478 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 1 : JT 1997 (8) SC 737.

CONDUCT OF WITNESS

[8387] ● Conduct of witness.—It has been argued that Bachan Singh and Gurmail Singh would run away and would remain present near the scene of occurrence after the assailants commenced their attack. This submission is not well-founded. Gurmail Singh is the son of Amar Singh deceased while Bachan Singh is the nephew of Mustan Singh and cousin of Mohinder Singh. Gurmail Singh and Bachan Singh would naturally be interested to know the fate of their close relatives who were being attacked by the assailants. There would be consequently nothing surprising in the act of Gurmail Singh and Bachan Singh stopping at a safe distance and from there looking behind and seeing the assault on the three deceased persons. The High Court on careful scrutiny of the evidence of Bachan Singh and Gurmail Singh found the same to be natural and probable. This Court sees no cogent ground to take a different view. Roop Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1973 SC 2617 : (1974) 3 SCC 307 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 933 (938) : 1973 CrLJ 1778 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 615.

[8388] ● Conduct of father of deceased.—The conduct of Mohan Singh, has been crticised before this Court and it is argued that there was something unnatural about it. Mohan Singh, even though he is father of Surat Singh, it is pointed out, did not go with Surat Singh from Jandiala Health Centre to Jullunder Hospital. We find noting unnatural in above conduct of Mohan Singh because Mohan Singh after taking Surat Singh to the Health Centre must have been anxious to make a report about this occurrence at the Police Station. Reference was made by the trial Court to the statement of Mohan Singh that he had changed his clothes which had got bloodstained before he went with Surat Singh to the Health Centre and thereafter to the Police Station. In this respect we find that different individuals often react differently in a grave situation. It may be that some others in the situation in which Mohan Singh was might not have changed their clothes before going to the Health Centre and the Police Station. The fact that Mohan Singh acted differently and changed his clothes would not go to show that his account of the actual of occurrence is not trustworthy. Bishan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1973 SC 2443 : (1974) 3 SCC 288 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 914 (920) : 1973 CrLJ 1778 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 578.

[8389] ● Conduct of Police Officer.—Where there was no acceptable evidence to fasten the appellant with the crime of murder and the mention of his name in the FIR must be ascribed to the bitter enmity and rivalry between the informant and the appellant, and in view of the unsatisfactory FIR, the conduct of the police officers present on the scene in not apprehending the appellant immediately, the only conclusion possible is that the name of the appellant was not given by anybody at the time of the occurrence and the evidence of the eye-witnesses cannot be accepted. Sadaram v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 2294 : (1971) 3 SCC 448 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 691 : 1975 CrLJ 23.

[8390] ● Conduct of husband of deceased.—It is difficult to believe that the appellant was so inflamed with passion as to demand sexual intercourse with the deceased who happened to be the wife of his cousin, and that too, not while she was alone, but in the presence of her husband. Salveraj v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1976 SC 1970 : (1976) 4 SCC 343 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 620 (624) : 1976 CrLJ 1541 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 344 : 1976 UJ (SC) 737.

[8391] ● Conduct of husband not making attempt to save deceased.—When Natesan, husband of the deceased entered the house he saw the appellant standing with a knife in his hand and asking the deceased to have sexual inter course with him. In any event when Natesan came into the house he would have run away and not continued to want that the deceased should submit to sexual intercourse with him. On seeing this explosive situation that the appellant is demanding sexual intercourse and was threatening her with a knife in his hand. And yet he did not step out of the house and shout for help he did not even try to go to the rescue of the deceased. He silently and shamefacedly watches his wife being murdered by the appellant. He was not alone in the house. Manisekaran, had come in the meantime, with the result that there were two persons on his side and yet, both of them quietly watched the proceedings without making any attempt to save the deceased. This conduct is highly unnatural. Salveraj v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1976 SC 1970 : (1976) 4 SCC 343 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 620 (622, 623) : 1976 CrLJ 1541 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 344 : 1976 UJ (SC) 737.

[8392] ● Conduct of wife.—According to wife of deceased, Phoola Bai, original accused 8 and 9 came to her house around 10 pm to 11 pm and told her husband, Dewan Singh that he was required by one Prabhu. On this intimation, Dewan Singh immediately started in company of accused 8 and 9 for going to the house of Prabhu. Phoola Bai then said that she followed her husband. This strike as utterly unnatural. If Dewan Singh had the slightest suspicion of any foul play he would not have readily agreed to accompany the original accused 8 and 9. If Dewan Singh going with accused 8 and 9 would raise little or no suspicion, it is difficult to believe that for no rhyme or reason Phola Bai would follow Dewan Singh. She does not say that she had any suspicion. Evidence of Phoola Bai that she followed. Dewan Singh, appears to be utterly unnatural and a serious doubt arising out of this unnatural conduct instead of being dispelled gets the reinforced and strengthened by the contents of FIR. Babbar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 1042 : (1979) 4 SCC 74 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 743 (744) : 1979 CrLJ 908 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 15.

[8393] ● Conduct of wife of deceased—Eyewitness.—Ram Singh (PW-10) is the uncle of deceased and Gandharv (PW-11) is the cousin of deceased Phoola Bai went from the scene of occurrence to the house of Ram Singh, which would mean that the first person she approached after she had witnessed the brutality committed on her husband was no stranger to her but a near relation. She was asked by Ram Singh as to who was killed; to which she replied that the dead body of her husband was lying near Modi's house. She does not say who were the assailants of Diwan Singh. Ram Singh immediately sent for Gandharv Singh (PW-11) and in his presence Phoola Bai spoke that Diwan Singh was killed.

The names of the assailants were not given. If Ram Singh and Gandharv Singh, the two near relations of deceased Diwan Singh, were approached within a couple of minutes after the occurrence and if Phoola Bai was a witness to the occurrence as she claims to be, the most natural conduct on her part would be to give the names of the assailants to Ram Singh and Gandharv. The evidence of Ram Singh and Gandharv Singh would show that even though Ram Singh asked the specific question as to who killed Diwan Singh, the only information that Phoola Bai gave was that the dead body of her husband was lying near the house of Modi. Could this be the conduct of the eye-witness, particularly of the wife, who claims to be a witness to the brutal assault on her husband and who claims to have identified the assailants? This lacuna renders the evidence of Phoola Bai, Lachhman and Kanhaiya utterly unworthy of belief. Babboo v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 1042 : (1979) 4 SCC 74 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 743 : 1979 CrLJ 1908 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 15 : 1979 Cr App R (SC) 134.

[8394] ● Conduct of accused.—The cumulative effect of the circumstances clearly show that the deceased was actually put on the ground and then run over by the cart driven by Jaspal Singh. At the same time the conduct of Jaspal Singh in meeting the witness in the Hospital and taking steps to bear the expenses of the treatment of the deceased clearly shows that they had no clear intention to cause the murder of the deceased. Jaspal Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1979 SC 1708 : (1980) 1 SCC 487 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 920 (923) : 1979 CrLJ 1386 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 487 : 1979 Cr App R (SC) 345 : 1979 UJ (SC) 718.

[8395] ● Conduct of husband.—If the appellant was present in the house at the time when Geeta was assaulted, it becomes necessary to examine his conduct without shifting the burden of proof on him.

If the mistress of the house was killed by robbers we should have thought that, the appellant would raise a hue and cry at least after the robbers had made good their escape but he did nothing of the kind and a little while later he quietly walked to the neighbour and narrated out the story that a few "Badmashes" introduced into the house and killed Geeta and her son. Not only does the conduct of the appellant corroborate the evidence of Sunil, but the very pattern of the crime corroborates that it is the appellant who committed it. Suresh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1981 SC 1122 : (1981) 2 SCC 569 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 559 (562) : 1981 CrLJ 1746 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 378 : (1981) 3 SCR 259.

[8396] ● Conduct of school teacher.—It is incredible that if Shrinarayan Sharma and the ladies saw the appellant in the house, they would not exchange a single word with him. The dead body was lying close by in a bath-room and any normal human being would have instinctively inquired of the appellant as to how it was that the dead body was lying in his house. None of the four persons who entered the appellant's house made any attempt whatsoever to elicit any information from him as to how Sunita came to be lying dead in the bath-room. It is alleged that everyone saw the appellant sleeping on a cot in the courtyard, but it is strange that none talked to him at all. One can understand the ladies not having the courage to talk to the appellant. But it is difficult to believe that Shrinarayan Sharma, a 45 year old school teacher could also not dare so much, as to ask, the appellant, without making any accusation against him as to how the dead body of the girl came to be in the bathroom. Shankarlal Gyarasilal Dixit v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 765 : (1981) 2 SCC 35 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 315 : 1981 CrLJ 325 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 616 : (1981) 2 SCR 384.

[8397] ● Past conduct of person be taken into account in making detention order.—The past conduct or antecedent history of a person can appropriately be taken into account in making a detention order. It is indeed largely from prior events showing tendencies or inclinations of a person that an inference can be drawn whether he is likely in the future to act in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community or his act of violation of foreign exchange regulations and his smuggling activities are likely to have deleterious effect on the national economy. Hemlata Kantilal Shah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1982 SC 8 : (1981) 4 SCC 647 : (1982) SCC (Cri) 16 (24-26) : 1982 CrLJ 150. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Saraswathi Seshagri v. State of Kerala, AIR 1982 SC 1165 : (1982) 2 SCC 310 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 423 : 1982 CrLJ 1251 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 252 : 1982 UJ (SC) 389.

[8398] ● Conduct of neighbours.—PW-2 and her husband PW-6 are next door neighbours. They deposed : At mid-night they heard some noise from the house of Namdeo. They woke up and opened their door. They found accused coming out from the house of Namdeo. In cross-examination both of them admitted that they could identify the accused in the dark night from behind from a distance of 20 to 24 feet when the accused turned his face. They did not question him. They did not report to anybody in the village nor did they give this information even to the Police when it came to the village. Although they were the next door neighbours they did not go to the house of Laxmi even when they found that the household utensils were lying scattered. It looks improbable that they would recognise the accused at the dead of night from behind during the twinkling of an eye. The conduct of these witnesses in not informing the Police what they had heard or saw at mid-night and their omission to report about it to anybody in the village are also significant. In the circumstances, it is unsafe to rely on their testimony. Gambhir v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1982 SC 1157 : (1982) 2 SCC 351 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 431 : 1982 CrLJ 1243 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 275 : 1982 UJ (SC) 475 : 1982 Cr App R (SC) 155.

[8399] ● Conducted exhibited by witnesses not natural.—The learned counsel contended that the conduct exhibited by PW-2 and PW-7 is not natural and their version does not fit it with the natural conduct of the kith and kin of the deceased. He submitted that the mother did not raise a hue and cry when she found that her son was shot at or at least when she apprehended that the assailant was about to shoot her son. Time and again this Court said that no fixed pattern of natural conduct can be laid down as different witnesses would react in different manner in the same situation vide Rana Pratap v. State of Haryana, AIR 1983 SC 680 : 1983 CrLJ 1272. Vijay Pal Singh v. State of NCT of Delhi, AIR 2001 SC 2405 : (2001) 10 SCC 45 : 2001 CrLJ 3294.

[8400] ● Conduct of person witnessing murder.—Every person who witnesses a crime reacts in his own way. Some are stunned, become speechless and stand rooted to the spot. Some become hysteric and start wailing. Some start shouting for help. Some run away to keep themselves removed from the spot. Some others rush to PO to rescue the victim, even going to the extent of counter-attacking the assailant. Every one reacts in his own peculiar way, there being no set rule of natural reaction. Evidence of a witness cannot be discarded on the ground of his not reacting in a particular manner. Rana Pratap v. State of Haryana, AIR 1983 SC 680 : (1983) 3 SCC 327 : 1983 CrLJ 1272.

[8401] ● Conduct of prosecution witnesses.—PW-1 who stated before the Court that he had seen the appellant attacking the deceased with an axe did not disclose that such an incident had taken place to anybody on that day. He further stated that he disclosed the facts relating to the occurrence to Baneshwar Pradhan and Kandunia Pradhan. PW-2, Rosani, is the wife of PW-3, Markanda, who gave information to the Police. She no doubt stated before the Court that she was present at the time of occurrence and saw the appellant attacking the deceased. She too did not disclose that such an incident had taken place to anybody in the village. Her husband according to her, returned to the village on the next day from a place called Gonasika to which he had gone earlier. She did not tell him that such an incident had taken place after his return on the next day and according to her she did not mention the fact to him out of fear. The conduct PW-1 and PW-2 in not telling anybody about the incident on the date of the incident also makes their evidence not worthy of acceptance. Sonia Bahera v. State of Orissa, AIR 1983 SC 491 : (1983) 2 SCC 327 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 444 (447) : 1983 CrLJ 829 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 262.

[8402] ● Conduct of friend of deceased.—Tohid, Rajendra, Chhotey Bhaiya and the deceased were friends of each other and according to the prosecution the deceased, Ram Pratap Singh had sent Tohid to purchase bus tickets and had directed him to meet him at Chungi Naka. He had further told Tohid PW-16 that he was apprehending danger to his life from the accused persons so he would get into the bus at the Toll Barrier. The prosecution further alleged that after the occurrence took place Ram Pratap Singhs dead body was lying at the octroi barrier when Tohid arrived at the scene. Rajendra Singh PW-14 has stated that neither Tohid asked nor he told him the names of the assailants. This conduct is highly improbable and unnatural. Awadesh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1988 SC 1158 : (1988) 2 SCC 557 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 361 (368) : 1988 CrLJ 1154 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 269.

[8403] ● Conduct of witnesses to serious crime.—Witnesses to a serious crime may not react in a normal manner. Nor do they react uniformly. The horror-stricken witnesses at a dastardly crime or an act of egregious nature may react differently. Their course of conduct may not be of ordinary type in the normal circumstances The Court cannot reject their evidence merely because they have behaved or reacted in an unusual manner. Every person who witnesses a murder reacts in his own way, some are stunned, become speechless and stand rooted to the spot. Some become hysteric and start wailing. Some start shouting for help, others run away to keep themselves as far removed from the spot as possible. Yet others rush to the rescue of the victim, even going to the extent of counter-attacking the assailants. These may be some of the reactions. There may be still more. Even a man of prowess may become pusillanimous by witnessing a serious crime. Appabhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1988 SC 696 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 559 (564) : 1988 CrLJ 848 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 178 : JT 1988 (1) SC 249 : 1988 (1) Crimes 606.

[8404] ● Conduct of injured witness.—The injured witness PW-6 sustained 21 incised wounds. This cannot be disputed. However, his subsequent conduct and various statements made by him during investigation and trial render the entire prosecution story suspect. He is the only eye-witness to the incident. He made a statement on June 3, 1976, which is marked as Ex D-3. In this he gives a version different from one given to the Police. As per this statement, he has said that he went alongwith Prahlad and Jiwan from Delhi in order to recover the girl, in relation to whom the offence took place. At the time of cross-examination, he gave an affidavit (Ex D-4) dated June 29, 1976, which purports to bear his thumb-impression according to which he is reported to have said that the Police were getting statements by him recorded at their pleasure and were trying to protect the real culprits, namely, Jiwan and Prahlad. He is alleged to have put his thumb-impression upon an application of the same date addressed to the Judicial Magistrate offering to give statement before the Court. This application is Ex D-5 which was also produced when he was cross-examined. Exhibit D-6 dated July 1, 1976 is another affidavit to the same effect. He engaged a lawyer, examined as DW-3 who filed a complaint in the Court of Judicial Magistrate against Jiwan and Prahlad on July 26, 1976 which is exhibit D-7. This complaint was ultimately dismissed for default on August 4, 1976. . . . After giving our full consideration we find that the prosecution has not come to the Court with the true story and the conduct of PW-6 leaves considerable doubt in our mind as to what really happened. In our opinion the appellants are entitled to the benefit of doubt. Chhita v. State of Rajasthan, 1987 Supp SCC 639 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 133 (134) : 1988 CrLR (SC) 254.

[8405] ● Conduct of witnesses 4 and 5 in running away in different directions and PW-1 to 3 in choosing to stand near house.—"We find nothing strange in the conduct of PWs-4 and 5 in running away in different directions and in PWs-1 to 3 choosing to stand near the house itself, because different people react in different ways in situations of emergency and crisis. It is not as if PWs-4 and 5 went running in different directions and PWs-1 to 3 stayed at the same place pursuant to any plan of action formulated by them. PW-4 could have thought that safety lay in running away in one direction and PW-5 may have thought differently of the matter. It cannot, therefore, be said that the running away of PW-4 towards the house of Sharnappa Sahukar has been introduced only to make it appear that she had actually seen the attack on D-1." Pattad Amarappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1989 SC 2004 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 179 (190) : 1989 CrLJ 2167 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 603 : JT 1989 (3) SC 246 : (1989) 3 Crimes 39.

[8406] ● Conduct of—Prosecution witness No. 3.—The evidence of PW-3, far from evoking any suspicion stands fully corroborated by PWs-5 and 8 and by Kishori's statement Ex Ka-3. His conduct in taking Kishori to the Police Station in the morning also proves his concern for Kishori's life and his loyalty to her. There were, therefore, no materials at all for the High Court to hold that PW-3 has masterminded the prosecution case and, hence, his evidence is unworthy of acceptance. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Chet Ram, AIR 1989 SC 1543 : (1989) 2 SCC 425 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 388 : 1989 CrLJ 1785 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 314 : (1989) 2 Crimes 13.

[8407] ● Conduct of brother of deceased.—"It is also surprising that PW-1 preferred to write down the complaint on the spot rather than run down 100 paces to the Police Station to inform the Police. PW-1 was asked to explain this conduct and he stated that he preferred to write down the complaint" as I had doubt that the Police will not pay any heed and will not take down the report correctly". There was no reason for PW-1 to entertain such a doubt. He does not say that he had any such experience in the past.". State of Uttar Pradesh v. Madan Mohan, AIR 1989 SC 1519 : (1989) 3 SCC 390 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 585 (591) : 1989 CrLJ 1485 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 451 : JT 1989 (2) SC 158 : (1989) 2 Crimes 467.

[8408] ● Conduct of father-in-law.—The prosecution case that D-1 to D-4 came out of PW-6's house one after the other and ran in different directions and were chased by different sets of accused and attacked and that PWs 29 and 30 continued to remain in the house till the last, was decried by the appellants' counsel as being an artificial and improbable version. This argument overlooks the fact that D-1 to D-4 who were inside the house would have felt afraid to come out in a body lest they become easy targets for attack by the accused. They may have thought that they have better chances of escape if they came out of the house one by one instead of all of them coming out together. For the same reason they would also have run in different directions. Pattad Amarappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1989 SC 2004 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 179 : 1989 CrLJ

[8409] ● Conduct of respondents.—PW-3 knowing the hostility of the respondents towards him would not have wanted to risk his life by taking Kishori to the station during night time. In contrast with the conduct of PW-3, the respondents despite being Kishori's nephews and her immediate neighbours, had not done anything to take Kishori to the police station or the hospital. If they are innocent as they claim to be, and had no quarrel with Kishori, they should have the first to go to her house and take her to the police station or the hospital. The High Court was therefore grievously wrong in construing the delay in the taking of Kishori to the police station as meaning that the attack on Kishori should have gone unnoticed till the morning hours and, therefore the evidence of PWs 3, 5 and 8 is not worthy of acceptance. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Chet Ram, AIR 1989 SC 1543 : (1989) 2 SCC 425 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 388 (396) : 1989 CrLJ 1785 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 314 : (1989) 2 Crimes 13.

[8410] ● Conduct of nephew of deceased in running away from scene of occurrence.—The unnatural conduct of Ajoy, PW-3, which has come to notice from the record is that though he was present alongwith the deceased at the time of occurrence, he made no attempt to save his uncle from the assault. He did not even continue to stay there, though of course according to him, he ran for his life on being advised so by his uncle. Anil Phukan v. State of Assam, AIR 1993 SC 1462 : (1993) 3 SCC 282 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 810 (813) : 1993 CrLJ 1796 : JT 1993 (2) SC 290 : (1993) 1 Crimes 1180.

[8411] ● Conduct of nephew of deceased in not lodging FIR.—PW-3, did not himself lodge the FIR. Of course, he gave information about the occurrence to PW-4, PW-5, PW-7 and others immediately after the occurrence describing the manner of assault and the names of the assailants but why he did not lodge the FIR has not been explained by him. Anil Phukan v. State of Assam, AIR 1993 SC 1462 : (1993) 3 SCC 282 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 810 (813) : 1993 CrLJ 1796 : JT 1993 (2) SC 290 : (1993) 1 Crimes 1180.

[8412] ● Conduct of nephew of deceased.—"The deposition of PW-4, who is the sister of PW-3, to the effect that when Ajay, PW-3, came running to the house, he told her that her uncle had been killed by Anil and his brothers does not stand scrutiny because admittedly according to PW-3 himself, when he ran from the place of occurrence, the deceased was still alive and as a matter of fact he was alive even when the wife of the deceased and other neighbours reached there and brought him to the house. It was only at the house while the deceased was kept in the verandah that he succumbed to the injuries. There could have been, therefore, no occasion for Ajay, PW-3, to have told his sister PW-4, that her uncle had been "killed" by Anil and his brothers. This also shows that Ajay, PW-3 has the tendency to exaggerate matters." Anil Phukan v. State of Assam, AIR 1993 SC 1462 : (1993) 3 SCC 282 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 810 (814) : 1993 CrLJ 1796 : JT 1993 (2) SC 290 : (1993) 1 Crimes 1180.

[8413] ● Conduct of informant.—"The conduct of Gopi Singh in taking the bicycle on which the deceased brother was riding, for lodging FIR and for going to a shop ahead the Police Station for purchasing a piece of paper, has been rightly explained by the High Court and in our view no unusual conduct can be inferred against Gopi Singh. Therefore we do not find any reason to interfere with the judgment of the High Court." Kalyan Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 491 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 59 (63) : 1993 CrLR (SC) 651 : JT 1993 (5) SC 694 : (1993) 3 Crimes 561.

[8414] ● Conduct of eye-witness.—The conduct of the witness is highly unnatural. When he has seen one of the appellants inflicting injuries one would expect him to raise an alarm or at least inform the kith and kin of the deceased so that they can go for the rescue of the victim, which he did not do. Though we cannot call him entirely a false statement but in the absence of any other corroborative evidence we think it is highly unsafe to accept his evidence. Surjit Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1994 SC 110 (112) : 1993 CrLJ 3901.

[8415] ● Conduct of prosecution witnesses 18 and 20.—"The oral dying declaration is no doubt an important piece of evidence. But it should be free from all infirmities. There is no other corroboration worth mentioning. Further, as mentioned above, the conduct of PWs-18 and 20 is highly unnatural and they say that for three days they did not inform anybody about the alleged oral dying declaration. We find that it is highly unsafe to base the conviction on the oral dying declaration because of the many infirmities pointed out. . . . There is no explanation as to why he has not informed anybody earlier. He admitted in the cross-examination that the deceased was not speaking clearly and he was vomitting at that time. He further added that the tongue of the deceased was out of the control. To the same effect is the evidence of PW-20. He also came forward with this version only on Monday. Now we have the evidence of one more important witness PW-26 who is the Sarpanch of the village. He deposed that after coming to know about the occurrence he went to the place of occurrence and found the deceased lying on the cot and he stated that he did not inquire anything from the deceased. He further stated that PWs-18 and 20 were present. He does not say that either of them mentioned anything about the oral dying declaration." Ramsai v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 464 (466) : 1994 CrLJ 138.

[8416] ● Conduct of husband.—Different person react differently under given circumstances. It is difficult to lay down a hard and fast rule as to how and in what manner a person would react and to achieve his motive could go to what extent in the commission of crime under a particular circumstances. It is not possible to measure up the extent of his feelings, sentiments and desire and say as to what compelled him to commit a particular crime. There may be persons who under frustration and on mere trifling domestic matters take decision to commit a serious crime, while others may approach it with cool and calm mind and think more dispassionately before taking any hazardous and serious steps. It all depends as to how a person reacts in a given circumstance and it is he alone who best knows his intention and motive to commit a crime and the extent thereof. S.C. Bahri v. State of Bihar, AIR 1994 SC 2420 : (1995) Supp (1) SCC 80 : 1994 CrLJ 3271 (SC) : (1994) 2 Crimes 1027.

[8417] ● Conduct of brother of injured.—PW-5 brother of injured, who claimed to be an eye witness has not explained as to why he could not lodge the report at the Police Station at the earliest opportunity. PW-5 also did not accompany the injured to the Hospital, which is rather an unusual conduct considering that he is the brother of the appellant. Satguru Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1995 SC 2449 (2450) : 1995 CrLJ 4165.

[8418] ● Conduct of eye-witness young man of 20 years.—Who, had seen the accused taking out the knife and the deceased lying in injured condition. Normally, Mahendra Singh should have reported the matter to the family of the deceased but he was a young man of 20 years at that time and he became so perplexed by the aforesaid incident that he behaved in an unusual manner. But simply on that account, his testimony need not be discarded. That Mahendra's evidence is convincing and deserves credence. Narayan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1995 SC 2177 (2178) : 1995 CrLJ 3977.

[8419] ● Conduct of younger daughter.—"We cannot lose sight of the fact that PW-2 who was aged only 19 years, had lost her father and brother just then and it was not unlikely of her first to apprise her relations of the same and seek their help at that hour of her distress. The High Court, however, observed that if really PW-3 was there nothing prevented PW-2 to go to the Police Station accompanied by him as he was the Sarpanch of his village instead of getting in touch with her maternal uncles. Simply because PW-2 did not react in the way the High Court thought she should have, it ought not have made a ground for drawing adverse conclusions against her conduct, which was clearly normal and natural." State of Punjab v. Surja Ram, AIR 1995 SC 2413 : 1995 Supp (3) SCC 419 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 937 (941, 942) : 1995 CrLJ 4161.

[8420] ● Conduct of—Prosecution witness.—Considered in the light of natural and probable human conduct, it was only expected of PWs-3 and 4 to first report the incident to Wasawa Ram, father of the deceased and await his arrival before taking any other action. No exception can, therefore, be taken to such reaction of PWs-3 and 4 nor can it be said there was an unexplained delay in lodging the FIR raising thereby a doubt about the bona fides of the prosecution case. Sat Pal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1996 SC 201 (202) : 1996 SCC (Cri) 11 : 1996 CrLJ 406.

[8421] ● Conduct of eye-witness.—In the instant case it was a natural conduct to first speak to the offender having found that Ravinder Jit had not only been assaulted but was perhaps raped. Dharma v. Nirmal Singh, AIR 1996 SC 1136 (1138) : (1996) 7 SCC 471 : 1996 CrLJ 1631 : JT 1996 (4) SC 608.

[8422] ● Conduct of prosecution witness No. 1.—". . .there was no unusual conduct on the part of PW No. 1 by not attempting to prevent accused No. 1. From his evidence, it is quite evident that when accused No, 2 intended to cause further injury on the person of the deceased, he tried to prevent accused No. 2 and while he was engaged in tussle with accused No. 2, accused no. 1 stabbed the deceased. PW-1 also deposed that he also proceeded towards the deceased to save him from accused No. 1 after overpowering accused No. 2 but by that time, accused No. 1 had given fatal blows to the deceased and run away." Krishnan v. State of Kerala, AIR 1997 SC 383 (387) : (1996) 10 SCC 508 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 1375 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 38 : 1996 CrLJ 4444 : JT 1996 (7) SC 613.

[8423] ● Conduct of brother's wife.—The evidence of "S" is not at all reliable and trustworthy.

There being sufficient accommodation in her house, there was no need for her to go to neighbour's house and sleep there during those nights. Her evidence that the accused and the deceased had come together stands corroborated by the evidence of "M" and also by the fact that the dead body was found from her house. Her explanation that the accused being the elder brother of her husband, she was afraid of him and as her husband was out of the town, she had thought it fit to sleep at night at the neighbour's place, cannot be regarded as unbelievable. She was a young woman aged 28 years. She was observing "ghunghat". her husband was away on duty. Under these circumstances conduct cannot held to be unnatural. Lekhraj v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1998 SC 242 : 1998 CrLJ 396 (397, 398) (SC) : (1997) 4 Crimes 263.

[8424] ● Conduct of husband.—In the instant case, the neighbours have witnessed the incident, after the wife of the appellant came running out of the house and fell on the ground. Attempt had been made before this Court to discredit their evidence by contending that none of them took any steps to inform the police we do not find anything unnatural in the conduct of the witnesses. They were more keen on the appellants wife being taken to the hospital and given a proper treatment and inform her close relatives. Information to the police was given by the doctor in the hospital who is examined as PW-6. C.V. Govindappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1998 SC 792 (795) : (1998) 2 SCC 763 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 683 : 1998 CrLJ 1107 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 79 : JT 1998 (1) SC 193.

[8425] ● Past—Event conduct of witness.—PW-9, a passenger in the bus in his evidence said that he saw the appellants attacking the deceased with chopper and knives. The trial Court pointed out that he did not inform the members of the family of the deceased nor did he bring this matter to the notice of the police. The Sessions regarded the above as a conduct incompatible with the normal behaviour of a person witnessing such a crime.

Such a remarks on the conduct of a person who witness the murderous attack is least justified in the realm of appreciation of evidence.

This Court has said time and again that the post event conduct of a witness varies from person to person. It cannot be a cast iron reaction to be followed as a model by everyone witnessing such event. Different persons would react differently on seeing any violence and their behaviour and conduct would, therefore, be different. Rammi alias Rameshwar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1999 SC 3544 (3546) : (1999) 8 SCC 649 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 26 : 1999 CrLJ 4561 : JT 1999 (7) SC 247 : (1999) 4 Crimes 32.

[8426] ● Conduct of sister of deceased in not disclosing as to how deceased received burn.—If really, she had come to know through Chandrakanta that her husband had poured kerosene over her she would not have failed to inform the Police. When Dr. Rita Choudhary had come to treat Chandrakanta, this witness did not tell her anything about how she had received burns though Dr. Rita Choudhary had tried to ascertain that from Chandrakanta. She had not disclosed to anyone how her sister had received burn and his explanation for not doing so in that Devender told him not to give correct information to any one. It is difficult to accept this explanation because she did not give any reason. Ramesh Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 398 (401) : (1999) 9 SCC 433 : 2000 CrLJ 503 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 694.

[8427] ● Conduct of sister of deceased in not informing Police.—In her cross-examination PW-4 sister of Chandrakanta deposed even though her house was situated only 50 yards away from the house of Chandrakanta and that the Lohardaga Police Station was only 100 yards away, she had not gone to the Police Station or tried to inform the Police. She also admitted that neither her sister Chandrakanta had said anything to Dr. Rita Choudhary regarding who had poured kerosene oil on her body nor she had told the Doctor that her husband had set her on fire. She denied that one Saroj had gone with them in the car to Ranchi, but she was contradicted by her Police statement. She also admitted that she had not told Dr. Sahu, to whom Chandrakanta was first taken, or to the Doctor at RMCH Hospital, where they had gone subsequently, under what circumstance her sister had received burns. Ramesh Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 398 (400) : (1999) 9 SCC 433 : 2000 CrLJ 503.

[8428] ● Conduct of brother-in-law of deceased.—Version of (PW-3), who accompanied Asha Kumari is that while going to Ranchi Chandrakanta and Asha Kumari were on the back seat of the car and he and Davendra Prasad had sat in the front and that on their way to Ranchi, Chandrakanta was repeatedly saying that her husband had poured kerosene oil on her body and set her ablaze. During his cross-examination, he tried to conceal the presence of Saroj in the car by stating that he did not remember whether Saroj had accompanied them to Ranchi. He also evaded giving clear answers by stating that he did not remember whether he had not referred to the presence of Asha Kumari in his statement recorded under S. 164, CrPC and whether he had stated to the Police that the appellant and his family members had burnt the deceased to death by conspiring. Ramesh Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 398 (400) : (1999) 9 SCC 433 : 2000 CrLJ 503 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 694.

[8429] ● Conduct of eye-witnesses unnatural.—In the instant case, the appellants who are three in number had gone to the spot to commit the murder of Shambhu Rai who, according to the prosecution story, was scrapping grass with three close relations, PW-10, PW-16 and PW-17. The appellants, on reaching at the spot, gave out loudly that they would commit the murder of Shambhu Rai. At that stage, all the four would have immediately reacted and tried to save Shambhu Rai, if not actually involving themselves into a practical combat with the assailants. The absence of injury on those three persons, who claim themselves to be eye-witnesses, is explained by all the three by saying that the assailants gave out that they had come to commit the murder of Shambhu Rai so as to wipe out the family of Awardh Ram. The remaining persons, namely, (PW-10), (PW-16) (PW-17) moved away leaving Shambhu Rai all alone who was shot at by Suresh Rai and then given dagger blows by his co-appellants. This is unbelievable that three of the persons who were scraping grass with the deceased would meekly move away so as to facilitate the killing of Shambhu Rai by the appellants. Their conduct is unnatural. Suresh Rai v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 2207 (2211) : (2000) 4 SCC 84 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 764 : 2000 CrLJ 3457 : JT 2000 (4) SC 12.

[8431] ● Testimony of witnesses not to be brushed aside as doubtful conduct.—If the Criminal Court is to view the testimony of the witness as unnatural it would be easy to brush it aside with the stereotyped reasoning that those persons had no cause to remember having seen the man with the girl accompanying him. Such a reasoning overlooks the broad aspect that a human mind, on hearing about any shocking incident, would have the tendency to recollect any previous event which could have had a connection with that incident. If as a matter of fact those witnesses had occasion to see a crying girl of that age on the very day of the gruesome episode as happened in this case, there is nothing improbable in those witnesses remembering the person who was seen in the company of that girl. If they had immediately informed the police that they noticed a similarly—aged girl crying in the company of an utter stranger of that locality that cannot be brushed aside as a doubtful conduct. State of Maharashtra v. Suresh, (2000) 1 SCC 471 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 263 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 122 : 2000 Cr App R (SC) 85.

[8432] ● Conduct of eye-witnesses.—"It is the prosecution case that Guila Ram, PW-11, is healthier than the respondent. His conduct, in case he was actually accompanying his grandmother, is rather unnatural. He saw the respondent advancing towards his grandmother with an axe in one hand and a jayee in the other, yet he took no steps to save his grandmother. He did not try to ward off the blows inflicted on the 70 years old woman in any manner whatsoever. He admitted during the cross-examination that he did not cover the body of his grandmother by putting himself over her body but went on to explain that he did not do so as he was frightened and had even defecated at that place itself in his own dhoti. This explanation, however appears to be an after thought and an attempt to improve upon the prosecution case at the stage of trial. State of Rajasthan v. Magni Ram, AIR 2001 SC 2430 : (2001) 9 SCC 589 : 2001 CrLJ 3283.

[8433] ● Conduct behaviour of witness.—Human behaviour vary from man to man. Different people behave and react differently in different situations. Human behaviour depends upon the facts and circumstances of each given case. How a man would behave in a particular situation, can never be predicted. In the given circumstances, the behaviour of Joginder Singh, PW-3 sleeping on the roof of the house of Sukhwant Singh; after seeing the accused armed with weapons and hearing of firing, jumping from the roof and running towards his village Mastewala to inform his father and family members instead of loitering around in the village Dholewala and informing somebody risking his life, is quite natural. One should not forget that the incident had happened at 1.00 A.M. and that at that odd time, nobody would be readily available to be informed without loss of time. In the process, the life of the witness would be at great risk. Bachhittar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2002 SC 3473 : (2002) 8 SCC 125 : JT 2002 (7) SC 413 : (2003) 1 Crimes 144 (SC).

[8434] ● Conduct of parents.—Human nature is very complex. Different persons react differently under pressure or in times of sudden bereavement or grief. The shock suffered by a parent having seen his daughter dead in an unnatural manner can in some cases prevent immediate outpouring of reasons. Each case would have to be tested on its own facts and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in this behalf. Alamgir Sani v. State of Assam, AIR 2003 SC 2108 : (2002) 10 SCC 277 : 2003 CrLJ 4917 : 2002 (9) Scale 708.

[8435] ● Conduct of witnesses not coming forward to rescue victim.—In the instant case, the Accused appellant alleged to have surrounded the deceased were armed with deadly weapons and they inflicted several injuries resulting in spot death of deceased. PW-9 and PW-10, who were present on the spot at the time of incident did not come to rescue of the deceased. Both of them were unarmed and bare-handed and accused persons were armed with deadly weapons. In such a situation, instinct of self-preservation can be dominant instinct conduct of witnesses in not coming to rescue of the deceased cannot be a ground for discarding their evidence. Such Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2003 SC 3617 : (2003) 7 SCC 643 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1697 : 2003 CrLJ 3876 : JT 2003 (6) SC 348 : (2003) 3 Crimes 272 (SC).

[8436] ● Conduct of witnesses not unnatural.— The High Court in the instant case was not justified in doubting the evidence of the witness on the ground that while running away, they could not have turned back and seen the assault upon the deceased which cannot be said to be either improbable or unnatural conduct of the witnesses, especially when the deceased was the father of PW-1 Kamma Otu Kunta Ram Naidu v. Chereddy Pedde Subba Reddy, AIR 2003 SC 3342 : (2003) 11 SCC 293 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 155 (160) : 2003 CrLJ 4967.

[8437] ● Conduct of prosecution witness unnatural.—The conduct of PW-3 appears to be rather unnatural. He did not disclose what he had seen to anyone that night, and for the first time on the next day at about 4.00 p.m. he disclosed the fate of his being an eyewitness to the investigating officer. According to him he went to see the deceased who had fallen down near his house. When he was there, PW-2 also came and pulled out the knife from the body of the deceased and kept it there. Thereafter PW-2 rushed to inform the brother of the deceased. From his deposition it does not appear that he talked to PW-2 at all about the occurrence. Moreover, PW-2 has not stated that he met PW-3 when he had gone to the place where the deceased had fallen. He does not even state that he had pulled out the knife from the body of the deceased and kept it near the body of the deceased. What however appears to be rather unnatural is the fact that thereafter when several persons came to the place where the injured was lying, he did not disclose to them about his having seen the occurrence. Joseph v. State of Kerala, (2003) 11 SCC 223 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 93 (99) : 2003 CrLJ 2543.

[8438] ● Conduct of eye-witness not accused.— Conduct of eye-witness is not chasing the accused persons could not be said to be unreasonable in view of the fact that the accused persons were armed. State of U.P. v. Nowab Singh, AIR 2004 SC 1511 : (2005) 9 SCC 84 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 33 (40) : 2004 CrLJ 331.

[8439] ● Conduct of witness.—It is now well settled by various decisions of this Court that different persons act differently in a given situation. According to PW-1 and PW-3, they were threatened and chased away after the deceased was assaulted. They might not have, out of fear, ventured to go back to the field. They came to know of the death of Abdul Rahman from others. They got a report prepared with the assistance of one Anwar and left for the police station. It may be correct that in the aforementioned situation some other persons might have gone to the place of occurrence with their relatives and other villagers, but only because the did not do so, it would not by itself be a pointer to the fact that their testimonies cannot be relied upon for any purpose whatsoever. Hafiz v. State of U.P., AIR 2006 SC 632 : (2005) 12 SCC 599 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 647 (654) : 2006 CrLJ 522 : 2005 (4) Crimes 128.

[8440] ● Eye-witness—Unnatural conduct.— The entire prosecution story hinges on the evidence of PWs 30 and 33. A bare reading of their evidence however shows that it cannot be relied upon. Clearly the two were chance witnesses and have not been able to explain the circumstances which brought them to the place of incident at 6.30 a.m. PW 30 Kishore deposed that he had seen the incident along with PW 33 Dhanaji Tukaram Mane from a distance of about 50 feet while he was one kilometer away from village Veeravade on the Pakani Veeravade road. Concededly all the accused, the deceased and the two eye-witnesses belonged to village Veeravade and were thus co-villagers known to each other. The conduct of this witness is truly amazing. As per his evidence he reached Veeravada about half an hour after the incident but he did not inform anybody as to what had transpired till the 18th or 19th January, 1997 when his statement under Section 161 of the CrPC was recorded by the Police. He further stated in his cross-examination that he had gone to the police voluntarily and had not been summoned. The statement of PW 33 is even more unreliable. He admitted that he was the first cousin of the deceased and that after witnessing the murder had gone on to village Akola to meet his sister and had returned to Veeravade after several days. He also admitted in his cross-examination that the house of the deceased was only 150 feet away from his house and that he had not informed anybody about the murder till the 19th of January, 1997 on which he was confronted with his statement under Section 161 of the CrPC wherein he had stated that he had returned to village Veervade on the day after the incident. We find it absolutely impossible to accept that this witness could have gone to village Akola after having been a witness to the brutal murder of his cousin and had not even informed anyone from the family of the deceased living only 150 feet away about the incident till 19-1-1997. It is true, as has been contended by Mr. Hegde, that some allowance must be made for the fact that the incident had spilt over to two States or that the two witnesses had been so overtaken by fear on account of the two warring political groups in the village. We find, however, that PW 30 gave no explanation as to why he had kept quiet for almost six days whereas PW 33 did, in a stray sentence, depose that he had been scared to talk to anyone about the murder. To our mind, this explanation is unacceptable as this witness had tried to hide the fact that he had returned to village Veeravade from village Akola the day after the incident, and being the first cousin of the deceased, and living only 100 feet away from the latter's house, still did not inform the family or anybody in the village about the murder for a period of six days. This bespeaks on absolutely unnatural conduct. Jai Singh v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 10 SCC 788 : 2007 CrLJ 2434 (2435, 2436).

[8441] ● Silence of witness.—Though silence of a witness per se may not render prosecution version suspect, in the present case what has been disclosed by PW 2, the so called child witness is also not found credible, particularly when considered in the background of PW 1's evidence. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Bacchudas, AIR 2007 SC 1236 : (2007) 9 SCC 135 : 2007 CrLJ 1661 (1662) : (2007) 2 Crimes 58.

[8442] ● Young boy seeing assault, frightened and rushed to village.—Witnesses young boy seeing assault on three persons receiving serious injuries, got frightened and rushed to village to inform deceased's grand father, conduct not unnatural. Mahesh Janardhan Gonnade v. State of Maharashtra, 2008 AIR SCW 4231 : (2008) 13 SCC 271 : 2008 CrLJ 3602 (3615) : (2008) 2 Crimes 145.

1. CONFESSION

[8443-44] ● Confessions Deliberate and voluntary.—Confessions are considered highly reliable because no rational person would make admission against his interest unless prompted by his conscience to tell the truth. "Deliberate and voluntary confessions of guilt, if clearly proved are among the most effectual proofs in law." Taylor's Treatise on the Law of Evidence, Vol. I.

> "[A] confession must either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence. An admission of a gravely incriminating fact, even a conclusively incriminating fact is not of itself a confession.....". Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor, AIR 1939 PC 47 : 40 CrLJ 364.

[8445] ● Statement by accused confession if statement in terms admits commission of crime.—A statement made by an accused person is a "confession" within the meaning of that term as used in the Evidence Act, only if the statement in terms admits the commission of a crime or of the facts which constitute a crime, by himself.

A statement made by an accused person is not a 'confession' within the meaning of the Act, and cannot be used as a confession :

1. if, read as a whole, it is of an exculpatory character and suggests that the death of the deceased was caused by accident or by some other circumstance unconnected with his own actions; or
2. if it does not contain a direct admission in terms of the commission of an offence; a statement is not a confession merely because the Court considers that it can infer from the statement an admission of the commission of an offence; or
3. if the statement merely contains an admission of an incriminatory circumstance not amounting to admission of a crime, however grave that circumstance may be. Palvinder Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1952 SC 351 : 1953 CrLJ 154 : 1953 SCR 94 : 1952 SCJ 545.

[8446] ● Dying declaration not confession.—Sometimes, attempts have been made to equate a dying declaration with the evidences of an accomplice or the evidence furnished by a confession as against the maker, if it is retracted, and as against others, even though not restricted. But in our opinion, it is not right in principle to do so. Though under Section 133 of the Evidence Act, it is not illegal to convict a person on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, illustration (b) to Section 114 of the Act, lays down as a rule of prudence based on experience, that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless his evidence is corroborated in material particulars and this has now been accepted as a rule of law.

The same cannot be said of a dying declaration because a dying declaration may not, unlike a confession, or the testimony of an approver, come from a tainted source. If a dying declaration has been made by a person whose antecedents are as doubtful as in the other cases, that may be a ground for looking upon it with suspicion, but generally speaking, the maker of a dying declaration cannot be tarnished with the same brush as the maker of confession or an approver. Khushal Rao v. State of Bombay, AIR 1958 SC 22 : 1958 CrLJ 106 : 1958 All WR (SC) 38 : 1958 Mad LJ (Cri) 100.

[8447] ● Statement by accused—When amounts to confession.—A statement made by an accused person amounts to a confession only when it admits in terms the commission of an offence by himself or substantially all the facts constituting that offence. An admission even of a gravely incriminating fact connected with the offence, or of circumstances which merely suggest an inference of the guilt of the accused, is not a 'confession' in the eyes of law, however conclusive that fact may be or however strong the inference suggested by that circumstance. It is only when the statement of the accused can be read as a plenary admission of guilt in straight and clear terms that it can be taken as a confession of the commission of a crime, and then only could it be used for the purpose of resting a conviction upon it.

In the present case, the accused was charged and convicted under Section 165-A of the Penal Code. The case has arisen out of an inquiry into the activities of one R, a clerk in a Government department, against whom it had been found that he had issued false permits for bricks in the names of persons who had not applied for them or received them. R's superior in office had held the inquiry, and the accused made before him two statements, of which the first was actually the complaint on which the inquiry had started. It read: "I stood in need of bricks. I made a request to R for a permit. He took Rs. 300 from me and gave me four permits. (From the counterfoils seized from R's office, all these permits were proved to be in the names of fictitious persons.) I could not get the bricks and so I met R at his office. I learnt later that he had been suspended. I request that the bricks be caused to be given to me, or my money may be refunded." Some time later, the accused made a further statement in which he stated, "Even before this, R had given a permit for bricks to one L. For this he had received Rs. 150."

The two documents, read together, did suggest an inference that the accused had paid Rs. 300 to R by way of a bribe, but it could not be said that they are a clear admission that at the very time when the accused made the payment he knew that a bribe would get his work done and that the payment was made as a bribe. There was no evidence to show that the accused knew about the deal with L at the very time when he paid the money to R and not later, and even the second document left that question in doubt. A conviction of an accused can no doubt be based upon his confession, but in that case, it is a necessary condition of the use of a statement made by the accused for that purpose that the statement must be an admission of guilt in unequivocal terms. The two documents in the present case were not of such a nature as to enable the Court to hold that they were a plenary admission of payment of money to a public servant as a bribe for doing a favour, and even though they raised a strong suspicion as to the intention of the accused in making the payment to R, they could not be used as a confession, and the lower Courts had erred in using them as such and in basing the conviction upon them. Conviction was set aside, and the accused was acquitted. Om Prakash v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1960 SC 409 : 1960 CrLJ 544.

[8448] ● Confession when not voluntary.—Accused person's knowledge that Police could record his statement under law and his desire to soften the attitude of the authorities by making the statement do not establish that he was coerced or compelled to make the statement. A person of the position, grit and intelligence of Dalmia could not be so coerced. A person making a confession may be guided by any considerations which, according to him, would benefit him. Dalmia must have made the statement after weighing the consequences which he thought would be beneficial to him. His making the confession with a view to benefit himself would not make the confession not voluntary. A confession will not be voluntary only when it is made under some threat or inducement or promise, from a person in authority. Nothing of the kind happened in this case and the considerations mentioned in the High Court's judgment do not justify holding the confession to be not voluntary. R.K. Dalmia v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1962 SC 1821 : (1962) 2 CrLJ 805 : 1963 (1) SCR 253.

[8449] ● Confession—Essentials of.—Sections 24 to 30 of the Evidence Act deal with the admissibility of confessions by accused persons in criminal cases. But the expression "confession" is not defined. The Judicial Committee in Pakala Narayanaswami, v. Emperor, 66 Ind. App. (AIR 1939 PC 47) has defined the said expression thus : "A confession is a statement made by an accused which must either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence." A scrutiny of the provisions of Sections 17 to 30 of the Evidence Act discloses that statement is a genus, admission is the species and confession is the sub-species. Shortly stated, a confession is a statement made by an accused admitting his guilt. The dictionary meaning of the word "statement" is "the act of stating, reciting or presenting verbally or on paper." The term "statement" therefore includes both oral and written statement. Is it also a necessary ingredient of the term that it shall be communicated to another? The dictionary meaning of the term does not warrant any such extension; or the reason of the rule underlying the doctrine of admission or confession demands it. Admissions and confessions are exceptions to the hearsay rule. The Evidence Act places them in the category of the relevant evidence, presumably on the ground that, as they are declarations against the interest of the person making them, they are probably true. The probative value of an admission or confession does not depend upon its communication to another, though, just like any other piece of evidence, it can be admitted in evidence only on proof. This proof in the case of oral admission or confession can be offered only by witnesses who heard the admission or confession, as the case may be.

In "A Treatise on the Law of Evidence" by TAYLOR, 11th Edn. Vol. I, the following statement appears at page 596 :

"What the accused has been overheard muttering to himself, or saying to his wife or to any other person in confidence, will be receivable in evidence." In "The Principles of the Law of Evidence" by W.M. BEST, 12th Edn. at page 454, it is stated much to the same effect thus :

> "Words addressed to others, and writing, are no doubt the most usual forms; but words uttered in soliloquy seem equally receivable."

We also find the following passage in "PHIPSON on Evidence", 7th Edn. at page 262:

> "A statement which the prisoner had been overheard muttering to himself, if otherwise than in his sleep, is admissible against him, if independently proved."

All these passages establish that communication to another is not a necessary ingredient of the concept of "confession". We, therefore, hold that a statement, whether communicated or not, admitting guilt is a confession of guilt. But, there is a clear distinction between the admissibility of an evidence and the weight to be attached to it. A confessional soliloquy is a direct piece of evidence. It may be an expression of conflict of emotion; a conscious effort to stiffle the pricked conscience; an argument to find excuse or justification for his act; or a penitent or remorseful act of exaggeration of his part in the crime. The tone may be soft and low; the words may be confused; they may be capable of conflicting interpretations depending on witnesses, whether they are biased or honest, intelligent or ignorant, imaginative or prosaic, as the case may be. Generally they are mutterings of a confused mind. Before such evidence can be accepted, it must be established by cogent evidence what were the exact words used by the accused. Even if so much was established, prudence and justice demand that such evidence cannot be made the sole ground of conviction. It may only be used as corroborative piece of evidence. In the instant case, circumstances found by the High Court led to the only conclusion that the accused must have committed the murder. No other reasonable hypothesis was or could be suggested. Further 3 witnesses had deposed that they clearly heard the accused say when he opened the door of the house and came out at 6 o'clock in the morning of the fateful day that he had "finished Sunderpatti, his daughter-in-law, and thereby finished the daily quarrels." We hold that that extra-judicial confession is relevant evidence; it certainly corroborates the circumstantial evidence adduced in the case. Sahoo v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1966 SC 40 : 1966 CrLJ 68 : (1966) 2 SCJ 172.

[8450] ● Statements not confession recorded by—Magistrate.—The statements are not confessions recorded by a Magistrate under Section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure but are statements made in answer to a notice under Section 171-A of the sea Customs Act. As they are not made subject to the safeguards under which confessions are recorded by Magistrates they must be specially scrutinised to finding out if they were made under threat or promise from some one in authority. If after such scrutiny they are considered to be voluntary, they may be received against the maker and in the same way as confessions are received, also against a co-accused jointly tried with him. Section 30 of the Evidence Act does not limit itself to confessions made to Magistrate, nor do the earlier sections do so and hence there is no bar to its proper application to the statements such as we have here. Haroom Haji Abdulla v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 832 : 1968 CrLJ 1017.

[8451] ● Inculpatory part of statement— Acceptance of.—In this case the exculpatory part of the statement in Ex. 6 is not only inherently improbable but is contradicted by the other evidence. According to this statement, the injury which the appellant received was caused by the appellant's attempt to catch hold of the hand of Lal Mohan Sharma to prevent the attack on the victim. This was contradicted by the statement of the accused himself under Section 342, CrPC to the effect that he had received the injury in a scuffle with a herdsman. The injury found on his body when he was examined by the doctor on 13th October 1961 negatives both these versions. Neither of these versions accounts for the profuse bleeding which led to his washing his clothes and having a bath in the river Patro, the amount of bleeding and the washing of the blood-stains being so considerable as to attract the attention of Ram Kishore Pandey, PW 17 and asking him about the cause thereof. The bleeding was not a simple one as his clothes all got stained with blood as also his books, his exercise book and his belt and shoes. More than that the knife which was discovered on his person was found to have been stained with blood according to the report of the Chemical Examiner. According to the post-mortem report this knife could have been the cause of the injuries on the victim. In circumstances like these there being enough evidence to reject the exculpatory part of the statement of the appellant in Ex. 6 the High Court had acted rightly in accepting the inculpatory part and piecing the same with the other evidence to come to the conclusion that the appellant was the person responsible for the crime. Nishi Kant Jha v. State of Bihar, AIR 1969 SC 422 : (1969) 1 SCC 347 : 1969 CrLJ 671 : 1969 (2) SCR 1033 : 1969 Mad LJ (Cri) 456.

[8452] ● Confession not made on account of inducement or coercion.—It is clear that the appellant had spent four days in judicial custody and he was not under the influence of the investigating agency for at least four days. Again he had 24 hours to think after he was told by the Magistrate that he was not bound to make any confession and if he made one it would be used against him.

The appellant, in answer to question No. 77 regarding the confession merely said that he did not make the confession. He did not say that the confession was made on account of any inducement or coercion on the part of the police. Abdul Razak Murtaza Dafadar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1970 SC 283 : (1969) 2 SCC 234 : 1970 CrLJ 373 : 1970 (1) SCR 551.

[8453] ● Confession to Police Officer.—Confession made to Police which found the basis of FIR is not admissible in evidence. Khatri Hemraj Amulakh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1972 SC 922 : (1972) 3 SCC 671 : 1972 CrLJ 626.

[8454] ● Incriminating fact not confession.—Incriminating fact without establishing the guilt of the maker is not a confession. Kanda Padayachi v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1972 SC 66 : (1971) 2 SCC 641 : 1972 CrLJ 11 : 1972 (1) SCR 450.

[8455] ● Statement made to Police Officer—Admissibility.—The statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation cannot be used for any purpose except for the purpose of contradicting a witness, as mentioned in the proviso to sub-section (1), or for the purposes mentioned in sub section (2) with which we are not concerned in the present case. The prohibition contained in the section relates to all statements made during the course of an investigation. Letter PEEE which was addressed by Sahi Ram to Station House Officer was in the nature of narration of what, according to Sahi Ram, he had been told by the accused. Such a letter, in our opinion, would constitute statement for the purpose of Section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The prohibition relating to the use of a statement made to a police officer during the course of an investigation cannot be set at naught by the police officer not himself recording the statement of a person but having it in the form of a communication addressed by the person concerned to the police officer. If a statement made by a person to a police officer in the course of an investigation is inadmissible, except for the purposes mentioned in Section 162, the same would be true of a letter containing narration of facts addressed by a person to police officer during the course of an investigation. It is not permissible to circumvent the prohibition contained in Section 162 by the investigating officer obtaining a written statement of a person instead of the investigating officer himself recording that statement. Kali Ram v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 2773 : (1973) 2 SCC 808 : 1974 CrLJ 1 : 1974 (1) SCR 722.

[8456] ● Statement recorded by custom officer—Inculpatory part could be accepted.— Inculpatory part of the statement could be accepted even though the exculpatory part of the statement of the accused was rejected. We find that the inculpatory part of statement Ex. A of the accused is distinct and severable from the exculpatory part. The present is not a case wherein the two parts of the statement are inextricably linked together and it is not possible to accept one part without accepting the other part. In case, the Court finds the exculpatory part of the statement of the accused to be inherently improbable, there is no reason why the other part of the statement which implicates the accused to be inherently improbable, there is no reason why the other part of the statement which implicates the accused and which the Court sees no reason to disbelieve, should not be accepted. Jethamal Pithaji v. Assistant Collector of Customs, Bombay and another, AIR 1974 SC 699 : (1974) 3 SCC 393 : 1974 CrLJ 621 : 1974 (1) SCR 645.

[8457] ● Statement not confession within meaning of Section 24—Evidence Act.—To attract the prohibition enacted in Section 24, Evidence Act, these facts must be established:

(i) that the statement in question is a confession;

(ii) that such confession has been made by an accused person;

(iii) that it has been made to a person in authority;

(iv) that the confession has been obtained by reason of any inducement, threat or promise proceeding from a person in authority;

(v) such inducement, threat or promise, must have reference to the charge against the accused person;

(vi) the inducement, threat or promise must in the opinion of the Court be sufficient to give the accused person grounds, which would appear to him reasonable, for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him. Veera Ibrahim v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1976 SC 1167 : (1976) 2 SCC 302 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 278 : 1976 CrLJ 860 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 165 : 1976 (3) SCR 672.

[8458] ● Confessional statement—Permissible to believe one part and to disbelieve another.—It is permissible to believe one part of a confessional statement, and to disbelieve another, and that it is enough if the whole of the confession is tendered in evidence so that it may be open to the Court to reject the exculpatory part and to take inculpatory part into consideration if there is other evidence to prove its correctness. Bhagwan Singh Rana v. State of Haryana, AIR 1976 SC 1797 : (1976) 3 SCC 101 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 373 : 1976 CrLJ 1379 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 257.

[8459] ● Judicial confession—Voluntary.—Mr. Krishan Pal Singh appearing for the appellant submitted that judicial confession is inadmissible as the Magistrate who recorded the same, has not been examined to prove the confession, or the voluntary nature of the same. It appears that the Magistrate was not examined before the trial Court but both the Courts have relied on the confession and have held that it was voluntary. Even if we exclude the judicial confession from consideration there is sufficient circumstantial evidence to connect the appellant with the crime. Pyare Lal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1977 SC 1765 : (1977) 1 SCC 731 : 1977 SCC (Cri)

162 (163) : 1977 CrLJ 1157 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 430.

[8460] ● Extra-judicial confession.—In deciding whether a particular confession attracts the frown of the S. 24 of the Evidence Act, the question has to be considered from the point of view of the confessing accused as to how the inducement, threat or promise proceeding from a person in authority would operate in his mind. . . . Mr. Kapur having stated to the accused on 19.7.1970 that "now that the case has been registered they should state the truth", it is difficult to hold that by this statement he would not generate in the minds of the accused some hope and assurance that if they told the "truth" they would receive his "support" which he had earlier conveyed to them through D.S.P. Honda. Satbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 1294 : (1977) 2 SCC 263 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 333 (342) : 1977 CrLJ 985 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 211 : 1977 Cr App R (SC) 147 : (1977) 3 SCR 195.

[8461] ● Confession—Recording of.—How much time for reflection should be allowed to an accused person before recording his confession, is a question which depends on the circumstances of each case. The object of giving such time for reflection to the accused, is to ensure that he is completely free from Police influence. If immediately before the recording of the confession, the accused was in judicial custody beyond the reach of the investigating police for some days, then such custody from its very nature, may itself be a factor dispelling fear or influence of the police from the mind of the accused. In such a case, it may not be necessary to send back the accused person for any prolonged period to Jail or Judicial Lock-up. Shankaria v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1978 SC 1248 : (1978) 3 SCC 435 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 439 : 1978 CrLJ 1251 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 245.

[8462] ● Confession or admission where separable.—Where a confession or an admission is separable there can be no objection to taking one part into consideration which appears to be true and reject the other part which is false. Keshoram Bora v. The State of Assam, AIR 1978 SC 1096 : (1978) 2 SCC 407 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 219 : 1978 CrLJ 1089 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 109.

[8463] ● Confessional statement to be voluntary.—Before a confessional statement made under Section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure can be acted upon, it must be shown to be voluntary and free from police influence and that the confessional statement made by the appellant in the instant case cannot be taken into account, as it suffers from serious infirmities in that (1) there is no contemporaneous record to show that the appellant was actually kept in jail as ordered on Sept. 6, 1974 by Shri R.P. Singh, Judicial Magistrate, Gorakhpur, (2) Shri R.P. Singh who recorded the so-called confessional statement of the appellant did not question him as to why he was making the confession and (3) there is also nothing in the statement of the said Magistrate to show that he told the appellant that he would not be remanded to the police lock up even if he did not confess his guilt. It cannot also be gainsaid that the circumstantial evidence relied upon by the prosecution must be complete and incapable of explanation of any other hypothesis than that of the guilt of the accused. Davendra Prasad Tiwari v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1978 SC 1544 : (1978) 4 SCC 474 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 95 : 1978 CrLJ 1614 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 519.

[8464] ● Extra-judicial confession.—There is no evidence of PWs-5, 6 and 11 to show that when they visited the deceased in the Hospital three or four days after he was sent there, the deceased regained consciousness for some time and narrated the entire incident to these witnesses. These witnesses further prove that apart from the oral statement given by the deceased to them even the accused Jaspal Singh has also told him that he had driven the cart and a wheel was passed over the body of Bhunpinder Singh and that he had committed a mistake and would bear all the expenses of the treatment of the deceased. There is no reason to disbelieve them. Jaspal Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1979 SC 1708 (1709) : (1980) 1 SCC 487 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 920 : 1979 CrLJ 1386 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 487.

[8465] ● Extra-judicial confession.—An extra-judicial confession by one of the accused charged with conspiracy to widow of another conspirator, who was assisting her husband in making spears and other weapons, is not acceptable. Kanan v. State of Kerala, AIR 1979 SC 1127 (1128) : (1979) 3 SCC 319 : 1979 CrLJ 919 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 601.

[8466] ● Admission of guilt.—When the appellant was called upon to make his plea before the commencement of the prosecution evidence, he pleaded not guilty in respect of the offence charged against him and it was only after the prosecution evidence was closed and his examination under S. 313 of the CrPC was completed that he admitted guilt presumably as a result of plea bargaining. The learned Judicial Magistrate was in the circumstances not entitled to take into account the admission of guilt made by the appellant in reaching his decision in regard to the conviction of the appellant. The learned Judicial Magistrate, it is true, did not pass his order of conviction solely on the admission of guilt made by the appellant, but it is clear from his judgment that his conclusion was not unaffected by the admission of guilt on the part of the appellant. There can be no doubt that when there is admission of guilt made by the accused as a result of plea bargaining or otherwise, the evaluation of the evidence by the Court is likely to become a little superficial and perfunctory and the Court may be disposed to refer to the evidence not critically with a view to assessing its credibility but mechanically as a matter of formality in support of the admission of guilt. The entire approach of the Court to the assessment of the evidence would be likely to be different when there is an admission of guilt by the accused. Here it is obvious that the approach of the learned Judicial Magistrate was affected by the admission of guilt made by the appellant and in the circumstances, it would not be right to sustain the conviction of the appellant. Ganeshmal Jashraj v. Government of Gujarat, AIR 1980 SC 264 : (1980) 1 SCC 363 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 239 (241) : 1980 CrLJ 208 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 80.

[8467] ● Confessional statement recovered by Inspector of RPF.—An officer of RPF conducting an inquiry under Section 8(1) of the Railway Property (Unlawful Possession) Act, 1966 has not been invested with all the powers of an officer-incharge of a Police Station making an investigation under Chapter XIV of the Code. Particularly, he has no power to initiate prosecution by filing a charge-sheet before the Magistrate under Section 173 of the Code, which has been held to be the clinching attribute of an investigating "police officer". Thus judged by the test laid down in Badka Joti Savant v. State of Mysore, AIR 1966 SC 1746 : 1966 CrLJ 1353. Inspector of RPF could not be deemed to be a "police officer" within the meaning of Section 25 of the Evidence Act and, therefore, any confessional or incriminating statement recorded by him in the course of an inquiry under Section 8(1) of the above-said Act of 1966, cannot be excluded from evidence under the said section. Balkishan A. Devidayal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 379 : (1980) 4 SCC 600 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 62 : 1980 CrLJ 1424 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 588.

[8468] ● Voluntary confession.—The learned Magistrate has put to the accused all the necessary questions to satisfy himself that the confession was voluntary. He has also appended the necessary certificate. We do not accept Shri Jain's submission that the learned magistrate should have been examined as a witness. Section 80 of the Evidence Act makes the examination of Magistrate unnecessary. It authorises the Court to presume that the document is genuine, that any statements as to the circumstances under which it was taken are true and that such confession was truly taken in accordance with law. The Magistrate has appended a certificate that he was satisfied that the confession was voluntary. No circumstance has been brought out in the evidence justifying the calling of the Magistrate as a witness. We do not think that the circumstances of the justify and comment on the alleged failure of the prosecution to examine the Magistrate as a witness. Madi Ganga v. State of Orissa, AIR 1981 SC 1165 : (1981) 2 SCC 224 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 411 : 1981 CrLJ 628 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 337.

[8469] ● Confessional statement.—The circumstances in which the appellant was apprehended and his confessional statement is alleged to have been made also is rather interesting. In Bihar, the appellant was apprehended for having committed theft and that he was produced before the Mukhiya of the village. PW-7 and the Mukhiya wanted him to handed over to the Police. That it is alleged that the appellant said that "I am wanted in connection with a murder case and I am hiding from the police" and therefore requested not to be handed over to the Police and in this background, it is alleged that he made a statement that he has killed one "B.M." To prove such an extra-judicial confession two witnesses were produced. One of these witnesses has gone back on that statement and this statement is alleged to have been made after a long lapse of time. It is a piece of evidence on which no reliance could be placed. Kans Behera v. State of Orissa, AIR 1987 SC 1507 : (1987) 3 SCC 480 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 601 (605) : 1987 CrLJ 1857 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 389 : JT 1987 (2) SC 193.

Manguli Dei v. State of Orissa, AIR 1989 SC 483 : 1989 Supp (1) SCC 161 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 322 : 1989 CrLJ 823 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 106 : 1988 (3) Crimes 773.

[8471] ● Confession—Evidence of.—"The confession of an accused person is not evidence in the ordinary sense of the term as defined in Section 3. It can not be made the foundation of a conviction and can only be used in support of other evidence. The proper way is, first, to marshall the evidence against the accused excluding the confession altogether from consideration and see whether, if it is believed a conviction could safely be based on it. If it is capable of belief independently of the confession, then of course it is not necessary to call the confession in aid. But cases may arise where the Judge is not prepared to act on the other evidence as it stands even though, if believed, it would be sufficient to sustain a conviction. In such an event the Judge may call in aid the confession and use it to lend assurance to the other evidence and thus fortify himself in believing what without the aid of the confession he would not be prepared to accept." Subamiya Deshmohmed v. State of Gujarat, (1992) 1 SCC 473 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 157 : 1992 CrLJ 2757 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 235 : 1992 (1) Crimes 232.

[8472] ● Recording of confession.—The Executive Magistrates while exercising their judicial or quasi-judicial functions thought in a limited way within the frame of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which judicial functions are normally performed by Judicial Magistrate can be held to be holding the judicial office. Therefore, the contention of the learned counsel that the conferment of judicial functions on the Executive Magistrate and Special Executive Magistrate is opposed to the fundamental principle of government contained in Article 50 of the Constitution cannot be countenanced. Resultantly, we hold that sub-section (3) of Section 20 of the TADA does not offend either Article 14 or 21 and hence this sub-section does not suffer from any constitutional invalidity.

Though we are holding that this section is constitutionally valid, we, in order to remove the apprehension expressed by the learned counsel that the Executive Magistrates and the Special Executive Magistrate who are under the control of the State may not be having judicial integrity and independence as possessed by the Judicial Magistrate and the recording of confessions and statements by those Executive Magistrates may not be free from any possible oblique motive, are of the opinion that it would be always desirable and appreciable that a confession or statement of a person is recorded by the Judicial Magistrate whenever the Magistrate is available in preference to the Executive Magistrates unless there is compelling and justifiable reason to get the confession or statement, recorded by the Executive or Special Executive Magistrates.

Sub-sections (3) and 4(a) of Section do not suffer from any infirmity on account of the inclusion of the Executive Magistrate and Special Executive Magistrate within the purview of Sections 164 and 167 of the Code of criminal Procedure in respect of their application in relation to a case involving an offence punishable under the TADA Act or any rule made thereunder. Likewise, clause (a) of Section 15 of the Special Courts Act, 1984 does not suffer from any infirmity. Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 899 : 1994 CrLJ 3139 : (1994) 1 Crimes 1031.

[8473] ● Confession on phone.—It can be seen that the evidence of PWs-10 and 11 amply establishes that it was the accused who shot the deceased dead. Then we have the evidence of PW-12, Subedar in the security department. He deposed about allocating the duties to the deceased and that he instructed PW-10 to take Markanda Rao and the deceased and drop them at their respective places of duty. He further deposed at about 12 midnight he received a phone call from Ammunition Store which was from the accused who told him on phone in Tamil that he had shot the deceased and that he should send the ambulance immediately. PW-12 made an entry in Ex. P. 12, the daily occurrence diary. Just then PWs-10 and 11 returned in the bus and he was also informed by them that the deceased was shot dead by the accused. PW-12 immediately passed on the information to PW-16, the assistant Security Officer, who immediately along with PW-13 and PW-18 came in a car. All of them went to the Ammunition Store and parked the car at about 50 feet. They kept the head-lights on and in that light they saw the body of the deceased lying on the ground at a distance of 10 feet from the Ammunition Store and found the accused near the gate of the Ammunition Store holding a rifle in his hands. PW-16 asked the accused to keep the rifle on the ground and accordingly he kept it on the ground and raised his hands. He was caught hold of by PW-16 and PW-18 went and brought the rifle and on being asked the accused told that he had kept the ammunition near the telephone and the pouch containing four live and one used cartridges was secured. All of them along with the accused came in the car to the Airport Police Station and PW-13 gave the report and the accused was handed over to the police along with the rifle and the cartridges. PWs-13, 16 and 18 also deposed about these details as to how on information they went to the Ammunition Store and took the accused into custody and also secured the musket and the ammunition. We do not find anything important which in any manner affects their veracity. Further as stated above, the evidence of PW-19 establishes that the accused took charge from PW-19 and that at the time of relieving, PW-19 handed over the musket and the live cartridges to him. This evidence coupled with the evidence of the above mentioned witnesses would establish that the accused was on duty at the relevant time and that he was responsible for causing the death of the deceased. Thus there is overwhelming evidence given by the above mentioned independent witnesses which fully establishes the guilt of the accused. As noted above, the plea of the accused has been of total denial and he simply stated that he was in the house wherefrom he was taken to the police station, which is totally false. When once it is accepted that the accused inspite of overwhelming evidence mentioned above, the High Court for no valid reason rejected the same. One of the infirmities pointed out by the High Court is that there is no mention about the alleged confession of the accused to PW-12 on phone in the complaint and, therefore, according to the High Court, all this story has been built up subsequently. We see absolutely no logic in this reasoning. The appreciation of evidence by the High Court is highly unsound and absolutely no valid reasons are given for disagreeing with the finding of the trial Court. We are satisfied that under the facts and circumstances of the case and on the basis of the overwhelming evidence, the only reasonable view is the one taken by the trial Court. For all the above reasons, we set aside the judgment of the High Court and restore the judgment of the trial Court convicting the accused under Section 302, IPC. State of Karnataka by H.A.L. Airport Police, Bangalore v. Thangaraj, AIR 1995 SC 2124 (1227) : 1995 CrLJ 3659 : (1995) 3 Crimes 236.

[8474] ● Confessional statement recorded by Police.—The provisions contained in R. 15 of the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Rules relating to the procedure to be followed for sending the confessional statement to the Chief Judicial Magistrate or the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate for being transmitted to the Designated Court concerned is not mandatory but directory. What is mandatory is that the report must be sent to the Designated Court. Accordingly, merely for not sending the said confessional statement to the Chief Judicial Magistrate for onward transmission to the Designated Court, the said confessional statement need not be scrapped on the score of incurable illegality for not following the mandatory provisions of R. 15 of the said Rules. In the instant case, such confessional statement had in fact been directly sent to the Designated Court immediately after recording the same. In the aforesaid facts, no prejudice has been caused to the accused for not sending the same to the Chief Judicial Magistrate for onward transmission to the Designated Court. The lapse committed in not sending the said confessional statements to the Designated Court through the Chief Judicial Magistrate is only a procedural irregularity which has not vitiated the trial. Wariyam Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1996 SC 305 : (1995) 6 SCC 458 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 1124 (1127, 1128) : JT 1995 (7) SC 117 : (1995) 4 Crimes 200.

[8475] ● Confessional statement.—In this case the High Court disbelieved the manner of extra-judicial confession because the same had been allegedly made even to the father of the deceased and that too in the presence of two co-villager it is not acceptable that the respondent would make a confession of such a heinous crime in presence of so many persons. The statement recorded by the learned Magistrate which has been characterised as judicial confession is really not so because a perusal of the same shows that the appellant had not admitted his guilt in terms inasmuch as the statement as recorded states about assault on the deceased by mistake. It may, however, be that the statement is not true. Now, if a statement is not true, that cannot be used even if the same were to be confessional in nature because the settled law is that for a confession to be used against the maker in a criminal trial the same has to be both true and voluntary. State of Haryana v. Rajender Singh, AIR 1996 SC 2978 : (1996) 8 SCC 77 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 534 (535, 536) : 1996 CrLJ 1875 : JT 1996 (3) SC 396.

[8476] ● Confession—Definition of.—A "Confessions" must either be an express acknowledgment of guilt of the offence charged, certain and complete in itself, or it must admit substantially all the facts which constitute the offence. Section 24 provides, though in the negative form, that "Confession" can be treated as relevant against the person making the confession unless it appears to the Court that it is rendered irrelevant on account of any of the factors, namely, threat, inducement, promises etc. mentioned therein. Whether the "Confession" attracts the frown of Section 24 has to be considered from the point of view of the confession accused as to how the inducement, threat or promise from a person in authority would operate in his mind. Section 25 which provides that a "Confession" made to a Police Officer shall not be proved against the person accused of an offence, places complete ban on the making of such confession by that person whether he is in custody or not. Section 26 lays down that confession made by a person while he is in the custody of a Police Officer shall not be proved against him unless it is made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate. Section 27 provides that when any fact is discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence who is in the custody of a Police Officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved. Section 27 is thus in the form of a proviso to Sections 24, 25 and 26. Sections 164, 281 and 463 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are the other provisions dealing with "Confession" and the manner in which it is to be recorded. Section 15 of the TADA Act, however, makes a special provision as to the admissibility of confession and signals a departure from the normal rule contained in Sections 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act. It provides that a confession made by an accused to a Police Officer of a particular rank or higher would be admissible in evidence and can be proved against that person subject to the fulfillment of other requirements indicated in that section. Sahib Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1997 SC 3247 : (1997) 7 SCC 231 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 1049 : 1997 CrLJ 3956 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 548 : (1997) 3 Crimes 114.

[8477] ● Statement made to doctor—Admissibility.—Statement made by accused to the doctor who examined him about the cause of injury is admissible. Ammini v. State of Kerala, AIR 1998 SC 260 : (1998) 2 SCC 301 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 618 : 1998 CrLJ 481 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 61 : (1997) 4 Crimes 131.

[8478] ● Confession before—Magistrate.—Except the bare allegation there was no material on record to indicate that police had pressurised A-4 or had forced him to make the confession. The trial Court was not justified in considering the length of the confession as a suspicious circumstance. The confession was a complete record of the steps taken by the Magistrate, the questions put to the accused and the answers given by him. The High Court has also pointed out how other reasons given by the trial Court are also improper. While agreeing with the trial Court that the Judicial Magistrate had failed to inquire from A-4 as to whether he was promised that he would be made an approver if he made the confession, the High Court held that this omission was of no significance as A-4 was clearly warned that if he made a confession it was likely to be used against him. The High Court was also right in holding that the trial Court in relying extensively on the case diary had committed an illegality. The omission found by the trial Court as a result of that illegal effort were minor and did not justify the conclusion that the confession was not voluntarily made. In the absence of any requirement that separate reasons were required to be recorded for believing that the confession was made voluntarily it was not proper for the trial Court to doubt its genuineness on the ground that the reasons were not recorded separately though the satisfaction was recorded in the memorandum. The High Court was therefore right in placing reliance upon the confession. Ammini v. State of Kerala, AIR 1998 SC 260 : (1998) 2 SCC 301 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 618 : 1998 CrLJ 481 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 61 : (1997) 4 Crimes 131.

[8479] ● Confessional statement recorded under Section 15 of TADA.—A confessional statement recorded in accordance with requirements contained in Section 15(1), TADA of the ban contained in Section 25 of the Evidence Act or Section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The requirements stipulated in Section 15(1) of the TADA for admissibility of a confession made to a police officer are (1) The confession should have been made to a police officer not lower in rank than a Superintendent of Police (2) it should have been recorded by said police officer (3) the trial should be against the maker of the confession, (4) such trial must be for an offence under TADA or the Rules thereunder. If the above requirements are satisfied the confession becomes admissible in evidence and it is immaterial whether the confession was recorded in one particular case or in a different case.

When there is no statutory inhibition for using such confession on the premise that it was not recorded during the investigation of the particular offence which is under trial there is no need or reason for the Court to introduce a further fetter against the admissibility of the confessional statement. It often happens that a confessor would disclose very many acts and events including different facets of his involvement in the preparation, attempt and commission of crimes includeing the acts of his co-participators therein. But to expel every other incriminating disclosures than those under investigation of a particular crime from the ambit of admissibility is not mandated by any provision of law. We have, therefore, absolutely no doubt that a confession, if usable under Section 15 of the TADA, would not become unusable merely because the case is different or the crime is different. If the confession covers that different crime it would be a relevant item of evidence in the case in which that crime is under trial and it would then become admissible in the case. State of Gujarat v. Mahammed Atik, AIR 1998 SC 1686 : (1998) 4 SCC 351 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 936 : 1998 CrLJ 2251 : (1998) 2 Crimes 92.

[8480] ● Confessions—Recording of—Omission to obtain signature of accused at end of confession.—Thiagarajan (the S.P.I.) has submitted that his not getting signature of Nalini (A-1) at the end of confession is an omission. There is no cross-examination of V. Thiagarajan (PW-52) as to why the omission occurred. It has not been suggested that the omission was deliberate. Statement of v. Thiagarajan (PW-52) is forthright. There could certainly be a human error but that would not mean that Section 463 of the Code becomes inapplicable. Mr. Natarajan is correct in his submission that when the requirement of law is that confession should be signed by the person making it, it would mean his signatures at the end of the confession. What Section 463 requires is that evidence could be led of police officer recording the confession as to why provisions of Rule 15(3) could not be complied while recording the confession. It has not been suggested or brought on record as to how not getting signatures of Nalini (A-1) on the last pages of the confession has injured her in her defence on the merits of the case. The confession has been corroborated in material particulars by means of independent evidence even if the confessions of the co-accused are set apart. Confession of Nalini (A-1) was recorded on 7-8-1991 and was sent to the Court of the Chief Judicial Magistrate on the following day and on 9-8-1991 and was sent to the Designated Court. We find that the confession was duly made, which was recorded by V. Thiagarajan (PW-52). We are, therefore, inclined to admit the confession. (D.P. WADHWA J.) State of T.N. v. Nalini, AIR 1999 SC 2640 : (1999) 5 SCC 253 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 691 : 1999 CrLJ 3124 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 424.

[8481] ● Magistrate not explained how he knew accused desiring to confess.—It is a worthless exercise to ponder over how or from which source the Investigating Officer would have come to know that the accused was desiring to confess. Investigating Officer can have different sources to know that fact and he is not obliged to state in Court the same, particularly in view of the ban contained in S. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. State of Maharashtra v. Daman Gopinath Shinde, AIR 2000 SC 1691 : (2000) 6 SCC 269 : 2000 CrLJ 2301.

[8482] ● Confession—Possibility of exerting control by Police over detenu.—The geographical distance between the two buildings—sub-jail and the police station—should not have been a consideration to decide the possibility of police exerting control over a detenu. To keep a detenu in the police fear it is not necessary that the location of the police station should be proximal to the edifice in which the prisoner is detained in judicial custody. In many places judicial Courts are situated very near to police station houses, or the offices of higher police officers would be housed in the same complex. It is not a contention to be countenanced that such nearness would vitiate the independence of judicial function in any manner. State of Maharashtra v. Daman Gopinath Shinde, AIR 2000 SC 1691 : (2000) 6 SCC 269 : 2000 CrLJ 2301.

[8483] ● Confession—Voluntariness.—Newasa is a taluk located within the territorial limits of the district of Ahmednagar. The Chief Judicial Magistrate, Ahmednagar was approached for nominating a Magistrate within his jurisdiction for recording the confession. There could have been a variety of reasons for the Chief Judicial Magistrate for choosing a particular Magistrate to do the work. When not even a question was put to PW-19 or PW-44 (the Investigating Officer) as to why the CJM, Ahmednagar did not assign the work to a Magistrate at Newasa, it is not proper for the High Court to have used that as a ground for holding that voluntariness of the confession was vitiated. State of Maharashtra v. Daman Gopinath Shinde, AIR 2000 SC 1691 : (2000) 6 SCC 269 : 2000 CrLJ 2301.

[8484] ● Statement recorded under Section 108(3)—Customs Act—Admissibility.—Section 108 of the Customs Act does not contemplate any magisterial intervention. The power under the said Section is intended to be exercised by a Gazetted Officer of the Customs department. Sub-s. (3) enjoins on the person summoned by the officer to state the truth upon any subject respecting which he is examined. He is not excused from speaking the truth on the premise that such statement could be used against him. The said requirement is included in the provision for the purpose of enabling the Gazetted Officer to elicit the truth from the person interrogated. There is no involvement of the magistrate at that stage. The entire idea behind the provision is that the Gazetted Officer questioning the person must gather all the truth concerning the episode. If the statement so extracted is untrue, its utility for the officer gets lost. A confession made to a police officer can be recorded by him without any of the constraints incorporated under Section 164, CrPC. But the safety of the confessor who makes such statement to the Police Officer is that the same is forbidden from use in evidence. The ban contained in Section 25, Evidence Act is an absolute ban. But there is no bar in regard to the confession made to any person other than a police officer except when such confession was made while he is in police custody. The inculpatory statement made by any person under S. 108 is to non-Police personnel and, hence, it has no tinge of inadmissibility in evidence if it was made when the person concerned was not then in Police custody. Nonetheless the caution contained in law is that such a statement should be scrutinised by the Court in the same manner as confession made by an accused person to any non-Police personnel. The Court has to be satisfied in such cases, that any inculpatory statement made by an accused person to a gazetted Officer must also pass the tests prescribed in S. 24 of the Evidence Act. If such a statement is impaired by any of the vitiating premises enumerated in S. 24 that statement becomes useless in any criminal proceeding. A statement recorded by Customs Officers under S. 108 of the Customs Act is admissible in evidence. The Court has to test whether the inculpating portions were made voluntarily or whether it is vitiated on account of any of the premises envisaged in S. 24 of the Evidence Act. Assistant Collector of Central Excise v. Duncan Agro Industries Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 2901 (2903, 2904) : (2000) 7 SCC 53 : 2000 CrLJ 4035 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1275 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 640.

[8485] ● Confessional statement and retraction both constitute composite relevant fact.—There can be no doubt, it was not necessary, while considering the case of the petitioner detenue, to place all or any of the document which is relevant relied in the proceedings of a co-accused, but where the sponsoring authority opts out of his own volition to place any document of the other co-detenue, not merely as a narration of fact but reiterating in details the confession made by him, then it cannot be said it would not prejudice the case of the detenue. If this has been done, it was incumbent for the sponsoring authority to have placed their retraction also. As held in Rajappa Neela Kantan Case, (2000(2) Scale 642). The placement of a document of other co-accused may prejudice the case of the petitioner. In the first place the same should not have been placed, but, if placed, the confessional statement and the retraction, both constituting a composite relevant fact both should have been placed. If any one of the two documents alone is placed without the other, it would affect the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority. But once the sponsoring authority having chosen to place the confessional statement, then it was incumbent on it to place the retraction also. All documents, which are relevant which have bearing on the issue, which are likely to affect the mind of the detaining authority should be placed before him. Of course, a document which has no link with the issue cannot be construed as relevant. A. Sonkath Ali v. Union of India, AIR 2000 SC 2662 (2669) : (2000) 7 SCC 148 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1304 : 2000 CrLJ 3691 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 568.

[8486] ● Statement before Magistrate admission not confession.—A statement of 1st accused, Meena Gupta, was recorded by the Sub-Divisional Judicial Magistrate. It was marked in the case and proved through the said Magistrate, as though it was a judicial confession. The High Court did not find any inculpative statement therein and, hence, declined to act on it as a confession. We cannot but agree with the conclusion of the High Court that the said statement does not have even one limb of inculpative admission so far as the matter of the statement is concerned. If it is not inculpative then the same cannot be used against a co-accused because S. 30 of the Evidence Act permits only a confession made by one accused to be taken into consideration against the co-accused also subject to the conditions laid down in the section. As far 1st accused is concerned; the statement made by her to the Magistrate can be treated as an admission by her though not as confession. Bishwa Nath Aggarwal v. Meena Gupta, (2000) 9 SCC 149 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1182 (1183) : (2001) 1 Crimes 17.

[8487] ● Judicial confession.—We are unable to understand how a judicial confession would become bad by reason of the fact that articles belonging to the victims were recovered prior to the making of the confession. That aspect instead of vitiating the confession, could be a factor in favour of the voluntariness of the confession. When the culprit finds that the articles concealed by him are all disinterred, it is possible that he might feel that there is no use in concealing the facts any more. Then he may desire to make a clean breast of everything to any person or authority. State of Tamil Nadu v. Kutty, AIR 2001 SC 2778 : (2001) 6 SCC 550 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1177 (1181) : 2001 CrLJ 4168.

[8488] ● Confession before Magistrate.—The learned counsel for A-2 contended that A-2 in his confession did not own that he also stabbed at least one of the two deceased. A reading of the confession as a whole leaves no doubt that A-2 has admitted the full length role played by him in association with the other two assailants for murdering the two ladies. Hence, the very fact that he did not say in so many words that he also inflicted one stab injury on the deceased is of no consequence. In a way, this aspect is a further assurance to us that his confession was not what the Police wanted him to say to the Magistrate. State of Tamil Nadu v. Kutty, AIR 2001 SC 2778 : (2001) 6 SCC 550 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1177 (1182) : 2001 CrLJ 4168.

[8489] ● Confessions in criminal law either judicial or extra-judicial.—Confessions in criminal law have been categorised to be either judicial or extra-judicial. The prosecution is obliged to refer and rely on the alleged confession of the accused in any one of the aforesaid categories. An extra-judicial confession cannot be treated as judicial confession, similarly an alleged judicial confession proved to have not been legally recorded cannot be used as extra-judicial confession otherwise also such an approach would result in dragging the judicial officers into uncalled for and unnecessary controversies. Dhanajaya Reddy v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2001 SC 1512 : (2001) 4 SCC 9 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 652 (662) : 2001 CrLJ 1712 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 315 : JT 2001 (3) SC 395 : (2001) 2 Crimes 15.

[8490] ● Confessional statement recording of under Section 15 of TADA.—In view of the settled legal position, it is not possible to accept the contention of learned senior counsel that as the accused were in police custody, the confessional statements are either inadmissible in evidence or are not reliable. Custodial interrogation in such cases is permissible under the law to meet grave situation arising out of terrorism unleashed by terrorist activities. In the present case, confessional statements were recorded prior to the date of decision in the case of Kartar Singh case 1994 CrLJ 3139, i.e., before 11th March, 1994. Further, despite the suggestion made by this Court in Kartar Singh's case, the said guidelines are neither incorporated in the Act nor in the rules by the Parliament. Therefore, it would be difficult to accept the contention raised by learned Counsel for the accused that as the said guidelines are not followed, confessional statements, even if admissible in evidence, should not be relied upon for convicting the accused. Further, this Court has not held in Kartar Singh's case that if suggested guidelines are not followed then confessional statement would be inadmissible in evidence. Similar contention was negatived by this Court is S.N. Dube v. N.B. Bhoir, AIR 2000 SC 776 : 2000 CrLJ 830, by holding that a Police Officer recording the confession under S. 15 is really not bound to follow any other procedure and the rules or the guidelines framed by the Bombay High Court for recording the confession by a Magistrate under S. 164, CrPC; the said guidelines do not by themselves apply to recording of a confession under S. 15 of the TADA Act and it is for the Court to appreciate the confessional statement as the substantive piece of evidence and find out whether it is voluntary and truthful. Lal Singh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2001 SC 746 : (2001) 3 SCC 221 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 472 (488) : 2001 CrLJ 978 : JT 2001 (1) SC 410.

[8491] ● When confessional statement is there Prosecution need not establish each and every link.—To say that prosecution has to prove the case with a hundred per cent certainty is a myth. Since last many years the nation is facing great stress and strain because of misguided militants and co-operation to the militancy, which has affected the social security, peace and stability. It is common knowledge that such terrorist activities are carried out with utmost secrecy. Many facts pertaining to such activities remain in personal knowledge of the person concerned. Hence, in case of conspiracy and particularly such activities, better evidence than acts and statements including that of co-conspirators in pursuance of the conspiracy is hardly available. In such cases, when there is confessional statement, it is not necessary for the prosecution to establish each and every link as confessional statement gets corroboration from the link which is proved by the prosecution. In any case, the law requires establishment of such a degree of probability that a prudent man may on its basis, believe in the existence of the facts in issue. Lal Singh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2001 SC 746 : (2001) 3 SCC 221 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 472 (518) : 2001 CrLJ 978 : JT 2001 (1) SC 410.

[8492] ● Confession of co-accused.—"Learned Senior Counsel submitted that the High Court has given benefit of doubt to A-2 with regard to conspiracy for commission of murders and, therefore, as he is acquitted for the main offence, his confessional statement is not admissible in evidence. This submission in our view is without any substance. Firstly, the confessional statement of A-2 recorded under S. 164, CrPC by the Magistrate would be admissible in evidence as accused Nos. 1 and 2 were jointly tried. The said statement is proved by examining the Magistrate who recorded the same. Only question would be—to what extent it can be used against A-1. In the present case, conviction of A-1 for the offence for which he is charged is based on circumstantial evidence. Conviction of A-2 for the offence punishable under S. 201, IPC is also based on circumstantial evidence and after taking into consideration confessional statement. The circumstantial evidence which gets corroboration from the confessional statement of A-2 for connecting A-1 with the crime could be relied upon. Prakash Dhawai Khairnar (Pahil) v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2002 SC 340 (347-48) : (2002) 2 SCC 35 : 2002 CrLJ 928 : (2002) 1 Crimes 18.

[8493] ● Confessional statement before Police Officer.—Confessional statements before the Police officer under Section 15 of the TADA is substantive evidence and it can be relied upon on the trial of such person or co-accused, abettor or conspirator for an offence punishable under the Act or the rules. The Police officer before recording the confession has to observe the requirement of sub-section (2) of Section 15, TADA. Irregularities here and there would not make such confessional statement inadmissible in evidence. If the Legislature in its wisdom has provided that such confessional statement can be used as evidence, it would not be just, reasonable or prudent to water down the scheme of the Act (TADA) on the assumption that the said statement was recorded under duress or was not recorded truly by the concerned officer in whom faith is reposed. Jayawant Dattatraya Suryarao v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2002 SC 143 (168) : (2001) 10 SCC 109 : 2002 CrLJ 226.

[8494] ● Confessional statements made voluntarily.—The ground for rejecting the confessional statement, as noticed by the Designated Judge, is alleged interpolations in confessional statements. It may be noticed that the confessional statements were recorded in Marathi language in Devnagri script. The statements were typed wherein some names and dates have been shown in bold letters. The use of bold letters does not make the confession doubtful justifying the conclusion that there had been interpolations. The bold letters are intended to high light the importance of the names and words. . . . In view of specific denial and there being no evidence to the contrary, the Trial Court committed a mistake of law in not relying upon the confessional statements of A-5 and A-6 which were otherwise held by him to be voluntarily made. State of Maharashtra v. Bharat Chaganlal Raghani, AIR 2002 SC 409 (424) : (2001) 9 SCC 1 : 2002 CrLJ 944.

[8495] ● Confessions divided into two classes judicial and extra-judicial.—Confessions may be divided into two classes, i.e., judicial and extra-judicial. Judicial confessions are those, which are made before a Magistrate or a Court in the course of judicial proceedings. Extra-judicial confessions are those, which are made by the party elsewhere than before a Magistrate or Court. Extra-judicial confessions are generally those that are made by a party to or before a private individual, which includes even a Judicial Officer in his private capacity. It also includes a Magistrate who is not especially empowered to record confessions under Section 164 of the CrPC or a Magistrate so empowered but receiving the confession at a stage when Section 164 does not apply. State of Rajasthan v. Raja Ram, AIR 2003 SC 3601 : (2003) 8 SCC 180 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1965 : 2003 CrLJ 3901.

[8496] ● Extra-judicial confession—Meaning and reliability of.—As to extra-judicial confessions, two questions arise : (i) were they made voluntarily? and (ii) are they true? As the section enacts, a confession made by an accused person is irrelevant in criminal proceedings, if the making of the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement; threat or promise, (1) having reference to the charge against the accused person, (2) proceeding from a person in authority, and (3) sufficient, in the opinion of the Court to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him. If follows that a confession would be voluntary if it is made by the accused in a fit state of mind, and if it is not caused by any inducement, threat or promise which has reference to the charge against him, proceeding from a person in authority. It would not be involuntary, if the inducement, (a) does not have reference to the charge against the accused person; or (b) it does not proceed from a person in authority; or (c) it is not sufficient, in the opinion of the Court to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that, by making it, he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him. Whether or not the confession was voluntary would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case, judged in the light of Section 24.

If the evidence relating to extra-judicial confession is found credible after being tested on the touchstone of credibility and acceptability, it can solely form the basis of conviction. The requirement of corroboration as rightly submitted by the counsel is a matter of prudence and not an invariable rule of law. It is improbable as rightly held by the High Court that the accused would repose confidence in a person who is inimically disposed towards him, and confess his guilt. State of Rajasthan v. Raja Ram, AIR 2003 SC 3601 : (2003) 8 SCC 180 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1965 : 2003 CrLJ 3901.

[8497] ● Confession—Relationship with admission.—Under the general law of the land as reflected in the Evidence Act, no confession made to a police officer can be proved against an accused. "Confessions" which is a terminology used in criminal law is a species of "admissions" as defined in Section 17 of the Evidence Act. An admission is a statement, oral or documentary which enables the Court to draw an inference as to any fact in issue or relevant fact. It is trite to say that every confession must necessarily be an admission, but, every admission does not necessarily amount to a confession. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1773) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[8498] ● Confession—Meaning.—Confession is a statement made by an accused which must either admit in terms of the offence, or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence. Ajay Singh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2007 SC 2188 : (2007) 12 SCC 341 : 2007 (3) Crimes 1 (SC) : 2007 (7) SCR 983.

[8499] ● Admissibility of confession.—In a murder trial, only that part of the confession which leads to the recovery of dead body or crime articles of the deceased would be admissible in evidence. Aloke Nath Dutta v. State of West Bengal, (2007) 12 SCC 230 : (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 264 : (2007) 1 Crimes 321.

[8500] ● Judicial Confession—Value.—Judicial confession would be looked into to buttress other evidence and not vice versa. Aloke Nath Dutta v. State of West Bengal, (2008) 12 SCC 230 : 2008 (2) SCC (Cri) 264 : (2007) 1 Crimes 321.

[8501] ● Corroboration.—Judicial or extra-judicial confessions need corroboration in general. It is not necessary that corroboration should be in material particulars. Each and every piece of information mentioned in confession need not be corroborated by independent evidence. Vilayuda Pulavar v. State, (2009) 14 SCC 436 : 2009 (6) SCR 383 : JT 2009 (11) SC 266.

[8502] ● Expression "Confession"—Meaning and Scope.—The expression 'confession' is not defined in the Evidence Act, 'Confession' is a statement made by an accused which must either admit in terms the offence, or at any rate substantially all the facts which constitute the offence. The dictionary meaning of the word 'statement' is "act of stating; that which is stated; a formal account, declaration of facts etc." The word 'statement' includes both oral and written statement. Communication to another is not however an essential component to constitute a 'statement'. An accused might have been overheard uttering to himself or saying to his wife or any other person in confidence. He might have also uttered something in soliloquy. He might also keep a note in writing. All the aforesaid nevertheless constitute a statement. If such statement is an admission of guilt, it would amount to a confession whether it is communicated to another or not. This very question came up for consideration before this Court in Sahoo v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1966 SC 40 : 1966 Crl. U 68. After referring to some passages written by well known authors on the "Law of Evidence" SUBBA RAO, J. (as he then was) held that "communication is not a necessary ingredient to constitute confession". Shiva Karam Payaswami Tewari v. State of Maharashtra, 2009 AIR SC 1692 : 2009 (11) SCC 262 : 2009 (1) SCR 442 : 2009 (1) Supreme 461.

2. MEANING OF THE EXPRESSION 'ACCUSED PERSON' AS USED IN SECTIONS 24 TO 27 OF THE ACT

[8503] ● Meaning of the expression 'accused person' as used in Sections 24 to 27 of the Act.—The words 'accused person' and 'person accused of an offence' as used in Sections 24 to 27 of the Evidence Act have the same meaning. They are only descriptive of the person put up before a criminal Court on a charge of having committed an offence against whom a previous confession or statement made by him is sought to be produced in evidence. These words do not predicate that a formal accusation against the person concerned must have already been made at the time when the confession or statement was made.

The bar against the use of a confession made by any person under Sections 24 to 26 operates whether or not he has already been accused of an offence at the time when he made the confession, and whether or not he is in police custody at that time. Similarly, if a fact is discovered in consequence of information given by an accused, it can be proved whether or not a formal accusation of an offence had already been made against him at the time when he gave that information.

In other words, the word 'accused' in these sections is adjectival and describes the person to whom they are meant to apply, and it is not a condition of the applicability of these sections that an accusation of an offence must necessarily be in existence at the very time when that person made the confession or statement sought to be proved. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Deoman Upadhaya, AIR 1960 SC 1125 : 1960 CrLJ 1504 : 1961 (1) SCR 14.

3. THE PROPER METHOD OF USE OF A CONFESSION WHICH IS PARTLY INCULPATORY AND PARTLY EXCULPATORY

[8504] ● The Proper Method of Use of a Confession which is partly Inculpatory and partly Exculpatory.—Note.—The question as to the correct method of use of a confessional statement made by the accused when it is partly inculpatory and partly exculpatory or explanatory, has been considered by the Court in a number of cases. The rules relating to this question which have evolved from these decisions may be summarised as under:

1. When the whole of a statement made by the accused relates to the same matter, and contains portions which are inculpatory and also portions which are exculpatory or explanatory, the Court must accept that statement as a whole, or if there are reasons for rejecting it, must reject it as a whole. It is not open to the Court to split up the statement and accept only its inculpatory part after rejecting the exculpation or explanation contained in the statement as being inherently improbable or incredible.
2. However, even when the statement wholly relates to the same matter, the Court would be justified in splitting the statement and accepting only its inculpatory portion, if there is clear affirmative evidence on the record to show that the explanatory portion of it is definitely false.
3. When the same statement covers two distinct and separate matters, Rule No. 1 above does not apply, and it is open to the Court to accept it as to one matter only. In such a case, the Court would be justified in rejecting the statement as to the other matter purely on the ground of its inherent improbability, even though it has not been shown to be false by any positive evidence.

These principles apply equally, whether the statement under consideration is a previous confessional statement or is one made in Court during examination under section 342, CrPC; for this reason, all the cases relating to this question are collected here under one head.

It is settled law that an admission made by a person, whether amounting to a confession or not cannot be split up. If the Court proposes to make use of an admission made in a statement recorded under Section 342 of the Code of the purpose of corroborating thereby some piece of prosecution evidence, the Court must use the whole statement, including that portion of it which offers an explanation.

An admission must be used either as a whole, or not at all, and it is not open to the Court to use only a part of it and reject the rest.

In the present case, the question was whether a particular letter had been typed on the typewriter in the office of the accused or had been typed by him at his house on his private machine. When questioned, the accused said that it had been typed 'on one of the typewriters which were brought in the office for trial'. The lower Courts rejected this explanation and further held his omission to state that the letter had been typed on the office machine could be taken as an admission that it had not been so typed.

Held : Such a use of the statement of the accused was wholly unwarranted. The Court was bound to look at his statement as a whole and it could not be split up so as to exclude from consideration the explanation he had offered. Hanumant Govind Nargundkar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1952 SC 343 : 1953 CrLJ 129 : 1952 SCR 1091 : 1952 SCJ 509.

[8505] ● Confession partly inculpatory and partly exculpatory.—It is not open to the Court to accept only the inculpatory part of the statement of an accused and at the same time to reject the exculpatory or explanatory part as inherently false and incredible.

For instance, if an accused gives an account of how he killed a woman and then gives his reasons for doing so, the Court may, if the said account commends belief, accept it, but in that case the Court must also accept the explanation given by the accused, even though it finds the explanation inherently incredible, unless there is clear affirmative evidence showing that the exculpatory portion was false.

In the present case, the accused was charged with the murder of her husband by administering him potassium cyanide. The case rested on circumstantial evidence as to disposal of the dead body and her confession in which she had stated that she had not given him any poison, that his medicine bottle and another bottle containing a liquid for washing photos lay side by side, that he had taken the liquid from the wrong bottle by mistake and had died some time later, and that-having got panicky she had disposed of the body with the assistance of an accomplice by taking it in a jeep to a lonely well and had thrown it there.

The High Court, on appeal, accepted that part of her confession which related to her conduct in connection with the disposal of the body, and on the strength of it rejected the earlier part of it in which she had explained the circumstances in which her husband had died, as being inherently improbable.

This approach to the question of the use of a confession which is partly inculpatory and partly exculpatory is quite incorrect. It is not open to a Court, in such a case, to split up the confession and accept only inculpatory part, as the High Court had done. In the absence of any affirmative evidence to show that her description of the circumstances in which her husband had died was definitely false, if the confession is to be accepted, it has to be accepted as a whole, including her explanation of his death, or otherwise the whole of the confession has to be rejected as being unbelievable.

After considering the confession as a whole, and the circumstantial evidence in the case, it is not sufficient to establish the guilt of the accused, and acquit her. Palvinder Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1952 SC 351 : 1953 CrLJ 154 : 1952 SCR 94 : 1952 SCJ 545.

[8506] ● Accused when makes statement partly inculpatory and partly exculpatory regarding any fact.—When the accused makes any statement regarding any fact which is partly inculpatory and partly exculpatory, the Court is bound to consider the statement as a whole. It cannot break up that statement so as to accept the part which is inculpatory and reject the explanation.

However, when the statement of the accused covers two different and independent facts, it is open to the Court to accept the statement so far as it relates to one fact and to reject it as to another fact which is proved beyond doubt by the prosecution evidence.

In the present case the accused was charged under Section 66(b) read with Section 81 of the Bombay Prohibition act, for possessing in his godown rectified spirit without permit. The accused did not challenge the prosecution case that he was in charge of the godown and admitted that fact in his statement. He, however, denied that the spirit was found from the godown and asserted that it was found from outside the godown.

The trial Magistrate accepted the statement of the accused insofar as it admitted that the godown was in his possession; but in view of the fact that it had been clearly established that the spirit had been recovered from that godown, he rejected that part of the statement in which he denied that it had been so recovered. He held that it had been proved that the accused had in his possession rectified spirit without a permit, and convicted the accused as charged. On appeal, the High Court confirmed the conviction.

The use of the statement of the accused made by the lower Courts is correct and according to law. The order of conviction is maintained. Vijendrajit Ayodhya Prasad Goel v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 247 : 1953 CrLJ 1097 : 1953 SCJ 328.

[8507] ● Statement when consists of distinct and separate matters.—When an accused makes a statement under Section 342, CrPC, and the Court proposes to take it into consideration, it must be taken as a whole and it is not proper to accept the incriminatory portion only, while at the same time the Court rejects the exculpatory portion thereof.

This proposition as to the use which can be made of the statement of an accused was laid down in Hanumant G. Nargundkar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, and is a perfectly correct principle of law on this matter.

But it applies to what the accused has stated as to any one matter only, and not when the statement consists of distinct and separate matters. When a statement covers matters which are distinct and separate, it is perfectly open to the Court to accept an admission as to one matter and rely upon it by way of corroboration of the prosecution evidence on record, and convict the accused on the strength of such corroboration, even though the Court rejects another portion of the same statement relating to quite another matter because of its inherent improbability.

In the present case an accused charged along with others with murder at night time, was arrested soon after the crime and was found to have received gunshot injuries. When questioned he admitted his presence at the scene of occurrence, but explained his injuries as having been received when he went to the reuse of the deceased and was grappling with unknown assailants. In the circumstances of the case, his explanation was rejected as being utterly improbable, because the deceased was proved to have been his deadly enemy and there was no evidence at all that any person other than the accused and his companions were concerned in the attack.

The use of the statement of the accused made by the trial Court cannot be objected to as being not in accordance with the principles laid down in Hanumant Nargundkar's case, because that part of the statement of the accused which has been rejected relates to a matter distinct and separate from the mater contained in the first part which has been accepted, whereas the whole statement in Hanumant's case relates only to one matter. Karnail Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1954 SC 202 : 1954 CrLJ 580 : 1954 SC 904.

[8508] ● Confession of accused to be taken as a whole.—It is settled law that the confession of the accused has to be taken as a whole and the exculpatory part cannot be thrown aside. as said before, the case of the prosecution lies solely on the two dying declarations of the deceased. The appellant instead of projecting a plain denial has on the other hand strengthened those dying declarations by his statement in admitting that he was responsible for the death of the deceased. Yet, his owning the commission of the crime does not lead to the conclusion that he was guilty of offence punishable under S. 302, IPC. Devku Bhikha v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1955 SC 2171 (2172) : 1955 CrLJ 3975.

[8509] ● Confession—What is.—Section 25 of the Evidence Act is one of the provisions of law dealing with confessions made by an accused. The law relating to confessions is to be found generally in Sections 24 to 30 of the Evidence Act and Sections 162 and 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. Sections 17 to 31 of the Evidence Act are to be found under the heading "Admissions". Confession is a species of admission, and is dealt with in Sections 24 to 30. A confession or an admission is evidence against the maker of it, unless its admissibility is excluded by some provisions of law. Section 24 excludes confessions caused by certain inducements, threats and promises. Section 25 provides : "No confession made to a police officer shall be proved as against a person accused of an offence." The terms of Section 25 are imperative. A confession made to a police officer under any circumstances is not admissible in evidence against the accused. It covers a confession made when he was free and not in police custody, as also a confession made before any investigation has begun. The expression "accused of any offence" covers a person accused of an offence at the trial whether or not he was accused of the offence when he made the confession. Section 26 prohibits proof against any person of a confession made by him in the custody of a police officer, unless it is made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate. The partial ban imposed by Section 26 relates to a confession made to a person other than a police officer. Section 26 does not qualify the absolute ban imposed by Section 25 on a confession made to a police officer. Section 27 is in the form of a proviso and partially lifts the ban imposed by Sections 24, 25 and 26. It provides that when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence, in the custody of a police officer, such information whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved. Aghnoo Nagesia v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 119 : 1966 CrLJ 100.

[8510] ● Confession by accused to Police Officer protected under Section 25 of Evidence Act.—Section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure forbids the use of any statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation for any purpose at any enquiry or trial in respect of the offence under investigation, save as mentioned in the proviso and in cases falling under sub-section (2), and it specifically provides that nothing in it shall be deemed to affect the provisions of Section 27 of the Evidence Act. The words of Section 162 are wide enough, to include a confession made to a police officer in the course of an investigation. A statement or confession made in the course of an investigation may be recorded by a Magistrate under Section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure subject to the safeguards imposed by the section. Thus, except as provided by Section 27 of the Evidence Act, a confession by an accused to a police officer is absolutely protected under Section 25 of the Evidence Act, and if it is made in the course of an investigation, it is also protected by Section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and a confession to any other person made by him while in the custody of a police officer is protected by Section 26, unless it is made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate. These provisions seem to proceed upon the view that confessions made by an accused to a police officer or made by him while he is in the custody of a police officer are not to be trusted, and should not be used in evidence against him. They are based upon grounds of public policy, and the fullest effect should be given to them. Aghnoo Nagesia v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 119 : 1966 CrLJ 100.

[8511] ● Confession—Admission of offence.—A confession may be defined as an admission of the offence by a person charged with the offence.

A statement which contains self-exculpatory matter cannot amount to a confession, if the exculpatory statement is of some fact which, if true, would negative the offence alleged to be confessed. If an admission of an accused is to be used against him, the whole of it should be tendered in evidence and if part of the admission is exculpatory and part inculpatory the prosecution is not at liberty to use in evidence the inculpatory part only. Vide Hanumant Govind v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 1952 SCR 1091 at page 1111 : AIR 1952 SC 343 at page 350 and 1953 SCR 94 : AIR 1952 SC 354. The accused is entitled to insist that the entire admission including the exculpatory part must be tendered in evidence. But this principle is of no assistance to the accused where no part of his statement is self-exculpatory, and the prosecution intends to use the whole of the statement against the accused. Aghnoo Nagesia v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 119 : 1966 CrLJ 100.

[8512] ● Confession consists of several parts.—A confession may consist of several parts and may reveal not only the actual commission of the crime but also the motive, the preparation, the opportunity, the provocation, the weapons used, the intention, the concealment of the weapon and the subsequent conduct of the accused. If the confession is tainted, the taint attaches to each part of it. It is not permissible in law to separate one part and to admit it in evidence as a non-confessional statement. Each part discloses some incriminating fact i.e. some fact which by itself or along with other admitted or proved facts suggests the inference that the accused committed the crime, and though each part taken singly may not amount to a confession, each of them being part of a confessional statement partakes of the character of a confession. If a statement contains an admission of an offence, not only that admission but also, every other admission of an incriminating fact contained in the statement is part of the confession. Aghnoo Nagesia v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 119 : 1966 CrLJ 100.

[8513] ● Proof of confession if excluded by any provision of law.—If proof of the confession is excluded by any provision of law such as Sections 24 25, and 26 of the Evidence Act, the entire confessional statement in all its parts including the admission of minor incriminating facts must also be excluded, unless proof of it is permitted by some other sections such as Section 27 of the Evidence Act. Little substance and content would be left in Sections 24, 25 and 26 if proof of admissions of incriminating facts in a confessional statement is permitted. Aghnoo Nagesia v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 119 : 1966 CrLJ 100.

[8514] ● Confession to Police Officer.—On a plain construction of Section 24 it can be said that proof of all the admissions of incriminating facts contained in a confessional statement is excluded by the section. Similarly, Sections 25 and 26 bar not only proof of admission of an offence by an accused to a police officer or made by him while in the custody of a police officer but also admissions contained in the confessional statement of all incriminating facts related to the offence. Aghnoo Nagesia v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 119 : 1966 CrLJ 100.

4. COMBINED EFFECT OF SECTIONS 24 TO 27 OF THE EVIDENCE ACT—RESTRICTIONS ON THE USE OF A CONFESSION

[8515-16] ● Combined effect of Sections 24 to 27 of the Evidence Act—Restrictions on the use of a confession.—When an accused person, that is, any person who is charged in a criminal proceeding with the commission of an offence, has made a statement which is relevant to the charge against him to any person at any time previous to the commencement of the proceeding against him, then, subject to the conditions set out in Sections 24 to 26 of the Act, such a statement may be proved against the accused, whether it amounts to a confession or not, and whether at the time when he made it he was already an accused person or not. The restrictions imposed by law on the use by the prosecution of a statement or confession made by the accused are as under :

1. A confession cannot be proved if it has been procured by any inducement, threat or promise which proceeded from a person in authority and which has led the accused to suppose that he would gain some advantage in reference to a proceeding against him. This bar applies with the same force whether the accused is or is not already an accused person charged of an offence, or is in custody or not, at the time when he made the confession (Section 24).
2. A confession cannot be proved if it has been made to or in the presence of a police officer. This bar is absolute and it applies equally whether the accused was or was not in custody at the time he made the confession (Section 25).
3. After the accused has been arrested and taken into custody, a confession made by him while he is in the custody of a police officer cannot be proved unless it is made before a Magistrate, and has been duly recorded after satisfying all the requirements of law as regards the recording of a confession, and after putting to the accused all necessary questions for the purpose of ensuring that the confession is entirely voluntary (Section 26, and Section 164, CrPC).

4. Even when statement made by an accused person to a police officer does not amount to a confession and therefore does not fall under the ban of Section 25 if that statement is made in the course of investigation into any offence, it cannot be used against the accused for any purpose in any inquiry or trial in respect of that offence, except when that statement falls under Section 27, in which case it can be used against him only to the extent permitted under that section [Section 162(1) and (2), CrPC].
5. Notwithstanding anything said in Rules 1 to 3 above, if any person who is accused of an offence gives any information and in consequence thereof a relevant fact is deposed to as having been discovered, so much of that information as distinctly relates to the fact discovered thereby, and no more, may be proved, whether that information is contained in a confession proof of which is barred under Section 24 to 26 of the Evidence Act, or whether it is contained in a statement made to a police officer in the course of an investigation use of which is barred under Section 162 of the Code. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Deoman Upadhyaya, AIR 1960 SC 1125 : 1960 CrLJ 1504.

[8517] ● Confession recorded by Inspector of Excise.—The words "police officer" in Section 25 of the Evidence Act are not to be construed in a narrow way, but have to be construed in a wide and popular sense. However, they are not to be construed so widely as to include persons on whom only some of the powers exercised by the police are conferred. The test for determining whether an officer in some other department of the Government who does not belong to the police force or the police establishment is or is not a "Police officer" within the meaning of Section 25 is whether such officer is primarily concerned with the detection and investigation of crime. The confessional statement recorded in the present case, which had been admitted in evidence by the trial Court and had been relied upon by both the Courts below for the purpose of conviction of an offence under Section 47(a) of the Excise Act, had been recorded by an Excise Inspector. From the provisions of Section 77 and 78(3) of the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act, 1915, and Notification No. 470-F dated 15 January 1919 issued under the Act it was clear that an Excise Inspector or Sub-Inspector in the State of Bihar was vested with all the powers of an officer in charge of a police station under chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure as regards investigation of offences under the Excise Act, arrest of accused persons, grant of bail, sending up an accused person for trial, filing of charge-sheet, search for and seizure of article connected with such offences, and so on. It followed that a confession recorded by him during an investigation into an excise offence is in no way different from a confession to a police officer. Raja Ram Jaiswal v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 828 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 705.

[8518] ● Confession—Position of Excise Inspector or Sub-Inspector distinguishable from that of Custom Officer.—The position of an Excise Inspector or Sub-Inspector is thus distinguishable from that of a Customs Officer functioning under the Customs Acts whose power and duties are not identical with those of police officer, and are not derived from or by reference to the Code, though some of his powers are analogous to those of a police officer. The basic difference is that the Customs Officer has no power to investigate into an offence and no power to submit a report of the offence to a Magistrate, while an Excise Officer is expressly conferred with such powers under the Excise Act. Raja Ram Jaiswal v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 828 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 705.

[8519] ● Confession recorded by Excise Inspector empowered to investigate offence—Inadmissible.—What is pertinent for the purpose of determining as to who can be regarded a police officer for the purpose of Section 25 of the Evidence Act is not the totality of the powers which an officer enjoys, but the kind of powers which the law enables him to exercise. The test for determining this question is whether the powers which are conferred on the officer are exercisable by him are such as would tend to facilitate the obtaining by him of a confession from a suspect or delinquent. If they do, then it is unnecessary to consider the dominant purpose for which he is appointed or the question as to what other powers he enjoys. The powers conferred on Customs Officers are contained in Chapter XVII of the Sea Customs Act. (1) The power of search given under Section 169 is subject to the right given under Section 170 to the person concerned to demand that before the search he must be taken before a Magistrate or the Customs Collector. There is no such restriction upon a police officer. (2) Section 173 of the Act gives the power to arrest, but no power is given to release on bail at his discretion, as is given to a police officer. Further, if the person arrested so demands, he is bound to give him a statement in writing disclosing the reasons for the arrest, while no such duty is cast upon a police officer. It will thus be seen that the power conferred on a Customs Officer in connection with offences under the Sea Customs Act are powers of a limited character though they are analogous to the powers of a police officer in some respects.

The most significant difference is that the powers of investigation which a police officer enjoys are not conferred under the Sea Customers Act upon a Customs officer, but they are conferred upon Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors of Excise under the Excise Act. It is the possession of these powers which enables the officer to exercise a kind of authority over the person arrested which facilitates the obtaining of statements, which are in the nature of confessions. The law allows the police officer to obtain such statements with a view to facilitate the investigation of the offences, but it renders them inadmissible in evidence for the obvious reason that a suspension about voluntariness would attach to them. It is the power of investigation which establishes a direct relationship with the prohibition enacted in Section 25. Therefore, where such a power is conferred upon an officer under any Act, the mere fact that he possesses some other powers under another law would not make him any the less a police officer for the purposes of Section 25. Raja Ram Jaiswal v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 828 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 705.

[8520] ● Confession recorded by Police Officer and confession recorded by Excise Officer—Distinction.—Section 25 was enacted to eliminate from consideration confessions made to an officer who by virtue of his position could extort a confession by force, torture or inducement. An Excise Officer functioning under the Excise Act is in the same position as a police officer in the matter of investigation. He would likewise have the same opportunity of extorting a confession from a suspect. It is therefore not possible to draw any rational distinction between a confession recorded by a police officer—strictly so called and a confession recorded by an Excise Officer who is deemed to be a police officer. Raja Ram Jaiswal v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 828 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 705.

[8521] ● Confession to Excise Officer to be excluded under Section 162, CrPC.—There is another reason also why the confession made to an Excise Officer must be excluded. Under the Excise Act, he is conferred with the powers of police officer in charge of a police station. Therefore, the confession is a statement made during the course of investigation to a police officer within the meaning of Section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Such a statement is excluded under Section 162 from evidence for all purposes except that of contradiction. Raja Ram Jaiswal v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 828 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 705.

[8522] ● Confession by person accused of offence under Excise Law to Excise Inspector—Admissibility.—A confession made by a person accused of an offence under the Excise Act to an Excise Inspector or Sub-Inspector is hit by the provisions of Section 25 of the Evidence Act and is inadmissible in evidence and cannot be proved against the person accused of any such offence. Raja Ram Jaiswal v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 828 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 705.

[8523] ● Statement made by accused to custom officers—Admissibility.—Section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act, has no application to the facts of the instant case. In similar circumstances, it was held by this Court in the case of State of Punjab v. Barkat Ram, AIR 1962 SC 276, that custom officers are not police officers and statements made to them were not inadmissible under Section 25. Section 24 would however apply, for custom authorities must be taken to be persons in authority and the statements would be inadmissible in a criminal trial if it is proved that they were caused by inducement, threat or promise. But the findings of all the Courts in the instant case were that the statements were not made on account of any inducement, threat or promise as required by Section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. In the face of these findings it cannot be said that the statements were inadmissible under Section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. Soni Vallabhadas Liladhar v. The Asstt. Collector of Customs, Jamnagar, AIR 1965 SC 481 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 490 : 1965 (3) SCR 854.

[8524] ● Confession contained in letter—Admissibility.—The finding of each of the two Courts below, that the relations between the appellant and his wife were strained because the appellant not merely suspected the fidelity of his wife but also charged her with unchastity, being one of fact cannot be lightly permitted to be questioned in an appeal by special leave. No ground has been made out by the learned counsel which would justify our looking into the evidence. The learned Counsel for the appellant challenged the admissibility of the letter found near the body of the deceased, on the ground that it amounts to a confession to a police officer and that therefore S. 25 of the Evidence Act renders it inadmissible in evidence. We do not think that the objection is well founded. No doubt the letter contains a confession and is also addressed to a police officer. That cannot make it a confession to a police officer which is within the bar created by S. 25 of the Evidence Act. The Police Officer was not nearby when the letter was written or did not know that it was being written. In such circumstances quite obviously the letter would not have been a confession to the Police Officer if the words "Sub-Inspector" had not been written on it. Nor do we think it can become a confession in similar circumstances only because the words "Sub-Inspector" had been written there. It would still have not been a confession made from any point of view. We agree with the High Court, therefore, that the confession contained in, Ex. ka-9 is admissible and that it is an additional circumstance which can be pressed in aid and in support of the charge against the appellant. However, as already stated, even without this confessional statement there was sufficient material before the Courts below on the basis of which the appellant's conviction could be sustained. The appeal is without any merit and is accordingly dismissed. Sita Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1966 SC 1906 : 1966 (2) CrLJ 1519. (MUDHOKAR, J)

[8525] ● Letter—Confession to Police officer—Not admissible.—In my opinion, the letter Ex. Ka-9, is a confession made to a Police Officer, and is not admissible in evidence against the appellant. The letter contained a confession, and was addressed to the Sub-Inspector. I do not see why a confession cannot be made to a Police Officer unless he is present in the immediate vicinity of the accused. A confession can be made to a Police Officer by an oral message to him over the telephone or the radio as also by a written message communicated to him through post, a messenger or otherwise. In its widest and most popular signification, the phrase, "confession made to a Police Officer" includes a confession made to a Police Officer in a letter written to him and subsequently received by him. We should not cut down the wholesome protection of S. 25 by refined arguments. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the Courts below were in error in admitting Ex. Ka-9 against the appellant. I, however, agree that, apart from Ex. Ka-9, there are sufficient materials on the record establishing the guilt of the appellant. The appeal must, therefore, fail. In the result, appeal is dismissed. Sita Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1966 SC 1906 : 1966 (2) CrLJ 1519. (BACHAWAT, J.)

5. A CONFESSION CAN BE ACCEPTED ONLY IF IT IS VOLUNTARY AS WELL AS TRUE

[8526] ● A confession can be accepted only if it is voluntary as well as true.—In the present case, when the accused was brought before a Magistrate for getting his confession recorded, he complained to the Magistrate that shortly before he had been sent up, the police had ill-treated him and had told him that he would be lightly let off only if he made a confession. Thereupon, the Magistrate ordered that he be kept in a magisterial lock-up for a few days, and recorded his confession thereafter. At the trial, the accused retracted the confession and alleged that while he was in the magisterial custody, the police frequently came to him and threatened him and ill-treated him. It was established that the lock-up was in the same compound as the police-station, and that at night time there was no magisterial guard and the police could have had easy access to the accused. In spite of these facts, the confession was accepted as being voluntary, and the accused was convicted. Under these circumstances, conviction based upon the confession of the accused cannot be sustained, and has to be set aside. The possibility remained that the accused was not free from police influence at the time when the confession was recorded, and it cannot be definitely said that it was a voluntary confession. Conviction is set aside. Tulsiram Kanu v. State, AIR 1954 SC 1 : 1954 CrLJ 225.

[8527] ● Confession made under inducement and threat.—In the present case, a confession made by the accused was later retracted by him, and it was suggested that it was made under inducement and threat by the investigating police officers. This principle is well settled, but it does not mean that a mere bald assertion by the accused that he was threatened or tutored, or that an inducement was offered to him, can be accepted as true without anything more. The suggestion must be rejected when there is no material whatsoever to hold that the prisoner was threatened or beaten, and the story of tutoring is, on the face of it, incredible. The circumstances which were taken into consideration for arriving at this conclusion were as under :

1. that for two days before the day on which the confession was recorded, the accused was in jail custody, and was not in police custody or otherwise amenable to police influence, and thus had full time to made up his mind whether to make a confession or not;

2. that over a month had elapsed before he took steps to resile from his confession;
3. that the Magistrate who recorded the confession had made a memorandum as required by Section 164, CrPC which showed that all the requirements of law in recording a confession had been duly complied with, and all necessary questions required to be put to the accused had been duly put and recorded;
4. that the confession was a long one covering 21 pages, and contained precise details which the police could not possibly have known, and hence ruled out the suggestion that it was a tutored confession;
5. that the confession had been retracted only after the accused had taken legal advice.

When an accused has been kept in jail custody for a period which can be considered sufficient for removing any possible impression caused by police threats or inducement, the conduct of the police before he was lodged in jail cannot affect the voluntary character of the confession, because even if the circumstances connected with that conduct be not above suspicion, it has to be held that the confession was made after the impression caused by any possible inducement, threat or promise coming from the police had been clearly removed. The appropriate place for recording a confession is the Court-house, and if it is found to have been recorded in jail it is certainly an irregularity. But in the absence of anything to show that there was some ulterior motive in deciding to record it in jail, it cannot be contended merely on the strength of such irregularity that the confession was not voluntary. Hem Raj v. State of Ajmer, AIR 1954 SC 462 : 1954 CrLJ 1313 : 1954 SCJ 449.

[8528] ● Accused when retracts confession.—Even when the accused retracts the confession, when questioned about it under Section 42 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and makes various statements as to the circumstances in which he made it, such as, that he was given liquor, or that he was promised to be made an approver, and these suggestions are rejected by the Court as being false, that, in itself, does not relieve the prosecution of the burden which lies upon it to prove positively that the confession was voluntary, and if it fails in discharging that onus, the confession has to be rejected from consideration. In an accused is found to have been kept in police custody for a prolonged period immediately before his confession was recorded, that circumstance is sufficient in itself to stamp the confession as being not voluntary, unless the reason for his being kept in such custody is satisfactorily explained. In the present case, the accused who had been kept in jail custody was taken out of the jail, and had been kept in police custody for a fortnight before being sent up for making his confession. The prosecution had failed to give any satisfactory explanation as to why it had become necessary to do so.

The confession has to be rejected as the prosecution has failed to establish that the confession is voluntary. Nathu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 56 : 1956 CrLJ 152.

[8529] ● Confession when not voluntary.—There are two important principles of criminal jurisprudence. The accused is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt, and secondly, when he offers a reasonable explanation of his conduct, then, even though he cannot prove his assertions they should ordinarily be accepted, unless the circumstances of the case clearly indicate that his explanation is false.

If the Court is satisfied that there was ample opportunity for coercion and threats by the police while the accused was kept in a judicial lock-up, and if the accused asserts that this opportunity was fully utilised by the police by giving him threats at night-time several times, and there is nothing on record to show definitely that the assertion is false, and if the confession is retracted at the earliest opportunity, it must be held that there was a reasonable probability that what the accused asserted may be true. In such a case, it must be held that the prosecution has failed to establish that the confession was voluntary, and the confession must be rejected in considering the case against the accused. In the present case the accused was arrested for murder and was sent the next day to a Magistrate for recording a confession. The Magistrate decided to give him time "to cool down" and kept him in a judicial lock-up for 10 days before the confession was recorded. The admitted facts about this lock-up were that it was in charge of a police guard who was under the direct orders and supervision of the very Sub-Inspector who conducted the investigation in the case. The police lock-up also was within the jail compound. The police could talk to and see the accused through the bars of the judicial lock-up, and at night-time neither the peon who acted as a warder nor the Clerk-Jailor remained present at the judicial lock-up. Before the committing Magistrate the accused retracted the confession, and stated that it was made under repeated police threats given at night-time, that they frightened him, and that before these threats were given he was actually beaten after his arrest. This retraction was repeated in the Sessions Court on the same grounds. The assertion of the accused as to the circumstances in which he made the confession may or may not be true. But the important thing is that what he said is possible, and there is nothing on record to show that it is false. Such things can happen, and may have happened in the present case. Under these circumstances it has to be held that the prosecution has failed to establish that the confession was voluntary, and it has to be rejected. Aher Raja Khima v. State of Saurashtra, AIR 1956 SC 217 : 1956 CrLJ 426 : 1956 SCJ 243.

[8530] ● Confession once rejected as being not voluntary.—Once a confession is rejected as being not voluntary, the question whether it is true or whether it is sufficient for conviction does not at all have to be considered.

If a confession is rejected as being not voluntary, the question whether it is true, or whether it is corroborated by other evidence, or whether the confession of a co-accused lends it assurance, does not at all arise. In such a case, the Court has to kept the confession entirely out of consideration, and see whether the other evidence is sufficient by itself for conviction, and if it is not, the accused must be acquitted. Nathu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 56 : 1956 CrLJ 152.

[8531] ● Case resting on retracted confession.—In the present case : the three accused A, B and C were charged under Section 302, IPC. The prosecution case was that A had strangled a boy with the assistance of B and C. The case against A rested entirely on his retracted confession, the confession of B and C, and evidence that the dead body was found from a well.

The confession of A having been rejected as being not voluntary, the question of corroboration or assurance to it cannot at all arise, and the confession of B and C cannot be of any use in considering the case against A. The discovery of the dead body is not evidence of murder, and that evidence by itself, or even together with the confessions of the co-accused, cannot be held to be sufficient to establish the charge. Accused acquitted. Nathu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 56 : 1956 CrLJ 152.

[8532] ● Conviction of accused vesting on confession.—Once a confession is rejected as being not voluntary, the question whether it is true or false does not have to be considered at all. The question as to the truthfulness and reliability of a confession has to be gone into only after the Court is absolutely satisfied as to the voluntary character of the confession, and not till then. Similarly, the question whether the other evidence is or is not sufficient for the purpose of corroboration to a confession can arise only when it has been accepted as being involuntary and true, and not till then. Once a confession has been rejected, that only purpose for which the other evidence on record can be examined is not to see whether it is sufficient to lend corroboration to the confession, but only to see whether it is sufficient by itself for basing a conviction upon it. In such a case, if the other evidence is not found to be so sufficient, the accused must be acquitted, even though it may be of such a character that if the confession had been accepted it could have been considered sufficient for the purpose of corroborative support. In the present case, the conviction of the accused rested upon his confession and circumstantial evidence. The Court found that the confession was not voluntary and rejected it (See under the sub-head V above.) It then examined the other evidence and came to the conclusion that it was not sufficient by itself for the purpose of conviction. Conviction was set aside and the accused was acquitted. Aher Raja Khima v. State of Saurashtra, AIR 1956 SC 217 : 1956 CrLJ 426 : 1956 SCJ 243.

[8533] ● Prosecution when relies upon confession made by accused proper method of approach.—When the prosecution relies for its case upon a confession made by the accused, the proper method of approach is as under : If the confession is retracted by the accused and he claims that it was not voluntary, the Court must first determine whether it had been voluntarily made; then, if the Court does not reject it as being not voluntary, the next question is whether it is true and reliable; it is only when the Court is satisfied that it is both voluntary and true, that it must then proceed to examine its sufficiency for the purpose of conviction and the sufficiency of the other evidence on record for the purpose of corroboration. The three questions are independent of each other, and each must be decided on its own merits, before proceeding to examine the next in order. It is only when the Court comes to a clear conclusion that the confession is both voluntary and true that it should proceed to go into the question of its sufficiency, and not till then. Balbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 216 : 1957 CrLJ 481.

[8534] ● Confession Voluntary and True.—The Court must first consider whether a confession is "voluntary". If on a consideration of all the facts bearing upon the question, the Court finds that there are circumstances which throw a grave doubt upon its voluntary character, the matter is at an end, and the confession must be rejected. In such a case, there is no question of consideration of the further question whether it is "true". On the other hand, if after having carefully considered the question, the Court finds the confession to be voluntary, the matter does not end there, and the Court has the duty to consider further; whether the confession is "true". The Court would be in error if it assumed without enquiry the truth of the confession as arising from the very fact that it was voluntary. Thus before a confession can be accepted as the basis of a conviction, the Court must consider all the circumstances and factors in the case bearing upon the question not only as to whether it was voluntary but also as to whether it was true. The question as to whether there is any independent corroboration arises only when the Court has, after due consideration of all such circumstances and factors, arrived at the conclusion that the confession was both voluntary and true, and not till then. If the Court finds that the confession is both voluntary and true, the Court should, as a rule of prudence, further consider whether it is supported by such corroboration as the Court considers sufficient for lending it assurance. Sarwan Singh Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 637 : 1957 CrLJ 1014 : 1957 CrLJ 699.

[8535] ● Accused—When retracts his confession.—When an accused retracts his confession in Court, the first thing which the Court has to determine is whether it was voluntary. The burden of proof as to the voluntary character of a confession no doubt rests upon the prosecution, but in the absence of any circumstances to throw a doubt upon its voluntary character, the confession must be held to be voluntary, if the memorandum at its foot made by the recording Magistrate conforms to the requirements of law in this connection, and clearly shows that before recording it the accused was given sufficient time to think over the matter, that he was cautioned that he was not bound to make it, that he was informed that if he made the confession it would be used in evidence against him, and that he volunteered to make it after all these formalities were duly satisfied. If the certificate of the Magistrate as a witness, for the purpose of satisfying itself that all the necessary questions had been put to the accused and that the confession had been made voluntarily. If there are no circumstances in the case which themselves throw a doubt on the voluntary nature of the confession, and if the Court is satisfied that the requirements of law as regards the recording of the confession were duly fulfilled, it must be held that the prosecution has discharged the burden which lies upon it to show that a confession was made voluntarily. In such a case, if the accused asserts that the confession was not voluntary and was made as a result of any maltreatment or inducement or threat, the burden lies upon him to substantiate his assertions by affirmatively proving the existence of some circumstance which shows that his assertion might be true. In such a case, a bare assertion by the accused that the confession was not voluntary would not be enough for rejecting the confession, and in spite of its retraction by the accused, it would be open to the Court to take the confession into consideration. Balbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 216 : 1957 CrLJ 481.

[8536] ● Confession voluntary—Proper Safeguards for.—The requirements of Section 164, CrPC are not mere formalities. They are important safeguards for ensuring that the confession is entirely voluntary, and their careful observance is a solemn judicial function. Ram Chandra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 381 : 1957 CrLJ 559.

[8537] ● Confession—Precautions to be observed by Magistrate.—Precautions which must be observed by a Magistrate before he proceeds to record a confession, in order to assure himself that what the accused is going to state is absolutely 'voluntary'. Sarwan Singh Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 637 : 1957 CrLJ 1014 : 1957 SCJ 699.

[8538] ● Accused under Police influence—Confession—When made.—It was contended in the present case that though after the accused was first produced before a Magistrate for recording a confession he was kept in a Magisterial sub-jail for two days before the confession was recorded, the accused was brought from there on both occasions by a police constable, and that there was a gateway between police-station and the jail which always remind open, and that therefore the mind of the accused was not free from police influence at the time when the confession was made. Held : In the absence of anything further to show that he continued to be under the influence of the police during the period of the two days when he was in Magisterial custody, these facts, by themselves are not sufficient to support the suggestion that the accused was still under police influence when his confession was recorded. Subramania Goun- dan v. State of Madras, AIR 1958 SC 66 : 1958 CrLJ 238 : 1958 SCJ 321.

[8539] ● "Appears" means "seems"—Degree of proof.—In the present case, the accused who was an officer in the office of the Chief Engineer was convicted of the offence of theft under Section 379, Penal Code, arising from temporary removal by him of an official file from the office for the purpose of enabling a private contractor to remove and substitute some documents in the file. The prosecution case was that when a departmental enquiry was held by a Secretary to the Government, the accused had made a confession to him wherein he had in clear terms admitted the commission of the offence. The conviction was based mainly upon this confession. Under Section 24 of the Evidence Act, a confession made by an accused person is irrelevant in a criminal proceedings, if it appears to the Court,

1. that the making of the confession was caused by any inducement, threat or promise, 2. that the said threat, inducement or promise had reference to the charge against the accused person, 3. that it proceeded from a person in authority, and 4. that it was sufficient to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceeding against him.

The crucial word is "appears" and the proper meaning of the word is "seems". The word imports a lesser degree of probability than proof. The test of proof under Section 3 of the Act is that there is such a high degree of probability that a prudent man ought to act on the assumption that the thing is true. But under Section 24 of the Act the stringent rule as to proof is waived or relaxed and a lesser degree of assurance is laid down as the criterion. Even so, Section 24 does not warrant a Court in basing its opinion on pure surmise, and it must base its opinion on evidence and circumstances. The result is that it is open to the Court to base its conclusion that making of the confession was caused by some threat, inducement or promise on the evidence and the circumstances in a particular case, even though the said fact is not strictly proved. It is not possible or advisable to lay down an inflexible standard for the guidance of Courts which would apply in every case, and in the ultimate analysis it is for the Court before which the question arises to decide on the circumstance of the particular case whether the confession relied upon by the prosecution was or was not voluntarily made. Pyare Lal Bhargava v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1963 SC 1094 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 178.

[8540] ● Confession—Threat etc. must proceed from person in authority.—It is a question of fact in each case whether the person from whom the threat, inducement or promise proceeded is a person in authority or not, and what is more important, whether it is sufficient to cause a reasonable belief in the mind of the accused that by making the confession he would gain an advantage or avoid any evil in reference to the proceeding against him. While the opinion to be formed is that of the Court, the criterion laid down is the reasonable belief in the mind of the accused, and thus the section makes it clear that it is the duty of the Court to place itself in the position of the accused and to form an opinion as to the state of his mind in the circumstances of the case. Pyare Lal Bhargava v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1963 SC 1094 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 178.

[8541] ● Lower Courts holding statement not caused by threat.—In the present case, there was no doubt that the Secretary to whom the accused made the confession was a person in authority within the meaning of Section 24. However, that alleged threat was that if the appellant did not disclose the truth, the matter would be placed in the hands of the police. This was only a general statement which any person who has lost his property and is not able to find out the culprit would make. It may be that such a statement in different circumstances may amount to a threat, or it may also be that another Court may take a different view even in the same circumstances. But the question whether a statement appears to the Court to be a threat or not is a question of fact and in this case the three lower Courts, the trial Court, the Sessions Judge in appeal and the High Court in revision, had concurrently held that in the circumstances of the case, the statement made by the Secretary did not appear to be a threat within the meaning of Section 24. That being so, the Supreme Court would not, in the exercise of its powers under Article 136, be prepared to differ from the concurrent finding given by the three Courts that the statement did not constitute a threat, in the absence of any permissible ground for disturbing that finding. Pyare Lal Bhargava v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1963 SC 1094 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 178.

[8542] ● Unambiguous confession, if admissible in evidence.—One stage of the investigation suspected of complicity in this murder and, therefore, he should be treated no better than an accomplice. In our opinion, this criticism is not justified An unambiguous confession, if admissible in evidence, and free from suspicion suggesting its falsity, is a valuable piece of evidence which possesses a high probative force because it emanates directly from the person committing the offence. But in the process of proof of an alleged confession the Court has to be satisfied that, it is voluntary, it does not appear to be the result of inducement, threat or promise as contemplated by Section 24, Indian Evidence Act and the surrounding circumstances do not indicate that it is inspired by some improper or collateral consideration suggesting that it may not be true. For this purpose, the Court must scrutinise all the relevant factors, such as, the person to whom the confession is made, the time and place of making it, the circumstances in which it is made and finally the actual words used. Thimma v. State of Mysore, AIR 1971 SC 1871 : (1970) 2 SCC 105 : 1971 CrLJ 1314 : 1971 (1) SCR 215.

[8543] ● Confession made to Police Officer.— Sections 24 to 26 form a trio containing safeguards against accused persons being coerced or induced to confess guilt. Towards that end Section 24 makes a confession irrelevant in a criminal proceeding if it is made as a result of inducement, threat or promise from a person in authority, and is sufficient to give an accused person grounds to suppose that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil in reference to the proceedings against him. Under Section 25, a confession made to a Police Officer under any circumstances is not admissible in the evidence against him. Section 26 provides next that no confession made by a prisoner in custody even to a person other than a Police Officer is admissible unless made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate. Kanda Padayachi v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1972 SC 66 : (1971) 2 SCC 641 : 1972 CrLJ 11 : 1972 (1) SCR 450 : 1971 CAR 453 : 1972 Andh WR 70 : 1972 All CrR 140.

[8544] ● Expression "believe"—Meaning of—Distinction between "believe" and "hope".— There is a marked difference in what is connoted by "hope" and "believe", "to hope" means "to want and expect", "to look forward with expectation and desire". "Hope" is a wishful feeling floating on nebulous foams projected into the unknown further. Deep hidden in "hope" dwells a lingering doubt, a speck of suspicions, that what is desired and expected may not turn out true. Not unoften, if the mind of the person hoping, there lurks subconscious fear that the "hope" may turn out a "dupe". In contrast with it, the term "believe" in the sense in which it is used in S. 164, CrPC has logical confidence or "rational conviction" as its essential element. It imports as very high degree of expectation brought by reason, a satisfaction fast-rooted in terra firma, free from doubt as to the truth of the fact perceived and believed. In the light of the above discussion we are of the opinion that the Magistrate advisedly chose to use the word "hope" instead of "believe" in the memorandum Ex P-28, because he was not fully convinced that the confession, Ex, P-27, had been voluntarily made, the Magistrate's mind being troubled by suspicion and doubt as to the voluntariness of the confession. The retracted confession, Ex P-27, therefore, must be excluded from consideration. Chandran v. State of Madras, AIR 1978 SC 1574 : (1978) 4 SCC 90 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 528 (540) : 1978 CrLR (SC) 455 : 1978 UJ (SC) 671 : (1979) 1 SCR 176.

[8545] ● Requirement of Section 164, CrPC—Non compliance confession—Not admissible.— To say that the accused was "in a position" or mood to give a voluntary statement, falls far short of vouching that upon questioning the accused, he (Magistrate) had "reason to believe that the confession is being voluntarily made", which under Section 164 is a sine qua non for the exercise of jurisdiction to record the confession. But that section does not make it obligatory for the Magistrate to append at the end of the record of the preliminary questioning, a certificate as to the anticipated voluntariness of the confession about to be recorded. But the law does peremptorily require that after recording the confession of the accused, the Magistrate must append at the foot of the record a memorandum certifying that he believes that the confession was voluntarily made. The reason for requiring compliance with this mandatory requirement at the close of the recording of the confession, appears to be that it is only after hearing the confession and observing the demeanour of the person making it, that the Magistrate is in the best position to append the requisite memorandum certifying the voluntariness of the confession made before him. If, the Magistrate recording a confession of an accused person produced before him in the course of police investigation, does not, on the face of the record, certify in clear, categorical terms his satisfaction or belief as to the voluntary nature of the confession recorded by him, nor testifies orally, as to such satisfaction or belief, the defect would be fatal to the admissibility and use of the confession against the accused at the trial. It is not possible to hold that the Magistrate was ignorant of the different in the meaning of the words "hope" and "believe" and that he unwittingly chose the former, while in reality, he intended to express what was meant by the latter. There is every probability that the use of the word "hope" instead of "believe" in the memorandum. Chandran v. State of Madras, AIR 1978 SC 1574 :

(1978) 4 SCC 90 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 1574 : 1978 CrLJ 1693 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 455.

[8546] ● Confession—Reliability—Tests.—The twin tests to be applied to evaluate a confession : (1) whether the confession was perfectly voluntary, and (2) if so, whether it is true and trustworthy. The learned Judge pointed out that if the first test is not satisfied the question of applying the second test does not arise. Then the Court indicated one broad method by which a confession can be evaluated. The Court should carefully examine the confession and compare it with the rest of the evidence, in the light of the surrounding circumstances and probabilities of the case. If on such examination and comparison, the confession appears to be a probable catalogue of events and naturally fits in with the rest of the evidence and the surrounding circumstances, it may be taken to have satisfied the second test. Shankaria v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1978 SC 1248 : (1978) 3 SCC 435 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 439 : 1978 CrLJ 1251.

[8547] ● Confession made to Customs Officer under coercion.—We would consider it extremely unsafe to regard the confession exhibit Z-383 signed by the appellant as having been made by him voluntarily and therefore trustworthy. The appellant, in our opinion, has shown the existence of circumstances which make it appear to the Court that the confession may well have been obtained in a manner which would bring it within the ambit of Section 24 of the Evidence Act, it being undisputed that the concerned officers of the Department of Customs were 'persons in authority' within the meaning of that expression as used in the section. Sevantilal Karsondas Modi v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 705 : (1979) 2 SCC 58 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 360 : 1979 CrLJ 645 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 558.

[8548] ● Confessional statement voluntary.—A perusal of these confessional statements, Exs. 6 and 7 shows that they are more or less exculpatory of the maker, for Henry had attributed everything to Sunil and stated that he had done everything at the instance of Sunil while Sunil had attributed the important role in the crime to Henry. This would not normally be the position if the confessions were the result of tutoring by the police. The confessional statement of Henry is quite long while that of Sunil is much longer. As remarked by the learned Sessions Judge these confessions are full of facts and minute details which would not be there normally if the confessions are the result of tutoring or of compulsion. The circumstantial evidence relied upon by the trial Court and the High Court lend assurance to the genuineness and voluntary nature of these confessions. They have no doubt been retracted, but in view of the fact that they are generally corroborated by the circumstantial evidence in ample measure, there is no satisfactory reason for the confessions not being accepted and acted upon. In these circumstances, we agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the confessional statements of Henry and Sunil Exs. 6 and 7, are voluntary and can be acted upon, together with the circumstantial evidence, for basing a conviction. Henry Westmuller Roberts v. State of Assam, AIR 1985 SC 823 : (1985) 3 SCC 291 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 364 : 1985 CrLJ 1079 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 205 : 1985 (1) Crimes 877.

[8549] ● Confession—Free from all infirmities.—A perusal of the Statement of Ram Sagar made under S. 164 of the Code will go to show that he himself made an application before the Magistrate requesting him to record his confessional statement and according to Ram Sagar it was at his instance and request that his confessional statement, was recorded by the Magistrate, PW-76, in which he had confessed the guilt. Ram Sagar, PW-3, stated that the Magistrate had told him that it was his own choice and volition to make or not to make the confessional statement and that he made the statement on his free will. He denied the suggestion that while making the statement under S. 164, CrPC any Police Officer was present there and deposed that he was not given any assurance by the CBI officials that if he would become approver he would be set at liberty or discharged from the case. He, however, stated that he himself thought that if he made correct statement before the Magistrate he may be set at liberty. He asserted that he made a true disclosure of the circumstances relating to the offence before the Magistrate in his statement under S. 164, CrPC irrespective of the fact whether he would be released or not. Ram Sagar was subjected to a very lengthy and searching cross-examination in this regard but nothing could be elicited from him to suggest that he did not make true disclosure of the facts of the case or that he made the confession under threat or pressure or on any assurances from the prosecuting agency or from any official in authority. The statement that he made gives an impression that it was made on his own volition which fact is further fortified from the statement of the Judicial Magistrate who recorded his statement. PW-76 deposed that before recording the statement of Ram Sagar under S. 164, CrPC he had given the necessary warning to him as required by law and this fact is borne out from the certificate Ex "A" appended to that effect in the confessional statement before he proceeded to record the confession. This is indicative of the fact that he did caution Ram Sagar and sounded a note of warning that he is not bound to make the confessional statement and if he chooses to make any the same may be used against him and it was thereafter that he made the confession voluntary on his own volition. He deposed that Ram Sagar did not tell him that he made his confessional statement under any threat or fear or on any promise. In view of this positive evidence on record it is difficult to accept that the confessional statement made by the approver Ram Sagar under S. 164, CrPC was not voluntary or under any fear or promise or assurance. On the contrary, the confession in free from all infirmities and confirms to the requirement of Section 164, CrPC. Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, AIR 1994 SC 2420 (2436) : 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80 : 1994 CrLJ 3271 : 1994 CrLR (SC) 725 : JT 1994 (4) SC 309 : (1994) 2 Crimes 1027.

[8550] ● Confession—Finding by Designated Court.—So far as the confessional statements were concerned, the learned Designated Court reached the following conclusions :

> "(i) That they appear to have been pre-recorded and got typed by some person other than the District Supdt. of Police Sri Ganganagar (PW-6).
> (ii) That Supdt. of Police (PW-6) has simply made the endorsement (outlined above) and put his signatures and office seal in a mechanical manner without complying with the mandatory provisions of Section 15 of the Act read with Rule 15 of the 1987 Rules framed under the said Act.
> (iii) That the facts and circumstances surrounding the recording and making of confession cast great doubts on their veracity and voluntariness and no reliance can be placed on them.
> (iv) That these statements cannot be extended to show that the matter of any of these deposits in fact admitted any offence or in any manner substantially admitted all facts constituting any of the offences charges against them individually or collectively.
> (v) That none of the aforesaid statements Exp. 12 to Exp. 19 can be made basis for holding any of these accused persons guilty even as accomplices; there being no corroboration in material respect of any of the offence charged against them by any independent evidence.
> (vi) These alleged confessions Exp. 12 to Exp. 19 being devoid of voluntariness and truthfulness cannot be made basis of convicting any of the accused.

That any of the accused committed any terrorist act punishable under Section 3(2)(ii) of the Act 1987 or in any way conspired, attempted to commit; abetted advised or incite or knowing facilitated the commission of a terrorist act or did any act preparatory to a terrorist act.

We see no ground to interfere with the impugned judgment of acquittal rendered by the Designated Court. State of Rajasthan v. Mahendra Singh, AIR 1995 SC 2326 : 1995 CrLJ 3640 and 3981.

[8551] ● Judicial confession—Recording of validity.—From the confessional statement (Exhibit P. 11) we find that the Magistrate (P.W. 8) first disclose his identity and told him that he was not bound to make any confession and if he did so, it might be used as evidence against him. After administering the above caution the Magistrate recorded the confession and then made the memorandum required under sub-section (4) of Section 164, CrPC In our considered view, the confession so recorded is in utter disregard of the statutory provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 164, CrPC Under the above sub-section the Magistrate is first required to explain to the accused that he was not bound to make a confession and that if he did so, it might be used against him. Though this requirement has been complied with in the instant case, the other requirement which obligates the Magistrate to put questions to the accused to satisfy himself that the confession was voluntary so as to enable him to give the requisite certificate under sub-section (4), has not been fulfilled for, the learned Magistrate did not ask any question whatsoever to ascertain whether the appellant was making the confession voluntarily. In view of such flagrant omission to comply with the mandatory requirement of Section 164(2), CrPC we must hold that the High Court was not at all justified in entertaining the confession as a piece of evidence, much less, a reliable one. Once the confession is left out of consideration—as it has got to be—the only other piece of evidence to connect the appellant with the alleged offences are the recoveries allegedly made pursuant to his statement. Even if we proceed on the assumption that the evidence led by the prosecution in this behalf is reliable, still, considering its nature, we are unable to hold that it can be made the sole basis for conviction even for the offence under Section 404, IPC. Preetam v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1997 SC 445 : (1996) 10 SCC 432 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1343 : 1996 CrLJ 4458.

[8552] ● Confession made in custody.—It was submitted on behalf of appellant that the confession was made while he was in custody and it was given by him under threat and pressure PW-1 had taken the appellant to her office and the confessional statement came to be recorded at about 8 p.m., no doubt, while the appellant was in custody of PW-1. But that by itself cannot be regarded as sufficient to hold that the confessional statement was made by the appellant under pressure or compulsion. No complaint was made by the appellant when he was produced before the Magistrate on the next day nor had he made any complaint thereafter till his statement came to be recorded under S. 313, CrPC It was only during the trial that a suggestion was made to PW-1 and subsequently when the appellant gave a statement under S. 313, CrPC, he stated that the confessional statement was given by him under threat and pressure. Even while giving his statement under S. 313, CrPC, the appellant had not stated what was the nature of the threat given to him or in what manner pressure was brought upon him. It was a vague statement. If in such circumstances the Trial Court held that the confessional statement was voluntarily made and thought it safe to rely upon the same it cannot be said that it committed any error in doing so. We are also of the view that the said confessional statement was made by the appellant voluntarily and, therefore, it can be used against him. Pon Adithan v. Deputy Director, Narcotic Control Bureau, Madras, AIR 1999 SC 2353 : (1999) 6 SCC 1 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1051 (1055) : 1999 CrLJ 3663 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 443 : JT 1999 (4) SC 540 : (1999) 3 Crimes 133.

[8553] ● Confession recorded under 'TADA' before Police Officer.—While a confession recorded under the TADA Act before a police officer not below the rank of Superintendent of Police even under police custody is admissible but not under other criminal trials. Keeping an accused under police custody in what manner with what precautions is a matter for the police administration to decide. It is for them to decide what essential measures is to be taken in a given case for the purpose of security. What security, in which manner are all in the realm of administrative exigencies and would depend on the class of accused, his antecedents and other in formation etc. The security is also necessary for the police personnel keeping him in custody or other personnel of the police administration including the public at large. Thus what measure has to be taken is for the police administration to decide and if they feel greater security is required in a case of trial under the TADA Act, it is for them to decide accordingly. The preamble of the TADA Act itself reveals that this Act makes special provisions for the prevention of and forthwith keeping with terrorists and disruptive activities. In fact earlier TADA Act of 1985 was repealed to bring in the present Act to strengthen the prosecution to bring to the books those involved under it without their filtering out, by bringing in more stringent measures under it. In this background, we do not find the handcuffing of the appellant or another policeman being present in the room with the chain of his handcuff or armed guards present outside the room to be such to constitute that the appellant confessional statement was not made voluntary. It has to be kept in mind that Section 15 and Rule 15 of the TADA Act and the Rules have taken full precaution to see that confessional statement is only recorded when he makes it voluntarily. First, confession could only be recorded by a police officer to the rank of Superintendent of Police or above. Such police officer has to record in his own handwriting, he has to clearly tell such accused person that such confession made by him shall be used against him and if such police officer after questioning comes to the conclusion that it is not going to be voluntarily he shall not record the same. Keeping this in the background which is complied in the present case and keeping the administrative exigencies under which an accused is kept under handcuff with armed guards etc. which may be for the antecedents activities of the appellant as terrorist, for the purpose of security, then this could in no way be constituted to be a threat or coercion to the accused for making his confessional statement. The policeman holding his chain of his handcuff was only a constable and the person recording his confession was of the rank of Superintendent of Police. The Superintendent of Police conveyed confidence to the appellant and made it clear to the appellant as aforesaid. After all this, if the appellant was still ready and made his confessional statement, then merely presence of a constable a subordinate of Superintendent of Police, who was holding chain cannot be constituted to be such to be a threat which could induce him not to make any voluntary statement. Hence, we have no hesitation to hold that the presence of a constable in a room could in fact or law to be constituted to be such to hold that such confessional statement was not made voluntarily. Mere handcuffing and presence of a policeman we fail to understand in what way could it be said to be a threat to the accused appellant. It is not the case that before making confessional statement any inducement, threat or promise by any other word or deed was made to him by any person which resulted into his making the said confessional statement. Firstly, we find total absence of inducement, threat or promise in the present case as against the appellant and as we have said handcuffing, presence of a policeman holding chain of handcuff or even keeping armed guard outside the room which being parts of the security measure by itself cannot penetrate into the realm as to make a confessional statement not to be voluntarily made. Gurdeep Singh alias Deep v. State (Delhi Admn.), AIR 1999 SC 3646 : (2000) 1 SCC 498 : 1999 CrLJ 4573 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 702 : 1999 (3) Crimes 243.

[8554] ● Confessional statement—When obtained by force.—In his examination under S. 313, Cr.P. Code he had stated that the statement was obtained by force and that he was beaten by the officers of Narcotic Control Bureau. He had not stated at that time that he did not know Apart from the officers of Narcotic Department there is evidence of an employee of the Hotel where the appellant has stayed, who has proved some of the entries made in English by the appellant himself in the English in the register. The said statement of the appellant was recorded in 1990. He retracted it in 1994. Till then he had not complained against any officer as regards the alleged beating or use of force nor he had stated that he did not know English. Therefore, this contention cannot be accepted. Kalema Tumba v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2000 SC 402 (403) : (1999) 8 SCC 257 : 2000 CrLJ 507 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 38.

[8555] ● Confessional statement—No complaint about recording of under coercion.—In the present case undisputedly when the accused were produced before the Magistrate they did not make a complaint that the confessional statements were recorded under coercion Further, R. 15 of TADA Rules is complied with and each accused making the confession was explained that he was not bound to make it and in case he makes it, it could be used against him as evidence. Further, the officer had also verified that accused was making the confessional statement voluntarily and certificate to that effect is also attached to the said confessional statement. Lal Singh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2001 SC 746 : (2001) 3 SCC 221 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 472 (489) : 2001 CrLJ 978 : JT 2001 (1) SC 410.

[8556] ● Confessional statement recording of under Section 15 of TADA.—"Sub-r. (5) of R. 15 of the TADA Rules provides that the confession recorded under S. 15 of the TADA shall be sent forthwith to the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate or the Chief Judicial Magistrate having jurisdiction over the area in which such confession has been recorded and such Magistrate shall forward the record of confession so received to the Designated Court which may take cognizance of the offence. R. 15 does not oblige such Magistrate either to open the envelop containing the confessional statement recorded by the Police Officer or to satisfy himself regarding, the voluntary nature of the confession. The Magistrate, at the most, can record the statement of the accused if made regarding alleged harassment, torture or the like. If the Magistrate, referred to in sub-r. (5) of R. 15 has to ascertain the voluntary nature of the confessional statement, the purpose of S. 15 authorising a Police Officer to record the confessional statement shall stand frustrated. It was, therefore, not correct on the part of the Designated Judge to hold, "it was obligatory on the part of the Magistrate to question the accused as to whether they had made the said statements voluntarily or otherwise and that ought to have been formed as a part of the record of the confessional statements which were sent to her". Therefore, in view of the provisions as contained in S. 15 of the TADA Act, R. 15, of the TADA Rules and law laid down by this Court in Kartar Singh case, 1994 CrLJ 3139 the Designated Judge committed a mistake of law in not relying upon the confession on the ground that PW-44 had not given a separate certificate and had not herself inquired about the voluntary nature of the confessional statement" State of Maharashtra v. Bharat Chaganlal Raghani, AIR 2002 SC 409 (421, 423) : (2001) 9 SCC 1 : 2002 CrLJ 944.

[8557] ● Confession—Test for deciding acceptability of.—The Court is to apply double test for deciding the acceptability of a confession i.e. (i) whether the confession was perfectly voluntary and (ii) is so, whether it is true and trustworthy. Satisfaction of the first test is a sine qua non for its admissibility in evidence. If the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise, such as mentioned in Section 24 of the Evidence Act, it must be excluded and rejected brevi manu. If the first test is satisfied, the Court must before acting upon the confession reach the finding that what is stated therein is true and reliable. Mohd. Khalid v. State of W.B., (2002) 7 SCC 334 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1734 : (2002) 4 Crimes 160 (SC).

[8558] ● Confessional statement—Recording of.—The prosecution relied on a confession attributed to the appellant as recorded by a Deputy Commissioner of Police (PW-4). That confession is sought to be admitted under S. 15 of TADA. If the contents of the documents styled as confession can be acted on as voluntary and genuine, it would provide evidence for the disruptive activities said to have been perpetrated by the appellant Learned Senior Counsel, focused on the reliability of the said confession. The first point raised against the confession is that when appellant was produced before PW-4, he did not administer a caution to him that he was not bound to make any such confession. PW-4 asked him the question whether he was aware that he was not bound to make a confession to which the appellant answered in the affirmative, then only he proceeded further and recorded the confession, Thus, it is clear that what was required by law for compliance with as precautionary measures have been complied with by PW-4. Of course, the witness PW-4 has deposed in Court that he explained to the confessor that he was not bound to make such a confession. There is no requirement that the confessor should be administered with such caution on every day the officer meets him. It is enough that the caution is administered before the accused made the confessional statement. Nazir Ahmad Bhatt v. State of Delhi, AIR 2002 SC 30 (32) : (2002) 1 SCC 474 : 2002 CrLJ 213 : (2002) 1 Crimes 126.

[8559] ● Confession caused by any inducement threat or promise irrelevant in criminal proceeding.—If it appears to the Court that the making of the confession was caused by any inducement, threat or promise proceeding from a person authority, the confession is liable to be excluded from evidence. The expression "appears" connotes that the Court need not go to the extent of holding that the threat, etc. has in fact been proved. If the facts and circumstances emerging from the evidence adduced make it reasonably probable that the confession could be the result of threat, inducement or pressure, the Court will refrain from acting on such confession, even if it be a confession made to a Magistrate or a person other than a police officer. Confessions leading to discovery of a fact which is dealt with under Section 27 is an exception to the rule of exclusion of confession made by an accused in the custody of a police officer. Consideration of a proved confession affecting the person making it as well as the co-accused is provided for by Section 30. Briefly and broadly, this is the scheme of the law of evidence vis-à-vis confessions. The allied provision which needs to be noticed at this juncture is Section 162, CrPC. It prohibits the use of any statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of investigation for any purpose at any enquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation. However, it can be used to a limited extent to contradict a witness as provided for by Section 145 of the Evidence Act. Sub-section (2) of Section 162 makes it explicit that the embargo laid down in the section shall not be deemed to apply to any statement falling within clause (1) of Section 32 or to affect the provisions of Section 27 of the Evidence Act. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1773) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[8560] ● Full Compliance of Section 164 CrPC.—Confession Voluntary.—On 24th August 2001, upon receipt of an application moved by Superintendent of Police for recording dying declaration of A-1 by a Magistrate, DSP Man Singh, who partly investigated the case, approached the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Hisar, who, in turn, marked the said application to Pardeep Kumar, PW. 62. After reaching the hospital and before recording the statement, PW. 62 first sought opinion of Dr. Anant Ram (PW 32) as to the fitness of A-1 to make the statement. As in the opinion of PW. 32, A-1 was fit to make the statement, PW. 62 proceeded to record it, which is in question and answer form. It appears from Ext. 187 as well as from the questions and answers which were put to A-1 that PW. 62 warned A-1 that she was not bound to make any confessional statement and in case she did so, it might be used against her as evidence. In spite of this warning, A-1 volunteered to make the statement and only thereafter the statement was recorded by PW. 62. In the certificate that was appended to the said confessional statement PW. 62 has very categorically stated that he had explained to A-1 that she was not bound to make a confession and that if she did so, any confession she would make might be used as evidence against her and that he believed that the confession was voluntarily made. He further stated that he read over the statement to the person making it and admitted by her to be correct and that it contained a full and true account of the statement made by her. It has been further stated by PW. 62 in his evidence that at the time of recording of the confession it was he and PW 32, who were present in the room and there was neither any police officer nor anybody else within the hearing or sight when the statement was recorded. It also appears from the evidence of PW 62 that it took about 2½ hours for him to record the statement of A-1, which runs into 5 pages, which he started at 10.53 p.m. and ended at 1.28 a.m. which goes to show that A-1 took her time before replying to the questions put. PW 62 has also stated that she had given the statement after taking due time after understanding each aspect. It also appears that he was satisfied that she was not under any pressure from any corner. Therefore, it is evident from the certificate appended to the confessional statement by PW 62 that the confessional statement was made by the accused voluntarily. Of course, he failed to record the question that was put by him to the accused whether there was any pressure on her to give a statement, but PW 62 having stated in his evidence before the court that he had asked the accused orally whether she was under any pressure threat or fear and he was satisfied that A-1 was not under any pressure from any corner, that in the room in which the said confessional statement was recorded it was only he and PW 32 who were present and none else and that no police officer was available even within the precincts of the hospital, the said defect, is cured by S. 463 as the mandatory requirement provide under S. 164(2), namely, explaining to the accused that he was not bound to make a statement and if a statement is made the same might be used against him has been complied with and the same is established from the certificate appended to the statement and from the evidence of PW 62. Therefore, there is no hesitation in holding that the judicial confession having been recorded according to the procedure set out in Section 164 read with Section 281 and the defect made while recording the same being curable by Section 463, it is admissible in evidence. Ram Singh v. Sonia, AIR 2007 SC 1218 : (2007) 3 SCC 1 : 2007 CrLJ 1642 (1649, 1650).

[8561] ● Voluntary confession is admissible in evidence..—A confessional statement, as is well known, is admissible in evidence. It is relevant fact. The Court may rely thereupon if it is voluntarily given. It may also form the basis of the conviction, wherefor the Court may only have to satisfy itself in regard voluntariness and truthfulness thereof and in given cases, some corroboration thereof. A confession which is not retracted even at a later stage of the trial and even accepted by the accused in his examination under Section 313 of the Code, can be fully relied upon. In this case the confession was not retracted, the appellant no. 1 in his examination under Section 313, CrPC accepted the same. The confession was relied upon the conviction of the accused under Section 302 IPC & 376 IPC was upheld. Bishnu Prasad Sinha v. State of Assam, AIR 2007 (SC) 848 : (2007) 11 SCC 467 : 2007 CrLJ 1145 (1157) (SC) : 2007 (1) Crimes 147 (SC).

[8562] ● Confession to be Voluntary.—Confession to be acceptable must be voluntary and free from suspicion. Mohtesham Mohd. Ismail v. Special Director Enforcement Directorate. (2007) 8 SCC 254 : 2007 3 SCC (Cri) 531.

[8563] ● Voluntary Confession—Value.—Judicial Confession if voluntary can solely form the basis of confession. Alok Nath Dutta v. State of West Bengal, (2007) 12 SCC 230 : (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 264 : (2007) 1 Crimes 321.

[8564] ● Voluntary Confession can be accepted.—If the confessional statement is found to be voluntary and free from pressure, it can be accepted. This is no doubt true, but it all depends on the facts and circumstances of each case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in this connection whether a particular alleged confessional statement should be accepted. Francis Stanly v. Intelligence officer, NCB Tiravanthapuram, AIR 2007 SC 794 : (2006) 13 SCC 210 : (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 618 : 2007 CrLJ 1157 (1159).

[8565] ● Voluntary nature of confession—Burden of proof. Burden lies on the prosecution that establish that the confession is voluntary and is not a result of threat etc. Vinod Solanki v. Union of India, (2008) 16 SCC 537 : 2008 (17) SCR 1070 : JT 2009 (1) SC 1.

[8566] ● Involuntary confession.—An involuntary confession is one which is not the result of the free will of the maker of it. So where the statement is made as a result of harassment and continuous interrogation for several hours after the person is treated as an offender and accused, such statement must be regarded as involuntary. The inducement may take the form of a promise or if a threat and often the inducement involves both promise and threat, a promise of forgiveness if disclosure is made and threat of prosecution, if it is not. A promise is always attached to the confession alternative while a threat is always attached to the silence alternative; thus in one case the prisoner is measuring the net advantage of the promise, minus the general undesirability of a false confession, as against the present unsatisfactory situation while in the other case he is measuring the net advantages of the present satisfactory situation, minus the general undesirability of the confession against the threatened harm. Kusuma Ankama Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 2819 : (2008) 13 SCC 257 : 2008 CrLJ 3502 : 2008 (10) SCR 89.

[8567] ● Voluntariness of confession—Doubtful.—A confession cannot be used against an accused person unless the court is satisfied that it was voluntary and at the stage the question whether it is true or false does not arise. If the facts and circumstances surrounding the making of a confession appear to cast a doubt on the veracity or voluntariness of the confession, the Court may refuse to act upon the confession even if its is admissible in evidence. Kusuma Ankama Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC

[8568] ● Confession—When voluntary.—A confession would be voluntary if it is made by the accused in a fit state of mind, and if it is not caused by any inducement, threat or promise which has reference to the charge against him, proceeding from a person in authority. It would not be involuntary, if the inducement, (a) does not have reference to the charge against the accused person; or (b) it does not proceed from a person in authority; or (c) it is not sufficient, in the opinion of the court to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that, by making it, he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him. Kusuma Ankama Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 (SC) 2819 : (2008) 13 SCC 257 : 2008 CrLJ 3502 : 2008 (10) SCR 89 : JT 2008 (7) 360.

[8569] ● Confession as a result of inducement, threat or promise etc.—Since the object of the rule is to exclude only those confessions which are testimonially untrustworthy, the inducement, threat or promise must be such as is calculated to lead to an untrue confession. Kusuma Ankama Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 2819 : (2008) 13 SCC 257 : 2008 CrLJ 3502 : 2008 (10) SCR 89 : JT 2008 (7) SC 360.

[8570] ● Confession caused by inducement, threat, promise etc.—A confession made by an accused person is irrelevant in criminal proceedings, if the making of the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement threat or promise (1) having reference to the charge against the accused person, (2) proceeding from a person in authority, and (3) sufficient, in the opinion of the Court to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him. Kusuma Ankama Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 2819 : (2008) 13 SCC 257 : 2008 CrLJ 3502 : 2008 (10) SCR 89 : JT 2008 (7) 360.

[8571] ● Involuntary confession—Scope.—An involuntary confession is one which is not the result of the free will of the maker of it. So where the statement is made as a result of harassment and continuous interrogation for several hours after the person is treated as an offender and accused, such statement must be regarded as involuntary. The inducement may take the form of a promise or of a threat, and often the inducement involves both promise and threat, a promise of forgiveness if disclosure is made and threat of prosecution if it is not. (See : Woodroff's Evidence, 9th Edn. P. 284) A promise is always attached to the confession alternative while a threat is always attached to the silence alternative, thus is one case the prisoner is measuring the net advantage of the promise minus the general undesirability of a false confession, as against the present unsatisfactory situation, while in the other case he is measuring the net advantages of the present satisfactory situation, minus the general undesirability of the confession against the threatened harm. Kusuma Ankama Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 2819 : (2008) 13 SCC 257 : 2008 CrLJ 3502 : 2008 (10) SCR 89 : JT 2008 (11) 360 : 2008 (9) Scale 652 : 2008 (6) SLT 169 : 2008 (7) SRJ 164.

[8572] ● Confession—Use.—A confession cannot be used against an accused person unless the Court is satisfied that it was voluntary and at that stage the question whether it is true or false does not arise. If the facts and circumstances surrounding the making of, a confession appear to cast a doubt on the veracity or voluntariness of the confession, the Court may refuse to act upon the confession, even if it is admissible in evidence. Kusuma Ankama Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 (SC) 2819 : (2008) 13 SCC 257 : 2008 CrLJ 3502 : 2008 (10) SCR 89 : 2008 (7) JT 360 : 2008 (9) Scale 652 : 2008 (6) SLT 169 : 2008 (7) SRJ 164.

[8573] ● Confession—Voluntariness.—Whether or not the confession was voluntary would depend on the facts and circumstances of each case, judged in the light of Section 24 of the Evidence Act. State of Punjab v. Harjagdev Singh, AIR 2009 SC 2693 (2695) : (2009) 16 SCC 91 : 2009 (8) SCR 54.

[8574] ● Confession as a result of harassment and continuous interrogation.—Where the statement is made as a result of harassment and continuous interrogation for several hours, after the person is treated as an offender and accused, such statement must be regarded as involuntary. State of Punjab v. Harjagdev Singh, AIR 2009 SC 2693 (2695) : (2009) 16 SCC 91 : 2009 (8) SCR 54.

[8575] ● Refusal of Court to act on confession.—If the facts and circumstances surrounding making of confession appear to cast a doubt on veracity or voluntariness of confession, the Court may refuse to act on confession even it is admissible in evidence. State of Punjab v. Ha- rjagdev Singh, AIR 2009 SC 2693 (2695) : (2009) 16 SCC 91 : 2009 (8) SCR 54.

[8576] ● Inducement, threat, promise.—"A promise is always attached to the confession alternative while a threat is always attached to the silence alternative; thus, in one case the prisoner is measuring the net advantage of the promise, minus the general undesirability of a false confession, as against the present unsatisfactory situation; while in the other case he is measuring the net advantages of the present satisfactory situation, minus the general undesirability of the confession against the threatened harm.

Since the object of the rule is to exclude only those confessions which are testimonially untrustworthy, the inducement, threat or promise must be such as is calculated to lead to an untrue confession. On the aforesaid analysis the Court is to determine the absence or presence of an inducement, promise etc. or its sufficiency and how or in what measure it worked on the mind of the accused. If the inducement, promise or threat is sufficient in the opinion of the Court, to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil, it is enough to exclude the confession. State of Punjab v. Harjagdev Singh, AIR 2009 (SC) 2693 : (2009) 16 SCC 91 : 2009 (8) SCR 54 : JT 2009 (7) SC 538.

[8577] ● Confession alleged to be made under police pressure.—Where the accused, who was released on bail on 18-1-2003 sent his confession in writing on 23-1-2003 while in judicial custody in jail, it could not be held that the confession was under any police pressure. Sansar Chand v. State of Rajasthan, (2010) 10 SCC 604.

6. CONVICTION BASED ON CONFESSION—PROPRIETY

[8578] ● Magistrate followed legal formalities in recording confession.—The recorded confession showed that the Magistrate followed the legal formalities in recording the confession. The Magistrate told the appellant that he was not bound to give any confession and if given, it would be used against him. The Magistrate also told the appellant as to whether anybody had used any force or pressure or coercion to make the confession statement. The appellant answered in the negative. The various answers given by the appellant to the queries made by the magistrate clearly showed that the confession was voluntary in nature. It was true that the appellant had made a statement that he was beaten up by the police for three days and that was recorded by the Magistrate that the appellant had showed his back and fingers, but there were no injuries or marks either on the back or on the fingers.

The appellant had time for reflection and the appellant was during this period in judicial custody. The appellant had given detailed recording as to how the incident happened. Description of the injuries found on the dead body of deceased in the post-mortem report was in conformity with the overt act described in the confession statement. Recovery had been affected at the instance of the accused-appellant and the "dhariya" and turban allegedly worn by the appellant at the time of incident were blood stained and they were recovered from the house of the appellant. Held, there was satisfactory evidence to prove the case against the appellant and the Sessions Judge as well as the High Court had rightly convicted the appellant for the offence, punishable under Section 302, IPC. Devi Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2005) 10 SCC 453 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1580 (1582).

7. MANNERS OF EXTRACTING CONFESSION—COMPULSION

[8579] ● Manners of extracting confession—Compulsion.—Compulsion may take many forms : A person accused of an offence may be subject to physical or mental torture. He may be starved or beaten and a confession may be extorted from him. By deceitful means he may be induced to believe that his son is being tortured in adjoining room and by such inducement he may be compelled to make an incriminating statement. Yusufalli Esmial Nagree v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 147 : 1968 CrLJ 103 : (1967) 3 SCR 720.

8. CONFESSION MADE TO POLICE OFFICER

[8580] ● Confession made to Police Officer.—The Law Commission of India in its 185th report on review of the Evidence Act has expressed strong views disfavouring the admission of confessions made to police officers. The commission commented that the basis for introducing Sections 25 and 26 in the Indian Evidence Act in 1872 helds good even today. The commission observed "we are compelled to say that confessions made easy, cannot replace the need for scientific and professional investigation."

In England, even though the confessions to the police can be received in evidence, the voluntariness of the confessions are tested by adopting stringent standards. Section 76 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act, 1984 deals with confession in England. The prosecution has to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the confession was made voluntarily and was reliable. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1787) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[8581] ● Confession—Admissibility Test as to voluntariness.—The Court of Appeal decision in R. v. Middleton, 1975 QB 191 : (1974) 2 All ER 1190 shows that whenever the admissibility of a confession is challenged "a trial within a trial" is conducted to test the voluntariness of such confession at the earliest. In England, in the light of the Human Rights Act of 1988, a fresh look is being taken into the existing provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act and other allied laws including the Law of Confessions.

In the United States, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court viz. Miranda v. Arizona, 348 US 436; Escobedo v. Illinois, 378 US 478 the prosecution cannot make use of the statements stemming from custodial interrogation unless it demonstrates the use of procedural safeguards to secure the right against self-incrimination and these safeguards include a right to counsel during such interrogation and warnings to the suspect/accused of his right to counsel and to remain silent. In Miranda case, (decided in 1966), it was held that the right to have counsel present at the interrogation was indispensable to the protection of the Vth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination and to ensure that the right to choose between silence and speech remains unfettered throughout the interrogation process. However, this rule is subject to the conscious waiver of right after the individual was warned of his right. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1787) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

9. CONFESSION IN POLICE CUSTODY

[8582] ● Admissibility of confession in police custody.—The High Court after holding that the order granting Police Custody is ex facie illegal, has further held that the so-called confession and alleged recovery has no evidentiary value. The question arises whether the High Court was right in making the aforesaid observations, even if it is assumed that the order granting Police Custody was illegal.

The admissibility or otherwise of a piece of evidence has to be Judged having regard to the provisions of the Evidence Act. The Evidence Act or the Code of Criminal Procedure or for that any other law in India does not exclude relevant evidence on the ground that it was obtained under an illegal search and seizure. State v. N.M.T. Joy Immaculate, AIR 2004 SC 2282 : (2004) 5 SCC 729 : 2004 CrLJ 2515 : 2004 (3) Crimes 136.

[8583] ● Confessional statement made to police officer.—A confessional statement made to a police officer/IO. cannot be proved as evidence. Vasanthi v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2005 SC 2643 : (2005) 5 SCC 132 : 2005 CrLJ 3075 (3076) : 2005 (2) Crimes 210.

[8584] ● Confession under A.P. Control of Organised Crime Act, 2001.—The A.P. Control of Organized Crime Act (42 of 2001), Act contains a special provision making the confessional statement admissible notwithstanding anything contained in the CrPC or the Indian Evidence Act provided the confession is made before a Police Officer not below the rank of the Superintendent of Police. The confessional statements which were sought to be relied upon in the charge-sheet were not those recorded in accordance with Section 18(1) of the Act by the authorized officer. As far as the recovery of car was concerned, the same was seized while it was at her residence. Whether under Section 27, any part of her statement would be admissible was also not free from doubt. Vasanthi v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2005 SC 2643 : (2005) 5 SCC 132 : 2005 CrLJ 3075 (3076) : (2005) 2 Crimes 210.

[8585] ● Confession of accused in police custody—Confession—Admissibility.—Confession of the accused in the custody of police. Only that point which leads to discovery of facts would be admissible in evidence. Swamy Shraddananda v. State of Kerala, AIR 2007 SC 2531 : (2007) 12 SCC 288 : (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 264.

10. RETRACTED CONFESSION

[8586-87] ● Retracted confession.—[Note:—Effect of the Retraction of a confession on the question whether it is voluntary and true. When a confession is retracted, the fact of such retraction has a bearing on the question whether it is voluntary and true. In such a case, for the purpose of deciding whether the retracted confession was voluntary and true, the Court must keep the fact of such retraction in mind and consider all attendant factors which throw a light on the nature of the confession, such as, (a) the reason given by the accused for making the confession, (b) the circumstances alleged by the accused which throw a doubt on the voluntary character of the confession, such as inducement, threat pressure or promise from the police authorities, (c) the material discrepancies, if any, between the testimony of eye-witnesses and the contents of the confession, and (d) the facts and circumstances surrounding the making of the confession. If after scrutinising and weighing all such factors, the Court is satisfied that the confession was voluntary and true and that it was the outcome of penitence and remorse and was born of a desire to make a clean breast of the whole affair, then the confession is the best evidence against the maker. On the other hand, if the Court concludes that the attendant circumstances are such as to throw a doubt upon the true and voluntary character of a confession, the fact of its retraction lends weight to that doubt.

A Confession must be found to be True, before the Court can go into the question of its sufficiency.]

In a case in which two accused are charged with the joint commission of an offence, and the case rests mainly upon confessions made by both the accused, even if both retract their confessions, once the Court comes to the conclusion that the confessions are voluntary, it can use both the confessions against the accused in deciding whether the prosecution has proved its case, provided that it finds the confessions to be true. In such a case, it is not open to the accused to urge that the two confessions must be read together, and that both must be condemned as being not true if differences in details in describing the manner in which the offence was committed are found to exist, and each accused throws the main blame on the other. Such differences can arise out of the natural desire of each accused to exonerate himself as much as possible, and merely because of the existence of such differences it could not be said that the confessions are not true. In such a case, if the Court finds that there is sufficient independent corroboration to justify it in accepting and relying upon the confessions as being true and voluntary, it is open to it to accept them in spite of such differences and convict the accused. Balbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 216 : 1957 CrLJ 481.

[8588] ● Confession—When accepted as true.—When the manner of causing death or the circumstances in which the death was caused as described in a confession is improbable or unnatural, such improbability or unnaturalness is a factor which the Court must bear in mind when considering the question whether the confession can be accepted as true and reliable. In such a case, before accepting the confession as true the Court must always look for other evidence which supports the description given in the confession, and if there is no such evidence in the case, prudence demands that conviction should not be based on such a confession, even when the Court is satisfied that it is made voluntarily.

On the other hand, if the corroborative evidence on record clearly supports the description given in the confession, the unusual or unnatural character of the circumstances described in the confession loses its significance, and the confession has to be accepted as true, in the absence of anything else which shows it to be false. Ram Chandra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 381 : 1957 CrLJ 559.

[8589] ● Prosecution failing to prove beyond doubt that confession was true.—For the purpose of deciding whether a confession could be relied upon as being 'true', the Court must carefully examine its contents, and must then compare them with the other prosecution evidence and apply to them the test of probability. It the Court finds that the material statements in the confession are inconsistent with the evidence of eye-witnesses or the medical evidence so that injuries to the deceased which are confessed to are not borne out by the other evidence on record, or that there are material discrepancies between the other evidence and the description given in the confession so that both could not be true, it must be held that the prosecution has failed to prove beyond doubt that the confession is 'true', and it must be put aside when considering the case against the accused. Sarwan Singh Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 637 : 1957 CrLJ 1014 : 1957 SCJ 699.

[8590] ● Confession—Whether true—One of tests for determining.—One of the tests for determining whether a confession is true or not is to compare it with the evidence of eye-witnesses and to weigh it in the light of the probabilities of the case. But that does not mean that if a confession does not contain elaborate details and lacks the extensive particulars found in the evidence of eye-witnesses, it is to be branded as untrue, even though there is nothing in the oral evidence which can be said to be contradictory in any material particular to the contents of the confession. Omission in a confession to state the exact number of stabs given, or the names of the persons who were present at the time of the assault, or the fact that a weapon or other article had been discovered at his instance is not a good ground for holding that the confession has not been proved to be true and for rejecting it when considering the case against the accused. Subramania Goundan v. State of Madras, AIR 1958 SC 66 : 1958 CrLJ 238 : 1958 SCJ 321.

[8591] ● Retracted confession when to form basis of conviction.—"A retracted confession may form the legal basis of a conviction if the Court is satisfied that it was true and was voluntarily made. But it has been held that a Court shall not base a conviction on such a confession without corroboration. It is not a rule of law, but is only rule of prudence. It cannot even be laid down as an inflexible rule of practice or prudence that under no circumstances can such a conviction be made without corroboration, for a Court may, in a particular case, be convinced of the absolute truth of a confession and prepared to act upon it without corroboration; but it may be laid down as a general rule of practice that it is unsafe to rely upon a confession, much less on a retracted confession, unless the Court is satisfied that the retracted confession is true and voluntarily made and has been corroborated in material particulars." Pyare Lal Bhargava v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1963 SC 1094 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 178 : 1963 Supp (1) SCR 689.

[8592] ● Retracted confession of co-accused.—Bello made a confession implicating Mukherjee. At the trial he retracted the confession. Under Section 30 of the Evidence Act, the Court can take into consideration this retracted confession against Mukherjee. But this confession can be used only in support of other evidence and cannot be made the foundation of a conviction. It cannot be used to support the evidence of the other accomplice. Mohd. Hussain Umar Kochra v. K.S. Dalip Singhji, AIR 1970 SC 45 : (1969) 3 SCC 429 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 99 (112) : 1970 CrLJ 9 : 1969 UJ (SC) 356 : (1970) 1 SCR 130.

[8593] ● True confession made voluntarily be acted upon.—A Court may take into consideration the retracted confession but it must look for the reasons for the making of the confession as well as for its retraction, and must weigh the two to determine whether the retraction affects the voluntary nature of the confession or not. If the Court is satisfied that it was retracted because of an afterthought or advice, the retraction may not weigh with the Court if the general facts proved in the case and the tenor of the confession as made and the circumstances of its making and withdrawal warrant its user. All the same, the Courts do not act upon the retracted confession without finding assurance from some other sources as to the guilt of the accused. Therefore, it can be stated that a true confession made voluntarily may be acted upon with slight evidence to corroborate it, but a retracted confession requires the general assurance that the retraction was an afterthought and that the earlier statement was true. Bharat v. State of U.P., 1972 SCC (Cri) 198 : (1971) 3 SCC 950.

[8594] ● Retracted confession corroboration necessary.—In the present case the main evidence against the appellant consists of the retracted confession made by the accused before the Magistrate where he admitted to have assaulted the deceased with a lathi as a result of some altercation with the deceased. This confession has been held to be voluntary both by the High Court and Sessions Court and nevertheless as the confession was retracted, corroboration was necessary. Kora Ghasi v. State of Orissa, AIR 1983 SC 360 : (1983) 2 SCC 251 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 387 (387) : 1983 CrLJ 692 (2) : 1983 CrLR (SC) 188 : (1983) 1 Crimes 984.

[8596] ● Confession—When retracted.—When confession has been retracted and there is no independent corroboration and the presence of the eye witnesses at the scene of crime is doubtful accused cannot be convicted on the basis of confession. Palanisamy v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1986 SC 593 : (1986) 1 SCC 693 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 97 : 1986 CrLJ 551 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 99 : 1986 (1) Crimes 599.

[8597] ● Confession before customs authorities when retraced.—The confessional statement it is alleged was extracted from him while the detenue was in the custody of the custom authorities. The detenue however as soon as he was produced before the Magistrate retracted from the statement. The non-placement of the retraction of the confessional statement by the detenue before the detaining authority and non-consideration of the same while arriving at his subjective satisfaction in making the order of detention goes to the root of the order of detention and makes the order of detention invalid. K. Satyanarayan Subudhi v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1375 : 1991 Supp (2) SCC 153 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 1013 : 1991 CrLJ 1536 : 1991 CrLR (SC) 859.

[8599] ● Retracted extra-judicial confessions.—The case of the prosecution rests on retracted extra judicial confession. It is well settled that the retracted extra judicial confession is a very weak type of evidence and strong corroborating circumstances should be there. Before we proceed further, it is necessary to examine whether the death was a homicidal one. Unfortunately, for the prosecution, the body was recovered 20 days later and it was in a highly decomposed state. The doctor (S.B. Raha) who conducted the post-mortem found only fracture of the third Cervical Vertibra of the spine and no other injuries. He noted that the same could not be as certained whether it was the ante-mortem or post-mortem injury. No doubt, in his further deposition he has answered to a question that the injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of a nature to cause death. The answer given does not in any manner improve the prosecution case, in view of the fact that the doctor could not categorically say whether the fracture was ante-mortem or post-mortem. That apart, according to PW 11, the accused is alleged to have confessed that he hit the deceased on the head and other parts of the body. But the doctor did not find, as noted above, any fracture of the skull or any other internal injuries. Therefore, the version as per the extra judicial confession is inconsistent with the medical evidence. The extra judicial confession should be taken as a whole and should not suffer from any infirmity even if it is to be acted upon. But in this case we find that the belated confession itself becomes doubtful in the light of the medical evidence apart from being the same retracted. We think it is highly unsafe to sustain the conviction. Chhittar v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1994 SC 214 : 1995 Supp (4) SCC 519 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 248 : 1994 CrLJ 245.

[8600] ● Retraction of confession—When after thought.—The detenu was apprehended on 26-8-92 and was questioned and his statement along with the statements of others was recorded. On 18-9-92 the detention order was passed. By then there was no retraction. However, the detenu claimed that he retracted on the same day and the fact remains that it was not before the detention order was passed. There is no such request for the presence of a lawyer which would have a bearing on the voluntary nature of the confession and the subsequent retraction. Therefore the retraction is clearly an afterthought and if the same is not placed before the declaring authority that will not vitiate his subjective satisfaction. Noor Salman Makani v. Union of Indian, AIR 1994 SC 575 : (1994) 1 SCC 381 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 521 : 1994 CrLJ 602 : 1993 (3) Crimes 1108.

[8601] ● Exculpatory confessional statement by one of accused—When not reliable.—Accused confessed about a conspiracy to commit the murder of the deceased, but did not at all confess that he was a party to the murder. Confession can not be relied. Shabad Pulla Reddy v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1997 SC 3087 : 1997 (8) SCC 495 : 1997 CrLJ 3753 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 602 : 1997 (3) Crimes 240.

[8602] ● Retraction of confession not ground to throw confession overboard.—It is not the law that once a confession is retracted the Court should presume that the confession is tainted. As a matter of practical knowledge we can say that a non-retracted confession is a rarity in criminal cases.

To retract from confession is the right of the confessor and all the accused against whom confessions were produced by the prosecution have invariably adopted that right. It would be injudicious to jettison a judicial confession on the mere premise that its maker has retracted from it. The Court has a duty to evaluate the evidence concerning the confession by looking at all aspects. The twin test of a confession is to ascertain whether it was voluntary and true. Once those tests are found to be positive, the next endeavour is to see whether there is any other reason which stands in the way of acting on it. Even for that, retraction of the confession is not the ground to throw the confession overboard. State of Tamil Nadu v. Kutty, AIR 2001 SC 2778 : (2001) 6 SCC 550 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1177 (1181) : 2001 CrLJ 4168.

[8603] ● Confession voluntary.—In the present case, the learned senior counsel for the appellant made an endeavour to show that PW-4 had only copied the statement prepared by the investigating officer under Section 161, CrPC and secured the signature of the appellant thereon. We do not have any material to think that PW-4 did so as contended by the learned counsel. We have to bear in mind the answer given by the appellant to a question put by the trial Judge during examination under Section 313 of the CrPC after bringing his attention to Ext. PW 4/B. That document is dated 18.4.1995 and it shows that appellant gave his consent to make a confessional statement before the senior officer. Appellant owned Ext 4/B though he explained that he signed it at the instance of the investigating officer. This means appellant was told in advance about the possibility of recording his confession. He never had any complaint that he was physically or even mentally tortured by the Police at any time. He thought of retracting from the confession only during trial of the case and not at any previous stage. That confession was voluntarily made by him. From the above we are inclined to believe that confession was voluntarily made by him. Nazir Ahmad Bhatt v. State of Delhi, AIR 2002 SC 30 (33) : (2002) 1 SCC 674 : 2002 CrLJ 213.

[8604] ● Retracted Confession—Corroboration.—A retracted confession may form the legal basis of a conviction if the Court is satisfied that it was true and was voluntarily made. But it has been held that a Court shall not base a conviction on such a confession without corroboration. The expression "corroboration of material particulars" does not imply that there should be meticulous examination of the entire material particulars. It is enough that there is broad corroboration in conformity with the general trend of the confession, as pointed out in Subramania Goundan's case. Parmananda Pegu v. State of Assam, AIR 2004 SC 4197 : (2004) 7 SCC 779 : 2004 CrLJ 4197 (4203) : (2004) 3 Crimes 337.

[8605] ● Retracted confession—Extent of corroboration.—As too the extent of corroboration required, it was observed in Subramania Goundan case, AIR 1958 SC 66 : 1958 CrLJ 238 : 1958 SCR 428 that each and every circumstance mentioned in the retracted confession regarding the complicity of the maker need not be separately and independently corroborated. The learned Judges observed : (SCR pp. 440-41).

> "It would be sufficient, in our opinion, that the general trend of the confession is substantiated by some evidence which would tally with what is contained in the confession." State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1775) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[8606] ● Retracted confession—Admissibility and use of—Against co-accused.—Use of retracted confession.—The use of retracted confession against the co-accused however stands on a different footing from the use of such confession against the maker. To come to grips with the law on the subject, we do no more than quoting the apt observations of VIVIAN BOSE J., speaking for a three-Judge Bench in Kashmira Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1952 SC 159 : 1952 CrLJ 839 : 1952 SCR 526. Before clarifying the law, the learned Judge noted with approval the observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins that a confession can only be used to "lend assurance to other evidence against a co-accused". The legal position was then stated thus : (SCR p. 530).

> "Translating these observations into concrete terms they come to this. The proper way to approach a case of this kind is, first, to marshal the evidence against the accused excluding the confession altogether from consideration and see whether, if it is believed, a conviction could safely be based on it. If it is capable of belief independently of the confession, then of course it is not necessary to call the confession in aid. But cases may arise where the judge is not prepared to act on the other evidence as it stands even though, if believed, it would be sufficient to sustain a conviction. In such an event the judge may call in aid the confession and use it to lend assurance to the other evidence and thus fortify himself in believing what without the aid of the confession he would not be prepared to accept." State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1776-1777) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[8607] ● Confession retracted.—Where there is no evidence except the confessional statement of the accused which too has been retracted subsequently, the accused would be acquitted by giving benefit of doubt. Ravindra v. Supdt of Customs, AIR 2007 SC 2040 : (2007) 6 SCC 410 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 189 : 2007 CrLJ 3414 : (2007) 3 Crimes 105.

[8608] ● Confession retracted in TADA Case.—In a TADA Act case, it was held that merely because confession of the accused before Deputy Commissioner was subsequently retracted, cannot bee held to be unreliable. Abdulvahab Abdul Majid Shaikh v. State of Gujarat, (2007) 4 SCC 257 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 276 : 2007 CrLJ 3405.

[8609] ● Retracted Confession—Voluntariness.—Where a confession has been recorded by a person duly empowered by law to record confession after following all the formalities, the mere fact that the confession is retracted subsequently is no ground to hold that the confession was not voluntary. Abdul Vahab Abdul Majid Shaikh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2007 SC 2492 : (2007) 9 SCC 293 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 126 : 2007 CrLJ 3529 (3532).

[8610] ● Retraction of Confession—Relevancy.—Mere retraction of confession may not be sufficient to make the confession irrelevant, for the purpose of proceeding in a criminal or quasi-criminal case to determine the relevancy or otherwise, the court has to take into consideration the pros and cons of both the confession and the retraction subsequently made by the accused.

To arrive at a finding on retracted confession, court must consider attending circumstances, such as the time of retraction, and nature and manner thereof. Vinod Solanki v. Union of India, (2008) 16 SCC 537 : 2008 (17) SCR 1070 : JT 2009 (1) (SC) 1.

11. EXTRA-JUDICIAL CONFESSION—PRINCIPLES RELATING TO THEIR ACCEPTANCE AND USE

[8611] ● Extra-judicial confession—Principles relating to their acceptance and use.—An extra-judicial confession by an accused can be accepted as evidence only when the Court is satisfied that it is both voluntary and true. For that purpose the Court must first inquire whether there are any circumstances on record which tend to throw a doubt on the voluntary character of the confession, that is, whether the making of the confession appears to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise proceeding from any person in authority. The mere fact that the accused repudiates the confession or denies having made it, or that there was a possibility of there having been some inducement is not sufficient to attract Section 24 of the Evidence Act. Before a confession can be rejected there must be on record some circumstances from which the Court can legitimately arrive at the conclusion that the confession appears to have been made as a result of some inducement held out by a person in authority.

In R. v. Thomson, (1893) 2 QB 12 it was proved that a person in authority had told the brother of the accused "it will be the right thing for your brother to make a statement". In Re, Chinna Papiah, AIR 1940 Mad 136 the accused was put to close questioning by a police officer for six hours before he made a confession. In Hashmat Khan v. Emp., ILR 15 Lah 856, the accused was told before he made the confession "It will be better for you if you told the truth". In all these cases the confession was rightly rejected because there was a proved circumstance on record which threw a doubt on the voluntary character of the confession. Ratan Gond v. State of Bihar, AIR 1959 SC 18 : 1959 CrLJ 102 : 1959 SCJ 198.

[8612] ● Extra-judicial confession—Voluntary character of.—In the present case, the only circumstance urged against the voluntary character of the confession was that after the accused was arrested and brought back to the village, he was taken to the village authorities, and that a period of three hours elapsed from the time when he was brought to the house of the Mukhia upto the time when he made the confessional statement. This circumstance in itself is not such as to cast a doubt on the voluntary character of the extra-judicial confession made thereafter by the accused, as there is nothing to show that any inducement was offered to the accused which might have persuaded him to make the confession. Ratan Gond v. State of Bihar, AIR 1959 SC 18 : 1959 CrLJ 102 : 1959 SCJ 198.

[8613] ● Confession—Voluntary and True.—In the present case, the evidence was that the accused had confessed that he had killed a child in a lonely place in a jungle by severing her head because of greed for money, as a contractor who was building a bridge near the village had offered Rs. 80 for a human head as a sacrifice. On behalf of the accused it was urged that in the absence of any evidence to support these facts there was no guarantee that this confession was true. The accused is an aboriginal belonging to a class of people who were steeped in superstition, and there is no reason to hold that he would not believe that the contractor was offering a sum of money for a human head as a sacrifice. In the very nature of things it cannot be expected that any witness can be produced to prove that a sum of money has in fact been offered for such a purpose, or that someone has informed the accused about it. The absence of any such evidence is no reason for doubting that the confession is true. The Courts below are right in accepting the confession as being voluntary and true though it had been retracted at a later stage, and in convicting the accused of murder, though there is no evidence corroborating his statement that such an offer had been made or that he had been told of such an offer. Conviction was maintained. Ratan Gond v. State of Bihar, AIR 1959 SC 18 : 1959 CrLJ 102 : 1959 SCJ 198.

[8614] ● Extra-judicial confession voluntary.—If, on the evidence on record, the Court accepts an extra-judicial confession to be voluntary and true, it can be relied upon along with other evidence for convicting the accused. Like any other fact the confession has to be proved, and the question whether it has been proved depends like all other questions of fact upon the veracity of the witnesses who speak to such a confession having been made to them.

There is no inflexible rule that the Court should always insist upon the exact words used by the accused when making the confession, or that the Court should not accept the evidence as to an extra-judicial confession if the actual words spoken are not mentioned and only a substance of it is given by the witness. No doubt, as far as possible, the Court will require the witness to recollect the very words in which the confession was made, but if there were an invariable rule that evidence as to such a confession has to be excluded unless the exact words spoken by the accused are repeated by the witness, more often than not, reliable and important evidence will get excluded, because except in the case of persons of unusual memory, a witness cannot repeat the exact words he has heard, though he may be able to give the substance of what he has heard and may be quite reliable and truthful. It is, therefore, for the Court in each case to decide whether to accept or reject evidence of an extra-judicial confession when the witness gives evidence as to it in his own words without being able to reproduce the very words of the accused which he had heard. In arriving at its decision the Court will have regard to such factors as the credibility of the witness, his capacity to follow the language in which the confession was made, the nature of the confession made (such as its length, mass of detail or complicated facts), and the existence or non-existence of any conflict between the versions of different witnesses. If after considering all these factors the Court sees no reason to reject the evidence, there is no rule of law which compels the Court to reject it merely because the witnesses have been unable to reproduce the very words used by the accused. Mulk Raj v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1959 SC 902 : 1959 CrLJ 1219.

[8615] ● Admission by accused.—In the instant case, the appellant appeared before the Collector of Central Excise, who made an inquiry, and admitted before him that certain items Nos. 6 to 10 were smuggled goods from Pakistan. The finding of custom authorities that the appellant purchased the said items, which were smuggled goods, was based on the said admission. In this connection, it was observed that it would have been better if the custom authorities had taken that admission in writing from the appellant for that would prevent the retraction of the confession on second thought. That apart, it is more satisfactory if a body entrusted with functions such as the custom authorities are entrusted with, takes that precaution when its decision mainly depends upon such admission. Amba Lal v. Union of India, AIR 1961 SC 264 : 1961 (1) CrLJ 326 : 1962 (2) SCJ 549.

[8616] ● Extra-judicial confession value of.—Extra-judicial confessions are not usually considered with favour but that does not mean that such a confession coming from a person who has no reason to state falsely and to whom it is made in circumstances which tend to support his statement, should not be believed. There is no enmity between Ujagar Singh and the appellant and, therefore, no good reason existed for Ujagar Singh to state falsely. The evidence of the appellant's having enmity with Sheo Sahai, the appellant's conduct in purchasing a sword and delivering it stained with human blood to the Police and the appellant's confession to Ujagar Singh, fully establish that the appellant did commit the murder of Sheo Sahai. We are therefore of opinion that he has been rightly convicted of the offence under Section 302, IPC, and has been awarded the proper sentence. Ram Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1967 SC 152 : 1962 Supp (2) SCR 203 : 1967 CrLJ 9.

[8618] ● Confession to witnesses.—The evidence in this regard is so artificial that it is not safe to place any reliance on the same. According to PW 3 when several weeks after the incident and when rumours were afloat in the village. PW-7 came and informed her about the information given by her son PW-2 that the appellant has killed his father-in-law and buried him in the field. On this PW-3 is stated to have asked the appellant whether the rumour is true and the appellant confessed that he murdered his father-in-law and his body was buried in the field. Similarly PW 5 states that a long after the incident, she found the appellant one day in a very distressed mood and when she asked him the reason, the appellant stated to her that he had killed her father. The evidence regarding this confession stated to have been made to PW 3 and 5 is very artificial and cannot be acted upon. Their evidence does not appear to be true. The High Court was not justified in acting on the basis that the appellant had made any confession to PW 3 and 5. Their evidence appears to be somewhat unusual and mechanical. They did not evince any anxiety about the whereabouts of the deceased after he failed to return to the house within a reasonable time. In view of the above circumstances, it is not safe to place reliance on their evidence. Duvvur Dasaradharamareddy v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1971 SC 1461 : 1971 (3) SCC 247 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 472 : 1971 CrLJ 1139.

[8619] ● Extra-judicial confession to be considered with caution.—Before the Court will act on extra judicial confession the circumstances under which the confession is made, the manner in which it is made, the persons to whom it is made will be considered along with two rules of caution. First, whether the evidence of confession is reliable and secondly whether it finds corroboration. Wakil Nayak v. State of Bihar, 1972 CrLJ 566 : (1971) 3 SCC 778.

[8620] ● Extra-judicial confession.—Radhabai lives very close to the place of occurrence, while the other two witnesses work in the factory which is located in one of the rooms of the Chawl wherein the occurrence took place. According to these witnesses, the accused with a knife in his hand came and enquired regarding the whereabouts of Ganpat. The accused also told them that he had murdered that woman. There is nothing unnatural or improbable in the above statement of the accused which was made immediately after the murder of the deceased. The three witnesses had no particular animus against the accused and after having been taken through their evidence, we find a ring of truth in it. In addition to the evidence of the abovementioned three witnesses, we have the statement of Ganpat PW that the accused came armed with a knife to the witness. The witness on seeing the accused in a threatening mood ran away. The fact that the accused after arming himself with a knife ran after Ganpat is also admitted by the accused. This circumstance lends further assurance to the testimony of Radhabai, Pandurang and Shankar.

We find that the clothes of the accused, who was arrested by the police soon after the occurrence, were found to be stained with blood. The accused was also soon after the occurrence seen sitting in front of the room is which the dead body of the deceased was lying with a blood-stained knife in his hand. These facts, which are not disputed by the accused, furnish additional corroboration to the evidence relating to the extra-judicial confession made by the accused. The explanation furnished by the accused regarding the blood-stains on his clohes and the blood-stained knife in his hand is not at all convincing and has been rightly rejected by the High Court. Kashinath Krishna Jadhav v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1973 SC 1219 : (1973) 3 SCC 95 : 1973 CrLJ 989.

[8621] ● Extra-judicial confession.—The accused was also, soon after the occurrence, seen sitting in front of the room in which the dead body of the deceased was lying with a blood-stained knife in his hand. These facts, which are not disputed by the accused, furnish additional corroboration to the evidence relating to the extra-judicial confession made by the accused. Kashinath Krishna Jadhav v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1973 SC 1219 : (1973) 3 SCC 95 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 157 : 1973 CrLJ 989.

[8622] ● Confession by accused to witness.—There was no history of previous association between the witness and the two accused as may justify the inference that the accused could repose confidence in him. In the circumstances, it seems highly improbable that the two accused would go to the witness and blurt out a confession. Rahim Beg v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 343 : (1972) 3 SCC 759 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 827 : 1972 CrLJ 1260.

[8623] ● Extra-judicial wealth piece of evidence.—Extra-judicial Confession in a weak piece of evidence. Introduction of false prosecution story would further affect the credibility of extra- judicial confession. Jagta v. State of Haryana, AIR 1974 SC 1545 : 1974 (4) SCC 747 : 1974 CrLJ 1010 : (1975) 1 SCR 165.

[8624] ● Extra-judicial confession, weak piece of evidence.—Extra judicial confession is a weak piece of evidence. Reliance cannot be placed unless it is plausible and inspires confidence. State of Punjab v. Bhajan Singh, AIR 1975 SC 258 : (1975) 4 SCC 472 : 1975 CrLJ 282 : 1975 (1) SCR 747.

[8625] ● Extra-judicial confession to witnesses.—The evidence furnished by the extra-judicial confession made by the accused to witnesses cannot be termed to be a tainted evidence and if corroboration is required it is only by way of abundant caution. If the Court believes the witnesses before whom the confession is made and it is satisfied that the confession was voluntary, then in such a case conviction can be founded on such evidence alone. Maghar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1975 SC 1320 : (1975) 4 SCC 234 : 1975 CrLJ 1102.

[8626] ● Confession of accused to uncle and cousin of his wife.—Where the accused confessed murder of wife to the uncle and cousin of his wife who were not person in authority, confession does not suffer from an illegal infirmity. Darshan Lal v. State of J&K, AIR 1975 SC 898 : (1975) 4 SCC 33 : 1975 CrLJ 774.

[8627] ● Extra-judicial—Confession when corroborated.—Law does not require that the evidence of an extra judicial confession should in all cases be corroborated. In the instant case, the extra judicial confession was proved by an independent witness who was a responsible officer and who bore no animus against the appellants. There was hardly any justification for the Sessions Judge to disbelieve the evidence of Balbir Singh particularly when the extra judicial confession was corroborated by the recovery of an empty from the place of occurrence. Piara Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 2274 : (1977) 4 SCC 452 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 614 (621) : 1977 CrLJ 1941 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 466 : (1978) 1 SCR 597 : 1977 UJ (SC) 753.

[8628] ● Extra-judicial confession not free from taint of infirmity.—In deciding whether a particular confession attracts the frown of Section 24 of the Evidence Act the question has to be considered from the point of view of the confessing accused as to how the inducement threat or promise proceeding from a person in authority would operate in his mind. On July 17, 1970 the Police gave a go by to the encounter story and the present case was registered against the accused. Two days after on July 19, 1970. Mr. Kapur having already failed to get any confessional statement from the accused through other agency took upon himself to question accused persons separately and this time he succeeded in securing confessional statements. When the two accused were questioned separately after several abortive attempts to secure confessions, can it be said that there was no inducement, threat or promise of some kind proceeding from Mr. Kapur to have made any impact on their minds resulting in the confession? Mr. Kapur having stated to the accused that "now that the case has been registered they should state the truth," it is difficult to hold that by this statement he would not generate in the minds of the accused some hope and assurance that if they told the "truth" they would receive his "support" which he had earlier conveyed to them through D.S.P. Handa. It is true that in the course of cross-examination Mr. Kapur stated that he had told the accused that if they had done anything wrong they would go to jail. But having regard to the effect of the totality of the evidence of this witness, we are unable to hold that the confessions made by the accused before Mr. Kapur were free from the taint of infirmity within the mischief of Section 24, Evidence Act. Satbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 1294 : (1977) 2 SCC 263 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 333 (341, 342) : 1977 CrLJ 985 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 211.

[8629] ● Extra-judicial confession—Unsafe to accept evidence of.—In the instant case, a prosecution witness admitted that he saw the appellant running and on being questioned the appellant told him that he had committed a mistake and had killed his brother due to quarrel. In cross-examination the witness admitted that he did not narrate this story of the murder to anybody. The witness met a number of persons on that day but he did not mention the factum of the confession to any one of them. Secondly the evidence shows that he was not known to the appellant and therefore, it is difficult to believe that the appellant would make a confession to a person who was not known to him at all. For these reasons it is wholly unsafe to accept the evidence of the extra-judicial confession of the appellant. Lakhanpal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 1620 (1621) : (1979) 3 SCC 256 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 644 : 1979 CrLJ 1217.

[8630] ● Confession of all persons to witness.— It is not at all understandable as to why the appellant should suddenly decide to make a confession of all persons to Hari Singh. The witness admits in cross-examination that he did not know the neighbour of Mukhtiar Kaur nor had he ever been to the house of Mukhtiar Kaur. He further observed that never before Mukhtiar Kaur had come to him.

In these circumstances we find it difficult to believe that the appellant will go suddenly to make a confession of all persons to this witness. Mukhtiar Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1981 SC 1871 (2) : (1980) 2 SCC 369 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 456 (457) : 1980 CrLJ 1420 : 1980 UJ (SC) 640.

[8631] ● Confession to under trial in Jail.— The three accused made extra-judicial confession to an undertrial in jail charged with the offence of dacoity. The three accused were possibly with him in jail, when this dubious extra-judicial confession is alleged to have been made to him. The extra-judicial confession is vague and ambiguous because it in not clear whether each one spoke separately and what were the words used by each of the accused. Witness speaks of an extra-judicial confession by three accused person having simultaneously made and when reproduced in his language, it makes no sense. It is dangerous to rely upon such extra-judicial confession even if the witness's credentials are not in question. The question that agitates is what language was used by each accused, in what words confession was made and whether each used the same language? Evidence of the witness does not reproduce the words used by each accused. We are at a loss to understand how the High Court accepted the evidence on this extra-judicial confession without examining the credentials of PW-2, without ascertaining the words used; without referring to the decision of this Court wherein it is succinctly stated that extra-judicial confession to afford a piece of reliable evidence must pass the test of reproduction of exact words, the reason or motive for confession and person selected in whom confidence is reposed. Heramba Brahma v. State of Assam, AIR 1982 SC 1595 (1597, 1598) : (1982) 3 SCC 351 : 1983 CrLJ 149.

[8632] ● Extra-judicial confession—Credibility of.—It is succinctly stated by this Court that extra-judicial confession to afford a piece of reliable evidence must pass the test of reproduction of exact words, the reason or motive for confession and person selected in whom confidence is reposed. Heramba Brahma v. State of Assam, AIR 1982 SC 1595 : (1982) 3 SCC 351 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 40 (45, 46) : 1983 CrLJ 149 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 502 : 1983 UJ (SC) 10 : (1983) 1 Crimes 150.

[8633] ● Extra-judicial confession to witnesses.—In this case the extra-judicial confession is stated to have been made by the appellant to PW-3 and PW-5. The extra-judicial confession is said have been made after their return from the Police Station. The Police did not appear to have examined PW-5 after the alleged extra-judicial confession was made.

The extra-judicial confession stated to have been made by the appellant in the circumstances of this case was rightly rejected by the Trial Judge.

The appellant had accompanied the informant PW-3 and PW-5 to the Police Station. It was discarded. Appeal was allowed. Sonia Bahera v. State of Orissa, AIR 1983 SC 491 : (1983) 2 SCC 327 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 444 (447) : 1983 CrLJ 829 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 262 : 1983 UJ (SC) 536.

[8634] ● Extra-judicial confessions—Weak type of evidence.—The learned Sessions Judge has brushed aside their evidence by presuming that their statements constituting an extra-judicial confession is a very weak type of evidence. This is a wrong view of the law. It is not open to any Court to start with a presumption that extra-judicial confession is a weak type of evidence. It would depend on the nature of the circumstances, the time when the confession was made and the credibility of the witnesses who speak to such a confession. Narayan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1985 SC 1678 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 460 : 1985 CrLJ 1862 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 404 : 1985 (2) Crimes 604.

[8635] ● Extra-judicial confession to witnesses self-inculpatory.—The appellant, Smt. Basanti made an extra-judicial confession to PWs 16, 17, 18, 22, 28 which was self inculpatory she admitted that she alongwith the co-accused Assoo alias Aso Ram had conspired to kill the deceased and had committed the murder and that she alongwith the co-accused had carried the decapitated body of her deceased husband alongwith the severed head to the maize field behind the cattle shed of the house of the deceased from where the dead body was ultimately recovered when it started emanating foul smell. Extra judicial confession of co-accused cannot be used against an accused. Basanti v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1987 SC 1572 : (1987) 3 SCC 227 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 473 (476) : 1987 CrLJ 1869 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 302 : JT 1987 (2) SC 281. TO THE SAME EFFECT : State of Himachal Pradesh v. Assoo alias Aso Ram, AIR 1987 SC 1572 : (1987) 3 SCC 227 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 473 (476) : 1987 CrLJ 1869 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 302 : JT 1987 (2) SC 281.

[8636] ● Extra-judicial confession following assault and beating.—The accused Yadav made extra-judicial confession following assault and beating. Obviously, when Yadav was beaten up, he must have been anxious to ensure that the assault stopped. His plea in such a situation would neither be voluntary nor natural. It would not be proper to rely upon the same for any purpose. Param Hans Yadav and Sadanand Tripathi v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 955 : (1987) 2 SCC 197 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 322 (326) : 1987 CrLJ 789 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 346 : JT 1987 (1) SC 595 : (1987) 1 Crimes 894.

[8637] ● Extra-judicial confession—Weak piece of evidence.—On August 10, 1985 FIR was lodged by Nihal Singh (PW-2) and on August 13, 1985 the appellant went to Amrik Singh (PW-3) to make an extra-judicial confession. Amrik Singh says that the appellant told him that as the Police was after him he had come and confessed the fact so that he might not be unnecessarily harassed. There is nothing to indicate that this Amrik Singh was a person having some influence with the Police or a person of some status to protect the appellant from harassment. In his cross-examination, he admits that he is neither the Lumbardar or Sarpanch nor a person who is frequently visiting the Police Station. He further admits that when he produced the appellant there was a crowd of 10 and 12 persons. There is no other corroborative evidence about the extra-judicial confession. As rightly conceded by the counsel of the State that Extra-judicial confession is a very weak piece of evidence and is hardly of any consequence......." Makhan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1988 SC 1705 : 1988 Supp SCC 526 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 916 (917) : 1988 CrLR (SC) 501 : JT 1988 (3) SC 126 : (1988) 2 Crimes 942.

[8638] ● Confessional statements made while in police custody.—Admittedly PW-10 and the appellant do not belong to the same Village. From the narrative of the prosecution story it is clear that PW-27 and PW-10 came together and apprehended the appellant from his village and was taken to Jassur for identification. After he was identified by PW-7 and PW-8 it was stated that he was brought back to Gaggle village of PW-10 and was kept in his company and PW-27 left for further investigation. S. 25 of the Evidence Act provides that no confession made to a Police Officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence. S. 26 provides that no confession made by any person while he is under custody of the Police Officer, unless it be made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, shall be proved as against such person. Therefore, the confession made by an accused person to a Police Officer is irrelevant by operation of S. 25 and it shall be proved against the appellant likewise the confession made by the appellant while he is in the custody of the Police shall not be proved against the appellant unless it is made in the immediate presence of the Magistrate, by operation of S. 26 thereof. Admittedly the appellant did not make any confession in the presence of the Magistrate. The question, therefore, is whether the appellant made the extra-judicial confession while he was in the Police-custody. It is incredible to believe that the Police Officer, PW-27, after having got identified the appellant by PW-7 and PW-8 as the one last seen the deceased in the company of the accused would have left the appellant without taking him into custody. It is obvious that with a view to avoid the rigour of Ss. 25 and 26, PW-27 created an artificial scenario of his leaving for further investigation and kept the appellant in the custody of PW-10, the Pradhan, to make an extra-judicial confession. Nothing prevented PW-27, to take the appellant to a Judicial Magistrate and have his confession recorded as provided under S. 164 of the CrPC which possesses great probative value and affords an unerring assurance to the Court. It is too incredulous to believe that for mere asking to tell the truth the appellant made voluntarily confession to PW-10 and that too sitting in a Hotel. The other person in whose presence it was stated to have been made was not examined to provide any corroboration to the testimony of PW-10. Therefore, it would be legitimate to conclude that the appellant was taken into the Police custody, and while the accused was in the custody the extra-judicial confession was obtained through PW-10 who accommodated the prosecution. Thereby an irresistible conclusion can be safely reached that the alleged extra-judicial confession statement was made while the appellant was in the Police custody. It is well settled law that Ss. 25 and 26 shall be construed strictly. Therefore, by operation of S. 26 of the Evidence Act, the confession made by the appellant to PW-10 while he was in the custody of the Police Officer (PW-27) shall not be proved against the appellant. In this view it is unnecessary to go into the voluntary nature of the confession, etc. Kishore Chand v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 2140 : (1991) 1 SCC 286 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 172 (181, 182) : 1990 CrLJ 2289 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 608 : JT 1990 (3) SC 662 : (1990) 3 Crimes 341.

[8639] ● Extra-judicial confession—If voluntary.—The Court has to look into the surrounding circumstances and to find whether the extra judicial confession is not inspired by any improper or collateral consideration or circumvention of the law suggesting that it may not be true one. For this purpose the Court must scrutinise all the relevant facts such as the person to whom the confession is made, the time and place of making it the circumstances in which it was made and finally the actual words used by the accused. Extra-judicial confession if found to be voluntary, can be relied upon by the Court alongwith other evidence on record. Therefore, even the extra-judicial confession will also have to be proved like any other fact. The value of the evidence as to the confession depends upon the veracity of the witness to whom it is made and the circumstances in which it came to be made and the actual words used by the accused. Sometimes it may not be possible to the witness to reproduce the actual words in which the confession was made. For that reason the law insists on recording the statement by a judicial Magistrate after administering all necessary warnings to the accused that it would be used as evidence against him. Admittedly the appellant did not make any confession in the presence of the magistrate. The question, therefore, is whether the appellant made the extra judicial confession while he was in the police custody. It is incredible to believe that the police officer, PW 27, after having got identified the appellant by PW 7 and PW 8 as the one last seen the deceased in his company would have left the appellant without taking him into custody. It is obvious, that with a view to avoid the rigour of Sections 25 and 26, PW-27 created an artificial scenario of his leaving for further investigation and kept the appellant in the custody of PW-10, the Pradhan to make an extra judicial confession. Nothing prevented PW-27 to take the appellant to a Judicial Magistrate and had his confession recorded as provided under Section 164 of the CrPC which possesses great probative value and affords an unerring assurance to the Court. It is too incredulous to believe that for mere asking to tell the truth the appellant made voluntarily confession to PW-10 and that too sitting in a hotel. Kishore Chand v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 2140 : (1991) 1 SCC 286 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 172 : 1990 CrLJ 2289 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 608 : 1990 (3) Crimes 341.

[8640] ● Unambiguous extra-judicial confession.—An unambiguous extra-judicial confession possesses high probative value force as it emanates from the person who committed the crime and is admissible in evidence provided it is free from suspicion and suggestion of its falsity. But in the process of the proof of the alleged confession the Court has to be satisfied that it is a voluntary one and does not appear to be the result of inducement threat or promise envisaged under S. 24 of the Evidence Act or was brought about in suspicious circumstances to circumvent Ss. 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act. Therefore, the Court has to look into the surrounding circumstances and to find whether the extra-judicial confession is not inspired by any improper or collateral consideration or circumvention of the law suggesting that it may not be true one. For this purpose the Court must scrutinise all the relevant facts such as the person to whom the confession is made, the time and place of making it, the circumstances in which it was made and finally the actual words used by the accused. Extra-judicial confession if found to be voluntary, can be relied upon by the Court alongwith other evidence on record. Therefore, even the extra-judicial confession will also have to be proved like any other fact. The value of the evidence as to the confession depends upon the veracity of the witness to whom it is made and the circumstances in which it came to be made and the actual words used by the accused. Some times it may not be possible to the witness to reproduce the actual words in which the confession was made. For that reason the law insists on recording the statement by a judicial Magistrate after administering all necessary warnings to the accused that it would be used as evidence against him. Kishore Chand v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 2140 : (1991) 1 SCC 286 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 172 (180, 181) : 1990 CrLJ 2289 : 1990 CrLR SC 608 : JT 1990 (3) SC 662 : (1990) 3 Crimes 341.

[8641] ● Extra-judicial confession—If voluntary.—An extra-judicial confession, if voluntary, can be relied upon by the Court alone with other evidence in convicting the accused. The value of the evidence as to the confession depends upon the veracity of the witnesses to whom it is made. It is true that the Court requires the witness to give the actual words used by the accused as nearly as possible but it is not an invariable rule that the Court should not accept the evidence, if not the actual words but the substance were given. It is for the Court having regard to the credibility of the witness to accept the evidence or not. When the Court believes the witness before whom the confession is made and it is satisfied that the confession was voluntary, conviction can be founded on such evidence. Baldev Raj v. State of Haryana, AIR 1991 SC 37 : 1991 Supp (1) SCC 14 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 659 : 1990 CrLJ 2643 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 664.

[8642] ● Extra-judicial confession—If voluntary.—An extra-judicial confession, if voluntary, can be relied upon by the Court alongwith other evidence in convicting the accused. [8643] ● Extra-judicial confession not obtained by coercion.—The Extra-judicial confession, which is not shown to have been obtained by coercion, promise of favour or false hope, etc. and is plenary in character and voluntary in its nature acknowledging his guilty is the gravely incriminating fact in its nature acknowledging his guilt in precise and explicit words. This confession has been made in presence of a body of persons on two occasions inclusive of the family members of the respondent as well as other witnesses. This confession can be acted upon Madan Gopal Kakkad v. Naval Dubey, (1992) 3 SCC 204 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 598 (611) : JT 1992 (3) SC 270 : (1992) 2 SCR 921 : (1992) 2 Crimes 168.

[8644] ● Retracted extra-judicial confession.—There are many suspicious features in the evidence of PW-11. It becomes highly doubtful as to why the accused should cover such a long distance and go all the way to PW-11 to confess his crime and then immediately leave his house. This is a retracted extra-judicial confession which is the sole basis on which both the Courts have relied and bases the conviction. We are not satisfied with the evidence of PW- 11 and his conduct also throws any amount of doubt about the truthfulness and the version given by him. If PW-11's evidence becomes unreliable, then there is no other circumstance to connect the accused with the crime. In the result, the appellant is given benefit of doubt and the conviction and sentence awarded against him are set aside. Sakharam Shankar Bansode v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1994 SC 1594 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 505 : 1994 CrLJ 2189.

[8645] ● Extra-judicial confession as one of circumstance.—"PW-10 speaks about the extra-judicial confession. He belongs to village Gugauli Khurd within the limits of the same Police Station. The village of the accused is situated at about one mile from there. He deposed that 18 to 20 days after the murder the accused came to him at about 5.30 p.m. and he was looking depressed and sad and he stated that he had committed a blunder that he had murdered the deceased and after that he had gone to his brother in Punjab and that PW-10 is a man of influence in the area and that should save him. On that very night the Investigating Officer came to him and enquired and he informed him what has happened. This is all the evidence about the so called extra-judicial confession.

In the cross-examination PW-10 admitted that a case under S. 307 was instituted against him in the same Police Station and 8 or 10 months back the case was thrown out because it was a false case and final report in that case was also filed by the Police. We have carefully gone through the evidence of PW-10. We find that the same does not inspire confidence...... The suggestion made by the defence that PW-10 was deposing at the instance of Police is not without force." Kailash v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 470 (471) : 1994 CrLJ 142.

[8646] ● Retracted extra-judicial confession.—It is well settled now that retracted extra-judicial confession, though a piece of evidence on which reliance can be placed, but the same has to be corroborated by independent evidence. That apart, the Court must be satisfied that the confession alleged to have been made to PW-11 was true and voluntary one and in judging the same, the conduct of PW-11 and the circumstances which impelled the accused to make such a statement to PW-11 should be above suspicion PW-11 deposed that he and the accused studied together some years ago and thereafter they left the school and PW-11 was working as a labourer. PW-11 further admitted that 7 or 8 years back, the accused and the father left the village and two years prior to this occurrence he met him and during the period, the accused did not even visit his house. PW-11 further admitted that he did not inform anybody and he did not even think of informing the Police even after coming to know that the accused committed the murder. Though he has stated that he informed his mother but no statement of the mother has been recorded as such. PW-11 further deposed that on May, 8 1977 the accused was living in the village on which date he was arrested. But he has not stated so before the Police. This conduct of PW-11 throws any amount of suspicion on his veracity. Unless we are satisfied that the extra-judicial confession itself is true, voluntary and reliable, we cannot proceed further to examine whether there is any other independent corroboration evidence. There are many suspicious features in the evidence of PW-11. It becomes highly doubtful as to why the accused should cover such a long distance and go all the way to PW-11 to confess his crime and then immediately leave his house. This is a retracted extra-judicial confession which is the sole basis on which both the Courts have relied and based the conviction. We are not satisfied with the evidence of PW-11 and his conduct throws any amount of doubt about the truthfulness and the version given by law. Sakharam Shankar Bansode v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1994 SC 1594 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 505 : 1994 CrLJ 1884.

[8647] ● Extra-judicial confession recorded through tape-recorder.—"The prosecution also came out with a story that on 11th October, 1976 the respondent-accused went to PW-31, Dr. Raj Kumar and gave an extra-judicial confession which was recorded through a tape recorder. According to the story that these two boys were chewing sugarcane on the ridge of the field a few days earlier to the incident. 'The accused reprimanded them whereupon they ran away. Later on the fateful day they were again found in a sugarcane field which led to the belief on the part of the accused that these two boys were responsible for stealing sugarcane and because of this motive he murdered the boys...........First and foremost PW-31, Dr. Raj Kumar, had not seen the accused earlier nor did the accused know PW-21 earlier. Therefore, it sounds strange that the accused could have made an extra-judicial confession that too in the presence of PW-31, Lal Chand, when both of them were strangers to the accused. It is equally surprising that Doctor kept ready a tape recorder anticipating' his confession. It is clear this is an evidence brought out by influence; may be perhaps when the accused was in Police custody. The medical evidence also does not support the extra-judicial confession when, the Doctors and post mortem examination could not fix the cause for death." State of Haryana v. Ved Prakash, AIR 1994 SC 468 (469, 470) : 1994 CrLJ 140.

[8648] ● Evidence of daughter of deceased proved by extra-judicial confession of prosecution witnesses and corroborated by other witnesses.—Learned Senior counsel appearing for the appellants has, however, contended that the evidence of the daughter of the deceased (PW-13) should not be accepted because she did not make any statement when the police recorded her statement when the dead body was discovered. But she deposed only after two and a half years in the Court. It may be indicated here that PW-13 was under the custody of the mother and from her evidence it transpires that she had to suffer great trauma on account of a licentious and misguided mother and despite all imploration, she could not persuade her mother to lead dignified life. She had to live with her mother and accused 1 and it is not at all unlikely that at the initial stage she did not dare making any statement about the said murder but when she was cited as a witness, she wanted to make clean breast of the relevant facts and stated the truth. Her evidence gets corroboration from the depositions of other witnesses and also from the extra-judicial confession proved by PWs 1, 2, 3, and 4. We, therefore, do not find any reason to discard the evidence of PW13. Pathan Fathima v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1995 SC 1958 : 1995 CrLJ 3613.

[8649] ● Extra-judicial confession made to prosecution witness.—We have carefully seen the evidence of PW-13 to whom the appellant is alleged to have made extra-judicial confession. He admitted that the appellant had for the first time taken him on a scooter. He did not know the names of the father and the relation of the appellant and had gone with the appellant to the Tankbund, where the appellant is claimed to have made extra-judicial confession. The evidence does not inspire confidence as, according to PW-13, though he had gone near the dead body and found some person there, he did not disclose the alleged confession to anyone at that time. Police too was seen near the dead body, but he did not tell them about it, nor about the availability of the appellant at that time. No ostensible reason was given to take PW-13 into confidence to confess the crime. Judicial confession under Section 164, CrPC was not recorded. Kailash Potlia v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1996 SC 66 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 985 : 1995 CrLJ 4183 : 1995 (3) Crimes 54.

[8650] ● Extra-judicial confession made to PW-7.—In the present case extra-judicial confession is alleged to have been made by accused 1, to (PW-7). It has come on the record that this witness had no special friendship with either of the accused. (PW-7) in his evidence had vaguely stated that after about one and half months of the incident, accused 1 contacted him and in the presence of accused 2 confessed the crime. After going through the evidence of this witness, it may be stated that his evidence cannot be accepted as trustworthy. Balbir Singh v. State of Punjab, 1996 SCC (Cri) 1158 (1160) : JT 1996 (7) SC 342 : (1996) 3 Crimes 80.

[8651] ● Extra-judicial confession of accused to Sarpanch.—The Trial Court disbelieved the Sarpanch stating that the same did not inspire confidence because of the reason that the offence having been committed in absolute secrecy, the perpetrator would have been too hesitant to make a confession; more so, when practically all the residents of the village were strongly condemning the rapist/ killer of a young girl of the same village. The trial Court absolutely missed. The point that the Sarpanch was approached by the accused to seek protection as the police was putting pressure on the members of his family. A Sarpanch being a man of authority it was nothing unnatural in approaching him. Dharma v. Nirmal Singh alias Bittu, AIR 1996 SC 1136 : (1996) 7 SCC 471 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 444 (449) : 1996 CrLJ 1631 : JT 1996 (4) SC 608.

[8652] ● Extra-judicial confession made by accused to witness.—Coupled with the evidence of motive if the evidence of extra-judicial confessions of accused No. 1 and 2 stood the test of scrutiny then there would have been a cast iron case against accused Nos. 1 and 2. It is the case of prosecution that Accused 1 and 2 approached PW-10 and PW-13, an employee of father of deceased and stated before them that they had committed a mistake and that they had killed the girl in anger and they should get matter amicably settled. Then again after 15 days he met PW-10 and stated that they are prepared to compensate. The witness also did not inform any one about the so-called confessional statements of the accused. His further statement was recorded by the Police on 20. 1. 1978 in connection with this alleged extra-judicial confession of the accused. If there was any such confession made by the accused before him in November or December there is no reason why he should not have gone to the Police immediately and reported about the same when investigation was in progress and even a criminal complaint was filed by the father of the deceased in the Magistrate's Court and summons were issued to the accused. Consequently no reliance could be placed on the extra-judicial confessions said to have been made by the accused before him. The witness was also not known to any of the parties and hence it was unlikely that accused would confide in him and confess their guilt before him. The learned Trial Judge was, therefore, justified in not placing reliance on extra-judicial confessions of accused No. 1 and 2, said to have been made before this witness. Mulak Raj v. State of Haryana, AIR 1996 SC 2868 : (1996) 7 SCC 308 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 398 : 1996 CrLJ 1358 : JT 1996 (1) SC 401 : 1996 (1) Crimes 24 (SC).

[8653] ● Extra-judicial confession to employee of father of deceased.—PW-13 was an employee of father of deceased PW-23. If the accused had told him as alleged by him confessing their crime of having killed deceased in anger the witness in the normal course of conduct would have rushed to his employer Krishna Kumari's father and told him about the same. But curiously enough he informed no one about the so-called extra-judicial confessions and only on 20.1.1978 his further statement was recorded by the Police wherein he stated about this so-called confession about the death of Krishna Kumari. PW-13, was present on the scene of offence after the incident and his statement was earlier recorded by the Police. Under the circumstances nothing prevented him from immediately approaching the investigating agency in November/ December, 1977 and in informing them about the so-called confession of the accused. Still he kept mum and did not do so. Consequently the version of this witness regarding the extra-judicial confessions was rightly not believed by the learned Trial Judge. That evidence of extra-judicial confessions apart from being inherently weak is not at all established on record of this case and no reliance can be placed on this evidence. Once that conclusion is reached the most important connecting link between the accused or at least accused 1 and 2 on the one hand and the homicidal death of deceased on the other gets snapped and eliminated. Mulak Raj v. State of Haryana, AIR 1996 SC 2868 : (1996) 7 SCC 308 : 1996 CrLJ 1358 : JT 1996 (1) SC 401.

[8654] ● Extra-judicial confession weak type of evidence.—An extra-judicial confession by its very nature is rather a weak type of evidence and requires appreciation with great deal of care and caution; where an extra-judicial confession is surrounded by suspicious circumstances, its credibility becomes doubtful and it loses its importance. The Courts generally look for independent reliable corroboration before placing any reliance upon an extra-judicial confession. Balwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1996 SC 607 : 1995 Supp (4) SCC 259 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 59 (65) : 1996 CrLJ 883 : JT 1995 (8) SC 81.

[8655] ● Extra-judicial confession surrounded by suspicious circumstances.—PW-3 claims to be the Pardhan of Mohalla Preet Nagar and states that she is a social worker. According to her deposition, the appellant had made an extra-judicial confession to her when she visited his house on 20-3-1984 on learning from the neighbours that the appellant had killed his two daughters. PW-3, however, lodged the complaint with the Police only on 23-3-1984 when not only had she learnt from the neighbours about the murder of the two girls by the appellant but the appellant had himself made an extra-judicial confession to her 20-3-1984 itself. PW-3 admitted in her cross-examination that she was with the Police in connection with the case of Darshana from 21-3-84 to 23- 3-84 but could offer no explanation as to why she did not lodge the complaint with the Police till 23-3-1984. In view of the hostility which the appellant had with PW-3 for leading his life astray, the story of confession is not acceptable The manner in which the extra-judicial confession is alleged to have been made and the silence of PW-3 for three days in disclosing the same to the Police, even though she had admittedly been with the Police between 21st March and 23rd March, 1984 renders it unsafe to rely upon her statement. The unexplained long delay in lodging the FIR detracts materially from the reliability of the prosecution case on general and the testimony of PW-3 in particular. The alleged extra-judicial confession is surrounded by suspicious circumstances and the prosecution has not been able to establish that the appellant had made any extra-judicial confession to PW-3. Balwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1996 SC 607 : 1995 Supp (4) SCC 259 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 59 : 1996 CrLJ 883 : JT 1995 (8) SC 81.

[8656] ● Confession to reserve police officer—Admissibility of.—A senior reserve Police Officer appointed under the State Reserve Police Force Act, though is a Police Officer under the Bombay Police Act and an officer-in-charge of a police station, he is in charge only for the purpose of maintaining law and order and tranquillity in the society and the powers of investigation envisaged in Chap. XII of the CrPC have not been invested with him. Hence, S. 25 of the Evidence Act would not get attracted. State of Gujarat v. Anirudh Singh, AIR 1997 SC 2780 (2785) : (1997) 6 SCC 514 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 946 : 1997 CrLJ 3397 : JT 1997 (6) SC 236 : (1997) 2 Crimes 82.

[8657] ● Confession made to Police Officer.—It is true that any confession made to a police office is inadmissible under Section 25 of the Evidence Act and that ban is further stretched through Section 26 to the confession made to any other person also if the confessor was then in police custody. Such custody need not be necessarily be post arrest custody. The word "custody" used in Section 26 is to be understood in a pragmatic sense. If any accused is within the ken of surveillance for the purpose of the section. If he makes any confession during that period to any person be he not a police officer such confession would also be hedged within the banned contours outlined in Section 26 of the Evidence Act. But the confession made by the respondent to PW-6 and PW-7 was not made while he was anywhere near the precincts of the police station or during the surveillance of police. Though Ex P-7 would have been recorded inside the police station its contents were disclosed long before they were reduced to writing. We are only concerned with the inculpatory statement which the respondent had made to PW-6 and PW-7 before they took him to the police station. So the mere fact that the confession spoken to those witnesses was later put in black and white is no reason to cover it with the wrapper of inadmissibility. State of A.P. v. Gangula Satya Murthy, AIR 1997 SC 1588 : (1997) 1 SCC 272 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 325 (330, 331) : 1997 CrLJ 774 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 127.

[8658] ● Extra-judicial confession to Sarpanch of another village.—The third contention that it is highly improbable that A 1 would have gone to the witness alongwith his co-accused to confess the guilt is formidable. PW-7 has not given any reason as to why and how A. 1 and co-accused reposed such confidence in him and confessed their guilt. Jaspal Singh alias Pali v. State of Punjab, AIR 1997 SC 332 : (1997) 1 SCC 510 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 358 (362) : 1997 CrLJ 370. TO THE SAME EFFECT : Darshan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1997 SC 332 : (1997) 1 SCC 510 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 358 (362) : 1997 CrLJ 370.

[8659] ● Extra-judicial confession fall of material omissions.—Coming to the next circumstance, namely the extra-judicial confession alleged to have been made by the appellants to Bharpur Singh, the prosecution had not chosen to examine him as a witness at the trial. One Bagicha Singh (PW-7) was examined who in his evidence has stated that he had gone to the house of Bharpur Singh for some work and at that time both the appellants had come to his house; they were nervous and when he (Bharpur Singh) inquired from them the reason, (A-1) told that they had committed the murder of Surinder Kaur. During the cross-examination, several material omissions were brought on record. He had not stated before the Police that he was on visiting terms with Bharpur Singh or A-1 and A-2. The evidence of this witness is full of material omissions. If this witness was not close to the appellants, it is extremely doubtful whether they would confess the guilt in his presence. The Courts below have overlooked this aspect and erroneously held that the prosecution has proved the extra-judicial confession alleged to have been made by the appellants. It is not safe to accept this evidence on the absence of corroboration Prem Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1997 SC 221 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 255 (260) : 1997 CrLJ 69 : JT 1996 (9) SC 504. TO THE SAME EFFECT : Amarjit Singh v. State of Punjab and State of Punjab v. Bimal Kaur, AIR 1997 SC 221 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 255 (260) : 1997 CrLJ 69 : JT 1996 (9) SC 504.

[8660] ● Extra-judicial confession before Mukhia.—We see no reason to doubt the evidence of Mukhia PW-13 and other witnesses regarding A-1 making the extra-judicial confession before him. Ex. 5 was received by the investigating officer at about 10 p.m. and he made an endorsement on it to that effect. We have, therefore, no doubt whatsoever regarding the prosecution evidence that A-1 had made the extra-judicial confession before the Mukhia at 8 p.m. The trial Court was fully justified in relying upon the said confession. State of Bihar v. Anirudh Thakur, AIR 1998 SC 921 (924) : (1998) 9 SCC 616 : 1998 CrLJ 1201 : JT 1998 (1) SC 505.

[8661] ● Extra-judicial confession weak piece of evidence.—There is no doubt that convictions can be based on extra-judicial confession but it is well-settled that in the very nature of things, it is a weak piece of evidence. It is to be proved just like any other fact and the value thereof depends upon the veracity of the witness to whom it is made. It may not be necessary that the actual words used by the accused must be given by the witness but it is for the Court to decide on the acceptability of the evidence having regard to the credibility of the witnesses. Kavita v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1998 SC 2473, 2474 : (1998) 6 SCC 108 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 421 : 1998 CrLJ 3624 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 461 : JT 1998 (5) SC 149 : (1998) 3 Crimes 67.

[8662] ● Extra-judicial confession to senior officers.—In the present case of murder extra-judicial confession was made by accused who was a sepoy in army to his senior officers. At the time when the appellant made the confession, neither he nor the military authorities had any knowledge of the recovery of the headless trunk of the appellant's wife. The military authorities were in no way biased or inimical to the appellant. Nothing is brought out in the evidence in respect of the military officers which may indicate that they had a motive for attributing an untruthful statement to the appellant. The statement has been proved by one of the officers to whom it was made. The said officer has been examined as PW-32. A perusal of the evidence shows that the vague plea raised by the appellant that the statement was obtained from him on inducement and promise is not true. In such circumstances, it is open to the Court to rest its conclusion on the basis of such statement and no corroboration is necessary. Vinayak Shivajirao Pol v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1998 SC 1096 (1098) : (1998) 2 SCC 233 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 610 : 1998 CrLJ 1558 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 83 : JT 1998 (1) SC 184.

[8663] ● Extra-judicial confession made justly by all accused.—Evidence of PW-6, who only testified about it, is improbable and lacking in credence. It does not stand to reason—rather it seems odd—that all the four accused persons should be seized at the same time by a mood to approach PW-6 to make a joint confession. It is significant to note that they had no particular relationship or connection with PW-6, so as to confide in him and take his assistance for surrendering before the police. If really, they wanted to surrender—as is the evidence of PW-6—we fail to understand why instead of going to the Police they would approach him and blurt out a confession before him. Surinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, AIR 1999 SC 215 : 1999 (SCC) (Cri) 33 : 1999 CrLJ 267 : 1998(4) Crimes 101.

[8664] ● Extra-judicial confession made before witness—Close relative of accused.—It was also submitted that it was not probable that the appellant would have gone to Ram Kishan and made such a confessional statements. Ram Kishan's son being his brother-in-law, it is quite probable that the appellant thought that he would get shelter in his house. It was also submitted that the explanation that this witness was not available for recording his statement for 20 days cannot be believed. The Investigating Officer has explained that he had summoned this witness but as he was not found, his statement could not be recorded before 19.10.1978. There is no material to infer that he had not gone to the Police Station even though he was informed. Evidence of PW-5, suffers from no infirmity and we see no reason to interfere with the findings recorded by the Courts below that his evidence is reliable and truthful. His evidence is sufficient to establish the guilt of the appellant. Ram Khillari v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1999 SC 1002 : (1999) 9 SCC 89 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 376 (377) : 1999 CrLJ 1450 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 123 : JT 1999 (1) SC 453.

[8665] ● Extra-judicial confession made before relative.—In the instant case where extra-judicial confession was made before a close relative, delay in recording the statement of witness was duly explained by the investigating officer and the evidence of witness proving extra-judicial confession was found to be reliable and truthful, conviction was rightly based on the testimony of such witness. Ram Khillari v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1999 SC 1002 : (1999) 9 SCC 89 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 376 : 1999 CrLJ 1450 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 123.

[8666] ● Extra-judicial confession improbable.—In the instant case the evidence of PW-6 who only testified about the extra-judicial confession is improbable and lucking on credence. It does not stand to reason—rather it seems odd—that all the four accused persons should be seized at the same time by a mood to approach PW-6 to make a joint confession. It is significant to note that they had no particular relationship or connection with PW-6 so as to confide in him and take his assistance for surrendering before the Police. If really, they wanted to surrender—as is the evidence of PW-6—we fail to understand why instead of going to the Police they would approach him and blurt out a confession before him. Another compelling reason which makes the evidence of PW-6 in this regard suspect is that even though he was admittedly, close to the family of the deceased, he did not disclose the names of the accused persons to PW-2 the wife of the deceased, who lived at a distance of one furlong from his house and was not aware as to who killed her husband. Surinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, AIR 1999 SC 215 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 33 (34, 35) : 1999 CrLJ 267 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 776 : JT 1998 (8) SC 43.

[8667] ● Confession made to avoid harassment.—The confession in the normal course of events are made to avoid harassment by the police and to a person who could otherwise protect the accused against such a harassment. The records in the present appeal do not reflect any one of these aspects. As such it is difficult to point to the accused with the crime on the basis of the evidence available in this case. The incident did take place on 18.11.1989 and the body was recovered on 19.11.1989. The extra-judicial confession of the accused as regards his involvement in the crime is said to have been effected to PW-7 on 7.12.89. Thus a delay of more than 20 days without any explanation whatsoever. The delay in recording an extra-judicial confession before a person wholly unconnected with the police is always a matter of great suspect. The High Court was right in rejecting the confessional statement. State of Punjab v. Gurdeep Singh, AIR 1999 SC 3724 : (1999) 7 SCC 714 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1368 (1377) : 1999 CrLJ 4597 : JT 1999 (6) SC 514.

[8668] ● Confession—Meaning.—Confession in common acceptation means and implies acknowledgment of guilt—its evidentiary value and its acceptability however shall have to be assessed by the Court having due regard to the credibility of the witnesses. In the event, however, the Court is otherwise in a position having due regard to the attending circumstances to believe the witness before when the confession is made and is otherwise satisfied that the confession is in fact voluntary and without there being any doubt in regard thereto, an order of conviction can be founded on such evidence. State of Punjab v. Gurdeep Singh, AIR 1999 SC 3724 : (1999) 7 SCC 714 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1368 (1371) : 1999 CrLJ 4597 : JT 1999 (6) SC 514.

[8669] ● Extra-judicial confession not relied as exact words not reproduced.—The extra-judicial confession as deposed by PW-15 has not been relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge and the High Court also came to the conclusion that it is difficult to rely upon the same, as the exact words or even the words as nearly as possible have not been reproduced by PW-15. Even the statement of PW-15 indicates that Raveendran and he went to an arrack shop and consumed liquor, whereafter Ranveendran disclosed the entire incident and, therefore, such statement cannot be said to be a voluntary and truthful one and on the other hand it is the outcome of the consumption of liquor, both by the witness as well as the accused, if at all he can be said to have made the statement. In this view of the matter the so-called extra-judicial confession has to be excluded from the purview of consideration. C.K. Raveendran v. State of Kerala, AIR 2000 SC 369 : (2000) 1 SCC 225 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 108 (112) : 2000 CrLJ 497.

[8670] ● Extra-judicial confession if found reliable.—The law is that an extra-judicial confession, if found reliable can be made the sole basis of conviction. Nonetheless as a proposition of practice and prudence, it is advisable that Court may search for assuring circumstances, so that, there can be no room for doubt regarding the reliability of the extra-judicial confession. State of A.P. v. Shaik Mazhar, AIR 2001 SC 2427 : 2001 CrLJ 3287 : JT 2000 (4) SC 391 : 2001 Cr App R (SC) 311.

[8671] ● Extra-judicial confession made before friend.—PW-5 stated that the appellant-Sanjay who was his friend came to his shop in the evening of 20th June, 1990 at about 5-6 p.m. He was in worried mood. Upon enquiry he told the witness that being in need of money he alongwith his three friends went to the house of his aunt with a view to commit theft. He further told that while he and one of his friends stood outside the house of his aunt, the other went inside the house to commit theft. Those who went inside after coming back out of the house told Sanjay-apellant that they had committed the murder of his aunt. After knowing about the death of his aunt the aforesaid accused got scared and worried. He came to the witness for seeking his help. The witness told him that he should go to the Police and make his genuine statement there. We have critically analysed the statement of the aforesaid a witness and do not find that the story of the accused is false, as submitted by counsel on behalf of Sanjay appellant. The witness, PW-5 has categorically stated "I developed friendship with accused-Sanjay in the last one and half years of this incident". The common friend of the witness and the accused was one Dharmender Dhingra. In his statement, recorded under S. 313, CrPC, the appellant-Sanjay has not specifically denied his friendship with PW-5. No suggestion was made to the aforesaid witness for allegedly making wrong statement and thereby roping in the said accused with the commission of the crime. Admittedly, PW-5 is a shopkeeper and has no axe to grind with the appellant-Sanjay. Why did he go to the witness to make clean his breast, is a fact only known to the accused for which he has not given any explanation. We have no hesitation to believe the statement of PW-5 that the accused-Sanjay `had in fact come to him on 20th June, 1990 about 5-6 p.m. and confided with respect to the offence of robbery and murder committed by him and others on that day. Sanjay @ Kaka v. State (NCCT of Delhi), AIR 2001 SC 979 : (2001) 3 SCC 190 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 449 (455) : 2001 CrLJ 1231 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 181 : JT 2001 (2) SC 461 : 2001 Cr App R (SC) 169 : (2001) 1 Crimes 268.

[8672] ● Extra-judicial confession made before independent witness.—There is no reason, in the instant case to discard the extra-judicial confession made by the accused before PW-3, an independent witness who was known to the accused and his father. PW-3 is also resident of the same locality and was working on a lathe machine. After making confession, accused sought his help to save him. It has come on record that father of the accused was plying rickshaw and PW-3 was sending his goods in his rickshaw and that the accused was coming to his work-shop quite often. The witness has also stated that the father of the accused was meeting him on number of occasions. Raju v. State of Haryana, AIR 2001 SC 2043 (2045) : (2000) 9 SCC 50 : 2001 CrLJ 2580 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 448 : JT 2001 (5) SC 203.

[8673] ● Extra-judicial confession made voluntary before witnesses.—In the instant case the extra-judicial confession made by the appellant has been sought to be proved by the testimony of PWs-2, 5, 6, and 7. All the aforesaid witnesses are closely related to the appellant in whom, under the normal circumstances, he would have confided hoping help, protection and being safeguarded. The confession has been made instantaneously immediately after the occurrence and is not alleged to have been procured under any undue influence, coercion or pressure. Though the appellant expected a favour from the witnesses, yet none of them is stated to have promised to favour him in case he made a truthful statement regarding the occurrence. Except the alleged usurption of property of the deceased by PWs-6 and 7, there is no other suggestion which could tend to show that their evidence is tainted and that the extra-judicial confession was not voluntarily made by the appellant....It is true that PW-5 has been declared hostile and no reliance can be placed upon his testimony for the purposes of deciding as to whether the appellant had made the extra-judicial confession or not. Similarly, the statement of PW-7, Joginder Singh, to the extent it refers to the appellant having made extra-judicial confession is inadmissible in evidence as admittedly by the time this witness reached the place of occurrence, the appellant had been arrested by the Police and any confession made by him thereafter is inadmissible in evidence. It is in evidence that the appellant was admittedly arrested before the arrival of PW-7 in the village. However, there is reliable evidence (PW-6) which has been believed by both the Courts below and we have not been persuaded to disagree with the aforesaid findings. We are also not impressed by the argument that PW-6 had made the statement allegedly for depriving the appellant from succession to the estate of Bhajan Singh, deceased. The time, the manner and the attending circumstances clearly prove that the appellant had made a voluntary extra-judicial confession before this witness without any fear, favour or coercion Gura Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2001 SC 330 : (2001) 2 SCC 205 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 323 (330) : 2001 CrLJ 487.

[8674] ● Confession—Exact words uttered necessary for proving.—Further, the learned counsel is right in submitting that there was no necessity for Sandeep and other accused to go at the residence of Laxmi Narain, moreso when Laxmi Narain was not closely acquainted with the accused nor was having any status in the society so that he could be helpful to them. On this aspect, prosecution has not brought anything on record to point out the reason as to why Sandeep and others had gone at the house of PW-9. In cross-examination, witness stated that he was a member of Lions Club and that Vikram had visited his house 2-3 times and last time 2 months prior to the date of occurrence. He has also stated that he was knowing Sandeep prior to his visit at his residence. It is his say that he met him in a restaurant and both of them took snacks and he made payment. Considering the entire evidence of this witness the prosecution has not brought on record any reason for the accused to go at the residence of Laxmi Narain to confess their crime. Therefore, the said confessional statements cannot be relied upon. Sandeep v. State of Haryana, AIR 2001 SC 1103 : (2001) 9 SCC 41 : 2001 CrLJ 1456 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 296 : JT 2001 (3) SC 136.

[8675] ● Extra-judicial confession not obtained by coercion be made basis of conviction.—It is settled position of law that extra-judicial confession, if true and voluntary it can be relied upon by the Court to convict the accused for the commission of the crime alleged. Despite inherent weakness of extra-judicial confession as an item of evidence, it cannot be ignored when shown that such confession was made before a person who has no reason to state falsely and to whom it is made in the circumstances which tend to support the statement. In Maghar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1975 SC 1320, this Court held that the evidence in the form of extra-judicial confession made by the accused to witnesses cannot always be termed to be a tainted evidence. Corroboration of such evidence is required only by way of abundant caution. If the Court believes the witness before whom the confession is made and is satisfied that the confession was true and voluntarily made, then the conviction can be founded on such evidence alone In Narayan Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1985 SC 1678 the Court cautioned that it is not open to the Court trying the criminal case to start with presumption that extra-judicial confession is always a weak type of evidence. It would depend on the nature of the circumstances, the time when the confession is made and the credibility of the witnesses who speak for such a confession. The retraction of extra-judicial confession which is a usual phenomenon in criminal cases would by itself not weaken the case of the prosecution based upon such a confession. In Kishore Chand v. State of H.P., AIR 1990 SC 2140. This Court held that an unambiguous extra-judicial confession possesses high probative value as it emanates from the person who committed the crime and is admissible in evidence provided it is free from suspicion and suggestion of any falsity However, before relying on the alleged confession, the Court has to be satisfied that it is voluntary and is not the result of inducement, threat or promise envisaged under S. 24 of the Evidence Act or was brought about in suspicious circumstances to circumvent Ss. 25 and 26. The Court is required to look into the surrounding circumstances to find out as to whether such confession is not inspired by any improper or collateral consideration or circumvention of law suggesting that it may not be true. All relevant circumstances such as the person to whom the confession is made, the time and place of making it, the circumstances in which it was made, have to be scrutinized. To the same effect is the judgment in Baldev Raj v. State of Haryana, AIR 1991 SC 37. In Madan Gopal Karrad, v. Naval Dubey, JT 1992 (3) SC 270. This Court held that the extra-judicial confession which is not obtained by coercion, promise of favour of false hope and is plenary in character and voluntary in nature can be made the basis for conviction even without corroboration. Gura Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2001 SC 330 : (2001) 2 SCC 205 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 323 (329, 330) : 2001 CrLJ 487 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 22.

[8677] ● Extra-judicial confession made before stranger.—The testimony of PW-2 as regards the confession made by the accused at the earliest point of time is such as to inspire confidence in the mind of the Court. PW-2 may be a stranger to the accused but it should also be noted that there is absolutely no reason why he should unnecessarily implicate the accused without any loss of time he brought to the notice of PW-3 and the police of the factum of confession made by the accused soon after the crime. His version in this regard is supported by PW-3 who, being the father of the proprietor of the lodge, came to the lodge immediately after receiving the phone call from PW-2. The conduct of the accused in committing the murder and immediately revealing this fact to a stranger like PW-2 may not be consistent with the ordinary human conduct. It may be difficult to speculate as to what prompted the accused to confess the commission of crime before PW-2 and to remain in the lodge after the incident. But, on that account, there need not be astute reluctance on the part of the Court to accept the extra judicial confession. The unnatural conduct on the part of the accused will not necessarily shake the veracity of PW-2's testimony but it will put the Court on guard to get the assurance of truth in the prosecution case by corroborative evidence including circumstantial factors. We have before us the evidence of PW-3 who corroborates the version of PW-2 and both these witnesses have no reason to falsely implicate the accused. That apart, the circumstances referred to by the trial Court are almost clinching and lend assurance to the correctness of the version of PW-2. State of Karnataka v. M.N. Ramdas, AIR 2002 SC 3109 : (2002) 7 SCC 639 : (2002) 4 Crimes 193 (SC).

[8678] ● Extra-judicial confession not voluntary.—It is on record that the accused Jagbir was being taken to various places and at different points of time he was being pressurized to make a statement. Though the accused was claimed to have made the statement in the present of a large number of persons, a combined reading of the evidence shows that nobody else speaks about the so-called extra-judicial confession, not even those who have been examined as PWs. Though PW-10 said that there were many persons who had heard it, no other person has stated about it. The statements of PWs-7 and 10 go to show that the accused was being interrogated by PWs and other villagers as well as his father and other relatives. Interrogation continued for about 3 days when allegedly Jagbir confessed his guilt. Though the first information report was lodged by PW-7 after knowing about the extra-judicial confession, there is no mention about this vital fact. In a given circumstance, omission to mention about the particular aspect may not render the prosecution version suspicious. But when circumstances in the present case are taken in their entirety the alleged extra-judicial confession is not believable. In order to make an extra-judicial confession a reliable evidence it has to be shown that the same was voluntary. The factual scenario as presented by the prosecution goes to show that the alleged extra-judicial confession cannot be termed to be voluntary even if it was said to have been made, as claimed. The High Court was right in discarding the alleged extra-judicial confession. State of Haryana v. Jagbir Singh, AIR 2003 SC 4377 : (2003) 11 SCC 261 : 2003 CrLJ 5054 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 126 (134).

[8679] ● Confessions made to TV and press reporters.—The talk which Afzal had with the TV and press reporters admittedly in the immediate presence of the police and while he was in police custody, should not be relied upon irrespective of the fact whether the statement was made to a police officer within the meaning of Section 162, CrPC or not. We are not prepared to attach any weight or credibility to the statements made in the course of such interview prearranged by the police. The police officials in their overzealousness arranged for a media interview which has evoked serious comments from the counsel about the manner in which publicity was sought to be given thereby. Incidentally, we may mention that PW-60 the DCP, who was supervising the investigation, surprisingly expressed his ignorance about the media interview. We think that the wrong step taken by the police should not enure to the benefit or detriment of either the prosecution or the accused. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1834) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[8680] ● Extra-judicial confession made by co-accused.—Value another incriminating circumstance sought to be proved against the accused is the extra-judicial confession alleged to have been made by the ninth accused PM wherein he named A-1, A-2, A-5 and A-6. It is alleged that he made the confession to PW-105 SN and A-9 is alleged to have disclosed to PW-105 that these accused persons had given him money and he murdered SGN for the sake of money. Under Section 30 of Evidence Act, the extra-judicial confession made by a co-accused could be admitted in evidence only as a corroborative piece of evidence. In the absence of any substantive evidence against these accused persons, the extra-judicial confession allegedly made by the ninth accused loses its significance and there cannot be any conviction based on such extra-judicial confession. The High Court has given cogent and satisfying reasons for the acquittal of the accused of A-1 to A-8. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Paltan Mallah, AIR 2005 SC 733 : (2005) 3 SCC 169 : 2005 CrLJ 918 (921, 922) : 2005 (1) Crimes 220.

[8682] ● Extra-judicial confession before village Administrative officer.—There does not exist any embargo for an accused person to make an extra-judicial confession before a village Administrative officer. There is no reason as to why such an extra-judicial confession could not be made before a village Administrative officer with a view to exclude the admissibility of the confession made before a person, he must be a police officer. A village Administrative officer does not answer the description. While carrying out his duty to inform the police or the Magistrate in terms of Section 40 of the Code, the village headman does not act as a public servant removable only by or with the sanction of the local Government nor he acts in his capacity as Magistrate. The extra-judicial confession by the appellant before the village Administrative officer was not admissible and, thus, could not be relied upon. Sivakumar v. State by Inspector of Police, AIR 2006 SC 653 : (2006) 1 SCC 714 : 2006 CrLJ 536 (542) : (2006) 1 Crimes 158.

[8683] ● Extra-judicial confession before advocate.—Extra-judicial confession before an advocate was found reliable. Gagan Kanojia v. State of Punjab, (2006) 13 SCC 516 : (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 109 : (2007) 2 Crimes 81.

[8684] ● Extra-judicial confession before village Administrative Officer—Corroborated by Statement of PW—Conviction held proper.—Where the accused had killed his wife as the latter had refused to have illicit relations with another person, the extra-judicial confession made by the accused before the Administrative officer of the village was corroborated by the statement of PW 2 from whose house the dead body of the deceased blood-stained clothes and weapon of offence was recovered, the conviction of the accused for offence under Section 302, IPC was held proper. Namale Subba Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 9 : (2006) 10 SCC 557 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 155 : 2007 CrLJ 47 (48).

[8685] ● Extra-judicial confession made to stranger.—The Counsel appearing on behalf of the accused has submitted that PW 48 being a stranger to A-2 and Brahm Singh, who was not examined by the prosecution on the pretext of having been won over, having been remotely connected to PW 48 no reliance should be placed on the confession made by A-2 before A 48. The Supreme Court rejected the submission for the reason that in his testimony PW 48 has stated that he had attended the betrothal ceremony and marriage of A-2. Therefore, question of his being stranger to A-2 does not arise. However, it is well settled by a catena decisions rendered by the Supreme Court than extra judicial confession made even to a stranger cannot be eschewed from consideration if it is found to have been truthful and voluntarily made before a person who has no reason to state falsely.

Examined in the light of the enunciation of law as above, the Supreme Court was of the view that the testimony of PW 48 as regards the confession made by A-2 was such as to inspire confidence in the mind of the Court. Indisputably, extra-judicial confession was made by A-2 to PW 48 prior of his arrest by the police and, therefore, question of it being made under any inducement, threat or promise does not arise. Moreover, there was absolutely no reason for PW 48 to unnecessarily implicate the accused, as he had no animus against him.

The Court found no reason to disbelieve the evidence of PW 48 and hold that A-2 made extra-judicial confession which was voluntary and truthful. Ram Singh v. Sonia, AIR 2007 SC 1218 : (2007) 3 SCC 1 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 1 : 2007 CrLJ 1642 (1656, 1657) : 2007 (2) Crimes 1 (SC).

[8686] ● Extra-judicial confession before persons in whom accused had no reason to confide.—Where the accused making extra-judicial confession had no reason to confide in the persons before whom the extra-judicial confession was made, the rejection of the extra-judicial confession alleged to be made by the accused, by the High Court was found proper. State of Rajasthan v. Kashi Ram, AIR 2007 SC 144 : (2006) 12 SCC 254 : (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 688 : (2007) 1 Crimes 262.

[8687] ● Extra-judicial confession made by co-accused.—In the present case, the extra-judicial confession made by the co-accused Babu clearly indicates that Asha was followed by Akhlaq (appellant) who in turn was followed by the other co-accused. The said extra-judicial confession indicates the entry of all accused including Akhlaq (appellant) into the flied of Kanchi. They were seen by Jairam Singh (PW 11). The evidence of PW 11 stood corroborated by the evidence of PW 4 to that extent. The extra-judicial confession shows that Asha was raped forcibly and then strangulated. The injuries on the different parts of her body indicates that she was raped forcibly. This is clear form the testimony of Dr. Surendra Pal Singh (PW 14). The location of the body in the scattered flied also shows that she was forcibly raped. The strangulation by Dhoti is also one more circumstance showing how she was murdered. Therefore, each and every statement made in the extra-judicial confession corroborates the evidence of PW 1, PW 11, PW 4 and PW 14. Moreover, Akhlaq (appellant) remained silent when confession was made by co-accused Babu to Mahesh Chandra (PW 6). In the said confession, Babu implicated himself. This conduct of Akhlaq (appellant) has been noticed by the trial Court. The trial Court has correctly invoked S. 8 of the Evidence Act while evaluating the extra-judicial confession. Held, the conviction of the accused on the charge of murder under Sections 302/34 was proper. Akhlaq v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2007 CrLJ 2277 (2281, 2282) : (2007) 2 Crimes 377 (SC).

[8688] ● Extra-judicial confession before prosecution witnesses.—The extra-judicial confession alleged to be made before two PWs was found not reliable looking to the other evidence in the case. Conviction of the accused on charge of murder under Section 302 IPC was not maintained. Roop Singh v. State of Punjab, (2008) 11 SCC 79 : 2008 CrLJ 3184 (3187) (SC) : 2008 (3) Crimes 52.

[8689] ● Extra-judicial confession—To be made before private persons.—Extra-judicial confessions are generally those that are made by a party to or before a private individual which includes even a judicial officer in his private capacity. It also includes a Magistrate who is not especially empowered to record confessions under Section 164, CrPC, or a Magistrate so empowered but receiving the confession at a stage when Section 164 of the code does not apply. Kusuma Ankama Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 2819 : (2008) 13 SCC 257 : 2008 CrLJ 3502 (3507).

[8690] ● Extra-judicial confession—Validity.—It would depend on the nature of the circumstances, the time when the confession was made and the credibility of the witnesses who speak to such a confession. Such a confession can be ruled upon and conviction can be based thereon if the evidence about the confession comes from the month of witnesses who appear to be unbiased, nor even remotely inimical to the accused and is respect of whom nothing is brought out which may tend to indicate that he may have a motive of attributely an untruthful statement to the accused, the word speaker to, by the witness are clear and unambiguous and unmistakably convey that the accused is the perpetrator of the crime and nothing is omitted by the witness which may militate against it. Kusuma Ankama v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 2819 : (2008) 13 SCC 257 : 2008 CrLJ 3502.

[8691] ● Extra-judicial confession—Value.—Extra-judicial confession is evidence of weak nature. However, when there is any recovery pursuant thereto, it may be taken as truthful. Ponnusamy v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2008 SC 2110 : (2008) 5 SCC 587 : 2008 (2) SCC (Cri) 656 : 2008 CrLJ 2563.

[8692] ● Extra-judicial confession—Exact words need not be produced.—Exact words of extra-judicial confession need not be produced. Aloke Nath Dutta v. State of West Bengal, (2007) 12 SCC 230 : 2008 SCC (Cri) 264 : (2007) 1 Crimes 321.

[8693] ● Extra-judicial confession made before large number of persons in form of natural response.—Extra-judicial confession made before large number of persons in the form of natural response to a stressful stimulus on the spur of moment was found voluntary and reliable. Aloke Nath Dutta v. State of West Bengal, (2007) 12 SCC 230 : (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 264 : (2007) 1 Crimes 321.

[8694] ● Court not to start with presumption that extra-judicial confession is weak type of evidence.—It is not open to any Court to start with the presumption that extra-judicial confession is a weak type of evidence. It would depend on the nature of the circumstances, the time when the confession was made and credibility of the witnesses who speak to such a confession. Kusuma Ankama Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 2819 : (2008) 13 SCC 257 : 2008 AIR SCW 4649 : 2008 CrLJ 3502 (3508).

[8695] ● Extra-judicial confession by accused, a free man.—The, Court would rely on extra-judicial confession if the accused at the time of making the confession was a free man. Kusuma Ankama Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 2819 : (2008) 13 SCC 257 : 2008 AIR SCW 4669 : 2008 CrLJ 3502 (3507).

[8696] ● Extra-judicial confession—Voluntariness.—As to extra-judicial confessions, two questions arise : (1) were they mad voluntarily? and (ii) are the true? As the section enacts, a confession made by an accused person is irrelevant in criminal proceedings, if the making of the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise. (1) having reference to the charge against the accused person. (2) proceeding from a person in authority, and (3) sufficient, in the opinion of the Court to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of the temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him. Mohd. Azad v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2009 SC 1307 : (2008) 15 SCC 449 : JT 2008 (11) 658 : 2008 (4) Crimes 449.

[8697] ● Extra-judicial confession—Inducement, threat or promise.—The inducement may take the form of a promise or of a threat, and often the inducement involves both promise and threat, a promise of forgiveness if disclosure is made and threat of prosecution. If it is not. (See Woodroffe's Evidence 9th Edn., p. 284) A promise is always attached to the confession alternative while a threat is always attached to the confession alternative while a threat is always attached to the silence alternative: thus, in one case the prisoner is measuring the net advantage of the promise minus the general undesirability of a false confession as against the present unsatisfactory situation, while in the other case he is measuring the net advantage of the present satisfactory situation, minus the general undesirability of the concession against the threatened harm. It must be borne in mind that every inducement, threat or promise does not vitiate a confession. Since the object of the rule is to exclude only those confessions which are testimonially untrustworthy, the inducement, threat or promise must be such as is calculated to lead to an untrue confession. On the aforesaid analysis the Court is to determine the absence or presence of an inducement promise etc. or its sufficiency and how or in what measure it worked on the mind of the accused. If the inducement, promise or threat is sufficient in the opinion of the Court, to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil. It is enough to exclude the confession. The words "appear to him" in the last part of the section refer to the mentality of the accused. Chattar Singh v. State of Haryana, JT 2008 (10) SC 223.

[8698] ● Extra-judicial confession—Elements of inducement, threat etc.—Every inducement, threat or promise does not vitiate a confession. If the inducement, promise, threat is sufficient in the opinion of the Court to give the accused persons grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil, it is enough to exclude the confession, the word "appear to him" in the last part of the section refer to the mentality of the accused. State of Punjab v. Harjadev Singh, AIR 2009 SC 2693 (2695; 2696) : (2009) 16 SCC 91 : 2009 (8) SCR 54.

[8699] ● Extra-judicial confession—Evidentiary value.—Extra-judicial confession is a weak piece of evidence. However, in a given situation the Court may rely upon it. State of Andhra Pradesh v. S. Swarnalatha, (2009) 8 SCC 383 : 2009 (12) SCR 289 : 2009 (3) Crimes 385 (SC).

[8700] ● Extra-judicial confession—Evidentiary value.—Though it is not necessary that the witness should speak the exact words but there cannot be vital and material difference. While dealing with a stand of extra-judicial confession, Court has to satisfy itself that the same was voluntary and without any coercion and undue influence. Extra-judicial confession can form the basis of conviction if persons before whom it is stated to be made appear to be unbiased and not even remotely inimical to the accused. Where there is material to show animosity, Court has to proceed cautiously and find out whether confession just like any other evidence depends on veracity of witness to whom it is made. It is not invariable that the Court should not accept such evidence if actual words as claimed to have been spoken are not reproduced and the substance is given. It will depend on circumstance of the case. If substance itself is sufficient to prove culpability and there is no ambiguity about import of the statement made by accused, evidence can be acted upon even though substance and not actual words have been stated. Human mind is not a tape recorder which records what has been spoken word by word. The witness should be able to say as nearly as possible actual words spoken by the accused. That would rule out possibility of erroneous interpretation of any ambiguous statement. If word by word repetition of statement of the case is insisted upon, more often than not evidentiary value of extra-judicial confession has to be thrown out as unreliable and not useful. That cannot be a requirement in law. There can be some persons who have a good memory and may be able to repost exact words and there may he many who are possessed of normal memory and do so. It is for the Court to judge credibility of the witness's capacity and thereafter to decide whether his or her evidence has to be accepted or not. If Court believes witnesses before whom confession is made and is satisfied that confession was voluntary basing on such evidence, conviction can be founded. Such confession should be clear, specific and unambiguous. Shiva Kumar Payaswami Tewari v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 (SC) 1692 : 2009 (11) SCC 262 : 2009 (1) SCR 442 : 2009 (1) Supreme 461.

[8701] ● Evidentiary value of extra-judicial confession.—Evidentiary value of extra-judicial confession depends upon trustworthiness of the witness before whom confession is made. Law does contemplate that the evidence of an extra-judicial confession should in all cases be corroborated. It is not an inflexible rule that in no case conviction can be based solely or extra-judicial confession. It is basically in the realm of appreciation of evidence and a question of fact to be decided in the facts and circumstances of each case. Podyami Sukada v. State of M.P., AIR 2010 SC 2977 : 2010 CrLJ 4273 (4275).

[8702] ● Extra-judicial confession—Value.—An extra-judicial confession is a weak piece of evidence. Though it can be made the basis of conviction, due care and caution must be exercised by the Courts to ascertain the truthfulness of the confession. Rules of caution must be applied before accepting an extra-judicial confession. Before the Court proceeds to act on the basis of an extra-judicial confession, the circumstances under which it is made, the manner in which it is made and the persons to whom it is made must be considered along with the two rules of caution. First, whether the evidence of confession is reliable and second whether it finds corroboration. Arul Raja v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2010) 8 SCC 233 : 2010 (3) Crimes 320 (SC).

[8703] ● Extra-judicial confession—Evidentiary value.—Only the admissible part of extra-judicial confessional statement can be exhibited. The statement as a whole, if exhibited and relied upon by the prosecution, leads to the possibility of the Court getting prejudiced against the accused. Thus it has to be avoided. In the instant case, the confessional statement of A-4 had been exhibited in the Court in its full text. It was neither required or warranted nor was permissible. However, in view of the fact that there had been other sufficient material on record to show his involvement in the crime, the full exhibition of the statement had not prejudiced the case against him. C. Muniappan v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 3718 : (2010) 9 SCC 567.

[8704] ● Extra-judicial confession—Requirements.—There is no absolute rule that an extra-judicial confession can never be the basis of conviction, what is required ordinarily is that the extra-ordinary confession should be corroborated. Sansar Chand v. State of Rajasthan, (2010) 10 SCC 604.

[8705] ● Evidence relating to reliability of extra-judicial confession—Reliability.—The evidence relating to extra-judicial confession can be acted upon if the evidence about extra-judicial confession comes from the mouth of witness who appears to be unbiased and in respect of whom even remotely nothing is brought out which may tend to indicate that he may intend to indicate that he may have a motive for attributing an untruthful statement to the accused. Aftar Ahmed Ansari v. State of Uttranchal, AIR 2010 SC 773 : (2010) 2 SCC 583 : 2010 (1) Crimes 97 (SC).

[8706] ● Evidence relating to extra-judicial confession—Reliability.—In the instant case, it is proved by the prosecution that PW-5 was not an inimical terms with the appellant at all. After subjecting this evidence to a rigorous-test on the touch-stone of credibility, this Court finds that the extra-judicial confession referred to by PW 5 is reliable and is rightly accepted by the trial Court. The contention that when the appellant was being brought to the Court he was in custody and, therefore, the extra-judicial confession referred to PW 5 would be hit by the provisions of Section 26 of the Evidence Act and could not have been received in evidence cannot be accepted. The record shows that the appellant and another were produced before the Court for extension of judicial remand. The appellant could not probablise his defence that he was in custody of offence officer while he had made extra-judicial confession before PW 5. The evidence relating to extra-judicial confession inspires confidence. Aftab Ahmad Ansari v. State of Uttranchal, AIR 2010 SC 733 (785, 786) : (2010) 2 SCC 583 : 2010 (1) Crimes 97 (SC).

[8707] ● No conviction based merely evidence on extra-judicial confession.—In the instant case, the prosecution witnesses No. 2 and 4 neither in the examination nor in the cross-examination had stated anything about the extra-judicial confession said to have been made by the accused. PW-1 and PW-3 in the examination-in-chief did not support the case of the prosecution and after being declared hostile and cross-examined by the prosecution did say about the extra-judicial confession by the accused, but again in cross-examination by the defence they admitted that no again in cross-examination by the defence they admitted that no such confession was made. Thus the evidence of both the prosecution witnesses was slippery. It was held that the witnesses of extra-judicial confession did not inspire confidence and merely on the ground of recovery of weapon of crime at the instance of the accused, it would be unsafe to sustain the conviction of the accused. Podyami Sukada v. State of M.P., AIR 2010 SC 2977 : 2010 CrLJ 4273 (4275).

[8708] ● Extra-judicial confession—Corroboration—Extra-judicial confession must be used only in limited circumstances and should be corroborated by way of abundant caution. S. Arul Raja v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2010) 8 SCC 233 : 2010 (3) Crimes 320 (SC).

12. SECTION 164 CRPC 1973 : RECORDING OF A CONFESSION—RULES TO BE OBSERVED

[8709] ● Section 164 CrPC 1973 : recording of a confession—rules to be observed.—Once an investigation into an offence has commenced, evidence of a statement or a confession made by an accused person is admissible only if, (a) it consists of a written record thereof made by a Magistrate authorised under Section 64, CrPC in that behalf, and (b) the record is made in due compliance with the conditions laid down in that section. Even when all the requirements of Section 164 are satisfied, if it is shown that a police officer was present at the time when the confession was recorded, the statement or confession made by the accused becomes inadmissible because it is hit by the provisions of Section 25 Evidence Act, and Section 162, CrPC. Rao Shiv Bahadur Singh v. State of V.P., AIR 1954 SC 322 : 1954 CrLJ 910 : 1954 SCJ 362.

[8710] ● Statement or confession.—Section 164 of the Code applies to every form of statement made by any person after investigation into an offence of which he is accused has commenced, whatever be the nature of that statement, and whether it is confessional or entirely non-confessional. It follows that if any statement is made by an accused to a Magistrate, whatever be its nature, if a written record thereof has not been made by the Magistrate, oral evidence thereof cannot at all be given by any one (see Section 91, Evidence Act, and Section 164, CrPC), and even the Magistrate himself is not competent to give evidence of such a statement or confession. Rao Shiv Bahadur Singh v. State of V.P., AIR 1954 SC 322 : 1954 CrLJ 910.

[8711] ● Statement or confession made to private person.—Finally, even when it is shown that an accused had made a statement or confession to a private person and that no police officer or Magistrate was present at the time when it was made, if the Court is satisfied, after looking into all the facts and circumstances of the case, that the accused was induced to make such a statement or confession to a third party merely as a colourable pretence for the purpose of avoiding the letter of the provisions of law, such a statement or confession must be held to have been made 'in the course of an investigation' within the meaning of Sections 162 and 164 of the Code, and it must be rejected, because in its spirit it is in violation of the provisions of those sections. However, the question whether a statement or confession made by an accused before independent witnesses after an investigation has commenced falls under the bar of Section 162 and 164 is a question of fact which has to be determined in each case having regard to all the surrounding facts and circumstances, and it is required to be excluded from consideration only when the Court is satisfied beyond any doubt that the employment of such witnesses was only a colourable device and pretence which was used by the authorities for tricking the accused into making a statement which he would otherwise not have made. In the absence of any such circumstance indicating the hand of the police in obtaining an incriminating admission from the accused, a statement made by him before independent witnesses must be admitted in evidence and could be used against him even though such witnesses may have been called by the police. Rao Shiv Bahadur Singh v. State of V.P., AIR 1954 SC 322 : 1954 CrLJ 910.

[8712] ● Statement to person assisting Police or Magistrate.—In the present case, the accused who was a public servant, was charged under Section 161, Penal Code. The case against him was that he had demanded a bribe from a contractor, and thereupon a police trap had been set, in which a Magistrate had accompanied the raiding party. The complainant went into the house of the accused and gave Rs. 25,000 as previously demanded. The accused took the money and put it in a drawer of a table. Then at a signal from the complainant, the raiding party rushed in, and on the money being demanded of him, the accused produced it from the drawer where it had been kept by him. Then, on being questioned by the Magistrate, he said that it was his own money. Then two highly placed and respectable persons G and P, were called, and when they questioned him, the accused repeated that the money was his own, but upon being asked to explain how the numbers of the currency notes recovered from him tallied with the numbers which had already been noted down in the panchnama made before the raid took place, the accused became confused and was unable to give them any explanation of that fact. On this evidence the accused was convicted in the trial Court, and on appeal, the High Court confirmed the conviction. In the appeal before the Supreme Court, it was contended on behalf of the accused that this evidence was hit by Sections 162 and 164 of the Code and was therefore inadmissible, though it was admitted that the police officers and the Magistrate were not present when the accused made his statement to the witnesses. The evidence of the police officers and the Magistrate as to what the accused said when questioned by the Magistrate is barred by Section 25 of the Evidence Act and Sections 162 and 164 of the Code, and it has to be put aside. However, on the facts of the case, it cannot be said that the questioning of the accused by the two independent witnesses G and P which is made in the absence of the police and the Magistrate is only a device employed for the purpose of avoiding the prohibition of Sections 162 and 164, and the Courts below are right in accepting their evidence. This evidence, together with the other evidence as to the demand of a bribe by the accused and the recovery of the marked currency notes from his possession, is sufficient to establish the charge under Section 161 of the Penal Code. The order of conviction is maintained. Rao Shiv Bahadur Singh v. State of V. P., AIR 1954 SC 322 : 1954 CrLJ 910.

[8713] ● Confession—Place of recording.—Ordinarily the confession must be recorded in open Court and during Court hours, unless it is not feasible to do so, in which case the reasons must be recorded. Before recording the confession the Magistrate must put questions to the accused to ascertain how long he has been in police-custody, what was the treatment meted out to him when in police-custody, how long he was in jail custody and who were the persons who interviewed him there. Then the accused must be told in clear terms which he can understand that he is not bound to make a confession, and that if he makes it, it would be used in evidence against him. Further, he must be put questions to ascertain why he was making the confession even after knowing that it would be used against him. All these are not mere formalities, but important safeguards for the purpose of making it certain that the confession is entirely voluntary and is not made under pressure or persuasion coming from a person in authority. The recording of a confession is the exercise of a solemn judicial function, and in serious cases the task must be entrusted only to experienced Magistrates who would take care to observe all the necessary precautions enjoined by law. If the record suffers from serious defects by reason of the non-observance of these precautions, a grave doubt arises as to the voluntary character of the confession, and that doubt does not get removed merely because the confession carries a certificate at its foot in the language of Section 164(3) of the Code. Under such circumstances it must be held that the prosecution has failed to establish that the confession is voluntary, and it must be rejected from consideration when judging the case against the accused. Ram Chandra v State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 381 : 1957 CrLJ 559.

[8714] ● Confession must be voluntary and true.—The act of recording a confession is a very solemn act, and the whole object of the provisions regarding precautions which must be observed before a confession is recorded is to obtain assurance that the confession is not caused by any inducement, threat or promise having reference to the charge against the accused. Therefore, in discharging his duties under Section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate must, before proceeding to record the statement of the accused, keep in mind the following rules which are all for the purpose of the assurance that the accused has become completely free from any possible influence of the police and that the statement which he is going to make is entirely "voluntary".

1. Once an accused person evinces a desire to the police officer in whose custody he is, to make a confession, he should be forwarded immediately to a Magistrate for the purpose of having his statement recorded. If, on an accused being forwarded to him, the Magistrate finds that he was kept for several days in police-custody after he expressed a desire to make a statement, the Magistrate should inquire of the officer concerned as to his reasons for not forwarding the accused to him immediately, and should set down the reasons given on the record.
2. When an accused is produced before a Magistrate for having his confession recorded, the Magistrate should not, unless there are strong reasons for doing so, proceed to record his statement immediately, and should give him adequate time to consider whether he should make a confession at all. There is no hard and fast rule as to the time which should be allowed for this purpose, but it is reasonable to give him at least twenty-four hours to come to a final decision, and in a case where there is reason to suspect that the accused has been persuaded or coerced to make a confession, even a longer period may be given.
3. If, on being produced before him, the accused insists upon making a statement straightaway, his keenness to do so must put the Magistrate on guard against the possibility of such insistence being inspired by police pressure or inducement, and the Magistrate should refuse to yield to the demand and should not, merely because the accused so desires, record his statement straightaway.
4. After giving the accused time to consider whether or not to make his confession, the Magistrate must order that the accused be kept in jail custody, or in such magisterial custody as excludes the possibility of contact with the police, until he is produced again before the Magistrate.
5. Before recording the confession, the requirements of Section 164(3) of the Code should be carefully observed. The Magistrate must clearly explain to the accused that he is not bound to make a confession and that if he does so, it will be used a evidence against him, and must put questions to the accused to satisfy himself that the confession is being made voluntarily. For that purpose the Magistrate should carefully keep in mind the circulars issued by the High Courts in this behalf. Further, in the observance of this solemn act, the Magistrate should not allow any element of casualness to creep in, and should be fully satisfied that the confession which the accused desires to make is in fact and substance absolutely voluntary.

6. If the person of the accused shows any marks of injury, the Magistrate must inquire of him how he came to be injured, and must keep his answers on the record.

7. When the statement is being recorded, no police officer should be allowed to be present inside the office where it is being recorded, or even outside it, say on the veranda, even though the doors of the office may have been closed. Sarwan Singh Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 637 : 1957 CrLJ 1014 : 1957 SCJ 699.

[8715] ● Confession to police officer.—In the present case, the accused were charged with murder. A panchnama of the scene of offence had been prepared by the investigating officer after putting questions to the accused themselves. Not only did the document contain a reference to the various spots pointed out by the accused, but it also contained a complete record in the nature of a confession of the whole crime from the beginning to the end by all the accused. Finally, the panchanama carried the signatures not only of the panchas, but also of all the accused. At the trial, the prosecution produced the panchnama, and it was admitted on the record, though it was objected to on behalf of the accused. The panchnama is altogether inadmissible, and should never have been admitted on the record. The procedure adopted in preparing it is highly irregular and contravenes the provisions of Sections 162 and 164 of the Code and Section 25 of the Evidence Act. Narayan Rao v. State of A.P., AIR 1957 SC 737 : 1958 CrLJ 1320 : 1957 SCJ 727.

[8716] ● Confession grant of time for reflection.—There is no hard-and-fast rule regarding grant of time for reflection and the rules and guidelines applicable to a confession under Section 164, CrPC do not govern but in the present case, the time of 5 or 10 minutes is, by all standards, utterly inadequate. Granting reasonable time for reflection before recording a confession is one way of ensuring that the person concerned gets the opportunity to deliberate and introspect once again when he is brought before the prescribed authority for recording the confession. That it is one of the relevant considerations in assessing the voluntariness of the confession is laid down in Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 637 : 1957 CrLJ 1014 : 1957 SCR 953. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1838) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[8717] ● Confession recording of by—Magistrate.—In the present case, before recording the confession the Magistrate put to the accused two questions, "why do you want to give a statement "and" for what purpose are you making the statement". It was contended that the accused had made a false confession in order to save his father from implication in the charge or murder which the police were threatening. The manner in which these questions were put was criticized as being such as to directly induce the accused who was emotional young man to save his father from the meshes of the police by sacrificing himself. The questions put by the Magistrate are perfectly in order, obligatory, and innocent, and there is nothing in them to suggest they were put with any ulterior motive to extract a false confession. Subramania Goundan v. State of Madras, AIR 1958 SC 66 : 1958 CrLJ 238 : 1958 SCJ 321.

[8718] ● Confession—Recording of—Circumstances established in connection with.—The trial Court convicted both the accused under Sections 302 and 201, relying mainly upon their retracted confessions, and on appeal, the conviction was confirmed by the High Court. Both the Courts held that the confessions were duly recorded and were voluntary and true, and that the discoveries of the various articles as a result of the statements made by both the accused afforded sufficient corroboration to their confessions. The following circumstances had been established in connection with the recording of the confessions,—

(a) The confessions had in fact not been recorded by the Magistrate himself and had been written by his readers, and he could not even say which reader had written which confession; or which confession was recorded first and which thereafter.

(b) The Magistrate had not made a separate memorandum of each statement as required by Section 364(3).

(c) The Magistrate could not remember whether at the time of recording the statement of each accused, the other accused was kept present in the same room or had been kept outside.

(d) The Magistrate who recorded the confessional statements of the two accused was the same magistrate who had actively assisted the investigation of the case by attesting the disclosure statement of L which led to the discovery of the dead body, and also the disclosure statements of both S and L which led to the discovery of the various articles.

(e) Though it was brought out that the Magistrate himself had not recorded the confessions, the readers who had actually recorded the said confessions were not examined as witnesses in the case by the prosecution. What actually happened was that the reader who had recorded the confession of L was examined as a defence witness. He actually gave the name of the other reader who recorded the confession of S, but even so, that reader was not examined.

(f) The magistrate had not made any endorsement showing when the accused were brought before him and how much time he gave them to consider whether they should make any confession or not.

It is important that before proceeding to record a confession, the Magistrate who records the confession must give to the accused person sufficient time to consider whether he should make any confession or not, and this is particularly so where the accused has remained in police custody for a long time right up to the time when he is brought before the Magistrate for recording the confession. It is the duty of the Magistrate to satisfy himself before proceeding to record the confession that the mind of the accused person has been freed from the fear of the police or other complexes developed during police custody. Generally 24 hours at least should be allowed to elapse before a confession is recorded. The record did not show that this requirement was observed by the Magistrate in the present case. Having regard to the fact that the accused were kept in police custody for a long period, the time of only one hour given to the accused to consider whether to make a confession or not was wholly insufficient and unsatisfactory. Babu Singh v. State of Punjab, 1964 (1) CrLJ 566 : (1963) 2 SCJ 209 : (1963) 3 SCR 749.

[8719] ● Accused when brought before Magistrate for recording voluntary confession must feel that Magistrate independent of Police.—It is true that technically there is no prohibition against such a procedure, but what one has to consider is not the technicality of the matter but its propriety. It is of primary importance that the accused who is brought before a magistrate for recording a voluntary confession must feel that the Magistrate is independent of the police, and when the Magistrate has taken active part in the police investigation, the claim made by the Magistrate that he is independent of the police would appear to the accused as rather difficult to accept. Babu Singh v. State of Punjab, 1964 (1) CrLJ 566 : (1963) 2 SCJ 209 : (1963) 3 SCR 749.

[8720] ● Confession recorded by Magistrate not empowered.—If a statute has conferred a power to do an act and has laid down the method in which that power has to be exercised, it necessarily prohibits the doing of the act in any other manner than that which has been prescribed. The principle behind the rule is that if this were not so, the statutory provision might as well not have been enacted. A magistrate, therefore, cannot in the course of investigation record a confession except in the manner laid down in Section 164. The power to record the confession had obviously been given so that the confession might be proved by the record of it made in the manner laid down. If proof of the confession by other means was permissible, the whole provision of Section 164 including the safeguards contained in it for the protection of accused persons would be rendered nugatory. The section power to record statements or confessions, by necessary implication, prohibited a magistrate from giving oral evidence of the statements or confessions made to him. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Singhara Singh, AIR 1964 (SC) 358 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 263 (2) : (1964) 4 SCR 485.

[8721] ● Confessional statement—Failure to comply with Section 164(3), CrPC or High Court Circular—Effect.—The failure to comply with S. 164(3), CrPC or with the High Court Circulars will not render the confessions inadmissible in evidence. Relevancy and admissibility of evidence have to be determined in accordance with the provisions of the Evidence Act. S. 29 of that Act lays down that if a confession is otherwise relevant, it does not become irrelevant merely because, inter alia, the accused was not warned that he was not bound to make it and the evidence of it might be given against him. If therefore, a confession does not violate any one of the conditions operative under Ss. 24 to 28 of the Evidence Act, it will be admissible in evidence. If the facts and circumstances surrounding the making of a confession appear to cast a doubt on the veracity or voluntariness of the confession, the Court may refuse to act upon the confession even if it is admissible in evidence. A strict and faithful compliance with S. 164 of the Code and with the instructions issued by the High Court affords in a large measure the guarantee that the confession is voluntary. The failure to observe the safeguards prescribed therein are in practice calculated to impair the evidentiary value of the confessional statements. Considering the circumstances leading to the processional recording of the eight confessions and the abject disregard, by the Magistrate, of the provisions contained in S. 164 of the Code and of the instructions issued by the High Court, no reliance can be placed on any of the confessions. Dagdu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1977 SC 1579 : (1977) 3 SCC 681 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 421 (436) : 1977 CrLJ 1206 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 261 : (1977) 3 SCR 636 : 1977 Cr App R (SC) 241.

[8722] ● Confession—Recording of—Procedure.—It is true that the interval between preliminary examination of the appellant and the recording of his confessional statement was about 15 minutes. But there is no statutory provision in S. 164, CrPC or elsewhere, or even an executive direction issued by the High Court, that there should be an interval of 24 hours of more between the preliminary questioning of the accused and the recording of his confession. Although the interval between the preliminary questioning of the appellant and his confession was about 15 minutes, the appellant had no less than 38 hours at his disposal, whilst he was in judicial custody free from fear or influence of the Police, to think and decide whether or not to make a confession. Shankaria v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1978 SC 1248 : (1978) 3 SCC 435 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 439 (452) : 1978 CrLJ 1251 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 245 : (1978) 3 SCR 736.

[8723] ● Confession recorded by specially empowered Taluka Magistrate.—In the instant case it was argued that as a judicial Magistrate was available the investigating officer should have requisitioned his services neither than of the Taluka Magistrate. It is no doubt true that it would have been better for the Police to get the confession recorded by a Judicial Magistrate but that by itself is not sufficient to enable us sole testimony of the Taluka Magistrate that he was appointed as Magistrate in 1952 and had been specially empowered to record the confession. The Magistrate was a Magistrate of sufficient experience and we are satisfied that he was fully satisfied that the confession was voluntary and was given without duress or coercion. Abdul Rehman v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1979 SC 1924 : (1979) 3 SCC 426 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 518 (518) : 1979 CrLJ 1296 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 325 : 1979 UJ (SC) 424.

[8724] ● Confession recording of in front of questions and answers.—The confession recorded by the Magistrate was recorded in the form of questions and answers. The record shows that he was virtually cross examined and whatever he said was in answer to leading questions put by the learned Magistrate. In view of the above the confession was rightly excluded by the High Court. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Dayaram Hemraj, AIR 1981 SC 2007 : 1981 Supp SCC 14 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 601 (601) : 1981 CrLJ 1688 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 512(2).

[8725] ● Confessional statement not to be rejected because only three hours given for reflection.—The Judicial Magistrate, P.W.-3 would have been well advised if he had given more time for reflection to the accused than he had done. But it is not possible to reject the confessional statements merely because only three hours' time had been given for reflection, if they are otherwise acceptable. Henry Westmuller Roberts v. State of Assam, AIR 1985 SC 823 : (1985) 3 SCC 291 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 364 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 205 : 1985 CrLJ 1079 : 1985 (1) Crimes 877.

[8726] ● Confession not recorded in question answer form.—The compliance of sub-section (2) of Section 164, CrPC is mandatory and imperative and non-compliance of it renders the confession inadmissible in evidence. Section 463, CrPC, 1973 provides that where the questions and answers regarding the confession have not been recorded evidence can be adduced to prove that in fact the requirement of Section 164(2) read with Section 281 have in fact been complied with. If the Court comes to a finding that such a compliance had in fact been made the mere omission to record the same in the proper form will not render it inadmissible evidence and the defect in cured under Section 463, CrPC 1973, but when there is non-compliance of the mandatory requirement of Section 164(2), CrPC and it comes out in evidence that no such explanation as envisaged in the aforesaid sub-section has been given to the accused by the Magistrate, this substantial defect cannot be cured under Section 463, CrPC, 1973. Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1988 SC 1883 : (1988) 3 SCC 609 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 711 (781, 782) : 1988 CrLJ 1 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 536 : JT 1988 (3) SC 191.

[8727] ● Confession—Guidelines.—The following guidelines are given :

We would like to lay down following guidelines so as to ensure that the confession obtained in the pre-indictment interrogation by a police officer not lower in rank than a Superintendent of Police is not tainted with any vice but is in strict conformity of the well recognised and accepted aesthetic principles and fundamental fairness :

(1) The confession should be recorded in a free atmosphere in the same language in which the person is examined and as narrated by him;

(2) The person from whom a confession has been recorded under Section 15(1) of the Act, should be produced before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate or the Chief Judicial Magistrate to whom the confession is required to be sent under Rule 15(5) along with the original statement of confession, written or recorded on mechanical device without unreasonable delay;

(3) The Chief Metropolitan Magistrate or the Chief Judicial Magistrate should scrupulously record the statement, if any. made by the accused so produced and get his signature and in case of any complaint of torture, the person should be directed to be produced for medical examination before a Medical Officer not lower in rank than of an Assistant Civil Surgeon;

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, no police officer below the rank of an assistant Commissioner of Police in the Metropolitan cities and elsewhere of a Deputy Superintendent of Police or a Police Officer of equivalent rank, should investigate any offence punishable under this Act of 1987.

This is necessary in view of the drastic provisions of this Act. More so when the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 under Section 17 and the Immoral Traffic Prevention Act, 1956 under Section 13, authorise only a police officer of a specified rank to investigate the offences under those specified Acts.

(5) The Police Officer if he is seeking the custody of any person for preindictment or pre-trial interrogation from the judicial custody, must file an affidavit sworn by him explaining the reason not only for such custody but also for the delay, if any, in seeking the police custody;

(6) In case, the person, taken for interrogation, on receipt of the statutory warning that he is not bound to make a confession and that if he does so, the said statement may be used against him as evidence, asserts respect his right of assertion without making any compulsion to give a statement of disclosure.

Though it is entirely for the Court trying the offence to decide the question of admissibility or reliability of a confession in its judicial wisdom strictly adhering to the law it must, while to deciding the question should satisfy itself that there was no trap, no track and no importune seeking of evidence during the custodial interrogation and all the conditions required are fulfilled. Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 4 SCC 569 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 899 : 1994 CrLJ 3139 : 1994 (1) Crimes 1031 : 1994 (1) Rec CrR 168.

[8728] ● Confession if made voluntary and truthfully.—The only piece of evidence relied upon against the appellant is the confessional statement recorded by PW-17 on 22-7-1986. A confession, if voluntary and truthfully made is an "efficacious proof of guilt. " It is an important piece of evidence and therefore it would be necessary to examine whether or not the confession made by the appellant was voluntary, true and trustworthy. The statutory provisions dealing with the recording of confessions and statements by the Metropolitan Magistrate and Judicial Magistrates are contained in Section 164, CrPC and the Rules framed by the High Court containing guidelines for recording of confessions. Unless the Court is satisfied that the confession is voluntary in nature, it cannot be acted upon and no further enquiry as to whether it is true and trustworthy need be made. Shivappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1995 SC 980 : (1995) 2 SCC 76 : (1995) 1 Crimes 138.

[8729] ● Enquiry by Magistrate to ascertain voluntary nature of confession.—From the plain language of Section 164, Cr.P.C. and the Rules, and guidelines framed by the High Court regarding the recording of confessional statements of an accused under Section 164, Cr.P.C., is manifest that the said provisions emphasise an inquiry by the Magistrate to ascertain the voluntary nature of the confession. This inquiry appears to be the most significant and an important part of the duty of the Magistrate recording the confessional statement of an accused under Section 164, Cr.P.C. The failure of the Magistrate to put such questions from which he could ascertain the voluntary nature of the confession detracts so materially from the evidentiary value of the confession of an accused that it would not be safe to act upon the same. Full and adequate compliance not merely in form but in essence with the provisions of S. 164. Cr.P.C. and the Rules framed by the High Court is imperative and its non-compliance goes to the root of the Magistrates jurisdiction to record the confession and renders the confession unworthy of credence. Shivappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1995 SC 980 : (1995) 2 SCC 76 : (1995) 1 Crimes 138.

[8730] ● Sufficient time for reflection to be given to accused before recording confession.—Before proceeding to record the confessional statement, a searching enquiry must be made from the accused as to the custody from which he was produced and the treatment he had been receiving in such custody in order to ensure that there is no scope for doubt of any sort of extraneous influence proceeding from a source interested in the prosecution still lurking in the mind of an accused. In case the Magistrate discovers on such enquiry that there is ground for such supposition he should give the accused sufficient time for reflection before he is asked to make his statement and should assure himself that during the time of reflection, he is completely out of police influence. An accused should particularly be asked the reason why he wants to make a statement which would surely go against his self-interest in course of the trial, even if he contrives subsequently to retract the confession. Besides administering the caution warning specifically provided for in the first part of sub-section (2) of Section 164 namely, that the accused is not bound to make a statement and that if he made one it may be used against him as evidence in relation to his complicity in the offence at the trial, that is to follow, he should also, in plain language, be assured of protection from any sort of apprehended torture or pressure from such extraneous agents as the police or the like in case he declines to make a statement and be given the assurance that even if he declined to make the confession, he shall not be remanded to police custody. Shivappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1995 SC 980 : (1995) 2 SCC 76 : (1995) 1 Crimes 138.

[8731] ● Magistrate—When entrusted with duty of recording confession.—The Magistrate who is entrusted with the duty of recording confession of an accused coming from police custody or jail custody must appreciate his function in that behalf as one of a judicial officer and he must apply his judicial mind to ascertain and satisfy his conscience that the statement the accused makes is not on account of any extraneous influence on him. That indeed is the essence of a 'voluntary' statement within the meaning of the provisions of Section 164, CrPC and the Rules framed by the High Court for the guidance of the subordinate Courts. Moreover, the Magistrate must not only be satisfied as to the voluntary character of the statement he should also make and leave such material on the record in proof of the compliance with the imperative requirements of the statutory provisions, as would satisfy the Court that sits in judgment in the case, that the confessional statement was made by the accused voluntarily and the statutory provisions were strictly complied with. Shivappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1995 SC 980 : (1995) 2 SCC 76 : (1995) 1 Crimes 138.

[8732] ● Confessional statement recorded under Section 164, CrPC—No attempt on part of Magistrate to ascertain voluntary character of confessional statement.—From a perusal of the evidence of PW-17, Shri Shitappa, Addl. Munsif-Magistrate, we find that though he had administered the caution to the appellant that he was not bound to make a statement and that if he did make a statement that may be used against him as evidence but PW-17 did not disclose to the appellant that he was a Magistrate and that the confession was being recorded by him in that capacity nor made any enquiry to find out whether he had been influenced by any one to make the confession. PW-17 stated during his deposition in Court "I have not stated to the accused that I am a Magistrate" and further admitted "I have not asked the accused as to whether the police have induced them (Chithavani) to give the statement." The Magistrate, PW-17 also admitted that "at the time of recording the statement of the accused no police or police official were in the open Court. I cannot tell as to whether the police or police official were present in the vicinity of the Court." From the memorandum prepared by the Munsif-Magistrate, PW-17 as also from his deposition recorded in Court it is further revealed that the Magistrate did not lend any assurance to the appellant that he would not be sent back to the police custody in case he did not make the confessional statement. Circle Police Inspector, Shivappa Shanwar. PW-25 admitted that the sub-jail, the office of the Circle Police Inspector and the Police Station are situated in the same premises. No contemporaneous record has been placed on the record to show that the appellant had actually been kept in the sub-jail, as ordered by the Magistrate on 21-7-1986 and that he was out of the zone of influence by the police keeping in view the location of the sub-jail and the police station. The prosecution did not lead any evidence to show that any jail authority actually produced the appellant on 22-7-1986 before the Magistrate. That apart, neither on 21-7-1986 nor on 22-7-1986 did the Munsif-Magistrate, PW-17 question the appellant as to why he wanted to make the confession or as to what had prompted him to make the confession. It appears to us quite obvious that the Munsif-Magistrate, PW-17 did not make any serious attempt to ascertain the voluntary character of the confessional statement. The failure of the Magistrate to make a real endeavour to ascertain the voluntary character of the confession, impels us to hold that the evidence on the record does not establish that the confessional statement of the appellant recorded under Section 164, CrPC was voluntary. The cryptic manner of holding the enquiry to ascertain the voluntary nature of the confession has left much to be desired and has detracted materially from the evidentiary value of the confessional statement. It would, thus, neither be prudent nor safe to act upon the confessional statement of the appellant. Under these circumstances, the confessional statement was required to be ruled out of consideration to determine the guilt of the appellant. Both the trial Court and the High Court, which convicted the appellant only on the basis of the so called confessional statement of the appellant, fell in complete error in placing reliance upon the statement and convicting the appellant on the basis thereof. Since, the confessional statement of the appellant is the only piece of evidence relied upon by the prosecution to connect the appellant with the crime, his conviction cannot be sustained. Shivappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1995 SC 980 : (1995) 2 SCC 76 : (1995) 1 Crimes 138.

[8734] ● Recording of confession by Magistrate Failure to put questions to ascertain voluntary nature of confession.—In the instant case the confession so recorded is in utter disregard of the statutory provisions of sub-s. (2) of S. 164, CrPC. Under the above sub-section the Magistrate is first required to explain to the accused that he was not bound to make a confession and that if he did so, it might be used against him. Though this requirement has been complied with in the instant case, the other requirement which obligates the Magistrate to put questions to the accused to satisfy himself that the confession was voluntary so as to enable him to give the requisite certificate under sub-s. (4) has not been fulfilled for, the learned Magistrate did not ask any question whatsoever to ascertain whether the appellant was making the confession voluntarily. In view of such flagrant omission to comply with the mandatory requirement of S. 164 (2), CrPC We must hold that the High Court was not at all justified in entertaining the confession as a piece of evidence, much less a reliable one. Preetam v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1997 SC 445 : (1996) 10 SCC 432 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1343 (1344) : 1996 CrLJ 4458.

[8735] ● Confession—Recording of—Merely because it was recorded a day or so before Police remand to expire not make it involuntary.—We think sufficient time was given to the accused in the circumstances of the case for them to reflect if they wanted to make confession. Merely because confession was recorded a day or so before the police remand was to expire would not make the confession involuntary. No complaint was made before the trial Court that confession was the result of any coercion, threat or use of any third degree methods or even playing upon psychology of the accused. State of Tamil Nadu v. Nalini, AIR 1999 SC 2640 : (1999) 5 SCC 253 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 691 : 1999 CrLJ 3124 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 424. (Per D.P. WADHWA)

[8736] ● Confession—Omission to obtain signature of accused.—Confession was recorded in as many as 18 pages. All the first 16 pages contain the signatures of A1 (Nalini) but the last two pages don't have the signatures. The requirement that confession statement shall be signed by the maker has been substantially complied with despite the slip in obtaining the signature in the last two pages. According to PW-52—the Superintendent of Police who recorded it, the said slip was an inadvertent omission. But that omission does not mean that a confession was not signed by her at all. The certificate which is required by Rule 15(3) has also been made at the foot of Ext. P-77, but that happened to be made on one of the two pages where the signature of A-1 is absent. On the facts we are not persuaded to uphold the contention that Rule 15(3) TADA has not been complied with. That apart, even if there was such an omission the question is whether it would have injured the accused in her defence. Section 463 of the Code permits such an approach to be made in regard to the omissions in recording the confession under Section 164 of the Code. That approach can be adopted in respect of the confession recorded under Section 15 of the TADA as well. The resultant position is that the said omission need not be countenanced since it was not shown that the omission has caused any harm to the accused. (Per THOMAS, J.) State of Tamil Nadu v. Nalini, AIR 1999 SC 2640 : (1999) 5 SCC 253 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 691 : 1999 CrLJ 3124 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 424.

[8737] ● Confessional statement recording of under Section 15 of TADA.—An analysis of sub-section (1) of Section 15 TADA shows that it has two limbs. The first limb bars application of provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Indian Evidence Act to a confession made by a person before a police officer not lower in rank than a Superintendent of Police and recorded by him in any of the modes noted in the section. The second limb makes such a confession admissible, de hors the provisions of the Evidence Act in the trial of such person or co-accused, abettor or conspirator for an offence under the TADA Act or rules made thereunder provided the co-accused, abettor or conspirator is charged and tried in the same case together with the accused. The import of Section 15(1) is that insofar as the provisions of the CrPC and the Evidence Act come in conflict with either recording of a confession of a person by a police officer of the rank mentioned therein, in any of the modes specified in the section, or its admissibility at the trial, they will have to yield to the provisions of Section 15(1) of the TADA Act as it is given overriding effect. Thus, Sections 162, 164, 281 and 463 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which have a bearing on the question of recording of statement/confession of a person and Sections 24 to 30 of the Evidence Act which deal with various aspects of confession of an accused stand excluded vis-a-vis Section 15(1) of the TADA Act and cannot be called in aid to invalidate recording of confession of an accused by a police officer of the specified rank and/or its admissibility in the trial of the co-accused, abettor or conspirator charged and tried in the same case together with the accused for an offence under the TADA Act or rule, made thereunder. It must be made clear that the non-obstante clause in Section 15(1) of the TADA Act does not exclude the application of all the provisions of the CrPC and the Indian Evidence Act in the trial of offences under TADA Act. State of Tamil Nadu v. Nalini, AIR 1999 SC 2640 : (1999) 5 SCC 253 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 691 : 1999 CrLJ 3124 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 424. (SS. M. QUADRI, J.)

[8738] ● Power of Judicial Magistrate to record confession.—S. 164 of the Cr.P. Code deals with "recording of confession and statements". The provision empowers a Judicial Magistrate to record any confession or statements made to him during the course of an investigation "under this Chapter or under any other law for the title being in force or at any time afterwards before the commencement of the inquiry or trial." It must be pointed out that the power conferred by the said provision could be exercised only by a Judicial Magistrate. Even a Police Officer on whom power of a Magistrate has been conferred is forbidden from recording a confession. Sub-ss. (2) and (4) deal with procedure which such Magistrate has to follow while recording inculpatory statements made by persons. Assistant Collector of Central Excise v. Duncan Agro Industries, Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 2901 (2993) : (2000) 7 SCC 253 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1275 : 2000 CrLJ 4035 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 640.

[8739] ● Confessional statement—Requirement of obtaining signature mandatory.—The function of the Magistrate in recording confession under S. 164 of the Cr.P.Code is a very solemn act which he is obliged to perform by taking due care to ensure that all the requirements of S. 164 are fully satisfied. The Magistrate recording such a statement should not adopt a casual approach as appears to have been shown by (PW-50) in this case. Besides ensuring that the confessional statement being made before him is voluntary and without pressure, the Magistrate must record the confession in the manner laid down by the section. Omission to comply with the mandatory provisions, one of such being as incorporated in sub-s. (4) of S. 164, is likely to render the confessional statement inadmissible. The words, "shall be signed by the person making the confession", are mandatory in nature and the Magistrate recording the confession has no option. Mere failure to get the signature of the person making the confession may not be very material if the making of such statement is not disputed by the accused but in cases where the making of the statement itself is in controversy, the omission to get the signature is fatal. Dhanajaya Reddy v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2001 SC 512 : (2001) 4 SCC 9 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 652 (661) : 2001 CrLJ 1712 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 315 : JT 2001 (3) SC 395 : (2001) 2 Crimes 15.

[8740] ● Recording of confessional statement—Time to think over after administering statutory warning to accused.—In case the recording officer of the confessional statement on administering the statutory warning to the accused forms a belief that the accused should be granted some time to think over the matter, it becomes obligatory on him to grant reasonable time for the purpose of the accused. In other words, the cooling time that is granted has to be reasonable. What time should be granted would of course depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. At the same time, however, when the time to think over is granted that cannot be a mere farce for the sake of granting time. In a given case, depending on facts, the recording officer without granting any time may straightway proceed to record the confessional statement but if the thinks it appropriate to grant time, it cannot be a mechanical exercise for completing a formality. Ranjit Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2002 SC 3247 : (2002) 8 SCC 73 : 2002 CrLJ 4694 : (2002) 4 Crimes 275 (SC).

[8741] ● Confessional statement—Admissibility of.—Writing the certificate and making the memorandum under Rule 15(3)(b) is mandatory.

The language of the certificate and the memorandum is not mandatory.

In case the certificate and memorandum is not prepared but the contemporaneous record shows substantial compliance of what is required to be contained therein, the discrepancy can be cured if there is oral evidence of recording officer based on such contemporaneous record.

In absence of contemporaneous recorded, discrepancy cannot be curded by oral evidence based on memory of the recording officer.

In the present case, admittedly Rule 15(3)(b) has not been complied. No memorandum as required was made. There is also no contemporaneous record, to show the satisfaction of the recording officer after writing of confession that the confession has been voluntarily made. The confession of accused No. 7 does not even state that it was read over to him. Thus, confessional statements are inadmissible and cannot be made basis of upholding the conviction. Once confessional statements are excluded the conviction cannot be sustained. Bharatbhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2002 SC 3620 : (2002) 8 SCC 447 : 2003 CrLJ 28 : (2002) 4 Crimes 386 (SC).

[8742] ● Recording of confession—Oath not to be administered.—Where recording confession of an accused oath should be administered. Taking of a statement of an accused or oath is prohibited. Babubhai Uedesinh Parmar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2007 SC 420 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 702 : 2007 CrLJ 786 (788) : 2007 (1) Crimes 194.

[8743] ● Recording of confession.—Where the accused was charged for serious offences of rape and murder, two judicial confessions one after the another were recorded by the Magistrate, no legal aid was given to the accused, the first confession was recorded in fifteen minutes, the accused was produced from police custody for recording confession, and the accused had been in police custody for 16 days, there was no other evidence against the accused, the conviction of the accused for offences under Sections 376, and 302 based on such two judicial confessions was found not sustainable. Babubhai Udesinh Parmar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2007 SC 420 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 702 : 2007 CrLJ 786 (788, 791) : 2007 (1) Crimes 194.

[8744] ● Recording of confession—Safeguards for accused.—Section 164, CrPC provides for safeguards for an accused. The provisions contained therein are required to be strictly complied with. But, it does not envisage compliance of the statutory provisions in a routine or mechanical manner. Babubhai Udesinh Parmar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2007 SC 420 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 702 : 2007 CrLJ 786 (789) : 2007 (1) Crimes 194.

[8745] ● Statement—of accused recorded under Section 67, NDPS Act.—Statement of accused recorded under Section 67, NDPS Act is not akin to Section 161, CrPC. Statement can be used as confession. Kanhaiyalal v. Union of India, 2008 AIR SCW 627 (637).

[8746] ● Recording of confession—Necessary for Magistrate to put questions as intended to be asked under Section 164(3).—Recording of confession under Section 164, CrPC, is a very solemn act and, in discharging his duties in the said section, The Magistrate is required to take care to see that the requirements of sub-Section (3) of Section 164 of the Code are fully satisfied. It is necessary in every case to put questions as intended to be asked under Section 164(3), CrPC. State of Punjab v. Harjagdev Singh, AIR 2009 SC 2693 (2696) : 2009 (8) SCR 54.

[8747] ● Compliance with Section 164(2).—All necessary precautions required under Section 164(2) have been taken by the Magistrate as before recording the confession, she has given time to the accused to reflect. Secondly, she has also warned the accused about anything said by him in the evidence could be later on used against him and that he was not bound to give evidence. The submission of the defence that the word used by the Magistrate was "evidence" instead of "confession" and therefore there was non-compliance of Section 164(2) is hyper-technical.

The Magistrate has recorded in the statement that she has given the statutory warning and the statutory advice that he was not bound to make the statement. Section 463 has rightly been applied in the case. M.A. Antony v. State of Kerala, AIR 2009 SC 2549 (2557) : (2009) 6 SCC 220.

[8748] ● Recording of confession—Doctor stating about absence of police officials.—PW-60-Dr. Anila Kumari has supported the case of extra judicial confession (Ext. P-48) which records the history of injury and also records the said confession. The statement made by the independent witness Dr. Anila Kumari has been accepted by both the Court below. In her examination-in-chief, she has stated that, "I had examined Antony as per the request of Dy. S.P. of Aluva. There is no material to show that the said Dy. S.P. (PW-59) was present at the time when the statement was recorded. Dy. S.P. (PW 59) does not state that he had accompanied the accused to Doctor's house. Secondly, there is no material on record nor is there any suggestion made to PW-60 that when she had recorded the said confessional statement, any police person was present with the accused-appellant. Thus, the criticism of the defence that the said statement is not fit to be accepted as it has been recorded in the presence of the police officials is without any material on record. M.A. Antony v. State of Kerala, AIR 2009 SC 3549 : 2009 (6) SCC 220 : 2009 (6) SCR 829 : 2009 (7) JT 372.

13. RULES AS TO SUFFICIENCY AND CORROBORATION IN RELATION TO A CONFESSION

[8749] ● Rules as to sufficiency and corroboration in relation to a confession.—Except in rare cases, a conviction of an accused cannot be sustained if it rests solely upon his confession which he has retracted. If the confession is not supported by any corroborative evidence, it must be held that the guilt of the accused has not been proved beyond doubt and the accused must be acquitted. In the present case, the charge against the two accused A and B rested on the evidence of eye-witnesses and a confession made by A, and both the accused were convicted. On appeal, the High Court disbelieved the direct evidence and acquitted B, but it upheld the conviction of A after agreeing with the finding of the trial Court that the confession made by him was voluntary as well as true, though he has retracted it during the trial when questioned about it by the Court. The High Court having rejected the direct evidence as unbelievable, the case against A has rested entirely upon his retracted confession, and it has erred in holding that it is sufficient by itself to sustain his conviction. Conviction is set aside. Arjunlal Misra v. State, AIR 1953 SC 411 : 1953 CrLJ 1633.

[8750] ● Retracted confession conviction not to be based upon.—It is a settled rule of prudence that a conviction should not be based upon a retracted confession unless it is corroborated in material particulars by independent evidence. If the evidence produced by the prosecution by way of corroboration is not worthy of belief, or if the facts stated in the confession could easily have been corroborated by other evidence and yet such evidence has not been produced, it has to be held that the charge has remained unproved. In such a case conviction cannot be sustained merely on the confession by itself, even though it has been admitted as being true and voluntary. Puran Shree Ram v. State of Punjab, AIR 1953 SC 459 : 1953 CrLJ 1925.

[8751] ● Retracted confession when accepted as being voluntary.—The general rule of prudence is that even when a retracted confession has been accepted as being voluntary and true, conviction should not be based upon it alone if it is not corroborated by independent evidence. But apart from this, if the circumstances of a particular case are such as to cast a suspicion upon the genuineness of a confession which has been retracted, it would be clearly wrong to base a conviction upon it without such independent corroboration as justifies the Court in relying upon it as being true. Mere wealth of detail in a confession cannot be urged as a ground for holding that it is necessarily genuine, because an agile mind can easily invent false details. But even when a confession contains intrinsic material which strongly indicates its genuineness, it cannot be contended that merely because of that the Court should dispense with the need for independent corroboration. Even when the confession contains a detailed description of the circumstances in which the crime was committed, the Court has no other means of testing the veracity of the accused except through other evidence which lends support to his word, and hence, even when the confession is detailed and contains a full description of an incident, prudence demands that the Court must always look for independent corroboration from other evidence, and in its absence, it should be considered unsafe to rely only upon the confession for the purpose of conviction. In other words, wealth of detail in a confession cannot be regarded as a substitute for corroboration. Muthuswami v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 4 : 1954 CrLJ 236.

[8752] ● Confession—Corroboration.—There is no rule of law that a confession can be corroborated only by evidence discovered by the police after the time when it was recorded, or that evidence already known to the authorities before the time of its recording cannot be treated as independent corroboration. Hem Raj v. State of Ajmer, AIR 1954 SC 462 : 1954 CrLJ 1313 : 1954 SCJ 449.

[8753] ● Confession if corroborated by evidence.—When an offender states in his confession something which adds to the knowledge already possessed by the investigating officer, and facts are discovered in consequence of the statements made in the confession, such discovery is a strong reason for relying upon the confession as being true and adds to its value. But that is not to say that only facts discovered as a result of what the accused stated in his confession can be used in support of it. It is perfectly open to the prosecution to use by way of corroboration any material which was already with the police at the time when the confession was made, and even in the absence of any material subsequently discovered, it is open to the Court to rely upon the confession and convict the accused if it is corroborated in material particulars by evidence as to facts previously known to the police. Matadin v. Emp., AIR 1931 Oudh 166, does not lay down any proposition to the contrary as was contended on behalf of the accused. Hem Raj v. State of Ajmer, AIR 1954 SC 462 : 1954 CrLJ 1313 : 1954 SCJ 449.

[8754] ● Confession—Article discovered afford ample corroboration to.—In the present case, two accused H and K were charged under Sections 302/34 of the Penal Code. The prosecution case was that one night when one M was sitting in his shop with his munim G the accused who were wearing masks entered his shop and H fired at M from a pistol and shot him dead. The case rested on the following items of evidence : (a) the evidence of G who said that two persons, of whom one was dressed in blue shirt and shorts had entered the shop and that the man in blue clothes had fired the shot from a pistol in his hand, (b) recovery of a blue shirt, a mask and a mauser pistol from the house of H, (c) delivery by H to the police after his arrest of a blue pair of shorts, a torch, a revolver and cart ridges, and (d) a subsequent confession by H that he had committed the murder because M had not complied with a demand for money made by him in a letter sent by him to M. H retracted his confession in the committal Court. At the trial, the Court accepted the confession as being voluntary and true, and relying upon it and the other evidence convicted both the accused. On appeal, the High Court acquitted K giving him the benefit of doubt as to his identity (for which see under sub-head XIII below), but confirmed H's conviction. In the appeal before this Court it was contended that the recovery of all the incriminating articles from H had preceded the confession, and that evidence as to such recovery could not be considered to be independent evidence which corroborated the confession since the police knew about it already before the confession was made. The contention has no force and has to be rejected. A confession can be made at any time, and even if it is made at the late stage when the trial has already commenced, it is open to the Court to use the material already in the possession of the police for the purpose of corroboration, provided the Court finds the confession to be voluntary and true. The evidence in the present case as to the articles recovered from the accused afforded ample corroboration to this confession, and there was no reason to interfere with the finding of the High Court that the charge of murder had been established against the accused beyond any reasonable doubt. Conviction is upheld. Hem Raj v. State of Ajmer, AIR 1954 SC 462 : 1954 CrLJ 1313 : 1954 SCJ 449.

[8755] ● Retracted confession when accepted as being voluntary and true.—If a confession made by an accused has been subsequently retracted by him, corroboration of the confession by independent evidence is always necessary before conviction can be sustained. Even when the retracted confession has been accepted as being voluntary and true, the rule of prudence is that in the absence of any corroborative evidence it should not be made the sole basis of conviction. Pangambam Kalanjoy v. State of Manipur, AIR 1956 SC 9 : 1956 CrLJ 126.

[8756] ● Confession of accused found to be true and voluntary substantive evidence against him.—No doubt, the confession of an accused which is found to be voluntary and true is substantive evidence against him which is of the highest value, even though he may have subsequently retracted it, and if there is other independent evidence in the case which corroborates it and makes it safe to rely upon it, it would be proper to rest the conviction of the accused upon his confession, even though it has been retracted. In such a case, if there is also a confession made by a co-accused implicating himself as well as the first accused, it lends assurance to the Court in relying upon the confession of the first accused. However, if a confession is not clearly established to be voluntary and true, the question of corroboration by other evidence or of assurance by the confession of a co-accused does not at all arise, and the accused has to be acquitted unless the other evidence in the case is sufficient by itself to sustain his conviction. On the same principle, even though a retracted confession has been accepted as being true and voluntary, if there is no corroboration by other evidence of an independent character which makes it safe to rely upon the same, it must be held that the guilt of the accused has not been established beyond doubt, and the accused must be acquitted. Nathu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 56 : 1956 CrLJ 152.

[8757] ● Confession if rejected as being either not voluntary or not true.—The question whether there is sufficient evidence on record to lend corroboration to a confession made by the accused can arise only when the confession has been found to be both voluntary and true, and not till then. If the confession has been rejected as being either not voluntary or not true, it is not open to the Court to look into the other evidence except for the purpose of seeing whether it is sufficient in itself to establish the guilt of the accused. In such a case, if the Court finds that the other evidence is not sufficient in itself to sustain conviction, the accused must be given the benefit of doubt and must be acquitted, even though that evidence might be of such a character that in case the confession had been accepted it might have been considered sufficient to lend support to it by way of corroboration. Aher Raja Khima v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1956 SC 217 : 1956 CrLJ 426 : 1956 SCJ 243.

[8758] ● Corroboration required for retracted confession—Conditions to be fulfilled.—The corroboration required for a retracted confession must fulfil two conditions.

1. there must be corroboration as to the commission of the crime in the manner set out in the confession, and
2. there must further be corroboration with regard to the participation of the accused in that crime.

But the rule of prudence as to independent corroboration is not to be understood as requiring that each and every circumstance mentioned in the confession with regard to the participation by the confessor in that crime must be separately and independently corroborated. If that were the rule, the proposition would be meaningless, because in that case the independent evidence would itself be a sufficient basis by itself for the conviction, and it would be altogether unnecessary to call the confession in aid.

Further, it is not essential that corroboration must come only from facts and circumstances discovered after the confession was made. Evidence even as to facts previously known to the prosecution would be sufficient for the purpose of corroboration. Balbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 216 : 1957 CrLJ 481.

[8759] ● Retracted confession not to be made sole basis of conviction.—Corroboration by independent evidence is necessary to sustain a conviction, even when the Court accepts a confession which has been retracted as being voluntary and true. It is a rule of prudence, if not of law, that a retracted confession cannot be made the sole basis of a conviction, because it is always unsafe to rely for that purpose only on his retracted word when there is no support to it from any other evidence; and this is particularly so when the charge is of a grave crime like murder. Ram Chandra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 381 : 1957 CrLJ 559.

[8760] ● Confession—When accepted voluntary and true.—When a confession is accepted as voluntary and true, even though it may not be sufficient to sustain a conviction on a particular charge for want of corroborative evidence as to the facts essential to the proof of that charge, the Court may rely upon that very confession and convict the accused of another charge, if there is sufficient, independent corroborative evidence on record as regards that other charge. In the present case, the confession admitted commission of murder as well as extortion. The Court held that the conviction for murder could not be based upon that confession because there was no other evidence in support of that charge, but relied upon it and convicted the accused on the charge of extortion because the same marked currency notes which were left in a lonely place as demanded by the accused were found from his house. Ram Chandra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 381 : 1957 CrLJ 559.

[8761] ● Conviction of accused on his own confession even though retracted.—In law it is open to a Court to convict an accused relying solely on his own confession even though he may have retracted it, provided the Court finds the confession to be true and voluntary.

However, it is a rule of prudence which the Courts have usually adopted that there should be sufficient corroborative support to a confessional statement which has been retracted, before the accused can be convicted by relying upon such confession. Sarwan Singh Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 637 : 1957 CrLJ 1014 : 1957 SCJ 699.

[8762] ● Conviction basing of on retracted confession.—What amounts to sufficient corroboration for the purpose of basing a conviction on a retracted confession, is always a question of fact which is to be determined in the light of the circumstances of each case. Sarwan Singh Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 637 : 1957 CrLJ 1014 : 1954 CrLJ 699.

[8763] ● Retracted confession not to be made sole basis of conviction when.—There is no absolute rule of law that even when a retracted confession is accepted by the Court to be entirely voluntary and true, it cannot be made the basis of a conviction unless it is materially corroborated. But the view taken by the Supreme Court in several decisions is that as a matter of prudence and caution a retracted confession cannot be made the sole basis of a conviction, and this rule of prudence has now sanctified itself into a rule of law. Subramania Goundan v. State of Madras, AIR 1958 SC 66 : 1958 CrLJ 238 : 1957 SCJ 321.

[8764] ● Retracted confession—Corroboration required.—In the case of an accomplice, he is on his own showing a person who is depraved and debased who has taken part in the crime and now tries to exculpate himself and wants to fasten the liability on another. Therefore, in the case of an accomplice it is absolutely necessary that what he deposes to is corroborated in every material particular.

In contrast with this, a person who makes a confession stands on a different footing, and all that is necessary to find is whether the confession made by him was voluntary and true and was the result of remorse and repentance or was the result of any inducement, threat or promise coming from a person in authority. It is only with the object of arriving at a conclusion on this point that corroboration is sought for.

Therefore a retracted confession is not to be equated with the evidence of an accomplice, and the standard and degree of corroboration required is quite different, and it is not necessary that the confession be corroborated in every material particular. Subramania Goundan v. State of Madras, AIR 1958 SC 66 : 1958 CrLJ 238 : 1958 SCJ 321.

[8765] ● Confession general corroboration required.—All that is required, therefore, in the case of a confession is that there is a general corroboration, and it is sufficient if the general trend of the confession is substantiated by some evidence which tallies with what is contained in the confession. In contrast with the corroboration required for the evidence of an accomplice, it is not necessary that every material circumstance mentioned in the confession regarding the complicity of the accused should be separately and independently corroborated. Further it is not necessary that the corroboration which is on record must come from facts and circumstances discovered after the confession was made. That is, the fact that these facts and circumstance had already come to light and were known to the authorities before the confession was made does not detract from their corroborative value. Subramania Goundan v. State of Madras, AIR 1958 SC 66 : 1958 CrLJ 238 : 1958 SCJ 321.

[8766] ● Confession—Rightly accepted by High Court as voluntary and true.—In the present case the accused was charged with murder of two persons belonging to his village as a result of factional animosity. The evidence against him consisted of : (a) direct evidence of eye-witnesses, (b) a confession made by the accused which he subsequently retracted at the trial, but which contained a detailed statement as to the circumstances in which he committed the murders. (c) evidence as to the recovery of a banian and a drawer from the person of the accused when he was arrested, and evidence as to the discovery of a bed-sheet at the instance of the accused from a rafter in the garden shed of the accused, regarding all these articles the medical evidence was that they were stained with human blood.

The confession is rightly accepted by the High Court as voluntary and true, and in view of the fact that the accused has not been able to give any satisfactory explanation of the blood-stained articles recovered from his person and at his instance, the circumstantial evidence as to their recovery is sufficient corroboration for the purpose of basing a conviction upon the confession. Conviction is upheld. Subramania Goundan v. State of Madras, AIR 1958 SC 66 : 1958 CrLJ 66 : 1958 CrLJ 238 : 1958 SCJ 321.

[8767] ● Extra-judicial confession if accepted to be voluntary and true.—If an extra-judicial confession is accepted to be voluntary and true, then alone will the Court go into the question of corroboration. Usually and as a matter of caution the Court must require some material corroboration to an extra-judicial confession, that is, corroboration which connects the accused with the crime committed. Ratan Gond v. State of Bihar, AIR 1959 SC 18 : 1959 CrLJ 108.

[8768] ● Extra-judicial confession—Corroboration.—In the present case, the prosecution case was that the accused who was an aboriginal had murdered a young girl and had severed her head out of greed because he believed that a contractor who was building a bridge nearby his village had offered a sum of money for a human head as sacrifice. In corroboration of the extra-judicial confession there were on record the following items of circumstantial evidence :

(a) recovery of blood-stained balua from the room of the accused,

(b) recovery of blood-stained strands of hair from a place pointed out by the accused,

(c) disappearance of the accused from the village immediately after the murder,

(d) total denial by the accused of the aforesaid recoveries at his instance, when questioned in Court.

By themselves these circumstances may not be sufficient to prove the guilt of the accused, but when there is a confession made by an accused which the Court accepts as voluntary and true, all that is required of the corroborative circumstantial evidence produced in its support is that it must be sufficient only to lend assurance to the confessional statement of such a kind as connects the accused with the crime in question. The circumstances proved in the present case affords sufficient corroboration to the confession made by him, and the only reasonable inference which can be drawn from the confession taken together with the circumstantial evidence is that it is the accused who committed the murder. Conviction under Section 302, Penal Code, and the sentence of death are maintained. Ratan Gond v. State of Bihar, AIR 1959 SC 18 : 1959 CrLJ 108.

[8769] ● Retracted confession—Conviction not to be based on without corroboration.—A retracted confession may form the legal basis of a conviction if the Court is satisfied that it was true and was voluntarily made. But it is a rule of prudence that a Court shall not base a conviction on a retracted confession without corroboration. Pyare Lal Bhargava v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1963 SC 1094 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 178.

[8770] ● Retracted confession corroboration necessity of.—It is not a rule of law, and it cannot be laid down as an inflexible rule of prudence or practice that under no circumstances can a conviction be made without corroboration; for a Court may, in a particular case, be convinced of the absolute truth of a confession and be prepared to act upon it without corroboration. But it may be laid down as a general rule of practice that it is unsafe to rely upon a confession, much less on a retracted confession, unless the Court is satisfied that the confession is true and voluntarily made and has been corroborated in material particulars. Where, having regard to this general rule of practice, the High Court has looked for corroboration and found it in the evidence of a witness with whose help the offence was committed, and a piece of documentary evidence, and has accepted the confession in view of the said piece of corroboration, the finding is one of fact and the Supreme Court will not disturb it unless there is some permissible ground for doing so. Pyare Lal Bhargava v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1963 SC 1094 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 178.

[8771] ● Confession—Voluntary nature of.—There is nothing in the record on the basis of which it can reasonably be said that the confessions are not voluntary. It is pointed out that there was a delay of about a week in sending up the accused to the Magistrate for recording the confessions, but no inference against the prosecution can be drawn merely on that account, particularly when no question was put to the investigating officer on this point. It is also pointed out that the Circle Inspector had visited the judicial lock-up on the day previous to the date of the confessions, but no significance could be attached to that fact as, though the prosecution offered to examine him, the defence did not avail itself of that offer, and in fact had objected to it when the Judge was prepared to examine him as a Court witness. Finally, it is pointed out that the accused were kept in solitary cells, but no conclusion about the confessions not being voluntary can be drawn from that fact. There is nothing to show that the three confessions are not voluntary, and so they have been rightly admitted into evidence. Nand Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, 1963 (2) CrLJ 702 : 1963 (2) SCJ 422 : (1963) 2 SCR 890.

[8772] ● Retracted confession—Evidentiary value.—Ordinarily, even when the confession of an accused person is held to be voluntary, the Courts consider it unsafe to convict him on the basis of his retracted confession unless there is corroboration in material particulars by independent evidence. What is sufficient corroboration for the purpose has to be decided in each case on its own facts and circumstances. However, it may generally be stated that the Court must hold that there is sufficient corroboration when, by production of evidence which is reliable and independent and which is not tainted evidence like that of an accomplice or a co-accused, the truth of several parts of the account given in the confession is established and these parts are so integrally connected with the other parts of the confession that a prudent Judge of facts would think it reasonable to believe that what the accused has stated in the confession as a whole is true. More than this is not needed, and less than this is ordinarily insufficient for the purpose of corroboration. Applying this test to the three confessions in this case, it must be held that the confessions had been so well corroborated by independent evidence in material particulars that what each accused had said in his confession as regards his own participation in the crime had been proved to be true. These facts and circumstances established by independent evidence provided sufficient corroboration to the confession made by each accused. It must therefore the held that the confessions made by N, K and M are voluntary and there is sufficient corroboration to establish the truth of each of these confessions. In the circumstances, all three of them have been rightly convicted under Section 302, Penal Code. Nand Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, 1963 (2) CrLJ 702 : 1963 (2) SCJ 422 : (1963) 2 SCR 890.

[8773] ● Nothing to show that confessions not voluntary.—The facts in the present case were as under. Four accused persons, N, K, L, and M, were convicted under Section 302 on the charge of murder, and on appeal, the High Court confirmed the conviction. The prosecution case was briefly stated as follows. Eight small boys had gone for a picnic to a temple on a hill near their city on four bicycles. The four accused joined them there and took them into the forest and after robbing them of their belongings such as a camera, wrist watches, rings and gold buttons, killed all the eight boys with a knife. The booty was then distributed between the accused. The next day investigation was started and on a witness saying that he had seen the boys with the accused, all the accused were arrested. On a statement made by N to the police officer, N was taken to the forest and there he led the police to the top of a small hill and pointed out the bicycles lying at one spot and the dead bodies of the eight boys lying at different places in the jungle, seven of them being naked. The hands of each were tied from behind and their mouths were gagged. N also took out a knife from a bush. Thereafter different items of the belongings of the victims and their blood-stained clothes were recovered from the houses of each of the accused. Three of the accused N, K, and M, made confessions before a Magistrate a week later. At the trial, these confessions were retracted. The trial Court as well as the High Court held that the confessions were voluntary and true and that there was sufficient corroboration in the discovery of various articles and blood-stained clothes to establish the truth of the confessions. There is nothing in the record on the basis of which it can reasonably be said that the confessions are not voluntary. It is pointed out that there was a delay of about a week in sending up the accused to the Magistrate for recording the confessions, but no inference against the prosecution can be drawn merely on that account, particularly when no question was put to the investigating officer on this point. It is also pointed out that the Circle Inspector had visited the judicial lock-up on the day previous to the date of the confessions, but no significance could be attached to that fact as, though the prosecution offered to examine him, the defence did not avail itself of that offer, and in fact had objected to it when the Judge was prepared to examine him as a Court witness. Finally, it is pointed out that the accused were kept in solitary cells, but no conclusion about the confessions not being voluntary can be drawn from that fact. There is nothing to show that the three confessions are not voluntary, and so they have been rightly admitted into evidence. Nand Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, 1963 (2) CrLJ 702 : 1963 (2) SCJ 422 : (1963) 2 SCR 890.

[8774] ● Confessions corroborated by independent evidence.—Applying this test to the three confessions in this case, it must be held that the confessions had been so well corroborated by independent evidence in material particulars that what each accused had said in his confession as regards his own participation in the crime had been proved to be true. These facts and circumstances established by independent evidence provided sufficient corroboration to the confession made by each accused. It must therefore the held that the confessions made by N, K and M are voluntary and there is sufficient corroboration to establish the truth of each of these confessions. In the circumstances, all three of them have been rightly convicted under Section 302, Penal Code. Nand Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, (1963) (2) CrLJ 702 : 1963 (2) SCJ 422 : (1963) 2 SCR 890.

[8775] ● Confession form of admission.—The confession is a form of admission consisting of direct acknowledgement on guilt in a criminal charge. It must be in express words by the accused in a criminal case of the truth of the guilt fact charged or some essential part of it and a statement that contains a self-exculpatory matter cannot amount to a confession. The confession should be a voluntary one, that means not caused by inducement, threat or promise. Whether a confession is voluntary or not is essentially a question of fact. The judicial confessions are those which are made before a Magistrate or in Court in due course of legal proceedings and when such a confession is retracted, the Courts have held that apart from the statement being voluntary it should be true and should receive sufficient corroboration in material particulars by independent evidence. The rule of prudence namely requiring corroboration does not mean that each and every circumstance mentioned in the confession with regard to the participation of the accused in the crime must be separately and independently corroborated. It is sufficient if there is general corroboration of the important incidents, just like in the case of an approver's evidence and it is not necessary that the corroborative evidence itself should be sufficient for conviction. It may not be necessary to refer to remaining aspects governing the use of retracted confession for the purposes of this case. Suffice it to say that it is also laid down that it is not illegal to base a conviction on an uncorroborated confession of an accused person but as a rule of prudence which has sanctified itself to the rule of law, the Courts do look for corroboration before acting upon and accepting the retracted confession and what amount of corroboration would be necessary in a case would be a question of fact to be determined in the light of the circumstances of the case. Shankar alias Gauri Shankar v. State of Tamil Nadu, (1994) 4 SCC 478 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1252 (1275-76) : 1994 CrLJ 3071 : 1994 (2) Crimes 1.

[8776] ● Confessional statement—Admissibility.—Ordinarily, even when the confession of an accused person is held to be voluntary, the Courts consider it unsafe to convict him on the basis of his retracted confession unless there is corroboration in material particulars by independent evidence. What is sufficient corroboration for the purpose has to be decided in each case on its own facts and circumstances. However, it may generally be stated that the Court must hold that there is sufficient corroboration when, by production of evidence which is reliable and independent and which is not tainted evidence like that of an accomplice or a co-accused, the truth of several parts of the account given in the confession is established and these parts are so integrally connected with the other parts of the confession that a prudent Judge of facts would think it reasonable to believe that what the accused has stated in the confession as a whole is true. More than this is not needed, and less than this is ordinarily insufficient for the purpose of corroboration. Corroboration of the confessional statement is not a rule of law but a rule of prudence. Whether in a given case corroboration is sufficient, would depend upon the facts and circumstances of that case. In order to sustain a conviction on the basis of a confessional statement, it is sufficient that there is its general corroboration. State of Maharashtra v. Bharat Chaganlal Raghani, AIR 2002 SC 409 (429) : (2001) 9 SCC 1 : 2002 CrLJ 944.

[8777] ● Confession of co-accused—Corroboration.—A-3 in his statement under Section 313, CrPC stated that he helped the appellant in throwing the body in the pond. This statement being in the nature of a confession involving co-accused it is not safe to place reliance on the same in the absence of any corroboration whatsoever. Kajja Sreenu v. State of A.P., 2005 SCC (Cri) 853 (856).

14. SECTION 25, EVIDENCE ACT— A CUSTOM OFFICER IS NOT A POLICE OFFICER

[8778] ● Section 25, Evidence Act—A custom officer is not a Police Officer.—The duties and powers of a police officer are laid down in the Police Act, 1861. Section 20 of the Act deals with the authority which police officers can exercise, and Sections 23 and 25 lay down their duties. These provisions show that their main function is the promotion and detection of crime, and that the powers which they enjoy are powers for the effective prevention and detection of crime in order to maintain law and order. The powers conferred under the Act, relating to Land Customs and Sea Customs on the Customs Officers are different in character from those of police officers. The powers conferred on customs officers are merely for the purpose of checking the smuggling of goods and the due realisation of customs duty, and it is with respect to the detecting and preventing of smuggling of goods and preventing loss of revenue to the State, that they have been given limited power to search for smuggled goods and detain them, and limited power to summon persons to give evidence in any inquiry with respect to the smuggling of goods.

Practically all the provisions of the Sea Customs Act are enacted to achieve the object of a proper levy of customs duties, and for that purpose the Customs Officer is given the power to confiscate, to fix the duty, and to impose penalties. The customs officer is not primarily concerned with the detection and punishment of crime committed by a person, but is mainly concerned with the detection and prevention of smuggling of goods and safeguarding of the public revenue. In other words, he is more concerned with the goods and customs duty than with the offender. State of Punjab v. Barkat Ram, AIR 1962 SC 276 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 217.

[8779] ● Duty of customs officers different from those of police officers.—Most of the offences mentioned in Section 167 are of the type in which the Customs Officer has nothing or little to investigate and the limited power of detection which they are given is only for the purpose of detecting the smuggling of goods and the person responsible for it. It will thus be seen that the duties of the Customs Officers are very much different from those of police officers, and their possessing certain powers which may have a similarity with those of police officers would not make them 'police officers.' State of Punjab v. Barkat Ram, AIR 1962 SC 276 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 217 : 1962 (3) SCR 338.

[8780] ● Expression—Police Officer in Section 25 of Evidence Act not restricted to Police officers of Police force.—The expression "police officers" in Section 25 of the Evidence Act is not restricted only to the police officers of the police force enrolled under the Police Act of 1861. It has to be construed in a wide sense so as to include officers of any department of the State who exercise the functions of the police and on whom the powers of a police officer in detection and investigation of crime have been conferred under any Special Act. But the mere fact that an officer who by no stretch of imagination is a police officer, exercises certain powers similar to the powers of a police officer, cannot make such officer a police officer. State of Punjab v. Barkat Ram, AIR 1962 SC 276 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 217 : 1962 (3) SCR 338.

[8781] ● Expression—Police officer in Section 25 of Evidence Act—Meaning.—The expression "police officer" in Section 25 of the Evidence Act does not have such a wide meaning as to include all officers on whom powers analogous to those of police officers have been conferred under Special Acts. There are various reasons for this view. The object of enacting Section 25 was to exclude from evidence confessions made to the regular police officers. The police force had a very bad record for the methods it employed in investigation of crime specially in forcibly extracting confessions for the purpose of securing convictions. It is too much to suppose that the legislature did intend that all officers who may have to investigate or arrest persons or seize articles under any and every law should be considered to be similarly unreliable. If such were the intention, the legislature would have used in place of the words "police officers" some such expression as "any officer whose duty to detect and prevent the commission of offences." State of Punjab v. Barkat Ram, AIR 1962 SC 276 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 217 : 1962 (3) SCR 338.

[8782] ● Customs officer not police officer within meaning of Section 25 of Evidence Act.—Merely because powers similar to those of police officers in regard to detection of infractions of Customs laws have been conferred under the Sea Customs and Land Customs Acts on officers of the Customs Department, that is not a sufficient ground for holding them to be 'police officers' within the meaning of Section 25 of the Evidence Act. State of Punjab v. Barkat Ram, AIR 1962 SC 276 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 217.

[8783] ● Customs officer not treated as police officer when he records confessional statement.—It is well settled that the act of imposition of confiscation and penalties by Customs Officers is a judicial act. Section 171-A of the Sea Customs Act confers upon a Customs Officer the power to hold an inquiry, summon witnesses, take evidence and record statements. The section itself provides that the inquiry so held is to be deemed to be a judicial proceeding. It is too much to say that if the statement recorded by a Customs Officer in the exercise of his powers under this section be an admission of guilt, the statement is a "confession made to a police officer" within the meaning of Section 25 of the Evidence Act. A police officer never acts judicially, and no proceeding before a police officer is deemed under any provision of law to be a judicial proceeding. It cannot be accepted that the legislature contemplated that a Customs Officer, whose proceedings are judicial for all other purposes, should be treated on the same footing as a police officer only when he records a confessional statement. State of Punjab v. Barkat Ram, AIR 1962 SC 276 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 217 : 1962 (3) SCR 338.

[8784] ● Confessional statement recorded by customs officer—Admissibility.—It is not denied that confessional statement made by the offender recorded by Customs Officers are good material for them to take action and to penalise the offender to any amount of fine when the statements are in respect of offence under Section 167 which can be disposed of by the Customs Officers themselves. If so, it would be highly incongruous that the same kind of confessional statements be held to be inadmissible in evidence as being hit by Section 25 of the Evidence Act, when it has to be used in a regular Court of law at a trial for a criminal offence. State of Punjab v. Barkat Ram, AIR 1962 SC 276 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 217.

[8785] ● Custom officer not Police Officer.—Customs Officers are not "police officers" within the meaning of Section 25 of the Evidence Act, and a confessional statement made by any accused person before a Customs Officer, can be proved against him at his trial, and conviction based upon such confessional statement is legal. State of Punjab v. Barkat Ram, AIR 1962 SC 276 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 217 : 1962 (3) SCR 338.

15. CONFESSION OF CO-ACCUSED—ITS LIMITED USE AND EVIDENTIARY VALUE

[8786] ● Confession of co-accused—Its limited use and evidentiary value.—The confession of a co-accused is not "evidence" within the meaning of that term as defined in Section 3 of the Evidence Act. It is not required to be recorded on oath and it cannot be tested by cross-examination. It is evidence of a very weak type, and is much weaker even than the evidence of an approver or an accomplice. The only way in which the confession of a co-accused can be used by the prosecution is as under : First, the Court will altogether exclude such confession from consideration, and see whether there is on record other evidence against the accused which, if believed, would be sufficient to sustain a conviction. If in the opinion of the Court the other evidence is not sufficient by itself to sustain a conviction, the matter ends there, and a conviction cannot be upheld even though there is in addition a confession by a co-accused. If on the other hand the Court finds that the other evidence is of such a nature as to be sufficient to sustain a conviction provided it is believed, but the Court entertains a hesitation as to believing it as it stands by itself, the confession of a co-accused comes into its use, and can be called in aid for lending assurance to the belief in that evidence. In other words, a confession of a co-accused comes into use only when the other evidence against an accused is of such a nature as to be sufficient in itself to establish his guilt, and yet the Court hesitates to rely upon it. In such a case, if there is on the record also a confession of a co-accused, it serves to lend assurance to the belief in the other evidence and to fortify the Court's faith in it, so that if some hesitation exists, it gets removed when the confession of the co-accused which the Court has found to be voluntary and true is thrown into the scale. Thus, the only limited use which can be made of a confession of a co-accused is by way of furnishing, an additional reason for believing such other evidence as exists. Kashmira Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1952 SC 159 : 1952 CrLJ 839 : 1952 SCR 526.

[8787] ● Confession of co-accused not to be of any use by way of concurrence.—In the present case, two accused, H and K, were charged under Section 302/34, Penal Code. The case against them was that one night when one M and his munim G were sitting in their shop, the accused who were wearing masks rushed in, and H fired a shot from his pistol at M and killed him. The case rested on the following items of evidence, (a) a full confession made by H which implicated himself as we as K, (b) the evidence of G that the man who fired the shot was wearing blue shirt and shorts, and (c) the recovery of several incriminating articles from H, such as, a pistol and cartridges, blue shirt and shorts, a mask and a torch. During the proceedings, H retracted his confession, but the trial Court accepted it to be true and voluntary, and relying upon it and the other evidence, convicted both the accused. On appeal, the High Court confirmed the conviction of H, but acquitted K, giving him the benefit of doubt as to his identity. The confession of H cannot be used as substantive evidence against K. The other evidence is not sufficient to prove beyond doubt that he was the companion of H at the time when the murder was committed. The articles recovered from H cannot be of any use as evidence against K, and nothing was recovered from K himself. He had been seen with H before the incident. It in itself did not establish that he was the other participant in the murder. Since the other evidence is not sufficient in itself to prove his guilt, confession of the co-accused H cannot be of any use by way of concurrence to that evidence. Under these circumstances, it had to be held that charge against him had remained unproved. His acquittal was upheld. Hem Raj v. State of Punjab, AIR 1954 SC 462 : 1954 CrLJ 1313 : 1954 SCR 1133.

[8788] ● Confession of co-accused not substantive evidence.—Confession of a co-accused is not substantive "evidence" as defined in Section 3 of the Evidence Act, and can only be "taken into consideration" against the other accused. Hence a conviction of an accused person cannot be founded on the confessions of the co-accused only, if there is no substantive evidence on record on which such conviction can be based. In Kashmira Singh's case the Court has laid down the principles as to the use to which the confession of a co-accused can be put, and it has been held that the only limited use to which such a confession can be put is to refer to it for the purpose of lending assurance to the belief which could be attached to such other evidence, if the Court entertains a hesitation on that point, and of fortifying that belief.

If there is no sufficient substantive evidence upon which conviction can be based, the confession of a co-accused cannot be of any use at all, and should be left altogether out of consideration, because there can be no question of lending assurance to the belief in any evidence if that evidence in itself is insufficient for being made the basis of a conviction. Nathu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 56 : 1956 CrLJ 152.

[8789] ● Confession—Use of against maker.— Before a confession can be used against the other accused, it is essential that the confession must implicate the maker himself substantially to the same extent as the others. It is only when the confession fulfils this condition that is can be taken into consideration against the other accused. If reading the confession as a whole it appears that the maker was trying to throw the main blame on his companion, and to make out that he himself was an unwilling spectator of the crime, the confession cannot at all be taken into consideration against the co-accused. Balbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 216 : 1957 CrLJ 481.

[8790] ● Confession of co-accused use of.— Confession of a co-accused is not substantive evidence. It can only be taken into consideration for lending assurance to other evidence, if it exists, and if the other evidence is not sufficient to establish the guilt of the accused, the confession of the co-accused has no use at all so far as the other accused are concerned. Ram Chandra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1957 SC 381 : 1957 CrLJ 559.

[8791-92] ● Retracted confession of co-accused.—Section 30 of the Act means that when several persons are being tried jointly for the same offence, a confession made by any one of them affecting himself and the co-accused can be taken into consideration by the Court, not only against maker of the confession, but also against his co-accused. There is nothing to prevent the Court from taking a retracted confession into consideration not only against maker but also against the other accused. Although a retracted confession may be taken into consideration against an accused, its value is extremely weak, and there can be no conviction without the fullest and strongest corroboration on material particulars. The corroboration in full sense implies corroboration not only as to factum of the crime but also to the connection of the co-accused with that crime. The amount of credibility which can be attached to a retracted confession depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case, and as matter of prudence and practice a Court should not ordinarily act upon the retracted confession of a co-accused without the fullest corroboration. On the facts of the case the confession of the co-accused is voluntary and true, that it has been corroborated in material particulars, not only as regards the commission of the crime, but also as regards the participation of the appellant in the crime. Recovery of the ornaments of the deceased at the instance of the appellant shortly after the commission of murder was an incriminating circumstance of the gravest importance, and lent full and strong corroboration to the confession of the co-accused, together with the fact that no person other than the accused had the opportunity to commit the murder.

[Note : The effect of this decision is that in a case in which several accused are jointly tried for the commission of an offence, if one of them has made a confession which the Court accepts as voluntary and true, and it receives strong corroboration from the other evidence as regards the part taken in the crime by the other accused, then, even if the confession is subsequently retracted, it could be used as evidence against the other accused, To this extent, this decision appears to be a departure from the principles laid down in the earlier decisions.] Ram Prakash v. State of Punjab, AIR 1959 SC 1 : 1959 CrLJ 90 : 1959 SCR 1219.

[8793] ● Retracted confessions of other accused as regards part taken in killing.—In the present case, four accused persons were prosecuted for the murder of eight boys in a forest. Three of the accused had made confessions which were held to be voluntary and true. Relying upon these confessions and the corroborative evidence which supported them in material particulars, the trial Court had convicted the three accused under Section 302, Penal Code, and the High Court had confirmed the conviction. In the appeal the Court upheld their conviction. The fourth accused, L, did not make a confession. He also had been convicted under Section 302 and both the Courts below had relied upon a number of circumstances, namely, his presence with the other three accused at the scene of the offence, and the recovery from his room of part of the booty taken from the murdered boys, and a blood-stained shirt and underwear after he had made a statement that he had kept these things there. Along with these facts the High Court had taken into consideration the retracted confessions of the co-accused and the statements made therein that L took actual part in the killing of the eight boys. The circumstances on which the lower Courts had relied had been clearly established by legal evidence. These circumstances were almost sufficient, without anything more, to establish the participation of L in the killing of the eight boys in furtherance of the common intention of himself and the other accused to cause their deaths. In the circumstances, it was proper and permissible to take into consideration the statements made in retracted confessions of the other accused as regards the part taken by L in the killing. These statements supplied whatever assurance was needed to convince the Court that L had taken part in the killing of the eight boys in furtherance of the common intention of himself and others. His conviction under Section 302, Penal Code, was therefore fully justified.

Conviction under Section 302 is upheld and the appeal is dismissed. Nand Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, 1963 (2) CrLJ 702 : 1963 (2) SCR 890.

[8794] ● Confession of co-accused—Its probative value.—If the Court is inclined to hold that the other evidence may sustain the charge, it then takes the confession into account with a view to assure itself that the conclusion which it is inclined to draw from the other evidence about the guilt of that accused is right. In other words, a confession can only be used to lend assurance to the other evidence against a co-accused. Thus, though a confession may be regarded as evidence in the generic sense that it is an element which may be taken into consideration by the criminal Court, but it is not evidence as defined in Section 3 of the Act. The result is that in dealing with the case against an accused person, the Court cannot start with the confession of a co-accused. It must begin with the other evidence adduced by the prosecution, and it is only after it has formed its opinion with regard to the quality and effect of the said evidence that it is permissible to turn to the confession in order to receive assurance to the conclusion of guilt which the judicial mind is about to reach on such other evidence. That, briefly stated, is the effect of the provisions of Section 30.

The confession of a co-accused cannot be treated as substantive evidence. It can be pressed into service only when the Court is inclined to accept the other evidence and feels the necessity of seeking for an assurance in support of its conclusion about the guilt of an accused on the basis of the other evidence. It may be that the confessions made in the present case were voluntary and true and attributed to the two appellants of major part in the commission of the crime. However, the evidence other than the confessions which consisted of the discovery blood stains was entirely insufficient to justify the charge against both the appellants, and therefore it must be held that the conviction of the appellants under Section 396 of the Penal Code could not be sustained. The confessions of the co-accused in such circumstances could only raise a serious suspicion against them but suspicion however grave, must not be allowed to take the place of proof. In criminal trials, there is no scope for convicting the accused on moral conviction of guilt or grave suspicion. Where the other evidence against an accused person is wholly unsatisfactory, there is no scope for conviction on the basis of the confession of a co-accused, and the accused has to be given the benefit of doubt. Haricharan Kurmi v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 1184 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 344 : (1964) 2 SCJ 454.

[8795] ● Confession of co-accused retracted—General corroboration necessary.—The High Court is wrong in thinking that a confession cannot be the foundation of a conviction but can only constitute 'a fourth leg to a tripod'. This statement has been repeated again in paragraph 30, where the High Court has observed "the confession alone and by itself cannot prove the guilt of an accused." We are not a little surprised that such a statement should have been made by the High Court. We wish to make it clear and this is only to repeat what is so well established that a retracted confession by an accused may form the basis of a conviction of that accused if it receives some general corroboration form other independent sources. It cannot however be the basis for convicting co-accused though it may be taken into consideration against co-accused also. It is entirely wrong to think that a confession can lead nowhere. Shrishail Nageshi Pare v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1985 SC 866 : (1985) 2 SCC 341 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 235 : 1985 CrLJ 1173.

[8796] ● Confession of co-accused not substantive evidence against other co-accused.—It is well-settled that the confession of a co-accused is not substantive evidence against other co-accused persons in the same trial as this Court pointed out in Kashmira Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1952 SC 159. This confession could only be used for lending reassurance if there would be any other substantive evidence to be utilised or acted upon. In Hari Charan Kurmi v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 159 the Court observed:

> "In dealing with a case against an accused person, the Court cannot start with the confession of a co-accused person, it must begin with other evidence adduced by the prosecution and after it has formed its opinion with regard to the quality and effect of the said evidence, then it is permissible to turn to the confession in order to receive assurance to the conclusion of guilt which the judicial mind is about to reach on the said other evidence. That the confession of a co-accused person cannot be treated as substantive evidence and can be pressed into service only when Court is inclined to accept > other evidence and feels the necessity of seeking for an assurance in support of its conclusion deducible from the said evidence." Param Hans Yadavo and Sadanand Tripathi v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 955 : (1987) 2 SCC 197 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 322 (326) : 1987 CrLJ 789 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 346 : JT 1987 (1) SC 595 : 1987 CrAppR (SC) 230 : (1987) 2 SCR 405 : (1987) 1 Crimes 894.

[8797] ● Statement in FIR furnished by accused not to be used against other accused.—A statement contained in the FIR furnished by one of the accused in the case cannot, in any manner, be used against another accused. Even as against the accused who made it, the statement cannot be used if it is inculpatory in nature nor can it be used for the purpose of corroboration or contradiction unless its maker offers himself as a witness in the trial. The very limited use of it is as an admission under Section 21 of the Evidence Act against its maker alone unless the admission does not amount to confession. Bandlamuddi Atchuta Ramaiah v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1997 SC 496 : (1996) 11 SCC 133 : 1996 CrLJ 4463.

[8798] ● Confession made by accused to police—Use of against co-accused.—It should be remembered that under Sections 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act no confession made by an accused to a police officer, or to any person while he was in police custody could be admitted in evidence, and under Section 162 of the Code no statement made by any person during investigation to a police officer could be used in a trial except for the purpose of contradiction. In view of the aforesaid ban imposed by the legislature Section 15 of the TADA provides an exception to the ban. But it is well to remember that other confessions which are admissible even under the Evidence Act could be used as against a co-accused only upon satisfaction of certain conditions. The first condition is that there should be a confession i.e. inculpatory statement. Any exculpatory admission is not usable for any purpose whatsoever as against a co-accused. The second condition is that the maker of the confession and the co-accused should necessarily have been tried jointly for the same offence. In other words, if the co-accused is tried for some other offence, though in the same trial, the confession made by one is not usable against the co-accused. Third condition is that the confession made by one accused should affect himself as well as the co-accused. In other words, if the confessor absolves himself from the offence but only involves the co-accused in the crime, while making the confession, such a confession, cannot be used against the co-accused. Even if no conditions are satisfied the use of a confession as against a co-accused is only for a very limited purpose i.e. the same can be taken into consideration as against such other person. It is now well settled that under Section 30 of the Evidence Act the confession made by one accused is not substantive evidence against a co-accused. It has only a corroborative value.

A confession made admissible under Section 15 of the TADA can be used as against a co-accused only in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as stipulated in Section 30 of the Evidence Act. Kalpnath Rai v. State (through CBI) AIR 1998 SC 201(215) : (1997) 8 SCC 733 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 134 : 1998 CrLJ 369 : 1998 CAR 33 : 1997 (4) Crimes 227.

[8799] ● Accused making confessional statement discharged—Not facing trial—Use of statement against co-accused.—Under Section 30 of the Evidence Act, a confession of an accused is relevant and admissible against a co-accused if both are jointly facing trial for the same offence. Since admittedly, Dr. Bansal has been discharged from the case and would not be facing trial with Kalani his confession cannot be used against Kalani. Suresh Kalani alias Pappu Kalani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1998 SC 3258 (3259-3260) : (1998) 7 SCC 337 : 1998 CrLJ 4592 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 645 : 1998 (3) Bom LR 456.

[8800-01] ● Confession of co-accused not to be elevated to status of substantive evidence.—The crucial expression used in Section 30 is "the Court may take into consideration such confession". These words imply that the confession of a co-accused cannot be elevated to the status of substantive evidence which can form the basis of conviction of the co-accused. The import of this expression was succinctly explained by the Privy Council in Bhuboni Sahu v. R., AIR 1949 PC 257 : 50 CrLJ 872 in the following words : (AIR p. 260).

> "[T]he Court may take the confession into consideration and thereby, no doubt, makes its evidence on which the Court may act; but the section does not say that the confession is to amount to proof. Clearly there must be other evidence. The confession is only one element in the consideration of all the facts proved in the case; it can be put into the scale and weighed with the other evidence." State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1777) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[8802] ● Confession to police officer by person in police custody.—The contention of the learned Senior Counsel for the State that even if the confession of the co-accused is not covered by Section 32(1), it can still be taken into account by the Court under Section 30 of the Evidence Act for the limited purpose of corroborating or lending assurance to the other evidence on record, cannot be accepted. There is no difficulty in accepting the contention that Section 30 of the Evidence Act can also play its part in a case of trial under POTA, especially when the other offences under IPC are also the subject-matter of trial. But a confession to the police officer by a person in police custody is not within the realm of Section 30 of the Evidence Act and therefore such a confession cannot be used against the co-accused even under Section 30 of the Evidence Act. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1783) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[8803] ● Confession of co-accused.—Confession of co-accused requires corroboration before it can form basis of conviction of accused. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Mukesh, (2006) 13 SCC 197 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 680. To the same effect : Mohtisham Mohd. Ismail v. Special Director, Enforcement Directorate, (2007) 8 SCC 254 : (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 531.

[8804] ● Confession of co-accused.—Confession of co-accused by itself is not sufficient to find a co-accused guilty unless there is other supporting evidence to prove that the accused was guilty. Abdulvahab Abdul Majid Shaikh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2007 SC 2492 : (2007) 9 SCC 293 : (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 126 : 2007 CrLJ 3529 (3531).

16. ART. 20 (3), CONSTITUTION HAS NO APPLICATION TO CONFESSIONS

[8805] ● Art. 20 (3), Constitution has no application to confessions.—Under the Evidence Act, a confession is required to be voluntary before it can be accepted against the accused, and if an accused who retracts his confession alleges that is was obtained from him under compulsion or threat, it is open to him to show the circumstances which throw a doubt on it voluntary character. But that is a matter under the ordinary law, and not under Article 203) of the Constitution, which prohibits testimonial compulsion against the accused. This Article only says that an accused person shall not be compelled 'to be a witness against himself' and it has no application whatever to confessions made by accused persons. It cannot possibly be invoked for the purpose of challenging the validity of a confession. Kalawati v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1953 SC 131 : 1953 CrLJ 668 : 1953 SCR 546 : 1953 SCJ 144.

17. STATEMENT RECORDED UNDER TADA ACT

[8806] ● Statement recorded under TADA Act.—It would be difficult to hold that the confessional statement recorded by Police Inspector, who went there for apprehending the accused, can be considered to be confessional statement recorded under Section 15 of the TADA Act even though it was recorded in presence of Superintendent of Police. So-called statement was recorded by the police officers in presence of the police party at night time at about 2.30 a.m. between 26th and 27th February, 1992 in the light of the jeep as there was no other light available. Further admittedly, the statement was not sent to the Chief Judicial Magistrate as required under Rule 15 of the TADA Rules. The Statement was produced for the first time before the Designated Court on 21.3.1997 which was allegedly kept in the police diary. Dealing with this contention, the Designated Court held that the procedure prescribed under the Rules was directly. In our view, even though this Court has held the procedure prescribed under Rule 15 as directory, that would not mean that Investigating Officer is not required to follow the said procedure. He has to follow the said procedure. If there is delay in sending the statement, the Court would consider its evidentiary value by weighing other evidence brought on record by the prosecution. It is to be stated that in our country under Constitution, there is separation of judiciary from executive and if lapses on the part of the Investigating Officer are condoned and such statements are used for convicting the accused then the liberty of the citizens would not be safe. It appears that instead of collecting any material or evidence for connecting these accused with the crime, investigating agency has adopted unjustified method. Further, PW-2 Sunil Kumar, Superintendent of Police, in whose presence the statement was recorded, as well as PW-17 Suresh Chander Sharma who recorded the said statement have not identified A-1 Bihari Manjhi before the Court. This would throw a serious doubt with regard to the said confessional statement being recorded by PW-17 and putting of signatures by A-2 Bihari Manjhi on the same. There is no other evidence so far as co-accused appellants are concerned despite the fact that accused are residents of same village where occurrence took place and no other prosecution witnesses have identified them as the persons present at the scene of offence nor there is any recovery alleged to have been made from them or at their instance. Bihari Manjhi v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 1832 : (2002) 4 SCC 352 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 803 : 2002 CrLJ 2539 : (2002) 2 Crimes 347 (SC).

[8807] ● Conviction based on voluntary and truthful confession recorded under Section 15 of TADA sustainable.—Conviction based on a voluntary and truthful confession recorded under Section 15 of the TADA Act is sustainable. It requires no corroboration. Ravinder Singh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2002 SC 2241 : (2002) 9 SCC 55 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1062 : 2002 CrLJ 2957 : JT 2002 4 SC 470.

[8808] ● Confession of co-accused when can be pressed into service.—No doubt, in law the confession of a co-accused cannot be treated as substantive evidence to convict, other than the maker of it, on the evidentiary value of it alone. But it has often been reiterated that if on the basis of the consideration of other evidence on record the Court is inclined to accept the other evidence, but not prepared to act on such evidence alone, the confession of a co-accused can be pressed into service to fortify its belief to act on it also. Government of NCT of Delhi v. Jaspal Singh, (2003) 10 SCC 586 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 933 (940).

[8809] ● Confession under S. 15 of TADA Act.—Apart from the plain language of Section 15 which excludes the application of Section 30 of the Evidence Act, this Court in many judgments has held that Section 30 of the Evidence Act has no role to play when the Court considers the confession of an accused made under Section 15 of the TADA Act either in regard to himself or in regard to his co-accused. Therefore, the argument that a confessional statement of an accused made under Section 15 of the TADA Act can be used only to corroborate other substantive evidence produced by the prosecution cannot be accepted. Jameel Ahmed v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2004 SC 588 : (2003) 9 SCC 673 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1853 (1862-63).

18. CONFESSION RECORDED UNDER POTA

[8810] ● Confessions recorded by police officer under Section 32(1) of POTA.—As the law now stands, the confession recorded by the police officer under Section 32(1) of POTA is admissible in evidence. The voluntariness and reliability of confession can of course be tested by the Court. The admission of such confession would also be subject to the observance of the other provisions of Section 32 of POTA which are in the nature of procedural safeguards aimed at ensuring that the confessions are made by the accused in an atmosphere free from threat and inducement.

Following the path shown by its predecessor, namely, the TADA Act, POTA marks a notable departure from the general law of evidence in that it makes the confession to a high-ranking police officer admissible in evidence in the trial of such person for the offence under POTA. As regards the confession to the police officer, the TADA regime is continued subject to certain refinements. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1787, 1777) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[8811] ● Confession recorded under Section 32 of POTA Evidentiary value.—The most important safeguard provided in sub-sections (4) and (5) is that the person from whom the confession was recorded is required to be produced before a Chief Metropolitan Magistrate or Chief Judicial Magistrate, within 48 hours, together with the original statement of confession in whatever manner it was recorded. The CMM or the CJM shall then record the statement made by the person so produced. If there is any complaint of torture, the police shall be directed to produce the person for medical examination and thereafter he shall be sent to judicial custody.

If the confessional statement is properly recorded, satisfying the mandatory provisions of Section 15 of the TADA Act and the rules made thereunder, and if the same is found by the Court as having been made voluntarily and truthfully then the said confession is sufficient to base a conviction on the maker of the confession. The mere fact that the expression "admissible only" is used without being followed by the words "in evidence", does not, by any canon of construction, deprive the confession recorded under Section 32 of POTA its evidentiary value; otherwise Section 32(1), more especially the expression "admissible" contained therein will become ineffectual and senseless. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1787) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

19. CONFESSIONAL STATEMENT "RECORDED IN WRITING"

[8812] ● Confessional statement "Recorded in Writing".—When a confessional statement is dictated to a Steno and typed on a typewriter, the same amounts to a confessional statement being in writing. This view is supported by an authority of the this Court in the case of State of Tamil Nadu v. Sivarasan, (1997) 1 SCC 682. In this case it has been held that the words "recorded in writing" in Section 15 (TADA Act, 1987) includes a type-written confessional statement. It is held that the Police Officer need not record the statement in his own hand-writing, but can take the help of a Steno or use a type-writer. The observations of the Designated Court that the respondents had not been asked whether they wanted to add or subtract anything appear to have been made on a misunderstanding of R. 15(2). Under R. 15(2), the recorded confession has to be (where it is in writing) shown and read back to the person concerned and if he does not understand the language in which it is recorded, it has to be interpreted to him in a language he understands. That person is at liberty to explain or add to his confession. In this case the confessional statements were shown and read back to the respondents. If they wanted, they could have explained or added to these confessional statements. They chose not to do so. Thus, the requirement of R. 15(2) was fully complied with. Central Bureau of Investigation v. Ashiq Hussain Faktoo, AIR 2003 SC 1441 : (2003) 3 SCC 166 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 588 : 2003 CrLJ 1292.

19. CONFESSION—EVIDENTIARY VALUE

[8813] ● Confession of co-accused.—Confession of co-accused cannot be sole basis of conviction, but it can be used to lend assurance to other independent evidence available against the accused. Sidharth v. State of Bihar, AIR 2005 SC 4352 : (2005) 12 SCC 545 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 175 : 2005 CrLJ 4499 : 2005 (7) Scale 700 : 2005 (4) Crimes 135.

[8814] ● Confession of co-accused.—Apart from the suspicious conduct of the appellant Rohan Prakahs on the date of the incident, there is no other evidence against him. Therefore, it is difficult to hold that there is other independent evidence to find him guilty of the murder and as there is no independent evidence against Rohan Prakash, the confession made by the co-accused Arnit Das cannot be made as supporting evidence under Section 30 of the Evidence Act. The prosecution has not succeeded fully in proving the guilt of the appellant Rohan Prakash. The independent evidence is not sufficient to prove that he had actively participated in the conspiracy. The conduct exhibited by this appellant would cast serious suspicion on him, but that by itself is not sufficient to find him guilty of the offence under Section 302 read with Sections 34 and 120-B, IPC. Sidharth v. State of Bihar, AIR 2005 SC 4352 : (2005) 12 SCC 545 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 175 (189) : 2005 CrLJ 4499 : 2005 (4) Crimes 135.

[8815] ● Confession implicating accused after common intention was no longer in existence.—Where the confession implicating the accused has been made after the common intention of the parties was no longer in existence, Section 10, Evidence Act cannot be invoked against the accused. Sidharth v. State of Bihar, AIR 2005 SC 4352 : (2005) 12 SCC 545 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 175 (187) : 2005 CrLJ 4499 : 2005 (4) Crimes 135.

[8816] ● Recording of confession.—Adequate time is to be given to accused for reflection prior to recording of confession. In the present case the counsel contended that the Supreme Court in Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 637 : 1957 CrLJ 1014 had observed that the accused person should at least be given 24 hours time to decide whether or not he should make a confession. It may be noted that in the very some judgment it was stated that it would naturally be difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule as to the time which should be allowed to an accused person in any given case before recording his confession under Section 164, CrPC. Sidharth v. State of Bihar, AIR 2005 SC 4352 : (2005) 12 SCC 545 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 175 (183) : 2005 CrLJ 4499 : 2005 (4) Crimes 135.

[8817] ● Confessional statements—Evidentiary value.—The Court while weighing the evidentiary value of a confessional statement cannot lose sight of the ground realities. Circumstances attendant to making of such statements, should be taken into consideration. Union of India v. Bal Mukund, (2009) 12 SCC 161 : 2009 CrLJ 2407 (2413) : 2009 (2) Crimes 171 (SC) : 2009 (5) SCR 205 : JT 2009 (5) SC 45.

CONFIRMATION OF DEATH PENALTY

(Section 366, CrPC)

[8818] ● Confirmation of death penalty.—Time and again this Court has pointed out that on a reference for confirmation of the sentence of death, the High Court is under an obligation to proceed in accordance with the provision of Sections 375 and 376, CrPC. Under these sections the High Court must not only see whether the order passed by the Sessions Court is correct but it is under an obligation to examine the entire evidence for itself, apart from and independently of the Sessions Court's appraisal and assessment of that evidence. From the long line of decisions which have taken this view it would be enough to refer to the decisions in Jumman v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 469 : 1957 CrLJ 586. To

THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Ram Shanker Singh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1962 SC 1239 : (1962) 2 CrLJ 296; (2) Bhupendra Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1968 SC 1438 : (1968) 3 SCR 404; (3) Subash v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1976 SC 1924 : (1976) 3 SCC 629 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 483 : 1976 CrLJ 1521 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 251.

[8819] ● Death sentence—Confirmation of by Supreme Court.—In the present case, the accused who was charged with the offence of murder, had been convicted by the trial Court and had been sentenced to death. On appeal, the High Court had acquitted the accused and hence the sentence of death had remained unconfirmed. In the appeal by the State of the Supreme Court, the appeal was allowed, the order of acquittal made by the High Court was set aside, and the order passed by the Sessions Court under which the accused had been sentenced to death was restored.

Held : In the exercise of its powers under Article 136, the Supreme Court is competent to pass the same orders which the High Court is, by the Code of Criminal Procedure, competent to pass. The sentence of death passed by the Sessions Court cannot be executed, under the Code, unless it has been confirmed by the High Court. Since the sentence passed in the instant case had not been confirmed by the High Court, the Supreme Court can pass the same order of confirmation of sentence in the exercise of its powers under Article 136. Accordingly, the sentence of death was confirmed. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Deoman Upadhyaya, AIR 1960 SC 1125 : 1960 CrLJ 1504 : (1960) 2 SCA 371 : 1960 ALJ 733 : 1960 AWR (HC) 568 : (1960) ACrR 361.

[8820] ● Confirmation of death sentence—Appeal.—It may be conceded that if a question of fact or a question of law which plainly arises on the record is relevant and material, and it can be argued without any further evidence being taken, then, if that point was urged before the trial Court and was rejected by it, it may, in a proper case, be permissible to the appellant before the Supreme Court to ask the Court to consider that point in the appeal under Article 136, even though it was not urged before the High Court and so there is no decision on that point in the judgment of the High Court.

In a criminal proceeding of the character where sentences of death are imposed on the appellants, it would not be proper to refuse to consider a relevant and material plea of fact or law only on the ground that it was not urged before the High Court. Even where the appellant is not entitled as a matter of right, to obtain a decision on that point from the Supreme Court because it was not urged before the High Court, there is no hard and fast rule prohibiting the raising of such a plea in appeals under Article 136, and in view of the gravity of the sentence of death, the Court would, in a fit case, allow the appellant to raise such a plea. Masalti v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 202 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 226 : 1964 SCD 980 : (1965) 1 SCJ 605 : (1964) 8 SCR 133 : 1965 MLJ (Cr) 312 : ILR (1964) 2 A 694 : (1964) 1 ALT 19.

[8821] ● Death sentence—Supreme Court confirming in respect of seven and reducing in respect of three.—It cannot be contended that in a case in which several accused persons are convicted under Section 302/149, sentence of death can be imposed only on such of the accused as had taken active part in the commission of the murder. The question whether the sentence of death should be imposed on persons who are found to be guilty under Section 302 read with Section 149 for murder committed by the hand of some other member of the unlawful assembly is a matter which has to be decided on the facts and circumstances of each case.

In the present case, all the accused had joined together armed with deadly weapons and they shared the common unlawful object to exterminating all the male members of the family of the leader of the opposite faction with whom they were on inimical terms. In prosecution of that common object five persons were killed on the spot by shooting them dead. The High Court imposed the sentence of death on the accused who were armed with fire-arms. On appeal, the Supreme Court confirmed the sentence in respect of seven of the accused and reduced it in respect of three of the accused on the ground of their youth and their being under the pressure and influence of the elder members of their families. Masalti v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 202 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 226 : 1964 SCD 980 : (1965) 1 SCJ 605 : (1964) 8 SCR 133 : 1965 MLJ (Cr) 312 : ILR (1964) 2 A 694 : (1964) 1 ALT 19.

[8822] ● Reference for confirmation of death sentence—Duty of High Court.—Where apart from appeal by connected accused, reference is made by Sessions Judge for confirmation of the death sentence, a High Court is duty bound to independently consider the matter carefully and examine all relevant and material evidence. Iftikhar Khan, AIR 1973 SC 863 : (1973) 1 SCC 512.

[8823] ● Confirmation of death sentence—Duty of High Court.—Whilst confirming a capital sentence a High Court is under an obligation to itself consider what sentence should be imposed and not to content with the trial Court's decision on the point. N. Sreeramulu, AIR 1973 SC 2551 : 1973 CrLJ 1775.

[8824] ● Reference for confirmation of death sentence—Duty of High Court.—In a reference for confirmation of the death sentence under Section 374, CrPC, the High Court must examine the entire evidence for itself independently of the Sessions Court. Balak Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 2165 : (1975) 3 SCC 219 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 837 : 1974 CrLJ 1486 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 530 : (1975) 1 SCR 753.

[8825] ● Death sentence—Appeal and also reference for confirmation.—Where in addition to an appeal field by an accused sentenced to death, the High Court has to dispose of the reference for confirmation of death sentence under Section 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the High Court, while dealing with reference, should consider the proceedings in all their aspects and come to an independent conclusion on the material on record apart from the view expressed by the Sessions Judge. Under the provision of law, it is for the High Court to come to an independent conclusion of its own. Charan Singh, AIR 1975 SC 246 (251) : (1975) 3 SCC 39 : 1974 CrLJ 1253.

[8826] ● Delay in execution of death sentence.—Undue long delay in execution of the sentence of death will entitle the condemned person to approach the Supreme Court under Article 32 but that Court will only examine the nature of delay caused and circumstances ensued after sentence was finally confirmed by the judicial process and will have no jurisdiction to re-open the conclusions reached by the Court while finally maintaining the sentence of death. The Supreme Court, however, may consider the question of inordinate delay in the light of all the circumstances of the case to decide whether the execution of the sentence should be carried out or should be altered into imprisonment for life. No fixed period of delay could be held to make the sentence of death inexecutable an to this extent the decision in Vatheeswaran case, AIR 1983 SC 361 (2) : 1983 CrLJ 481 : (1983) 2 SCR 348 cannot be said to lay down the correct law and therefore to that extent stands overruled. Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1989 SC 142 : (1988) 4 SCC 574 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 25 : 1989 CrLJ 870 : 1988 Cr AppR (SC) 275 : 1988 ACrC 546 : 1988 Rajdhani LR 628 : (1988) 3 Crimes 771.

[8827] ● Confirmation of death sentence—Court to deal with matter carefully.—In Masath v. State of U.P., AIR 1965 SC 202 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 226 it was observed that it is perfectly true that in a murder trial when an accused person stands charged with the commission of an offence punishable under Section 302, he stands the risk of being subjected to the highest penalty prescribed by the Indian Penal Code, and naturally judicial approach, in dealing with such cases has to be cautious, circumspect and careful. In dealing with such appeals or reference proceedings where the question of confirming a death sentence is involved the Court has to deal with the matter carefully and to examine all relevant and material circumstances before upholding the conviction and confirming the sentence of death. Arjun Marik v. State of Bihar, 1994 Suppl (2) SCC 372 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1551 (1557).

[8828] ● Reference of death sentence— Rejection of—High Court to give reasons.—In the present case, the High Court while rejecting the reference under Section 366 of the Code of CrPC did not discuss in detail why it came to the conclusion that the death sentence awarded by the trial Court be not confirmed. It merely stated that the interest of justice would be fully served if the sentence of death is reduced to imprisonment for life. While the trial Court has given some reasons for awarding the death sentence on four of the accused; it would have been more appropriate for the High Court to have given reasons for differing from the view taken by the trial Court rather than mechanically rejecting the reference. Ramji Rai v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 3857 : (1999) 8 SCC 389 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1446 (1451) : 2000 CrLJ 19.

[8829] ● Reference of death sentence—Duty of High Court.—When a reference is made to the High Court under Section 366, CrPC by the learned Sessions Judge on passing a sentence of death, the High Court has to satisfy itself whether a case beyond reasonable doubt has been made out against the accused for infliction of the extreme penalty of death. The proceedings before the High Court in such a case require a reappraisal and re-assessment of the entire facts and law so that it can come to its independent conclusion but while so doing the High Court cannot also totally overlook the conclusion arrived at by the learned Sessions Judge. In performing its duty, the High Court is of necessity bound to consider the merits of the case itself and has to examine the entire evidence on record. The Legislature having provided in the confirmation proceedings a final safeguard of the life and liberty of the subject in cases of capital sentences, the duty of the High Court becomes more onerous to consider independently the matter carefully and examine all relevant material and come to the conclusion one way or the other. It is therefore, the duty of the High Court in a death reference to consider the evidence afresh. In the present case the High Court as a Court of appeal has filed to exercise its power under Section 386 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and instead of discharging its bounden duty to examine the evidence and other materials on record and without appreciating the same, it has, merely on surmises and conjures, come to the conclusion that the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt. The aforesaid conclusion cannot be sustained. State of Tamil Nadu v. Rajendran, AIR 1999 SC 3535 : (1999) 8 SCC 679 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 40 (45) : 1999 CrLJ 4552 : JT 1999 (7) SC 348.

CONFISCATION

[8830] ● Confiscation.—Confiscation is not the only mood of disposal under Section 517 of old code of CrPC (Now Section 452) and is singularly inappropriate in a case where the accused is prosecuted for an offence punishable with a maximum sentence of 3 months and a fine of Rs. 100. Suleman Issa v. State of Bombay, AIR 1954 SC 312 : 1954 SCR 976 (981).

[8831] ● Power of Court under Section 452, CrPC extends to confiscation of property in custody of Court.—The power of Court under Section 517 of the old code of 1898 (Now Section 452, code of 1973) extends to confiscation of property in the custody of the Court but it is not every case in which the Court must necessarily pass on order of confiscation irrespective of the circumstances of the case. Suleman Issa v. State of Bombay, AIR 1954 SC 312 : 1954 SCR 1976.

[8832] ● Confiscation of goods.—Where the High Court sets aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the accused under Section 7, it has neither the jurisdiction nor the power to confirm the order of confiscation of goods in respect of which the offence had been committed. Krishna Pillai v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 335 : 1954 CrLJ 1051.

[8833] ● Confiscation of vehicle.—Section 11 of the Opium Act as amended in Madhya Bharat conferred a discretion to Court to confiscate a conveyance. Despite user of the word "shall" this provision is not obligatory. It is well settled that the use of the word "shall" does not always mean that the enactment is obligatory or mandatory; it depends upon the context in which the word "shall" occurs and the other circumstances. The word "shall" occurring in Section 11 of the Madhya Bharat Act means "may" and that it confers discretion on the Court to confiscate the conveyance provided it belongs to the offender. But where it is not so, and the owner of the truck has neither authorized the offender to transport opium, nor is there any reason to believe that the owner knew that his vehicle was likely to be used for transporting contraband opium, the conveyance should not be confiscated because confiscation in such circumstances would be tantamount to punishing one who has not committed any offence under the Opium Act.

Three considerations are relevant is construing Section 11 : First, it is not denied that it would be unjust to confiscate the truck of a person, if he has no knowledge whatsoever that the truck was being used for transporting opium. Suppose a person steals a truck and then uses it for transporting contraband opium, the truck would have to be confiscated. It is well recognized that if a statute leads to absurdity, hardship or injustice presumably not intended, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the sentence. Secondly, it is a penal statute and it should, if possible, be construed in such a way that a person who has not committed or abetted any offence should not be visited with a penalty. Thirdly, if the meaning suggested by Mr. Shroff is given, Section 11(d) of the Madhya Bharat Act may have to be struck down as imposing unreasonable restrictions under Article 19 of the Constitution. Section 11 of the Madhya Bharat Act is not obligatory and it is for the Court to consider in each case whether the vehicle in which the contraband opium is found or is being transported should be confiscated or not, having regard to all the circumstances of the case. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Azad Bharat Finance Co., AIR 1967 SC 276 : (1966) 2 SCA 336 : 1966 Supp SCR 473 : 1967 CrLJ 285.

[8834] ● Confiscation of bottles containing contraband stuff.—The short question therefore is whether it can be said that in respect of the 1500 and odd bottles, an offence punishable under the Prohibition Act has been committed. It is no doubt true that the person who was charged with committing an offence was found not guilty, but the question is not whether the accused has been successfully brought to book, but whether the offence in respect of the property has been committed or not. There is distinction between the two. An offence may be demonstrated to be committed although the accused who committed it may not be successfully prosecuted.

In the present case, the two bottles which were sent to the Chemical Examiner were said to contain alcohol although there was some doubt in the mind of the Magistrate as to whether there was no chance of any malpractice. Be that as it may, there are the other bottles intact. There is some evidence to show that they were in the original packing and were a proprietary product. The manufacturer came as a witness and deposed that the liquids were bottled by him as a proprietary manufacture. In these circumstances; it would be fair to assume that all of them were of the same kind as the ones which were sent for chemical examination. However an examination of random samples can be made and if they satisfy the Court that the bottles contain contraband stuff the bottles can be confiscated. State of Gujarat v. Chinubhai Gopaldas, AIR 1968 SC 1275 : 1968 CrLJ 1478 : 1968 (3) SCR 447.

[8835] ● Confiscation of foreign currency.—An order for the disposal of any property under Section 452(1) of the CrPC is necessary where the property remains to be disposed of by the Court after the inquiry or trial is over. In the present case, it appears that the foreign currency seized from the appellant was not produced before the Magistrate and was not in the custody or control of the Court when the order of confiscation was made. There was, thus, no necessity or occasion for the Court to make an order for disposal of any property; the order of the Magistrate that the goods involved in the case are confiscated "if not already confiscated" clearly shows that he was not aware what had happened to the goods which were in the control of the Custom Authorities. It is true that the foreign currency seized for the appellant's possession was property in respect of which an offence was committed, but this fact alone did not call for an order under Section 452(1), Cr PC in the circumstances of the case, and the order passed, besides being unwarranted, is likely to create complications if in respect of the foreign currency a proceeding under the Customs Act is pending or the Customs authorities have made any order with which the Magistrate's order is inconsistent. Remo Paul Altoe v. Union of India, AIR 1977 SC 2255 : (1977) 4 SCC 437 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 629 : 1979 CrLJ 1933 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 482 : 1977 UJ (SC) 730.

[8836] ● Confiscation of property penal in character.—Confiscation of property is penal in character. The Sessions Judge examined the penal character of confiscation order and held that in the circumstances of the case it was not just and proper. The Appellate Authority had power and jurisdiction to decide the same. The High Court could not have lightly interfered with the order of the Sessions Judge setting aside the confiscation especially in exercise of the revisional jurisdiction under Section 439, CrPC without making out any of the well recognised grounds for interfering in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction and straight away proceed to interfere with the order which would not be correct exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. Thakur Das (dead) by LRs. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1978 SC 1 : (1978) 1 SCC 27 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 21 : 1978 CrLJ 1 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 484 : (1978) 1 SCR 732 : 1977 Cr App R (SC) 381.

[8837] ● Discretion in suitable cases not to order confiscation.—Section 7(1)(b) and the proviso of the Essential Commodities Act show that Court has a discretion in suitable cases for not imposing confiscation. When a hired truck laden with prohibited cattle fodder is seized—the owner not knowing the goods were prohibited—the truck should not be confiscated Section 7(i)(b) reads that "Any property in respect of which the order has been contravened or such part thereof as to the Court may seem fit including any packages, coverings or receptacles, in which the property is found and any animal, vehicle, vessel or other conveyance used in carrying the property, shall be forfeited to the Government. Provided that if the Court is of opinion that it is not necessary to direct forfeiture in respect of the whole or, as the case may be, any part of the property or any packages, coverings or receptacles or any animal, vehicle, vessel or other conveyance, it may for reasons to be recorded, refrain from doing so." Sat Pal v. State of Haryana, AIR 1979 SC 1767 : (1979) 3 SCC 322 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 619 : 1979 CrLJ 1341 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 631 : 1979 Cur LJ (Cr) 178 : 1979 SC Cr R 246 : 1979 UJ (SC) 804 : (1979) 3 Mah LR 296.

[8838] ● Confiscation of properties subject-matter of charge.—A special Judge holding the accused guilty for the offence punishable under Section 5(1)(e) read with Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act is empowered to order confiscation of properties under Section 452, Criminal Procedure Code which formed the subject-matter of the charge. Mirza Iqbal Hussain v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1983 SC 60 : (1982) 3 SCC 516 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 111 : 1983 CrLJ 154 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 515 : 1983 UJ (SC) 41.

[8839] ● Confiscation of property forming subject matter of charge.—Section 161 to 165 Indian Penal Code or cognizable, bailable and non-compoundable according to Schedule II of the Criminal Procedure Code, Section 165 A Indian Penal Code is made cognizable by Section 3 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947. It is also non-bailable and not compoundable.

It is clear from the provision of Section 4(2) Criminal Procedure Code that insofar as the offences under laws other than the Penal Code are concerned, the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure apply in their full force subject to any specific or contrary provision made by the law under which the offence is investigated or tried. Section 452 of the Code provides by sub-section (1) that if the trial in any Criminal Court is concluded, the Court may make such order as it thinks fit for the disposal of property by confiscation. The Prevention of Corruption Act being totally silent on the question of confiscation, the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure would apply in their full force, with the result that the Court trying an offence under the Prevention of Corruption Act would have the power to pass an order of confiscation by reason of the provisions contained in Section 452 of the Code. The order of confiscation cannot, therefore, be said to be without jurisdiction.

Further as the accused has been convicted under Section 5(1)(c) precisely for the reason that he was in possession of the two fixed deposit receipts and the cash sum, it cannot be said that the order of confiscation in regard to these amounts has not been properly passed or has been passed without any application of mind. Mirza Iqbal Hussain v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1983 SC 60 : (1982) 3 SCC 516 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 111 : 1983 CrLJ 154 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 515 : 1983 UJ (SC) 41.

[8840] ● Confiscation of timber or forest produce.—A close, careful and combined reading of the various sub-sections of Section 44, Section 45 and Section 58-A of the A.P. Forest Act as introduced or amended by Act 17 of 1976 leaves no doubt that the intendment of the Legislature was to provide for two separate proceedings before two different forums and there is no conflict of jurisdiction as Section 45, as amended by the Amendment Act, in terms curtails the power conferred on the Magistrate to direct confiscation of timber or forest produce on conviction of the accused. Conferral of power of confiscation of seized timber or forest produce and the implements, etc. on the Authorised Officer under sub-s. (2-A) of Section 44 of the Act on his being satisfied that a forest offence had been committed in respect thereof, is not dependent upon whether a criminal prosecution for commission of a forest offence has been launched against the offender or not. It is a separate and distinct proceedings from that of a trial before the Court for commission of an offence. Under sub-s. (2-A) of Section 44 of the Act, where a Forest Officer makes a report of seizure of any timber or forest produce and produces the seized timber before the Authorised Officer alongwith a report under Section 44(2), the Authorised Officer can direct confiscation to Government of such timber or forest produce and the implements, etc., if he is satisfied that a forest offence has been committed, irrespective of the fact whether the accused is facing a trial before a Magistrate for the commission of a forest offence under Section 20 or Section 29 of the Act.

Merely because there was an acquittal of the accused in the trial before the Magistrate due to paucity of evidence or otherwise did not necessarily entail in nullifying the order of confiscation of the seized timber of forest produce by the Authorised Officer under sub-section (2-A) of Section 44 of the A.P. Forest Act, 1967 based on his satisfaction that a forest offence had been committed in respect thereof.

The order by the Forest Officer for confiscation had been passed under Section 44 (2-A) of the A.P. Forest Act, 1967. Divisional Forest Officer v. G.V. Sudhakar Rao, AIR 1986 SC 328 (335) : (1985) 4 SCC 573 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 34 : 1986 CrLJ 357 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 12 : (1986) 1 Crimes 313.

[8841] ● Confiscation of illicitly felled Timber—Power of authorised officer to direct.—It would, therefore, appear that there can be no conflict of jurisdiction between the Authorised Officer acting under sub-section (2A) of Section 44 of the A.P. Forest Act, 1967 Act to direct confiscation of the property seized under sub-section (1) of the AP Forest Act, 1967 on his being satisfied that a forest offence has been committed, and the Magistrate making an order for confiscation of the property so seized on conviction of an accused for a forest offence under Section 45. The power of confiscation conferred on the Authorised Officer under sub-Section (2A) of Section 44 of the Act is separate and distinct from the power of the Magistrate to direct confiscation on conviction of an accused under Section 45.

True it is, where any property is produced by an officer before a criminal Court in an inquiry or trial, the Court may under Section 451 of the CrPC, 1973 make any direction, as it thinks fit, for the proper custody of such property pending the conclusion of the inquiry or trial. At the conclusion of the inquiry or trial, Court may also under Section 452 of the CrPC make an order for the disposal of the property produced before it and make such other directions as it may think necessary. Where the property is not produced before a criminal Court in an inquiry or trial, the Magistrate is empowered under Section 457 of the Code to make such order as he thinks fit, respecting the disposal of the property. The general provision of Section 452 of the CrPC with regard to disposal of property by a criminal Court such as by destruction, confiscation or delivery to any person claiming to be entitled to possession thereof, and that of Section 457, CrPC investing a Magistrate to make an order for disposal of property seized by a Police Officer and not produced before a criminal Court during an inquiry or trial must necessarily yield where a statute makes a special provision with regard to forfeiture of any property and its disposal. In the instant case, admittedly, the illicitly felled teak trees seized by the Forest Range Officer, Adilabad were produced by him before the Division Forest Officer, Hyderabad who is the Authorised Officer under sub-s. (2-A) of Section 44 of the Act, along with a report by him under sub-s. (2) thereof that he had reason to believe that a forest offence had been committed by the respondents. Merely because the Forest Range Officer also later lodged a complaint before the learned Metropolitan Magistrate for trial of the respondents for commission of offences under Section 20(1) (c) (iv) and (x) and Section 20(1) (d) read with Section 29 (4) (a) (ii) of the Act, did not imply that the Authorised Officer was bereft of his power and authority to direct confiscation of the seized timber and the implements, etc. under sub-Section (2-A) of Section 44 of the Act if he was satisfied that a forest offence had been committed. Divisional Forest Officer v. G.V. Sudhakar Rao, AIR 1986 SC 328 (334, 333) : (1985) 4 SCC 573 : 1986 CrLJ 357 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 34 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 12 : (1986) 1 Crimes 313.

[8842] ● Confiscation of vessel.—It is crystal clear that the Maritime zone of India (Regulation of Fishing by Foreign Vessels) Act 1981 has been with the object of preventing illegal poaching of fishes exclusive economic zone of India by foreign vessels including foreign vessels chartered by the Indian parties by providing deterrent punishment to protect Indian fishermen. Viewed in this context Section 13 mandates that in conviction of the master and character of an offence under Section 12 not only penalty of fine shall be imposed but the vessel used in or in connection with the commission of such offence has to be confiscated.

It is not open to the Court to consider the graveness of the offence and other extenuating circumstances and to make no order for confiscation of the offending vessels concerned. Confiscation of the vessel is the immediate statutory consequence of the finding that an offence either under 00 or S.11 or S.12 of the Act has been proved and its master has been convicted. S.13 is, thus, mandatory and it is not open to the Court as soon as the masters of the vessel is convicted of an offence under S.12 and is awarded penalty to refrain from making an order confiscating the offending vessel. Chern Taong Shang v. Commander S.D. Baijal, AIR 1988 SC 603 (612) : (1988) 1 SCC 507 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 162 : 1988 CrLJ 855 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 150 : JT 1988 (1) SC 202 : 1988 (1) Crimes 524.

[8843] ● Seizure of goods—Notice.—It must be reiterated whether a notice was given or not within a stipulated time for extension as contemplated under Section 110(2) Customs Act, 1962 is a question of fact. It is also true that the onus that the order was passed without notice, was on the person who asserts it to be so and this is a question of fact. There was an assertion to this effect in the Collector's order, the assertion remained uncontroverted by any specific evidence and also by failure to urge this point. In that view of the matter, the inference drawn by the High Court that such notice was given as contemplated under Section 110(2) was not unwarranted. Chuhar Mal v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 1474 : (1988) 3 SCC 257.

[8844] ● Notice in respect of seizure of goods.—Notice must go to the person from whose possession the goods have been seized, before the expiry of the original period of six months. It is possible that while notice is issued before the expiry of that period, service of such notice may not be effected on the person concerned in sufficient time to enable the Collector to make the order of extension before that period expires. Service of the notice may be postponed or delayed or rendered ineffective by reason of the person sought to be served attempting to avoid service of notice or for any other reason beyond the control of the customs authorities. In that event, it would be open to the Collector if he finds that sufficient cause has been made out before him in that behalf to extend the time beyond the original period of six months, and thereafter after notice has been served on the person concerned, to afford a post-decisional hearing to him in order to determine whether the order of extension should be cancelled or not. Having regard to the seriousness and the magnitude of injury to the public interest in the case of the illicit importation of goods, and having regard to considerations of the damage to economic policy underlying the formulation of import and export planning, it seems necessary to reconcile the need to afford an opportunity to the person effected with the larger considerations of public interest. I.J. Rao, Asstt. Collector of Customs v. Bibhuti Bhushan Bagh, AIR 1989 SC 1884 : (1989) 3 SCC 202 (210) : (1989) 2 SCJ 619 : JT 1989 (2) SC 531.

[8845] ● Confiscation of truck used for carrying forest produce.—The truck of the respondent was ordered to the confiscated by the Assistant Conservator of Forest, as it was found involved in commission of a forest offence. The High Court set aside the order of confirmation on the ground that the authorities had failed to establish that the owner of the truck had any knowledge that his truck was likely to be used for carrying forest produce in contravention of the provision of the Forest Act. The finding was based upon the evidence on the record. Therefore it is not proper to interfere with such finding. Assistant Forest Conservator v. Sharad Ramchandra Kale, AIR 1998 SC 2927 : (1998) 1 SCC 48 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 260 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 175.

[8846] ● Confiscation of goods by Customs Authorities—Imposition of redemption fine on release.—It is contended by the learned Counsel for the appellant that redemption fine could not be imposed because the goods were no longer in the custody of the respondent authority. It is an admitted fact that the goods were released to the appellants on an application made by it and on the appellant executing a bond. Under these circumstances, if subsequently it is found that the import was not valid or that there was any other irregularity which would entitle the customs authorities to confiscate the said goods, then the mere fact that the goods were released on the bond being executed, would not take away the power of the custom authorities to levy redemption fine. Weston Components Ltd. v. Commr of Customs, New Delhi, AIR 2000 SC 561 : (2000) 1 SCC 565 : JT 2000 (1) SC 525.

[8847] ● Confiscation of Truck—Proper procedure for.—In the instant case the appellant challenges an order of confiscation of truck. Notice was issued by this Court on 16.11.1998 calling upon the respondent to show cause why an appropriate order in terms of Section 19 (1) (b) of Madhya Pradesh Van Upaj (Vyapar Vaniyaman) Adhiniyam 1969 should not be passed. Section 19 (1) (b) provides that when any property other than a specified forest produce has been seized as liable to confiscation the State Government may by notification empower a Forest Officer to release the same on payment of the value thereof as estimated by such officer. The forest officer concerned had not focused his attention on the enabling provision of Section 19 (1) (b) of the Act. Forest Officer concerned is, therefore, directed to consider the question of release of the truck already confiscated under Section 19 (1) (b) of the Act and pass appropriate orders on the facts and circumstances of the case. Dinesh Kumar Katike v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2000 SC 3633 : (2000) 1 SCC 323 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 190.

[8848] ● Confiscation of forest produce in proceeding under Section 59-A, Forest Act.—An order of confiscation of forest produce in a proceeding under Section 59-A of the Forest Act, 1927 would not amount either to penalty or punishment. Such an order, however, can be passed only in the event a valid seizure is made and the authorized officer satisfies himself as regards ownership of the forest produce in the State as also commission of a forest offence. An order of confiscation is not to be passed automatically, and in terms of sub-Section (3) of Section 59-A, a discretionary power has been conferred upon the authorized officer in relation to a vehicle.

The amendments carried out by the State of West Bengal by reason of Sections 59-A to 59-G in the Forest Act, 1927 provide for a complete code. A proceeding for confiscation can be initiated irrespective of the fat as to whether prosecution for commission of a forest offence has been lodged or not. A confiscation proceeding, therefore, is independent of a criminal proceeding.

Once a confiscation proceeding is initiated, the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court in terms of Section 59-G of the Forest Act, 1927 being barred, the High Court also cannot exercise its jurisdiction under Section 482, CrPC for interim release of the property. The High Court can exercise such a power only in exercise of its power of judicial review. State of West Bengal v. Sujit Kumar Rana, AIR 2004 SC 1851 : (2004) 4 SCC 129 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 984 : 2004 (3) Crimes 195.

[8849] ● Confiscation of illegally transported forest produce and vehicle by Forest Officer.—The High Court did not examine the various submissions made, more particularly, with regard to the presumption available to be drawn under Section 69 of the Forest Act, 1927 (as amended in H.P. in (1991) Act. The omission on the part of the appellate Judge under the Act is a serious error at least necessitating the High Court to consider the correctness or otherwise of the stand taken for the department on merits. The trial Court proceeded on the basis that there was no claim that the property belonged to the State. A bare reading of the judgment itself shows that when the articles were seized, the person who accompanied the goods and was travelling in the truck was required to produce permit to show legitimacy of his possession. He could not do it. In that background, the question which was required to be adjudicated was whether the presumption under Section 69 was to be pressed into service. The very action of the Department is on the hypothesis of the property belonging to the Government in view of the statutory presumptions and there is no need for making any separate claim or claims petition separately. This certainly is not a frivolous question and the High Court was required to consider the issue in the proper perspective. The High Court was not justified in its conclusion that no case for examination was made out. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Dhanwant Singh, AIR 2004 SC 1636 : 2004 CrLJ 1431 : JT 2004 (2) SC 367 : (2004) 2 Crimes 177.

[8850] ● Confiscation of goods and vehicles carrying essential commodities.—Confiscation of goods and the vehicles and vessels carrying the same amounts to deprivation of property. Confiscation of an essential commodity or a truck is permissible only if the provisions of any order made under Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 are violated. When a vehicle is used for carrying an essential commodity, it may be seized and ultimately directed to be confiscated in terms of Clause (c) of sub-Section (1) of Section 6-A of the Act. Violation of an order made under Section 3 of the Act, therefore, is a precondition for passing an order of confiscation. Kailash Prasad Yadav v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2007 SC 2626 : (2007) 5 SCC 769 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 14 : 2007 CrLJ 3722 (3723).

[8851] ● Confiscation—Authorities must arrive at clear finding regarding violation of Section 3(1) of essential commodities Act.—The order of confiscation is not passed only because it would be lawful to do so. The authorities must arrive at a clear finding in regard to the violation mode under Section 3 of the Essential commodities Act, 1955 Act. The issues which have been raised before the Supreme Court have not been considered either by the Deputy Commissioner or by the Sessions Judge as also by the High Court. It was not a fit case where an order confiscation could have been passed. Kailash Prasad Yadav v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2007 SC 2626 : (2007) 5 SCC 769 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 14 : 2007 CrLJ 3722 (3722) 3724.

[8852] ● A valid seizure, as is well known, is a sine qua—non for passing an order of confiscation of property. Kailash Prasad Yadav v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2007 SC 2626 : (2007) 5 SCC 769 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 14 : 2007 CrLJ 3722 (3723).

[8853] ● Illegal Transportation of liquor—Confiscation of truck.—According to the proviso to Section 46 M.P. Excise Act, 1915 the burden is on the owner of the property to establish that he had no reason to believe that such offence was being committed or was likely to be committed. It provides that no animals, carts, vessels, rafts and other conveyance shall be liable to confiscation, if it is proved that they are the property of the offender and if the owner establishes that he has no reason to believe that such offence was being or likely to be committed, the owner has to establish the aforesaid facts. Kailash Chandra v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2007) 14 SCC 595 : 2008 CrLJ 1035 (1037).

CONFLICT

[8854] ● Conflicting provisions in Contempt of Courts Act, 1971.—The only two modes of taking cognizance by the High Court mentioned in subsection (2) of Section 15. Contempt of Courts Act, 1971 are (i) on a reference made to it by a subordinate Court; or (ii) on a motion made by the Advocate General, or in relation to a union territory by the notified law officer.

Does the omission in S.15(2) of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1971 of the mode of taking suo motu cognizance indicate a legislative intention to debar the High Court from taking cognizance in that mode of any criminal contempt of a subordinate Court? If this question is answered in the affirmative, then, such a construction of sub-s.(2) will be inconsistent with Section 10 which makes the powers of the High Court to punish for contempt of a subordinate Court, co-extensive and congruent with its power to punish for its own contempt, not only in regard to quantum or prerequisites for punishment, but also in the matter of procedure and practice. Such a construction which will bring Section 15(2) in conflict with S.10, has to be avoided, and the other interpretation which will be in harmony with S.10 is to be accepted Harmoniously construed, sub-section (2) of S.15 does not deprive the High Court of the power of taking cognizance of criminal contempt of subordinate Court, on its own motion, also.

If the intention of the Legislature was to take away the power of the High Court to take suo motu cognizance of such contempt, there was no difficulty in saying so in unequivocal language or by wording the sub-section in a negative form sub-section (2) of Section 15 properly construed, does not restrict the power of the High Court to take cognizance of and punish contempt of a subordinate Court, on its own motion. S.K. Sarkar, Member, Board of Revenue, Uttar Pradesh v. Vinay Chandra Misra, AIR 1981 SC 723 : (1981) 1 SCC 436 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 175 (181) : 1981 CrLJ 283 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 72 : (1981) 2 SCR 331.

[8855] ● Conflicting dying declarations.—Examining these two dying declarations, we find out only that they gave two conflicting versions but there is inter se discrepancies in the depositions of the witnesses given in support of the other dying declaration dated 6-11-1976. Finally, in the dying declaration before a Magistrate on which possibly more reliance could have been placed, the deceased did not name any of the accused. Thus, we have no hesitation to hold that these two dying declarations do not bring home the guilt of the appellant. On such an evidence the trial Court rightly declined to base a conviction. Kishan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1999 SC 3062 : (2000) 1 SCC 310 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 182 (186, 187) : 1999 CrLJ 4070 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 639 : (1999) 4 Crimes 103 : JT 1999 (6) SC 41.

[8856] ● No explanation of prosecution for reconciliation of injuries—Conflict regarding injuries.—The deceased had received pellet injuries at his chest and jaw and the Investigating Officer PW-5 had also found, at the time of preparing the injury statement, that the deceased had received pellet injuries on his tongue, chest, chin and left shoulder. No explanation, whatsoever, to have been offered by the prosecution for reconciling the recovery of bullet from the chest cavity of the deceased and the presence of pellet injuries as deposed to by the witnesses. Since both the bullet and the gun had been recovered, it was obligatory on the prosecution to have sent the same for expert examination. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Supra, AIR 2001 SC 2408 : (2002) 9 SCC 447 : JT (2001) 3 SC 309 : 2001 Cr App R (SC) 270.

[8857] ● Conflict regarding injuries.—There are four eye-witnesses in this case who deposed that appellants Majju alias Nasir and Irshad were having Farsi with them and they inflicted cut injuries on Bihari Lal. PW-8, Dr. Vijay Agrawal conducted the post-mortem and described the injuries in a haphazard manner without proper description of the wounds as to whether these were incised injuries or lacerated injuries. But the Doctor who examined the injured immediately after the occurrence of the incident, described the nature of injuries and that is fully in conformity with the oral evidence given by the witnesses. The Sessions Judge as well as the High Court has rightly relied on the evidence of the Doctor who prepared the wound certificate of the deceased. Majju v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 2939 : (2001) 9 SCC 449 : 2001 CrLJ 4762 : (2001) 4 Crimes 379.

[8858] ● Conflict regarding number of knife blows.—Where in FIR it was stated that only accused R inflicted one knife blow on the deceased but in evidence the witness stated that accused R and P inflicted more than one blow on the deceased, the accused R was given benefit of doubt and acquitted of the charge under Section 302, IPC. Anil Prakash Shukla v. Arvind Shukla, (2007) 9 SCC 513 (516) : (2007) 3 Crimes 221.

[8859] ● Inconsistency in evidence.—Where the sole eye witness was inimical to the accused, his evidence was inconsistent with the version disclosed in FIR. the accused R was given benefit of doubt and acquitted of the charge under Section 302, IPC. Anil Prakash Shukla v. Arvind Shukla, (2007) 9 SCC 513 (516) : (2007) 3 Crimes 221.

CONFRONTATION

CONSECUTIVE SENTENCE

[8860] ● Consecutive sentence.—The appellant was given the maximum sentences of seven years in the previous case under the Gold (Control) Act. The conviction was based on the plea of guilty. The latter sentence under the Customs Act was also on the plea of guilty. Generally, it is both proper and customary for Courts to give credit to an accused for pleading guilty to the charge. But no credit need be given if the plea of guilty in the circumstances is inevitable or the accused has no alternative but to plead guilty. The accused being caught red handed is one such instance. The first case under the Gold (Control) Act against the appellant falls into the latter category. The plea of. guilty in that case was inevitable. The Court was therefore justified in awarding the maximum sentence. But the second case under the Customs Act is not of that type. The prosecution has to prove many things in it. There are 18 other accused facing trial in that case. The appellant, however, pleaded guilty, perhaps on legal advice. The enormity of the crime is relevant for measuring the sentence. But the maximum sentence awarded in one case against the same accused is not irrelevant for consideration while giving the consecutive sentence in the second case although it is grave. The Court has to consider the totality of the sentences which the accused has to undergo if the sentences are to he consecutive. The totality principle has been accepted as a correct principle for guidance. The trial Magistrate in this case has properly considered all aspects including the plea of guilty and given good reasons for awarding four years R.I. That means in all the appellant has to undergo 11 years of imprisonment which by itself is quite long enough in a man's life. The High Court took a narrow view of the whole matter with the enormity of the crime on the forefront. It enhanced the sentence to the maximum of 7 years prescribed under Section 135 of the Act. The result is that the appellant has to serve in all 14 years. The broad expanse of discretion left by legislation to sentencing Courts should not be narrowed only to the seriousness of the offences. No single consideration can definitively determine the proper sentence. The Court must recognise, learn to control and exclude' many diverse data. In consecutive sentences, in particular, the Court cannot afford to be blind to imprisonment which the accused is already undergoing. The appeal was allowed restoring the judgment of the trial Court. Mohd Akhtar Hussain v. Asstt. Collector, Customs (Prevention) Ahmedabad, AIR 1988 SC 2143 : (1988) 4 SCC 183 : 1989 CrLJ 253 : 1988 (3) Crimes 291.

[8861] ● Several Sentences—Execution of—Sentences to run concurrently.—Appellants in this case are two. 1st appellant Ammavasai was convicted in 4 different cases, the occurrence in all of which took place between 27-3-1990 and 7-5-1990. The offence found against him in all the cases was under Section 395 of the IPC and in each case he was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 7 years. If he is not given the benefit in exercise of the discretion conferred under Section 427 of the Cr PC, he may have to undergo a very long period of 28 years in jail.

The second appellant Dewaraj was convicted in 5 different cases the occurrence in all of which took place between 21-10-1989 and 7.5.1990. He was also found guilty under Section 395, IPC and was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of 7 years in each case. If the benefit conferred under Section 427 in not extended to him, he may have to undergo imprisonment for a total period of 35 years in jail, on the other had, we allow the appellants to have the benefit of all the sentences to run concurrently, he would be out by now after serving only imprisonment for a period of 7 years awarded in one case. Both courses are unacceptable to us and therefore we thought of a via media which would be consistent with the administration of criminal justice. If the appellants would undergo a total period of 14 years of imprisonment in respect of all the convictions passed against them that that will be sufficient to meet the ends of Justice. Ammavasai v. Inspector of Police, Valliyanar, AIR 2000 SC 3544 : (2000) 9 SCC 749 : 2000 CrLJ 4662.

CONSENT

[8862] ● Consent.—Section 92, IPC serves as a corollary to Sections 87, 88 and 89, IPC. It says in explicit term that consent will only condone the act causing harm to the person giving the consent which will otherwise be an offence. Acts which are offences independently of any harm which they may cause will not be covered by consent given under Sections 87, 88 and 89, for example causing miscarriage 'public nuisance' offences against public safety, morals etc. The expression "harm" connotes hurt, injury, damage, impairment, moral wrong or evil. In Sections 81, 87, 88, 89, 91, 92, 100, 104 and 106 of Penal Code it means physical injury in Section 93 an injurious mental reaction; in Section 415, injury to a person in mind, body reputation or property; in Section 469, and 499 harm to the reputation of the aggrieved party. In Section 95, the expression has a wide connotation and includes physical injury. Veeda Menzes v. Yusuf Khan, AIR 1966 SC 1773 : 1966 CrLJ 1489.

CONSENT IN OFFENCES AGAINST WOMEN
§ (See also "RAPE")

[8863] ● Consent in offences against women.—The ancient law began with the concept of carnal knowledge effected by direct and overpowering physical force beating down the victim's resistance, in such a situation there was clearly no consent by the woman and this came latter to be regarded as the gist of the offence, so as to cover the case of the woman yielding (but not consenting) when faced with threats of such bodily injury to herself as she dared not resist. This development continued so as to reach cases in which for some other reason than physical intimidation there was in fact no consent. It was also realised that there could be a different situation where the woman's consent was not negatived but was in fact vitiated by intimidation, that is to say, where she had, as it were, been faced with a decision between two evils and had chosen that one which seemed to her to be lesser. Consent obtained by threat of harm to some third person was held to be no consent. Kenny on Outlines of Criminal Law, 19th Edition, para 143 p. 200.

[8864] ● Consent under fear of death or duress.—If a woman yields through fear of death or through duress, it is rape. If the consent took place when she was in a state of insensibility from liquor, having been made drunk by the defendant (though the liquor was given only for the purpose of exciting her), it is a rape. So also, if a man gets into bed with a woman while she is asleep and he knows she is asleep and has connection with her while in that state, he is guilty of rape. It is no excuse that the woman consented first, if the offence was afterwards committed by force or against her will, nor is it any excuse that she consented after the fact. ARCHBOLD on pleading, Evidence and Practice in Criminal cases, 41st Edition, para 20-345, p. 1571.

[8865] ● Prosecutrix consenting party.—Where the prosecutrix alleged that she was compelled, threatened or otherwise induced to go with the appellant, there should be corroboration of some material particular from some independent source, and her bare statement cannot be considered sufficient to sustain the appellant's conviction especially when she was found to have been used to sexual intercourse and appeared to be a consenting party not only to the impugned acts of sexual intercourse in question but also on earlier occasions and in that context the Court should consider the question of her age more closely, especially when the accused was acquitted of the offence under Section 376, I.P.C. The appeal was, therefore, allowed. Ram Murti v. State of Haryana, AIR 1970 SC 1029 : (1970) 3 SCC 21 : 1970 CrLJ 991 : 1970 SCCrR 510 : 1970 Cur LJ 528 : 72 PunLR 1000 : 1970 SCD 663.

[8866] ● Prosecutrix consenting party.—Where the prosecutrix, a grown up and experienced pregnant lady, alleged that three persons had forcible sexual intercourse with her one after the other resulting in her abortion four or five days thereafter, and where there was absence of any injury on any of the accused or on the prosecutrix except some bleeding from her vagina, the only irresistible inference therefrom is that, she was a consenting party. Pratap Misra v. State of Orissa, AIR 1977 SC 1307 : (1977) 3 SCC 41 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 447 : 1977 CrLJ 817 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 233 : 1977 SCCrR 258 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 164 : 1977 CurLJ (Cr) 102.

[8867] ● Sexual intercourse—Consent—Circumstances negativing existence of fear.—In this case victim's companions consisting of her brother, aunt and the lover while left the police station, the victim was asked to wait at the police station, by the accused head constable, immediately thereafter the head constable took away the victim to a latrine where he was alleged to have committed rape on her. No mark of injury were found on the person of the girl after the incident and their absence goes a long way to indicate that the alleged intercourse was a peaceful affair and that the story of a stiff resistance having been put up by the girl is all false. It is further clear that the averments on the part of the girl that she had been shouting loudly for help are also a tissue of lies. In coming to the conclusion that the consent of the girl was a case of "passive submission" the High Court mainly relied on the circumstance that at the relevant time the girl was in the police station where she would feel helpless in the presence of two appellants who were persons in authority and whose advances she could hardly repel all by herself and inferred that her submission to the act of sexual intercourse must be regarded as a result of fear and, therefore, is no consent in the eye of law. The reasoning of the High Court suffers from errors. The fear which clause 4 of Section 375, IPC speaks of is negatived by the circumstance that the girl to said is have been taken away by the appellant right from amongst her near and dear one's at a point of time when they were all leaving the police station together and were crossing the entrance gate to emerge out of it. The sexual intercourse in question is not proved to amount to rape and, therefore, no offence is brought home to appellant. Tukaram v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 185 (188, 189) : (1979) 2 SCC 143 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 381 : 1978 CrLJ 1864 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 479.

[8868] ● Victim below sixteen years—Consent irrelevant.—Evidence of prosecutrix was consistent and reliable. Both lower Courts believed the same and was corroborated by evidence of her own brother and father to whom she had related the details of occurrence, without delay after she was rescued. Argument that no injury was detected on her private parts or that she was found to have been used to sexual intercourse, would be of no avail to the appellants because question of consent became wholly irrelevant once it was proved that the girl was below 16 years of age. Harpal Singh v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1981 SC 361 : (1981) 1 SCC 560 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 208 : 1981 CrLJ 1 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 46 : 1981 UJ (SC) 63 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 29 : 1981 ACrC 57 : 1981 AWC 153 : 1981 ACrR 90 : 1981 CurLJ (Cri) 82 : 1981 Bihar CrC (SC) 40 : 1981 UP CrC (SC) 40.

[8869] ● Gang rape—Absence of injuries not to falsify case of rape.—As to gang rape, the absence of injury on back of prosecutrix, a victim of gang rape does not falsify the case of rape. When the culprits were four in number and the victim a girl of 19/20, she is not expected to offer such resistance as would cause injuries on her (here, however, the medical evidence report showed red abrasions on her right breast). Balwant Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1987 SC 1080 : (1987) 2 SCC 27 : 1987 CrLJ 971 : 1987 (1) Crimes 910 (SC).

[8870] ● Consent to sexual intercourse obtained by coercion.—The accused persons charged for having committed rape on the wife of a labourer was a police constable in uniform and a businessman. The victim lady and her husband came to see a fair and were residing in the house of one friend of theirs. The victim and husband were called in the residence of the police constable where he was threatened to sign some papers in default of which he was to be taken into custody. The businessman accused then called the lady inside and committed rape on her and thereafter the constable too went inside and had sex with her. The consent to sexual intercourse was thus obtained by coercion. It was nothing but a helpless resignation. The two accused persons are guilty of the offence of rape. State of Maharashtra v. Prakash, AIR 1992 SC 1275 : 1993 Supp (1) SCC 653 : 1992 CrLJ 1924.

[8871] ● Rape—Testimony of prosecutrix acceptable.—When the husband of the prosecutrix had gone out and she was preparing to serve fodder to the cattle, the accused came from behind, put one hand on her mouth and the other on her back and tried to push her into the cattle shed. She resisted him where upon he threw her on the ground, lifted her ghagra, untied his dhoti and forcibly raped her. The prosecutrix being a strong woman resisted the accused and in the process sustained abrasions on her lumber region as well as elbow joints. It is not possible to believe that a woman would suffer such abrasions while having sexual intercourse with her husband. The presence of abrasions on her elbow joints and the lumber region supply evidence of struggle during the act. The evidence of PW1, Dr. Soni also shows that there were teeth marks near the nipple of one of her breasts lending corroboration to her testimony that the accused had violated her person- The abrasions on the vaginal wall and the consequential inflammation of the labia majora as well as minora and the clitoris provide corroborative evidence that someone had forcible sex with her. State of Rajasthan v. Narayan, AIR 1992 SC 2004 (2007, 2008) : (1992) 3 SCC 615 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 781 : 1992 CrLJ 3655 : JT 1992 (4) SC 282 : 1992 (2) Crimes 1154.

[8872] ● Prosecutrix willing party.—The two appellants were friends. They were young people at the time of the commission of the offence in the year 1984. Out of them, Shyam, A-1, wanted to marry the prosecutrix, Lalita. He made a proposal to her about two to three months prior to the occurrence which was spurned by her. On the day of the occurrence, she was incidentally at the common tap for washing clothes and to fetch water back home. The appellants riding their respective bicycles came at that time and at their asking she sat on the carrier of the bicycle of Suresh, A-2 and Shyam, A-1 followed that bicycle as if escorting. The prosecutrix was taken to a room in the house of someone where she was made to perform a ritual signifying marriage between her and Shyam, A-1.

In her statement in Court the prosecutrix has put blame on the appellants. She has deposed that she was threatened right from the beginning when being kidnapped and she was kept under threat till the Police ultimately recovered her. Normally, her statement in that regard would be difficult to dislodge, but having regard to her conduct, as also the manner of the so-called "taking", it does not seem that the prosecutrix was truthful in that regard. In the first place, it is too much of a coincidence that the prosecutrix on her visit to a common tap, catering to many, would be found alone, or that her whereabouts would be under check by both the appellants/ accused and that they would emerge at the scene abruptly to commit the offence of kidnapping by "taking" her out of the lawful guardianship of her mother. Secondly, it is difficult to believe that to the strata of society to which the parties belong, they would have gone unnoticed while proceeding to the house of that other. The prosecutrix cannot be said to have been tied to the bicycle as if a load while sitting on the carrier thereof. She could have easily jumped off. She was a fully grown up girl may be one who had yet not touched 18 years of age, but still she was in the age of discretion, sensible and aware of the intention of the accused Shyam, that he was taking her away for a purpose. It was not unknown to her with whom she was going in view of his earlier proposal. It was expected of her then to jump down from the bicycle, or put up a struggle and, in any case, raise an alarm to protect herself. No such steps were taken by her. It seems she was a willing party to go with Shyam on her own and in that sense there was no 'taking" out of the guardianship of her mother. The culpability of neither Shyam, A-1 nor that of Suresh, A-2 in these circumstances appears to as established.

The appeal was allowed. Shyam v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1995 SC 2169 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 851 : 1995 CrLJ 3974.

[8873] ● Prosecutrix consenting party.—The prosecutrix had sufficient opportunity not only to run away from the house at Ramgarh but she could have also taken the help of neighbours from the said village. The medical evidence of Dr. Maya Shanker Thakur, PW-2 also indicates that there were no injuries on the person of the prosecutrix including her private part. Her entire conduct clearly shows that she was a consenting party to the sexual intercourse and if this be so, the conviction of the appellant under Section 376, IPC cannot be sustained. There is one more additional factor which we must mention that it is not the case of the prosecutrix that she was put in physical restraint in the house at Ramgarh, with the result her movements were restricted. This circumstance also goes to negative the case of forcible intercourse with the prosecutrix by the appellant. Kuldeep K. Mahato v. State of Bihar, AIR 1998 SC 2694 (2696) : (1998) 6 SCC 420 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1460 : 1998 CrLJ 4033 : JT 1998 (5) SC 395 : 1998 Cr AppR (SC) 424.

[8874] ● Prosecutrix not consenting party.—According to the prosecution she resisted the accused by scratching him with nails but as no nail marks were found on the body of the accused, the learned Sessions Judge was of the view that for this reason, it is to be assumed that there was consent on the part of the prosecutrix. The accused was examined on 20-4-1993. As the incident occurred on 17-4-1993, even if there were any marks of violence on the body of accused, the same would have been obliterated and were not so prominent so as to be noticed by the Medical Officer who examined him. Therefore, the absence of nail marks or minor injuries on the body of the accused is of not much significance.

The evidence as a whole indicates that there was resistance by the prosecutrix and there was no voluntary participation by her for the sexual act. Submission of the body under the fear of terror cannot be construed as a consented sexual act. Consent for the purpose of Section 375 requires voluntary participation not only after the exercise of intelligence based on the knowledge of the significance and moral quality of the act but after having fully exercised the choice between the resistance and assent. Whether there was consent or not, is to be ascertained only on a careful study of all relevant circumstances. From the evidence on record, it cannot be said that the prosecutrix had given consent and thereafter she turned round and acted against the interest of the accused. There is a clear credible evidence that she resisted the onslaught and made all possible efforts to prevent the accused from committing rape on her. Therefore the finding entered by the learned Sessions Judge that there was consent on the part of the prosecutrix, is without any basis. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Mange Ram, AIR 2000 SC 2798 (2801) : (2000) 7 SCC 224 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1331 : 2000 CrLJ 4027 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 731.

[8875] ● Consent immaterial in certain circumstances.—Consent is immaterial in certain circumstances covered by clauses thirdly to sixthly the last one being when the woman is under 16 years of age. Based on these provisions, an argument is usually advanced on behalf of the accused charged with rape that the absence of proof of want of consent where the prosecutrix is not under 16 years of age takes the assault out of the purview of Section 375, 2 IPC. Certainly consent is no defence if the victim has been proved to be under 16 years of age.

If the presecutrix be of 16 years of age or above, her consent cannot be presumed; an inference as to consent can be drawn if only based on evidence or probabilities of the case. The victim of rape stating on oath that she was forcibly subjected to sexual intercourse or that the act was done without her consent, has to be believed and accepted like any other testimony unless there is material available to draw an inference as to her consent or else the testimony of prosecutrix is such as would be inherently improbable. The prosecutrix before us had just crossed the age of 16 years. She has clearly stated that she was subjected to sexual intercourse forcibly by the accused. She was not a consenting party. She offered resistance to the best of her ability but she succumbed and fell victim to the force employed by the accused. State of Rajasthan v. N.K., AIR 2000 SC 1812 : (2000) 5 SCC 30 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 898 (910) : 2000 CrLJ 2205 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 388.

[8876] ● Absence of injuries on person of prosecutrix not sufficient to draw inference of consent.—In the instant case, the prosecutrix was in her teens. The perpetrator of the crime was an able-bodied youth bustling with energy and determined to fulfil his lust armed with a knife in his hand and having succeeded on forcefully removing the victim to a secluded place where there was none around to help the prosecutrix in her defence. The injuries which the prosecutrix suffered or might have suffered in defending herself and offering resistance to the accused were abrasions or bruises which would heal up in ordinary course of nature within 2 to 3 days of the incident. The absence of visible marks of injuries on the person of the prosecutrix on the date of her medical examination would not necessarily mean that she had not suffered any injuries or that she had offered no resistance at the time of commission of the crime. Absence of injuries on the person of the prosecutrix is not necessarily an evidence of falsity of the allegation or an evidence of consent on the part of the prosecutrix. It will all depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. State of Rajasthan v. Noore Khan, AIR 2000 SC 1812 : (2000) 5 SCC 30 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 898 : 2000 CrLJ 2205 : 2000 (2) Crimes 84 (SC).

[8877] ● Appellant not tried to rape deceased forcefully.—In the absence of explanation as to the serious nature of injuries sustained by the appellant giving rise to serious doubt as to the very genesis of the incident, the said portion of the statement in the complaint of PW - 5 that "she died due to deep head injuries caused by Ramkat. Ramkat also tried to kill himself stabbing by knife on the stomach" appears to have been inserted after deliberation and consultation. This insertion probabilises the defence version that the appellant and the deceased were in love. The very fact that the deceased was totally naked and the under-clothes of both the deceased and the appellant were found in the same room probabilises the theory of intercourse by consent and negatives the story of rape. PW 5 did not tolerate his sister having sex with Ramkat and that might have led to an attack on both of them on that day. In this background it appears improbable that the appellant forcefully tried to rape the deceased. Since the injuries found on the appellant could not be said to be self-inflicted, his defence, that he sustained injuries at the hands of unknown person when he tried to save the deceased, appears to be probable. Having regard to infirmities, improbabilities and contradictions found in the case it is unsafe to act upon the dying declaration. Ronald Kiprono Ramkant v. State of Haryana, AIR 2001 SC 2488 : (2001) 6 SCC 423 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1034 (1037, 1038) : 2001 CrLJ 3942 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 500.

> "Consent given firstly under fear of injury and secondly under a misconception of fact is not consent at all."

That is what is explained in first part of Section 90. There are two grounds specified in Section 90 which are analogous to coercion and mistake of fact which are the familiar grounds that can vitiate a transaction under the jurisprudence of our country as well as other countries. The factors set out in first part of Section 90 are from the point of view of the victim and second part of Section 90 enacts the corresponding provision from the point of view of the accused. It envisages that the accused has knowledge or has reason to believe that the consent was given by the victim in consequence of fear of injury of misconception of fact. Thus the second part lays emphasis on the knowledge or reasonable belief of the person who obtains the tainted consent. The requirements of both the parts should be cumulatively satisfied. In other words, the Court has to see whether the person giving the consent has given it under fear or misconception of fact and the court should also be satisfied that the person doing the act i.e. the alleged offender is conscious of the fact or should have reason to think that but for the fear or misconception, the consent would not have been given. This is the scheme of Section 90 which is couched in negative terminology. As observed by his Court in Deelip Singh @ Dilip Kumar v. State of Bihar, AIR 2005 SC 203 : AIR 2004 SCW 6479 : 2005 (1) SCC 88 : (2004) 4 Crimes 371, Section 90 cannot be considered as an exhaustive definition of consent for the purposes of IPC. The normal connotation and concept of consent is not intended to be excluded. Pradeep Kumar Verma v. State of Bihar, AIR 2007 SC 3059 : (2007) 7 SCC 413 : (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 407 : 2007 CrLJ 4333 (4337) (SC) : 2007 (3) Crimes 346.

[8879] ● Plea of consent of prosecutrix when unsustainable.—On scrutiny of the evidence of the prosecutrix, it appears to us that the defence tried to build up a case that the prosecutrix is a consenting party to the sexual intercourse as she did not make any attempt to resist the accused from committing the offence nor the Doctors noticed any mark of injury on any part of her body. This plea of the accused, in our view, is wholly unfounded and baseless and it is falsified by the subsequent conduct of the prosecutrix, who as noticed above after the incident rushed to her mother and disclosed the entire episode to her and the prosecutrix emotionally and mentally felt so depressed and humiliated that she could not bear the insult and disrepute imprinted on her character and moral conduct by the cruel act of the accused. The prosecutrix took the extreme step of ending her life by jumping in a water tank. Further, the incident was disclosed to PW Shashappa. PW Yashodhara, Babu and Vishwanath, who eventually pulled out the prosecutrix out of the water tank and rescued her life. The incident was also disclosed to PW-6 Estate Writer, who advised the prosecutrix and her parents to lodge a report in the Police Station, which step was promptly taken by the prosecutrix on the same night. B.C. Deva v. State of Kerala, (2007) 12 SCC 122 : (2007) 3 Crimes 281 : 2007 (8) SCR 509 : 2007 (9) Scale 338.

[8880] ● A Promise to marry without anything more—Not to give use to misconception of fact.—A promise to marry without anything more will not give rise to misconception of fact within the meaning of Section 90, IPC. It needs to be clarified that a representation deliberately made by the accused with a view to elicit the assent of the victim without having the intention or inclination to marry her, will vitiate the consent. If on the facts it is established that at the very inception of the making of promise, the accused did not really entertain the intention of marrying her and the promise to marry held out by him was a mere hoax, the consent ostensibly given by the victim will be of no avail to the accused to exculpate him from the ambit of Section 375 clause second. Pradeep Kumar Verma v. State of Bihar, AIR 2007 SC 3059 : (2007) 7 SCC 413 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 407 : 2007 CrLJ 4333 (4337) (SC) : 2007 (3) Crimes 346.

[8881] ● Rape—Consent.—It is found from the medical evidence and from the chemical examiner's reports that the vaginal swab and clothes taken from the dead body did indicate the presence of semen. There is however absolutely no evidence to suggest (even assuming that the intercourse had been committed by the appellant) that he had done so without Mukhtiar Kaur's consent or against her will. Some suspicions of rape could perhaps have been raised had some tell tale injuries been detected on Mukhtiar Kaur's person but the two injuries other than the gun shot wounds i.e. injury No. 3 being on the left pinn and No. 4 an abrasion near the right eye do not indicate an attempt to rape or the commission of rape. It is also significant that the investigators had made no attempt whatsoever to have the appellant medically examined to ascertain his capacity to perform sexual intercourse. The State counsel relying on the statement of PW 14 Inspector Harjinder Pal Singh has however submitted that the examination had not been possible as the appellant had received a very serious gun shot injury and was hanging between life and death. The submission of the counsel that an examination could not have been carried out immediately is agreeable but there is no justification in the omission of the prosecution to have him examined after he had recovered his health and been discharged from hospital. Even assuming for a moment that sexual intercourse between the two had indeed taken place it cannot be said from the evidence before us that it was without the consent or against the wishes of Mukhtiar Kaur. Ujjagar Singh's conviction under Section 376 of the IPC cannot be sustained. Ujjagar Singh v. State of Punjab, (2007) 13 SCC 90 : 2008 CrLJ 808 : 2007 (13) SCR 653 : 2008 Crimes 31 (SC).

CONSENT FOR INVESTIGATION

[8883] ● Consent for investigation.—It has been accepted by counsel for all the parties including the Solicitor General while S.6 of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946 would require the consent of the State Government before jurisdiction under S.5 of that Act is exercised by the officers of that establishment, when a direction is given by the Court in an appropriate case, consent envisaged under S.6 of the Act would not be a condition precedent to compliance with the Court's direction. In our considered opinion S.6 of the Act does not apply when the Court gives direction to the CBI to conduct an investigation and counsel for the parties rightly did not dispute this position. State of West Bengal v. Sampat Lal, AIR 1985 SC 195 : (1985) 1 SCC 317 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 62 : 1985 CrLJ 516 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 7 : (1985) 1 Crimes 86.

[8884] ● Investigation entrusted to CBI with consent of State Govt. concerned.—Indeed the question that falls for our determination is altogether different : and that is, when the investigation into an offence is transferred and entrusted to CBI for investigation pursuant to consent given under Section 6 of the Act and the CBI has not only started but completed the investigation armed with that consent and submitted its report under Section 173 (2) of the Code can the State Government withdraw the consent and, if so, what is the effect thereof.

That the Government of Kerala was also conscious of this position is evident from the fact that though initially it stated in the Explanatory Note of their notification dated June 27, 1996 that the consent was being withdrawn in public interest to order a re-investigation of the case by a special team of State police officers, in the amendatory notification it made it clear that they wanted a further investigation of the case instead of 're-investigation of the case'. The dictionary meaning of 'further' (when used as an adjective) is 'additional', more supplemental. 'Further' investigation therefore is the continuation of the earlier investigation and not a fresh investigation or re-investigation to be started ab initio wiping out the earlier investigation altogether. In drawing this conclusion we have also drawn inspiration from the fact that sub-section (8) clearly envisages that on completion of further investigation the investigating agency has to forward to the Magistrate a 'further' report or reports—and not fresh report or reports—regarding the 'further' evidence obtained during such investigation. Once it is accepted—and it has got to be accepted in view of the judgment in Kazi Lhendup Dorji, (1994 AIR SCW 2190) that an investigation undertaken by CBI pursuant to a consent granted under Section 6 of the Act is to be completed, notwithstanding withdrawal of the consent, and that 'further investigation' is a continuation of such investigation which culminates in a further police report under sub-section (8) of Section 173, it necessarily means that withdrawal of consent in the instant case would not entitle the State police, to further investigate into the case. To put it differently, if any further investigation is to be made it is the CBI alone which can do so, for it was entrusted to investigate into the case by the State Government. Resultantly, the notification issued withdrawing the consent to enable the State Police to further investigate into the case is patently invalid and unsustainable in law. In view of this finding of ours we need not go into the question, whether Section 21 of the General Clauses Act applies to the consent given under Section 6 of Act and whether consent given for investigating into Crime No. 246/94 was redundant in view of the general consent earlier given by the State of Kerala.

Even if we were to hold that the State Government had the requisite power and authority to issue the impugned notification, still the same would be liable to be quashed on the ground of mala fide exercise of power. K. Chandrasekhar v. State of Kerala, AIR 1998 SC 2001 (2007, 2009) : (1998) 5 SCC 223 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1291 : 1998 CrLJ 2897 : 1998 (2) Crimes 300.

CONSENT FOR PROSECUTION

[8885] ● Consent for prosecution.—As the language of Section 196 - A of the Code of CrPC stands there is no bar at all against the power of Chief Presidency Magistrate to consent to the initiation of proceedings being exercised on an application made by any person whatsoever, whether or not he is connected with the official machinery normally burdened with the duty of initiating prosecutions. It is no doubt true that the consent to be given has to follow a consideration of all the material facts of the case, but then the status of the person who supplies such facts is not relevant. If the legislature had intended to restrict the accord of consent under Section 196-A of the Code to cases in which application had been made by persons authorised in a particular manner, the exercise of the power would surely have been made subject to such a condition in specific terms. Holding that no application was at all needed for the accord of consent provided for in the section and that in any case such an application need not have been made by a person authorized. S.N. Banerjee v. Babu Lal Gupta, AIR 1979 SC 1526 (1527-1528) : (1979) 2 SCC 390 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 507 : 1979 CrLJ 950 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 8 : 1980 UJ (SC) 258.

[8886] ● Consent given under Section 20 of PFA Act when not proper.—In this case the respondents were convicted by the trial Court for offences under Section 16(1)(a)(1) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954. The Appellate Court set aside the conviction solely on the ground that the written consent given under Section 20 of the said Act for their prosecution was not proper as the authority concerned did not give reason therefor. In recording such finding the Appellate Court relied upon the judgment of this Court in. A.K. Roy v. State of Punjab, AIR 1986 SC 2160 : (1986) 4 SCC 326 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 443 : 1986 CrLJ 2037.

[8887] ● Person authorised to institute complaint could give consent for prosecution.—A complaint under S.20 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 could be instituted apart from Central or State Government, by a person authorised in that behalf. Such a person who is authorised to institute complaint could "give his written consent for the prosecution by the Food Inspector", A.K. Roy, Chief Medical Officer, Chandigarh undisputedly, and as is clear from Notification No. 5210-UTF-4-67/9461 issued on 29th April, 1967 by the Chandigarh Administration in exercise of powers conferred by sub-s. (1) of Section 20 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, was a person authorised to institute a complaint. Therefore, he could give his consent as well for launching of prosecution. In doing so he was neither delegating his power nor acting contrary to S.20. He was acting within the scope of authority as a person authorised to institute complaint under S.20 (1) of the Act and has been placed at par with other authorities designated in the sub-section for purposes of granting consent. Food Inspector, Health Dept., U.T. Chandigarh v. Krishna Dhaba, AIR 1994 SC 664 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 172 : 1994 CrLJ 624.

[8888] ● Prosecution after consent by AG of India.—After obtaining consent of the Attorney General of India, Mr. K. Parasaran (respondent no. 1 herein) under S.26 (2) of the Atomic Energy Act, 1962 and authorization from the Chief Vigilance Officer of the Department of Atomic Energy, Mr. S.K. Bhandarkar (respondent No. 2 herein) for proceeding against the applicant and prosecuting him for the various offences alleged against him, he was committed by the learned committing Magistrate to stand his trial in Court of Session. In the instant case, the applicant, a retired captain in Navy was detained while on his way to foreign country. He was charged for carrying atomic and defence secrets with him. He was prosecuted after consent by Attorney-General of India and authorisation by Department of Atomic Energy.

By no stretch of imagination, on the basis of the allegations made in this application, can it be said that either respondent No. 1 or respondent No. 2 had fabricated "false evidence" or had given "false evidence" while giving "consent" and "authorisation" as required by law for the prosecution of the applicant is discharge of their official duties. A bare look at Ss. 191, 192 and 193, IPC would show that the said provisions have no application to the case. Neither respondent No. 1 nor respondent No. 2 can be said to have given "false" evidence while giving the "consent" and "authorisation" unless the expressions "false" and "fabricated" are used as an 'abuse' rather than in the legal sense as defined in Section 191/192, IPC. How the applicant can allege that the recording of "satisfaction" by the Attorney General was a "false statement" defies logic and sense. The accusation is reckless and bereft of any factual foundation. Buddhi Kota Subbarao (Dr.) v. K. Parasaran, AIR 1996 SC 2687 (2690) : (1996) 5 SCC 530 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1038 : 1996 CrLJ 3983 : 1996 CrLR (SC) 3983.

[8889] ● Order granting consent fulfilling all requirements of Section 20 PFA Act.—Wherein it has been observed that the consenting authority can give its consent in writing on being satisfied that a prima facie case exists in the facts of a particular case and on recording reason for the launching of such prosecution in public interest.

To ascertain whether the orders granting consent were proper or not we called for and looked into the relevant orders. Our such exercise persuades us to hold that the appellate Court and for that matter, the High Court were not justified in concluding that the consent was not proper. The orders show that the Joint Commissioner, Food and Drug Pune Division (the consulting authority) had gone through the relevant records of the cases including the reports of the Public Analyst and he specifically recorded therein that the prosecutions against the appellants were called for the alleged offences committed. The orders granting consent fulfil all the requirements of Section 20 of the Act. State of Maharashtra v. Gopalprasad, Govindprasad Agarwal, AIR 1999 SC 1507 : (1998) 9 SCC 274 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1003 (1003, 1004) : 1999 CrLJ 468.

[8890] ● Consent for trial for offences under Section 7 of Explosive Substances Act.—The consent for the prosecution of the respondent was granted by the Additional District Magistrate of the district concerned and, in this behalf, reliance was placed, on behalf of the appellant, upon a notification dated 24th April, 1995 issued by the appellant whereunder it appointed the Joint Collector and Executive Magistrate as Additional District Magistrate for the District of Gwalior and directed that he should "exercise powers of District Magistrate conferred under the said Code (Criminal Procedure Code) or under any other law for the time being in force."

The power of giving consent under Section 7 of the Explosive Substances Act 1908, rests with the Central Government. The Central Government has delegated it to the District Magistrate. It is in our view not competent for the State Government to further delegate to the Additional District Magistrate a power of the Central Government which the Central Government has delegated to the District Magistrate. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Bhupendra Singh, AIR 2000 SC 679 : (2000) 1 SCC 555 : 2000 CrLJ 805 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 152 : JT 2000 (1) SC 82.

[8891] ● Fresh consent to institute prosecution and recommence proceedings not required—When.—The stage at which the prosecution proceedings reached in the trial Court was the receipt of the certificate from the Director of the Central Food Laboratory holding that there is no Kesari dal in the sample, nevertheless the sample is adulterated inasmuch as it contained synthetic coal-tar dye. When the certificate superseded the report of the Public Analyst the latter stands sunk to the bottom and in that place the certificate alone would remain on the surface of the evidence and hence that certificate alone can be considered as for the facts stated therein regarding the sample concerned. Thus the real contention posed is whether a fresh consent of the authority concerned is required when the said certificate has taken the place of the report of the Public Analyst.

What is intended by Section 216(5), CrPC is that a prosecution which requires previous sanction, cannot be started with out such sanction even by way of amending the charge midway through the trial. If the amended charge includes a new offence for which previous sanction is necessary then prosecution for such new offence cannot be started without such sanction. However the second limb of the sub-section makes it clear that if sanction was already obtained for prosecution of the same facts, as those on which the new or altered charge is founded then no fresh sanction is necessary.

The facts on which prosecution is founded under the Act were broadly that the accused had sold adulterated toor dal to the Food Inspector. Variation regarding the reasons or the data by which two different analysts had reached the conclusion that the sample is adulterated is not sufficient to hold that the basic facts on which the prosecution is founded, have been altered. Hence, Section 216(5) of the CrPC would not improve the position of the accused for the purpose of obtaining fresh consent on the facts of this case.

If the prosecution has been validly instituted, neither any new data nor any added reasons contained in the certificate issued by the Director of the Central Food Laboratory would be sufficient to annul the sanction already obtained with which the prosecution was already instituted. The trial has to proceed with the certificate on record which superseded the report of the Public Analyst. Food Inspector, Ernakulam v. P.S. Sreenivasa Shenoy, AIR 2000 SC 2577 : (2000) 6 SCC 348 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1116 (1122, 1126) : 2000 CrLJ 3498 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 608.

[8892] ● Consent or sanction as envisaged by Section 470(3), CrPC not required for filing complaint.—Sub-section (3) of Section 13 provides that cognizance of offence under the Official Secrets Act can be taken only upon complaint which is (a) filed by order of appropriate Government; or (b) filed under authority from the appropriate Government; or (c) by some officer empowered by the appropriate Government. No consent or sanction of the Government or any authority, as contemplated by Explanation to sub-section (3) of Section 470, CrPC is required for filing the complaint under the Act. "Consent" or "sanction" envisaged under S.470, CrPC cannot be equated with the "order" or "authority" for the purposes of filing the complaint as envisaged by sub-s. (3) of Section 13 of the Act. Specific provisions have been made in various statutes requiring previous consent or sanction for the purposes of launching of prosecution against the accused under those enactments. Explanation to sub-section (3) of Section 474, CrPC obviously refers to such consents and sanctions and not the order or authority as required under the Act. Rakesh Kumar Jain v. State, AIR 2000 SC 2754 (2756) : (2000) 7 SCC 656 : 2000 CrLJ 3973 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 649.

CONSENT FOR WITHDRAWAL FROM PROSECUTION

[8893] ● Consent for withdrawal from prosecution.—In this case, on an application made by the Public Prosecutor under Section 494, CrPC for withdrawal from the prosecution of a case under Section 302, Penal Code, pending at the committal stage in a Magistrate's Court, the Magistrate had consented to the withdrawal and had discharged the accused. On an application in revision made by the relatives of the deceased, the High Court set aside the order of discharge and sent the case back with a direction that evidence be recorded to see whether a prima facie case was established against the accused.

On appeal by special leave under Article 136, the Supreme Court held that the High Court had erred in the exercise of its powers of revision as the order of the Magistrate consenting to the withdrawal and discharging the accused was in no way illegal or improper, and that therefore it was a fit case for interference. The order of the High Court was set aside, and the order of discharge made in favour of the accused was restored. State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, AIR 1957 SC 389 : 1957 CrLJ 567 : 1957 SCA 350 : 1957 SCR 279 : 1957 SCJ 336 : ILR 36 Pat 513 : 1957 BLJR 406 : 1957 1 MLJ (Cri) 247 : 1957 MPC 420 : 1957 AWR (HC) 430 : 1957 ALJ 609.

CONSERVATION OF FOREIGN EXCHANGE AND PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING ACTIVITIES ACT, 1974

[8894] ● Conservation of foreign exchange and prevention of smuggling activities Act, 1974.—There is nothing in the scheme of Article 22 or the provisions of the COFEPOSA which requires that the representation ought always to be considered by the appropriate Government notwithstanding the fact that the order of detention has been made by an officer specially empowered in that behalf. Undoubtedly the power to revoke the detention order under Section 11 is conferred on the State Government and the Central Government whenever an order of detention is made by an officer of the State Government but that does not imply that the initial representation which a detenu has a right to make after the grounds of detention are furnished to him, must of necessity be made and considered by the State Government.

In fact, the representation can and ought to be made to the detaining authority because it is he who has to apply his mind to the facts of the case and it is he who has furnished the grounds of detention on which he has acted and it is he who has to be convinced that the action taken by him is unjustified and requires reconsideration. After all the purpose of a representation is to convince the authority to consider its decision which has resulted in the detention of the detenu. The representation is not in the form of an appeal to the higher authority and, therefore, ipso facto it must go to the State Government undoubtedly it would be open to the detenue to make a representation under Section 11 requesting either the State Government or the Central Government, as the case may be, to revoke the order of detention. But the initial representation that a detenu has a right to make on receipt of the grounds of detention would ordinarily be addressed to the detaining authority because it is that authority which has taken a decision adverse to the detenu and which has to be persuaded to reconsider the same. Therefore, if the detenu made the representation to the third respondent who has passed the detention order it was open to him to consider the same and after applying his mind to accept or reject the same. The failure to submit the representation addressed to the detaining authority and considered by him, to the State Government, would not vitiate the detention order. Pushpa v. Union of India, AIR 1979 SC 1953 : 1980 Supp SCC 391 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 1015 (1018, 1020) : 1979 CrLJ 1314 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 472.

[8895] ● Section 3 of Conservation of Foreign Exchange and prevention of Smuggling Activities Act—Scope and object.—There is, no doubt, a distinction between an act of smuggling and abetting the smuggling of goods for purposes of preventive detention under Section 3(1) of the Act. Nonetheless, the term "smuggling" as defined in Section 2(e) of the Act has the same meaning as in Section 2(39) of the Customs Act, 1962, which, when read with Section 111 of that Act, is wide enough to include and make liable not only the actual smuggler but also persons abetting the smuggling of contraband goods as well as all persons dealing in such goods etc. Though the provisions of Clauses (i) and (ii) of sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Act may operate on different fields, which may sometimes, as here, overlap still a wider meaning is given to the term 'smuggling' in Section 2 (e) of the Act, with a view to broaden the scope of preventive detention. Sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Act provides for the different grounds of detention. Clause (ii) relates to abetting the smuggling of goods, clause (iii) relates to engaging in transporting or concealing or keeping smuggled goods. Clause (v) relates to harbouring persons engaged in smuggling goods or in abetting the smuggling of goods. It must, therefore, be assumed that the intention of the legislature was to treat the smuggling of goods and abetting the smuggling of goods as grounds separate and distinct, and both are separate grounds for detention i.e., to take in all such activities which result in accomplishment of smuggling of contraband goods. Narendra v. B.B. Gujral, AIR 1979 SC 420 : (1979) 2 SCC 637 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 296 (565, 566) : 1979 CrLJ 469 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 50.

[8896] ● Appellant actual smugglers—Not more abettor.—The appellant instigated, organized and facilitated the smuggling of the contraband goods in question. Not only that but he is really the person to whom the goods belonged. The appellant went to the extent of going to Dubai for purchasing the contraband goods, had, thereafter taken delivery of the same at Dubai and had them loaded into the vessel; the vessel actually belonged to the appellant and the crew members were engaged by his agent who was sent from Bombay to Dubai to bring the vessel. During his period of stay at Dubai he purchased 20 rolls of stainless steel sheets worth Rs 20 lacs, only 12 rolls of stainless steel sheets could be loaded in the vessel. During a search of the house of Kunj Mohmed, in whose name the vessel was registered, certain documents relating to the repairs of the vessel and a diary containing telephone numbers of the appellants and one postal receipt showing booking of a trunk call to appellant were recovered. It is quite clear from the facts set out in the grounds of detention that the appellant was the person who was actually engaged in the act of smuggling of the contraband stainless steel rolls into the Indian customs waters. It is, therefore, clear that for all intents and purposes the appellant was the actual smugglers and not a mere abettor. Furthermore, the activities of the appellant were such that his case would be covered by both clauses (i) and (ii) of Section 3(1) of the Act. Narendra Purshotam Umrao v. B.B. Gujral, AIR 1979 SC 420 : (1979) 2 SCC 637 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 557 : 1979 CrLJ 469 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 50 : (1979) 2 SCR 315.

[8897] ● Preventive detention—Grounds of detention to be communicated to detenu.—Clause (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution makes it obligatory for the authority making an order of preventive detention to communicate to the detnue, as soon as may be, the grounds on which the order has been made and should afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order. This right to make a representation imposes a corresponding duty on the detaining authority to consider the representation because the representation may furnish such information as may necessitate revocation of the detention order as contemplated by Section 11 of the COFEPOSA. Section 11 confers power for revocation of detention orders. The obligation to furnish grounds for preventive detention and the constitutional rights conferred on the detenu to make a representation on receipt of the grounds of detention when read in the context of Section 11 would spell out a scheme that the representation, if and when made, may furnish such information to the detaining authority which may necessitate revocation of the detention order. Therefore, the importance of the constitutional right to make a representation and the corresponding duty to consider the representation cannot be underestimated and should not be whittled down. Pushpa v. Union of India, AIR 1979 SC 1953 : 1980 Supp SCC 391 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 1015 (1018) : 1979 CrLJ 1314 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 472.

[8898] ● Detention order—Grounds containing elaborate statement of facts—Application of mind by detaining authority.—The ordinary criminal process is not to be circumvented or short-circuited by ready resort to preventive detention. But, the possibility of launching a criminal prosecution is not an absolute bar to an order of preventive detention. Nor is it correct to say that if such possibility is not present to the mind of the detaining authority the order of detention is necessarily bad. However, the failure of the detaining authority to consider the possibility of launching a criminal prosecution may in the circumstances of a case, lead to the conclusion that the detaining authority had not applied its mind to the vital question whether it was necessary to make an order of preventive detention. Where an express allegation is made that the order of detention was issued in a mechanical fashion without keeping present to its mind the question whether it was necessary to make such an order when an ordinary criminal prosecution could well serve the purpose, the detaining authority must satisfy the Court that question too was born in mind before the order of detention was made. If the detaining authority fails to satisfy the Court that the detaining authority so borne the question in mind the Court would be justified in drawing the inference that there was no application of the mind by the detaining authority to the vital question whether it was necessary to preventively detain the detenu. Kanchanlal Maneklal Chokshi v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1979 SC 1945 : (1979) 4 SCC 14 : 1979 CrLJ 1306 (SC).

[8899] ● Representation by detenu—Consideration of.—When a citizen is deprived of his liberty and grounds of detention are furnished to him his representation must be examined as expeditiously as possible, but there is no hard and fast rule as to the measure of time taken by the authority for consideration of the representation. However, the Government should be vigilant in the governance of citizens. Pushpa v. Union of India, AIR 1979 SC 1953 : 1980 Supp SCC 391 : 1979 CrLJ 1314.

[8900] ● Grounds couched in language not known to detenu—Duty of authority to explain them to detenu.—In cases where the detaining authority is satisfied that the grounds are couched in a language explained to the detenue, it must see to it that the grounds are explained to the detenue, a translated script is given to him and the grounds bear some sort of a certificate to show that the grounds have been explained to the detenue in the language which he understands. In the instant case a specific ground was taken that the detenue does not know English, the grounds of detention and the order of detention were in English. No vernacular translation of the grounds was given nor they were explained to the detenue in a language known to him.

The allegation seems to have been denied by the respondents, in the affidavit of Mr. P.M. Shah on behalf of the detaining authority. It was averred in para 5 that one Mr. A.K. Sharma, Police inspector C.I.D. had explained to detenue the order of detention and the grounds communicated to him. This affidavit is wholly inadmissible in evidence. If it was a fact that Mr. Sharma had personally explained the grounds to the detenue then the respondent should have filed an affidavit of Mr. Sharma himself to show that he had actually explained the contents of the grounds to the detenue by translating the same in the language which he understands. No such affidavit is forthcoming. No contemporaneous record has been produced to show that Mr. Sharma had actually explained or translated the grounds to the detenue, where the grounds are couched in a language which is not known to the detenue, unless the contents of the grounds are fully explained and translated to the detenue it will tantamount to not serving the grounds of detention to the detenue and would thus vitiate the detention ex facie. Razia Umar Bakshi v. Union of India, AIR 1980 SC 1751 : 1980 Supp SCC 195 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 846 (847) : 1980 CrLR (SC) 502.

[8901] ● Power of Central Govt. to revoke order of detention.—The Central Government is empowered of revoke the order of detention at any stage. The power conferred on the Central Government by Section 11 is wide enough to enable the Central Government to revoke the detention order at any stage for the words used are "a detention order may at any time be revoked or modified". The power of the Central Government to revoke the order of detention implies that the detenue can make a representation for exercise of that power. Any petition for revocation of an order of detention should be dealt with reasonable expedition. It is clear that a representation properly addressed by the detenue to the Central Government was not forwarded to the Central Government and as such no action had been taken up to date. It may be permissible for the Central Government to take reasonable time for disposing any revocation petition. But it would not be justified in ignoring the representation for revocation of the detention as a statutory duty is cast upon the Central Government. It is necessary that the Government should apply its mind and either revoke the order of detention or dismiss the petition, declining to order for revocation. Shyam Ambalal Siroya v. Union of India, AIR 1980 SC 789 : (1980) 2 SCC 346 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 447 (449, 450) : 1980 CrLJ 555 : 1980 UJ (SC) 372.

[8902] ● Order of detention—When not vitiated.—The Parliament enacted Section 5-A to make it clear that even if one of the grounds is irrelevant but the other grounds are clear and specific that by itself would not vitiate the order of detention. State of Gujarat v. Chamanlal, AIR 1981 SC 1480 : (1981) 2 SCC 24 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 311 : 1982 SCC Cr R 290 : 1981 CrLJ 1042.

[8903] ● Detention under Section 3 of conservation of Foreign Exchange only for purpose of preventing smuggling.—The detention under Section 3 of the Act is only for the purpose of preventing smuggling and all the grounds, whether there are one or more, would be relatable only by various activities of smuggling and one cannot conceive of any other separate ground which could deal with matters other than smuggling because the act of smuggling covers several activities each forming a separate ground of detention and the Act deals with no other act except smuggling. What the Act provides is that where there are a number of grounds of detention covering various activities of the detenu spreading over a period or periods, each activity is a separate ground by itself and if one of the grounds is irrelevant, vague or unspecific then that will not vitiate the order of detention. Section 5-A has been enacted to make it clear that even if one of the grounds is irrelevant but the other grounds are clear and specific that by itself would not vitiate the order of detention. State of Gujarat v. Chamanlal, AIR 1981 SC 1480 : (1981) 2 SCC 24 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 311 : 1981 CrLJ 1042 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 314.

[8904] ● Requirement of Section 8, IPC and Conservation of Foreign Exchange Act—When complied with.—Where requirement of Section 8 (f) has been complied with, it can be said that decision to confirm order of detention and continue detenu's detention taken by State Government and hence continuance of detention valid. Masuma v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 1753 : (1981) 3 SCC 566 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 750 : 1981 CrLJ 1256.

[8905] ● Period of one or two years to run from date of actual detention.—The period of one or two years, as the case may be, as mentioned in Section 10 of the Act will run from the date of his actual detention, and not from the date of the order of detention. State of Gujarat v. Adam Kasam Bhaya, AIR 1981 SC 2005 : (1981) 4 SCC 216 : 1981 CrLJ 1686 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 541.

[8907] ● Detenu when deprived opportunity of making representation.—The detenu was arrested under Section 3(1) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 on 29th October, 1980 when the grounds of detention were served on him, but some documents relied upon in the order of detention were not supplied to the detenu as part of the grounds alongwith them. On the other hand the documents were supplied to the detenu in three instalments on 8-11-1980, 17-11-1980 and 20-12-1980. Thus, the detenu was deprived of the opportunity of making an effective representation as held by the Supreme Court. It is manifest that the order of detention is rendered void. Taramati Chandulal Sejpal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 871 : (1981) 2 SCC 17 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 314 : 1981 CrLJ 445 : 1981CrLR (SC) 318 : 1981 UJ 146.

[8908] ● Representation of detenu to be considered with utmost expedition.—Undoubtedly, the representation made by the detenu has to be considered by the detaining authority with the utmost expedition, but the time imperative can never be absolute or obsessive. The occasional observation made by the Supreme Court that each day's delay in dealing with the representation must be adequately explained are meant to emphasise the expedition with which the representation must be considered and not that it is a magical formula, the slightest breach of which must result in the release of the detenu. Law deals with the facts of life. In law, as in life, there are no invariable absolutes. Neither life nor law can be reduced to make but despotic formulae. Considered in that light it cannot be said that there was any unreasonable delay in the present case in the disposal of the representation by the detaining authority. L.M.S. Ummu Saleema Mst. v. B.B. Gujaral, AIR 1981 SC 1191 : (1981) 3 SCC 317 : 1981 CrLJ 889 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 587 : 1983 (53) CC 312 : 1981 CAR 270 : 1981 UJ 487 : 1981 (1) Scale 843.

[8909] ● No non-application of mind by detaining authority to representation.—There is no merit in the submission that the detaining authority did not apply his mind to the representation. It was argued that the representation made express reference to the retraction and yet the detaining authority did not enquire or send for retraction which admittedly was not available with him. The Court already found that no letter of retraction was sent to the Assistant Collector of Customs. A perusal of the note filed shows that the detaining authority also considered the question whether the alleged letter of retraction was posted. In the circumstances it is not possible to hold that there was non-application of mind by the detaining authority. L.M.S. Ummu Saleema Mst. v. B.B. Gujaral, AIR 1981 SC 1191 : (1981) 3 SCC 317 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 720 : 1981 CrLJ 889 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 587 : 1983 (53) CC 312 : 1981 CAR 270 : 1981 UJ 487 : 1981 (1) Scale 843.

[8910] ● State Govt. not guilty of unreasonable delay.—The Customs Authority did not have more than four or five days within which to give their comments in regard to the various allegations contained in the representation of the detenu and this time taken by Customs Authorities cannot be regarded as unreasonable. In these circumstances, the State Government could not be said to be guilty of any unreasonable delay. Masuma v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 1753 : (1981) 3 SCC 566 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 750 : 1981 CrLJ 1256.

[8911] ● Representation by detenu be considered within reasonable time.—The manner in which the representation made by the appellant has been dealt with reveals a sorry state of affairs in the matter of consideration of representation made by persons detained without trial. It is the duty of the State to proceed to determine representations with the utmost expedition, which means that the matter must be taken up for consideration as soon as such a representation is received and dealt with continuously until a final decision is taken and communicated to the detenu. This not having been done in the present case the Court has no option but to declare the detention unconstitutional. Harish Palwa v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1981 SC 1126 : (1981) 2 SCC 710 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 589 : 1981 CrLJ 750 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 384.

[8912] ● Unreasonable delay in supplying copies of documents.—Unreasonable delay of more than 3 weeks in supplying detenu with copies of those basic documents had infringed this constitutional imperative and had stultified and impeded his constitutional right to make a speedy and effective representation. Held, detenu directed by Court to be released. Suryakant v. State of Maharashtra, (1981) 2 SCC 202 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 408.

[8913] ● Representation rejected not by Home Minister but by Secretary.—The representation made by the detenu was rejected not by Home Minister but by the Secty., thus representation has been rejected by an authority which had no jurisdiction at all to consider or pass any orders on the representation of the detenu. This, therefore, renders the continued detention of the petitioner void. Kirit Kumar v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 1621 : (1981) 2 SCC 436 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 471 : 1981 CrLJ 1267 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 263.

[8914] ● Documents referred to in grounds neither considered by Detaining Authority nor copies supplied.—Whether the documents concerned are referred to, relied upon or taken into consideration by the detaining authority they have to be supplied to the detenu as part of the ground so as to enable that detenu to make an effective representation immediately on receiving the grounds of detention. This not having been done in the present case the continued detention of the petitioner must be held to be void. Kirit Kumar v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 1621 : (1981) 2 SCC 436 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 471 : 1981 CrLJ 1267 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 263.

[8915] ● Right of detenu to have interview with lawyer and family members.—Law of preventive detention has to pass the test not only of Article 22 but also of Article 21 and if the constitutional validity of any such law is challenged the Court would have to decide whether the procedure laid down by such law for depriving a person of his personal liberty is reasonable, fair and just. Prisoner or detenu would be entitled to have interviews with the members of his family and friends and no prison regulation or procedure laid down by prison regulation, regulating the right to have interviews with members of family and friends can be upheld as constitutionally valid under Articles 14 and 21, unless it is reasonable, fair and just. Hence Clause 3 (b) (ii) of the Conditions of Detention Order, which restricts the interview only to one in a month in the case of a detenu cannot be regarded as reasonable and non-arbitrary, particularly when a detenu stands on a higher pedestal than an under-trial prisoner or a convict for whom Rule 559-A and Rule 550 of the Rules set out in the Manual for the Superintendence and Management of Jails in the Punjab provide facility of interviews with relatives and friends twice in a week. Francis Coralie v. Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1981 SC 746 : (1981) 1 SCC 608 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 212 : 1981 CrLJ 306 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 437 : (1981) 19 DLT 271 : (1981) CrAppR (SC) 112 : (1981) 2 SCJ 18 : 1981 MLJ (Cri) 331 : (1981) 2 SCR 516.

[8916] ● Right of detenu to have interview with legal Advisor of his choice.—Clause 3(b)(i) of the Conditions of Detention Order regulating the right of a detenu to have interview with a legal adviser of his choice is violative of Articles 14 and 21 because it prescribes that a detenu can have interview with a legal adviser only after obtaining prior permission of the District Magistrate, Delhi and the interview has to take place in the presence of an Officer of Customs/ Central Excise/Enforcement to be nominated by the local Collector of Customs/Central Excise or Deputy Director of Enforcement who has sponsored the case for detention. Francis Coralie v. Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1981 SC 746 : (1981) 1 SCC 608 : 1981 CrLJ 306 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 437.

[8917] ● Copies of documents or grounds of detention when not furnished.—If the copies of the documents, or some of the documents, of the grounds of detention, are not furnished to the detenu within five or fifteen days, as the case may be, the continued detention of the detenu would be rendered illegal both on the grounds of violation of Article 22(5) as also on the ground of breach of requirement of Section 3(3). Lallubhai Jagibhai Patel v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 728 : (1981) 2 SCC 427 : 1981 CrLJ 286 : 1982 SCCr R 55

[8918] ● Grounds if verbally explained to detenu.—In the circumstances, that it was not a sufficient compliance of Article 22 (5) of the Constitution of India. If the "grounds" are only verbally explained to the detenu and nothing in writing left with him in a language which he understands, then that purpose is not served and the constitutional mandate in Article 22 (5) is infringed. Lallubhai Jagibhai Patel v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 728 : (1981) 2 SCC 427 : 1981 CrLJ 286 : 1982 SCCr R 55.

[8919] ● Section 5-A of COFEPOSA Act come into operation when.—Section 5-A will come into operation after the communication of grounds and following constitutional safeguards and it will have no application if the grounds themselves are not communicated otherwise the constitutional safeguards guaranteed under Article 22(5) of the Constitution will have no meaning. Masuma v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 1753 : (1981) 3 SCC 566 : 1981 CrLJ 1256 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 44 : (1982) 1 SCR 288 : 1982 Mad LJ (Cri) 140 (SC).

[8920] ● No material to displace correctness of recital in order.—When no material placed before the Court by detenu to displace correctness of recital in order, the order confirming detention must be said to be made by State Government. Masuma v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 1753 : (1981) 3 SCC 566 : 1981 CrLJ 1256 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 44 : (1982) 1 SCR 288 :

[8921] ● Reference to Advisory Board—Making of.—The Act of making a reference to the Advisory Board is a mechanical or ministerial act involving no exercise of discretion though, of course, the government is, at this stage, as at all other stages, at liberty to revoke the order of detention. The prescription of five weeks in Section 8(b) of the COFEPOSA Act for the making of a reference to the Advisory Board is with a view to enable the fulfilment of the constitutional requirement of Article 22(4) of the Constitution, and not with a view to imposing an obligation upon the Government to consider the question of the length of detention and arrive at a tentative conclusion even at that stage. Therefore it is not correct to say that because the reference to the Advisory Board was made by one of the subordinate officers of the Government, and not by the Government itself, the detention is not valid. Kavita v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 1641 : (1981) 3 SCC 558 : 1981 CrLJ 1262 : (1982) 1 SCR 138.

[8922] ● Detention for one year or two years from date of detention.—Section 10 of the Act mentions that the detention will be for a period of one year or two years, as the case may be, from the date of detention but not from the date of order of detention. On serving one part of period of detention, he will have to serve out the balance. State of Gujarat v. Adan Kasam Bhaya, AIR 1981 SC 2005 : (1981) 4 SCC 216 : 1981 CrLJ 1686 : 1982 SC Cr R 252 : (1982) 1 SCR 740 : 1982 UP Cr Cas (SC) 24.

[8923] ● Detenu's representation—When not considered by Central Govt.—Order of detention will be vitiated if detenu's representation is forwarded by Jailor to Central Government but not considered by Central Government. Lallubhai Jogibhai Patel v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 728 : (1981) 2 SCC 427 : 1981 CrLJ 286 : 1982 SCCr R 55.

[8924] ● No requirement in COFEPOSA Act that person making order of detention to consider representation.—There is no requirement, express or implied, in any provision of the COFEPOSA Act that the person, who acts for the State Government in making the order of detention, must also consider the representation of the detenu, Government business can never get through if the same individual has to act for the Government in every case or proceeding or transaction, however advantageous it may be to do so. Masuma v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 1753 : (1981) 3 SCC 566 : 1981 CrLJ 1256 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 44 : (1982) 1 SCR 288 : 1982 MLJ (Cri) 140 (SC).

[8925] ● Delayed despatch of representation by State Govt.—On these facts of the case that the detention is not rendered invalid by reason of delayed despatch of the representation by the State Government though delay was not explained. Satpal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1981 SC 2230 : (1982) 1 SCC 12 : (1982) SCC (Cri) 46 : 1981 CrLJ 1867 : 1982 UJ (SC) 35 : 1982 Cr AR (SC) 41.

[8926] ● Detenu not entitled to be represented by lawyer.—The section does not disentitle detenu from making a request for the services of a lawyer but it disentitles him to be represented by a lawyer. Kavita v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 1641 : (1981) 3 SCC 558 : 1981 CrLJ 1262 : (1982) 1 SCR 138.

[8927] ● No nexus between unlawful activities attributed to detenu and his incarnation.—Where there is no nexus between the unlawful activities attributed to the detenu and his incarceration and the detention is more of the character of punitive action rather than preventive set-aside. Harnek Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1982 SC 682 : (1982) 1 SCC 116 : 1982 CrLJ 420 (SC) : 1982 CrLR (SC) 26 : All Cr Cas 114 (SC).

[8928] ● Detention order—Competent authority—State Govt.—In the instant case, in the affidavit by Sri P.M. Shah, Dy. Director it has been stated that the entire record was placed before the Home Minister who "after careful consideration of the entire record has passed the impugned order of detention" and that he (Mr. Shah) "only authenticated the impugned order of detention in accordance with sub-clause (2) of Art. 166 of the Constitution of India. As the order has been taken in the name of the Governor of Gujarat and validly authenticated by the Deputy Secretary concerned, the order tantamounts to an order by the State Government of Gujarat. It, therefore, cannot be said that the order of detention was not passed by the competent authority. State of Gujarat v. Mohd. Ismail Juma, AIR 1982 SC 683 : (1981) 4 SCC 609 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 1 (4) : 1982 CrLJ 421 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 654.

[8929] ● Reference to Advisory Board—Making of.—Section 8 (b) making provisions for reference to the Advisory Board, is not confined to cases where the detaining authority has already come to a decision that the detention shall be continued for a period longer than three months. It equally applies where the detaining authority has not yet made up its mind as to how long the detention shall continue or even where the detention is to continue for a period of three months or less. Hemlata v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1982 SC 8 : (1981) 4 SCC 647 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 16 : 1982 CrLJ 150 : (1982) 1 SCR 1028.

[8930] ● Defence not entitled to be heard personally nor through lawyer.—A friend or an agent who in truth and substance, is a friend, or an agent, of the detenu may appear for the detenu but if such a friend or agent also happens to be a legal practitioner he cannot as of right, appear before the Advisory Board on behalf of the detenu. In the absence of any right to give an oral hearing in the form of making a representation under Article 22(5) of the Constitution, the question of hearing a legal practitioner on behalf of the detenu does not arise. Devji Vallabhbhai Tandel v. Administrator of Goa, AIR 1982 SC 1029 : (1982) 2 SCC 222 : 1982 CrLJ 799 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 157.

[8931] ● No denial of right to detenu to make representation.—Advisory Board heard detenu personally. Hence Board did not permit legal representation of detenu as it was not considered necessary. In the said circumstances, that the detenu was not denied the right to make a proper and effective representation to the Advisory Board. Phillippa Anne Duke v. State of Tamilnadu, AIR 1982 SC 1178 : (1982) 2 SCC 389 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 444 : 1982 CrLJ 1389 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 298.

[8932] ● Maximum period of detention—When expired.—In view of the fact that the maximum period of detention mentioned in Section 10 of the Act has expired, the appeal had become infructuous. State of Gujarat v. Mohd. Ismail Jumma, AIR 1982 SC 683 : (1981) 4 SCC 609 : 1982 CrLJ 421 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 654.

[8933] ● Order of detention—When illegal.—When representation is rejected by authority having no authority at all to consider or pass any order on representation of detenu, the order of detention would be illegal. Kirit Kumar v. State of Gujarat, 1982 SCCr R 292.

[8934] ● Non-supply of documents and statements alongwith grounds of detention.—Non-supply of such documents and statements along with the grounds of detention amounts of a violation of the safeguard guaranteed under Article 22(5) of the Constitution, and the continued detention of the detenue would, therefore, be illegal and void and liable to be quashed. Sunil Dutt v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 53 : (1982) 3 SCC 405 : 1982 CrLJ 133.

[8935] ● Satisfaction of detaining authority not of Court.—The High Court, in its writ jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution, is to see whether the order of detention has been passed on the materials before it. If it is found that the order has been passed by the detaining authority on materials on record, then the Court cannot go further and examine whether the material was adequate or not which is the function of an appellate authority or Court. It can examine the material on record only for the purpose of seeing whether the order of detention has been passed on no material. The satisfaction, mentioned in Section 3 of the Act, is the satisfaction of the detaining authority, and not of the Court. The reason is that the satisfaction of the detaining authority is subjective. State of Gujarat v. Mohd. Ismail Juma, AIR 1982 SC 683 : (1981) 4 SCC 609 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1982 CrLJ 421 : (1982) 1 SCR 1014.

[8936] ● Order taken in name of Governor and validly authenticated by Deputy Secretary.—As the order has been taken in the name of the Governor and validly authenticated by the Deputy Secretary concerned the order tantamounts to an order by the State Government. If therefore cannot be said that the order of detention was not passed by the Competent Authority. State of Gujarat v. Mohd. Ismail Juma, AIR 1982 SC 683 : (1981) 4 SCC 609 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1982 CrLJ 421 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 654.

[8937] ● Expressions "relied on" "referred to" or "based on".—Once the documents are referred to in the grounds of detention, it becomes the bounden duty of the detaining authority to supply the same to the detenu as part of the grounds or pari passu the grounds of detention. There is no particular charm in the expressions "relied on", "referred to" or "based on" because ultimately all these expressions signify one thing, namely, that the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority has been arrived at on the documents mentioned in the grounds of detention. The question whether the grounds have been referred to, relied on, or based on is merely a matter of describing the nature of the grounds. So, even, the documents referred to in the grounds of detention, have to be furnished to the detenu. If there is undue delay in furnishing the statements and documents referred to in the grounds of detention, the right to make an effective representation is denied. Thus, it is absolutely clear that whether the documents concerned and referred to, relied on or taken into consideration by the detaining authority, they have to be supplied to the detenu as part of the grounds so as to enable the detenu to make an effective representation immediately on receiving the grounds of detention. When this has not been done, the detention is illegal. Kirit Kumar Chamanlal Kundaliya v. State of Gujarat, 1982 SCCr R 292.

[8938] ● Past acts of detenu index of his future conduct.—An inference in each case will depend on the nature of the act and the attendant circumstances. Where the detenu tried to export Indian currency to the tune of Rs. 2,88,900/- to a foreign country in a planned and pre-meditated manner by clever concealment of it in several parts of his luggage, it was held that it fully justified the detaining authority in coming to the conclusion that he might repeat his illegal act in future also and that his detention was necessary to prevent him from repeating the same in future. His past act in the circumstances might be an index of his future conduct. Saraswathi Seshagiri v. State of Kerala, AIR 1982 SC 1165 : (1982) 2 SCC 310 : 1982 CrLJ 1251 : 1982 CrLJ (SC) 252 : 1982 UJ (SC) 389.

[8939] ● Supply of copies of documents to detenu—Existence of exceptional circumstances.—It is true that neither Section 3(3) of the Act, nor Article 22(5) of the Constitution, casts any duty on the detaining authority to inform the detenu anything about the exceptional circumstances, due to which delay might occur, nor about the fact whether reasons have been recorded in writing or not. But one of the requisite safeguards is that unless exceptional circumstances really obtain in a case, the delay in the supply of ground of detention and /or the documents and statements incorporated therein by reference beyond the normal period of five days would be fatal to the continued detention of the detenu. In other words, the detenu is entitled to satisfy either the superior authority or the Advisory Board that the delay, that has occurred on the supply of requisite material to him, was not justified because exceptional circumstances did not exist or those put forward were unreal or invalid. Obviously, the detenu will not be in a position to do so if the alleged exceptional circumstances are not communicated to him. Therefore, a duty to inform the detenu about the existence of exceptional circumstances and what they were for delay in supplying grounds of detention and/or documents and statements incorporated therein arises by necessary implication and flows from the right which is conferred upon the detenu to make representation against his detention. Failure of the detaining authority in this regard constitutes a breach of the safeguards contained in Articles 22 (5), read with Section 3(3) of the Act, and vitiates the continued detention of the detenu. Ibrahim Ahmed Batti v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1982 SC 1500 : (1982) 3 SCC 440 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 465.

[8941] ● Detention under Section 3(1), COFEPOSA Act—Supreme Court quashing order of High Court—Effect.—Once the order, quashing the order of detention of the detenu, is set aside by the Supreme Court, the order of the High Court, rendering the order of detention non est, itself becomes non est and the order of detention gets life. State of Gujarat v. Mohd. Ismail Juma, AIR 1982 SC 683 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1982 CrLJ 421 (SC) : (1982) 1 SCR 1014 : 1982 SCCr R 254.

[8942] ● Document relied on by authorities not supplied with grounds of detention.—The question of demanding the documents by detenu from the detaining authority is wholly irrelevant because it is constitutional mandate which requires the detaining authority to give the documents relied on, or referred to in the order of detention pari passu the grounds of detention in order that the detenu may make an effective representation immediately, instead of waiting for the documents to be supplied with. If the accused has been seriously handicapped in making an effective representation because of the non-supply of the material documents, the detention is illegal. Mohd. Zakir v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1982 SC 696 : (1982) 3 SCC 216 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 695 : 1982 CrLJ 611 (SC).

[8943] ● Prosecution or absence of it not absolute bar to order of preventive detention.—A prosecution or the absence of it is not an absolute bar to an order of preventive detention, the authority may prosecute the offender for an isolated act or acts of an offence for violation of any criminal law, but if it is satisfied that this offender has a tendency to go on violating such laws, then there will be no bar for the State to detain him under a Preventive Detention Act in order to disable him to repeat such offences. What is required is that the detaining authority is to satisfy the Court that it had, in mind, the question whether prosecution of the offender was possible and sufficient in the circumstances of the case. In some cases of prosecution, it may not be possible to bring home the culprit to book as in the case of professional bully, a murderer or a dacoit, as witnesses do not come forward to depose against him out of fear, or in the case of international smuggling, it may not be possible to collect all necessary evidence without unreasonable delay and expenditure to prove the guilt of the offender beyond reasonable doubt. Hemlata Kantilal Shah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1982 SC 8 : (1981) 4 SCC 647 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 16 : 1982 CrLJ 150 (SC) : (1982) 2 Bom CR (SC) 218.

[8944] ● Past conduct or antecedent history of person taken into account in making detention order.—It is indeed largely from prior events showing tendencies or inclinations of a person that an inference can be drawn whether he is likely, in future, to act in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community or his act of violation of foreign exchange regulations and his smuggling activities are likely to have deleterious effect on the national economy. Hemlata Kantilal Shah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1982 SC 8 : (1981) 4 SCC 647 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 16 : 1982 CrLJ 150 (SC) : (1982) 2 Bom Cr (SC) 218.

[8945] ● Detention under Section 3(1) COFEPOSA Act—Subjective satisfaction of authority.—The authority may prosecute the offender for an isolated act or acts of an offence for violation of any criminal law; if it is satisfied that the offender has a tendency to go on violating such laws, then there will be no bar for the State to detain him under a Preventive Detention Act in order to disable him to repeat such offences. What is require is that the detaining authority is to satisfy the Court that it has in mind the question whether prosecution of the offender was possible and sufficient in the circumstances of the case. In some cases of prosecution, it may not be possible to bring home the culprit to book as in case of a professional bully, a murderer or a dacoit, as witnesses do not come forward to depose against him out of fear or in case of international smuggling it may not be possible to collect all necessary evidence without unreasonable delay and expenditure to prove the guilt of the offender beyond reasonable doubt. The past conduct or antecedent history of a person can appropriately be taken into account in making inclinations of a person, that an inference can be drawn whether he is likely in the future to act in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community or his act of violation of foreign exchange regulations and his smuggling activities are likely to have deleterious effect on the national economy. So, when the Legislature has authorized the detaining authority to arrive at a subjective satisfaction for making the order of detention, it is not for the Court to question whether the grounds given in the order are sufficient or not for the subjective satisfaction of the authority. Saraswathi Seshagiri v. State of Kerala, AIR 1982 SC 1165 : (1982) 2 SCC 310 : 1982 CrLJ 1251 : 1982 UJ (SC) 389 : 1982 All Cr Cas 179.

[8946] ● Non-supply of copies of documents and material in support of grounds of detention.—It is true the under sub-section (3) of Section 3 of the COFEPOSA Act, it is provided that for the purpose of Article 22(5) of the Constitution, the communication, to a person detained in pursuance of the detention order, of the grounds, on which the order has been made, shall be made as soon as may be after the detention, but ordinarily not later than five days, and in exceptional circumstances and for reasons to be recorded in writing, not later than fifteen days, from the date of detention. This provision, under which five days' period in normal circumstances and fifteen days' period in exceptional circumstances, had been provided, relates to the supply for communication of the grounds, on which the order of detention has been made to the detenu. It has no reference to the documents and material on the basis of which the detention order has been made and it is quite clear that there is no reason why the documents and materials in support of the grounds, on the basis of which the detention order has been made, the same being ex hypothest in existence at the time of issuance of the detention order and framing of the grounds, should not be supplied to the detenu along with the grounds. Non-supply of such materials and documents, along with the grounds, clearly amounts to a violation of the safeguard guaranteed under Article 22(5) of the Constitution. Sunil Dutt v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 53 : (1982) 3 SCC 405 : 1982 CrLJ 193 (SC).

[8947] ● Failure of Jail Superintendent or State Govt. to forward detenu's representation to Central Govt.—Section II (1) of The Act confers upon the Central Government the power to revoke an order of detention even if it is made by the Central Government or its officer. That power in order to be real and effective, must imply the right in a detenue to make a representation to the central Government against the order of detention.

The failure of the Jail Superintendent or the State Government to forward the detenu's representation to the Central Government has deprived the detenu of the valuable right to have his detention revoked by that i.e., the Central Government, and, therefore, the detention of the detenu is illegal and liable to be set aside. Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1982 SC 1 : (1981) 4 SCC 481 : (1982) 1 SCR 1010 : 1982 CrLJ 146 (SC) : 1982 Bih Cr Cas (SC) 70.

[8948] ● Right of detenu to be represented by friend.—The right of a detenu to be represented by a friend, who, in truth and substance, is not a legal practitioner, cannot be disputed. If the Advisory Board has turned down the detenu's request to be represented before it through a non-lawyer educated friend without giving any reasons for rejecting the request, the continued detention of the detention is vitiated, and, therefore, the detenu is entitled to be freed forthwith. Abdul Zabbar v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1983 SC 505 : (1984) 1 SCC 443 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 106 : 1983 CrLJ 853.

[8949] ● Section 8 of COFEPOSA Act provides for Advisory Board are its procedure.—Section 8 of the COFEPOSA Act, provides for an Advisory Board and its procedure for the purpose of reviewing the detention cases. Clause (c) of Section 8 provides that the Board can call for such information as is necessary for the appropriate Government or from any person called for the purpose through the appropriate Government. Where what was done was that the Customs Officer was present before the Advisory Board with the files and documents, as directed by the Board under Section 8 (c) of the Act, and it was not the case of the detenu that they either pleaded or argued the case of the Government, it was held that there could be no question of violation of Article 14 of the Constitution. Suresh Bhojraj Chelani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1983 SC 181 : 1983 (1) SCC 382 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 202 : 1983 CrLJ 342 : 1984 SCCr R 32.

[8950] ● Maximum period of detention one year.—As contemplated by Section 10 of the Act the maximum period shall be one year, but the Government if it so thinks fit, may revoke the order of detention earlier under the proviso. It has nowhere been mentioned that the period of one year or the period lesser than one year shall have to be mentioned in the order of confirmation. The maximum Period (in this case) is one year. When no period in mentioned in an order, the implication is that the detention is for the maximum period of one year (or two years as the case may be). Detention beyond the maximum period will be illegal. Suresh Bhojraj Chelani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1983 SC 181 : (1983) 1 SCC 382 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 202 (206) : 1983 CrLJ 342 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 128.

[8951] ● Non-supply of documents not substitute for copies of documents.—The explanation for the non-supply of the documents cannot be a substitute for the copies of the documents without which the respondent could not have made any effective representation against his detention. This Court has repeatedly held in several decisions that the failure to supply copies of documents referred to and relied upon in the grounds of detention for the purpose of detention under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 vitiates the detention itself.

In the present case also copies of documents which were indisputably material documents and were referred to in the grounds of detention and relied upon for the purpose of detention were admittedly not supplied to the respondent.

Therefore, the detention of the respondent was bad in law and the order of detention could not be sustained and is liable to be quashed. Union of India v. Haji Mastan Mirza, AIR 1984 SC 681 : (1984) 2 SCC 427 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 271 (276, 277) : 1984 CrLJ 610 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 117 : (1984) 3 SCR 1 : (1984) 1 Crimes 651.

[8952] ● Named authorities under Section 11(1)(a) and (b) of COFEPOSA Act entitled to exercise powers of revocation.—The power conferred under clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 11 is in fact extension of the power recognised under Section 21 of the General Clauses Act and while under the General Clauses Act, the power is exercisable by the authority making the order, the named authorities under clauses (a) and (b) of Section 11 (1) of the Act are also entitled to exercise the powers of revocation. Ibrahim Bachu Bafan v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1985 SC 697 : (1985) 2 SCC 24 : 1985 CrLJ 533 at 536 (SC).

[8953] ● Order of detention where quashed by Court in exercise of extra-ordinary jurisdiction.—Court is of the view that this seems to be the legislative scheme. The pronounced judicial view of this Court was that repeated orders of detention are not to be made. Parliament while making provision in Section 11(2) of the Act, must be taken to have been aware of such view and in conferring the power of making repeated orders, safeguards have been provided under subsection (1) by confining the exercise of power to limited situations. Clothing the prescribed authority to exercise power under Section 3 even in a situation where the Court has intervened to bring about nullification of the order of detention would give rise to complicated situations and keeping the scheme of the section in view Court is of the clear opinion that where an order is quashed by a Court in exercise of extraordinary jurisdiction, the power of making a fresh order under sub-section (2) of Section 11 is not available to be exercised. Ibrahim Bachu Bafan v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1985 SC 697 : (1985) 2 SCC 24 : 1985 CrLJ 533 at 536 (SC).

[8954] ● Order of detention—Where quashed by High Court.—When the High Court exercises jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution it does not make an order of revocation. By issuing a high prerogative writ like habeas corpus of certiorari it quashes the order impugned before it and by declaring the order to be void and striking down the same it nullifies the order. The ultimate effect of cancellation of an order by revocation and quashing of the same in exercise of the high prerogative jurisdiction vested in the High Court may be the same but the manner in which the situation is obtained is patently different and while one process is covered by Section 11(1) of the Act, the other is not known to the statute and is exercised by an authority beyond the purview of sub-section (1) of Section 11 of the Act. It is, therefore, Court's clear opinion that in a situation where the order of detention has been quashed by the High Court sub-section (2) of Section 11 is not applicable and the detaining authority is not entitled to make another order under Section 3 of the Act on the same grounds. Ibrahim Bachu Bafan v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1985 SC 697 : (1985) 2 SCC 24 : 1985 CrLJ 533 at (536) (SC).

[8955] ● Revocation or modification of order of detention.—The words "without prejudice to the provisions of Section 21, General Clauses Act, 1897" used in Section 11 (1), COFEPOSA give expression to the legislative intention that without affecting that right which the authority making the order enjoys under Section 21 of the General Clauses Act, an order of detention is also available to be revoked or modified by authorities named in clauses 9(a) and (b) of Section 11(1) of the Act. Power conferred under clauses (a) and (b) of Section 11(1) of the Act could not be exercised by the named authorities under Section 21 of the General Clauses Act as these authorities on whom such power has been conferred under the Act are different from those who made the orders. Therefore, conferment of such power was necessary as Parliament rightly found that Section 21 of the General Clauses Act was not adequate to meet the situation. Thus, while not affecting in any manner and expressly preserving the power under Section 21 of the General Clauses Act of the original authority making the order, power to revoke or modify has been conferred on the named authorities. Ibrahim Bachu Bafan v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1985 SC 697 : (1985) 2 SCC 24 : 1985 CrLJ 533.

[8956] ● Object with which detenu detained direct nexus with object sought to be achieved by Act.—We do not agree with the petitioner's learned counsel that prevention of smuggling of hashish for which the detenu had been detained under Section 3(1) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 has no nexus with the object sought to be achieved by that Act. The questions of smuggling and foreign exchange are very much involved in the act of smuggling of hashish pursuant to the conspiracy of which the detenu is alleged to be the principal conspirator and they have direct nexus with the object sought to be achieved by the provisions of the Act. The hashish has been smuggled from Pakistan and was intended to be smuggled out of India evidently in exchange for foreign currency or foreign goods. Therefore we find that the object with which the detenu has been detained has direct nexus with the object sought to be achieved by the provisions of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974. Tusher Govindji Shah v. Union of India, AIR 1985 SC 511 : (1985) 1 SCC 571 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 135 : 1985 CrLJ 793 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 143.

[8957] ● Advisory Board merely stating "the detention" as necessary—Detenu not to be detained for more than one year.—In the instant case an order of detention under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act was made by the Additional Secretary to the Government of India, Finance Department against Satar Habib Hamdani. The grounds of detention were served on him. On July 13, 1984 the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act was amended by an Ordinance which was replaced by an Amending Act. Purporting to act under S. 9(1) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act as amended, the Additional Secretary to the Government of India made a declaration that he was satisfied that "Shri Satar Habib Hamdani abets and is likely to abet the smuggling of goods into and through Porbandar which is an area highly vulnerable to smuggling, as defined in Explanation 1 to S. 9 (1) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974". Thereafter, the usual reference to the Advisory Board was made and after obtaining the opinion of the Advisory Board, the Government of India confirmed the detention of Satar Habib Hamdani for a period of two years. The scheme of Sections 3, 8, 9 and 10 appears to be that while generally the period for which a person may be preventively detained under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 in connection with smuggling activities, may not exceed a period of one year, in case of certain kinds of activities of smuggling into, out of or through "any area highly vulnerable to smuggling", the period may extend upto two years. In the latter event a declaration is required to be made within five weeks of the detention of such person in the manner provided by S. 9(1) of the Act. That is not enough. In a case to which S. 9 applies, S. 8 stands suitably amended, a reference is required to be made within four months and two weeks by the Government to the Advisory Board and the Advisory Board is required to state its opinion within five months and three weeks from the order of detention whether there is sufficient cause for the "continued detention" of the person concerned. In other words, the Advisory Board is to state its opinion not merely whether detention is necessary but whether continued detention is necessary. The Advisory Board will necessarily have to go behind the declaration under S. 9(1) to consider the question whether there is sufficient cause for "Continued detention". The two safeguards provided to the detenue against a "continued detention", at that stage, are the application of mind by the specified authority before making a declaration under S. 9(1) and the consideration of the question by the Advisory Board . . . . In the absence of the Advisory Board's opinion to the effect that there is sufficient cause for the "continued detention" of the detenu, their detention for a period exceeding one year is without legal sanction. Satar Habib Hamdani v. K. S. Dilip Sinhji, AIR 1986 SC 418 : (1986) 1 SCC 544 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 91 : 1986 CrLJ 378 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 84 : (1986) 1 Crimes 370. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Jusab Hazi Ismail v. K.S. Dalip Singh, Secretary to Govt. of India, AIR 1986 SC 418 : (1986) 1 SCC 544 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 91 : 1986 CrLJ 378 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 84 : (1986) 1 Crimes 370.

[8958] ● Advisory Board merely stating "the detention" as necessary—Detenu not to be detained for more than one year.—If the Advisory Board merely states that the detention of the person is necessary it is not for any one else to supplement the Advisory Board's opinion and substitute the words "continued detention" for the word "detention". The matter is of vital importance for that. The omission of the words "continued detention" in the opinion of the Advisory Board cannot be slurred over in the fashion we are invited to do in the counter-affidavit. Nor can we treat the omission as a mere clerical or typographical error when that is not the express case of the respondents. We are of the opinion that in the absence of the Advisory Board's opinion to the effect that there is sufficient cause for the 'continued detention' of the detenus, their detention for a period exceeding one year is without legal sanction. It is already much more than one year since the appellants have been detained. Satar Habib Hamdani v. K. S. Dilip Sinhji, AIR 1986 SC 418 : (1986) 1 SCC 544 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 91 : 1986 CrLJ 378 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 84 : (1986) 1 Crimes 370.

[8959] ● Satisfaction of detaining authority—When reached on bona fide basis.—It is interesting to note that the contraband articles alleged to be worth more than 1/2 crores of rupees had been received on the sea-shore at the back of the Raj Bhavan of Bombay. Access to this place was only through the Raj Bhavan. Sabnis was an employee of the Raj Bhavan at the relevant time and the detenu had asked Sabnis to allow the truck to enter into the Raj Bhavan compound for the purpose of transporting the contraband articles. It was upto the detaining authority to accept the statement of Sabnis and to be satisfied that such statement provided the link between the detenu and the receipt of the contraband articles and the bundle of facts relating thereto. This satisfaction under the law is subjective and it is not for the Court to test the adequacy of the material on which satisfaction is reached. It is quite possible that at a trial conviction may not have been secured on the basis of statement of Sabnis. But that argument is nor available for challenging an order of detention if the satisfaction of detaining authority has been reached on bona fide basis. Asha Keshavrao Bhosale v. Union of India, AIR 1986 SC 283 (287) : (1985) 4 SCC 361 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 561 : 1986 CrLJ 177 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 4 : (1985) 2 Crimes 799.

[8960] ● Order of detention—Intelligence report relied upon not supplied.—On the facts of the case we are, however, satisfied that adequate material had been disclosed and no prejudice appears to have been caused for want of further disclosure.

It may be that the exact information received from the intelligence source had not been made available to the petitioner or placed on record but sufficient material with reference to the intelligence report has been made available. Asha Keshavrao Bhosale v. Union of India, AIR 1986 SC 283 (288) : (1985) 4 SCC 361 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 561 : 1986 CrLJ 177 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 4 : (1985) 2 Crimes 799.

[8961] ● Preventive Detention—Grounds.—The Constitution requires that the grounds must be communicated. Therefore, it must follow as an imperative that the grounds must be communicated in a language understood by the person concerned so that he can make effective representation. Here the definite case of the petitioner's father is that he does not understand English or Hindi or Malayalam and does understand only Gujarati language. The facts revealed that the detenu Venilal was constantly accompanied and was in the company of his daughter as well as son—both of them knew English very well. The father signed document in Gujarati which was written in English which is his mercy petition in which he completely accepted the guilt of the involvement in smuggling. That document contained inter alia a statement "I myself am surprised two understand what prompted me to involve in such activity as dealing in imported Gold". He further asked for mercy.

There is no rule of law that commonsense should be put in cold storage while considering constitutional provisions for safeguards against misuse of powers by authorities though these constitutional provisions should be strictly construed. Bearing this principle in mind and, having regard to the conduct of the detenue, Venilal Mehta, specially in the mercy petition and other communications, the version of the detenu Venilal is feigning lack of any knowledge of English must be judged in the proper perspective. He was, however, in any event given by 30th June, 1984, the Hindi translation of the grounds of which he claimed ignorance. The gist of the annexures which were given in Malayalam language had been stated in the grounds. That he does not know anything except Gujarati is merely the ipse dixit of Venilal Mehta and is not the last word and the Court is not denuded of its powers to examine the truth. He goes to the extent that he signed the mercy petition not knowing the contents nor understanding the same because his wife sent it though he was 60 years old and he was in business, and he was writing at a time when he was under arrest, his room had been searched, gold biscuits had been recovered from him.

The detaining authority rightly came to the conclusion that he knew both Hindi and English. It has been stated so in the affidavit filed on behalf of the respondent. The detenu Venilal Mehta was merely feigning ignorance in English. Prakash Chandra Mehta v. Commissioner and Secretary, Government of Kerala, AIR 1986 SC 687 : 1985 Supp SCC 144 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 332 : 1986 CrLJ 786 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 301 : 1985 Cr App R (SC) 266 : (1985) 3 SCR 697.

[8962] ● Detention—Word "grounds" concept of—Explained.—"The "grounds" under Art. 22(5) of the Constitution do not mean mere factual inferences but mean factual inferences plus factual material which led to such factual inferences. The concept of "grounds," therefore has to receive an interpretation which will keep it meaningfully in tune with the contemporary notions of the reatihes of the society and the purpose of the Act in the light of concepts of liberty and fundamental freedoms guaranteed by Arts. 19(1), 21 and 22 of the Constitution. The concept of "grounds" used in the context of detention in Art. 22(5) of the Constitution and in sub-s. (3) of Section 3 of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974, therefore, has to receive an interpretation which will keep in meaningfully in tune with a contemporary notion. While the expression "grounds" for that matter includes not only conclusions of fact but also all the "basic facts" on which those conclusions were founded, they are different from subsidiary facts or further particulars of the basic facts." Prakash Chandra Mehta v. Commissioner and Secretary, Government of Kerala, AIR 1986 SC 687 : 1985 Supp SCC 144 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 332 : 1986 CrLJ 786 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 301 : 1985 Cr App R (SC) 266 : (1985) 3 SCR 697.

[8963] ● Pendency of prosecution—Order of detention vitiates whole case.—Pendency of prosecution, order of detention passed vitiates whole case. Sita Ram v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1986 SC 1072.

[8964] ● Preventive detention—Delay in passing order of detention.—It is no doubt true that where an unreasonable long period has elapsed between the date of the incident and the date of the order of detention, an inference may legitimately be drawn that there is no nexus between the incident and the order of detention and the order of detention may be liable to be struck down as invalid. Shiv Ratan Makim v. Union of India, AIR 1986 SC 610 : (1986) 1 SCC 404 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 74 : 1986 CrLJ 813 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 89 : (1986) 1 Crimes 465.

[8965] ● No hard and fast rule as to what length of time snaps nexus between incident and order of detention.—But there can be no hard and fast rule as to what is the length of time which should be regarded sufficient to snap the nexus between the incident and the order of detention. In the present case the lapse of time between the date of the incident and the date of the order of detention has been sufficiently explained by the detaining authority and hence no inference of mala fides can be drawn merely because the order of detention happened to be made about five months after the petitioner was found carrying two pieces of foreign marked gold. Shiv Ratan Makim v. Union of India, AIR 1986 SC 610 (612, 613) : (1986) 1 SCC 404 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 74 : 1986 CrLJ 813 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 89 : (1986) 1 Crimes 465.

[8966] ● Preventive detention—Plea of solitary incident.—On the basis of information received, the customs officers intercepted an autoriksha coming from Nepal. The occupants of autoriksha were searched by the customs officers and as a result of search from the pocket of the trousers worn by the petitioner, two pieces of foreign marked gold in the shape of round tablets weighing 373.800 grms, and valued at Rs. 74,760 were recovered and they were seized under the Customs Act. The petitioner was immediately arrested and on interrogation, he filed a written statement on the same day stating that he had been unemployed for a long time and that he was introduced in the business of purchase and sale of foreign marked gold by one Prakash Pincha and that on 16th November, 1984, he left Kathiar by bus and arrived in Kathmandu at 6 a.m. on 18th November, 1984 and stayed at Kanji Lodge in Kathmandu and as per prior arrangement, he contacted one Dena Lal Aggarwal on telephone no. 344889 and Dena Lal Aggarwal thereupon came to Kanji Lodge along with the requisite quantity of gold and he took delivery of gold from Dena Lal Aggarwal and paid him Rs. 70,400 in Indian currency and thereafter he left Kathmandu at 18.00 hrs on 19th November 1984. Having regard to the nature of the activity of smuggling, an inference could legitimately be drawn even from a single incident of smuggling that the petitioner was indulging in smuggling of gold. Moreover, the written statement given by the petitioner clearly indicated that the petitioner was engaged in the business of purchase and sale of foreign marked gold and that this incident in which he was caught was not a solitary incident. The facts stated by the petitioner in his written statement could legitimately give rise to the inference that the petitioner was a member of a smuggling syndicate and merely because only one incident of smuggling by the petitioner came to light, it did not mean that this was the first and only occasion on which the petitioner tried to smuggle gold. Shiv Ratan Makim v. Union of India, AIR 1986 SC 610 (611, 612) : (1986) 1 SCC 404 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 74 : 1986 CrLJ 813 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 89 : (1986) 1 Crimes 465.

[8967] ● No power of Court to substitute period of detention.—The Court has no power to substitute the period of detention either by abridging or enlarging it. The only power that is available to the Court is to quash the order in case it is found to be illegal. That being so, it would not be open to the Court to reduce the period of detention by admitting the detenu on parole. What in a given situation should be the sufficient period for a person to be detained for the purposes of the Act is one for the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority.

The period during which the detenu is on parole cannot be said to be a period during which he has been held in custody pursuant to the order of his detention, for in such a case he was not in actual custody. The order of detention prescribes the place where the detenu is to be detained. Parole brings him out of confinement from that place. Whatever may be the terms and conditions imposed for grant of parole, detention as contemplated by the Act is interrupted when release on parole is obtained. The position would be well met by the appropriate answer to the question "how long has the detenu been in actual custody pursuant to the order?" According to its plain construction, the purpose and object of Section 10 is to prescribe not only for the maximum period but also the method by which the period is to be computed. The computation has to commence from the date on which the detenu is taken into actual custody but if it is interrupted by an order of parole, the detention would not continue when parole operates and until the detenu is put back into custody. The running of the period recommences then and a total period of one year has to be counted by putting the different periods of actual detention together. We see no force in Shri Jethamalani's submission that the period during which the detenu was on parole has to be taken into consideration in computing the maximum period of detention authorized by Section 10 of the Act. Poonam Lata v. M.L. Wadhawan, AIR 1987 SC 1383 : (1987) 3 SCC 347 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 506 : 1987 CrLJ 1130 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 410.

[8968] ● Omission of representation in declaration.—In the circumstances even though the representation has not been referred to in the declaration, there is ample evidence to show that respondent 2 had considered the representation before he made the declaration. The non-mention of the representation in the declaration seems to be a mere omission. Madhu Khanna v. Administrator, Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1987 SC 48 (50) : 1986 SCC (Cri) 426 : (1986) 4 SCC 240 : 1987 CrLJ 318 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 401.

[8969] ● Report of Advisory Committee when considered by Confirming Authority.—The report of the Advisory Committee was considered by the confirming authority. In the circumstances, it cannot be said that the confirming authority had not applied his mind to the evidence of the defence witness as contended on behalf of the appellant. It is, however, submitted by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the relevant portion of the evidence of the defence witness has not been mentioned in the report of the Advisory Committee and, accordingly the confirming authority had no occasion to consider the same. We do not think that it is incumbent upon the Advisory Board to refer in detail the evidence of defence witnesses in its report. It will not be unreasonable to presume that all the records including the deposition of the said M.L. Khanna were before the confirming authority. It will be a mere surmise to hold that the confirming authority had not applied his mind to the deposition of the defence witness, even though such deposition has been referred to in the report of the Advisory Committee. Madhu

Khanna v. Administrator, Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1987 SC 48 (51) : (1986) 4 SCC 240 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 426 : 1987 CrLJ 318 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 401.

[8970] ● Nothing in Section 8 of COFEPOSA Act prohibiting oral evidence of witnesses tendered by defence being taken.—Article 22(7)(e) of the Constitution enables Parliament to prescribe by law the procedure to be followed by an Advisory Board on enquiry made under Art. 22(4)(a). S.8 of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act is a sequel to this prescription. There is nothing in S. 8 prohibiting oral evidence of the witnesses tendered by a detenu being taken. The concept of enquiry by the Advisory Board takes within its ambit this aspect of "hearing" also. Harbans Lal v. M.L. Wadhawan, AIR 1987 SC 217 (220) : (1987) 1 SCC 151 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 47 : (1987) CrLJ 324 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 23 : (1987) 1 SCR 425.

[8971] ● Right of detenu to lead evidence in rebuttal.—The law laid down by this Court recognizes the right in a detenu to lead evidence in rebuttal of the allegation against him before the Advisory Board. All that is necessary is that the detenu should keep the witness ready for examination at the appointed time. There is no obligation cast on the Advisory Board to summon them. This Court recognizes a right in the Advisory Board to regulate its own procedure within the constraints of the Constitution and the statute and this procedure is referable to the time limit within which the Advisory Board must complete its enquiry. Harbans Lal v. M.L. Wadhawan, AIR 1987 SC 217 (220) : (1987) 1 SCC 151 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 47 : 1987 CrLJ 324 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 23.

[8972] ● Prosecution of persons responsible for fabrication of evidence.—This Court feels fully persuaded to hold that this is a fit case in which the detenue, his wife (petitioner) and all other persons responsible for fabrication of false evidence should be prosecuted for the offences committed by them. Nevertheless Supreme Court wishes to defer the passing of final orders on the application made under Section 340 of CrPC, 1973 by the Union of India because of the fact that the Central Bureau of Investigation is said to be engaged in making a thorough investigation of the matter so that suitable action could be taken against all the perpetrators of the fraudulent acts and the offences. Such a situation should not come to pass because the manipulation of the detenu and his agents on the one hand and the connivance of staff in the President's Secretariat on the other cannot be treated as innocuous features or mere coincidence and cannot, therefore, be taken lightly or viewed leniently. On the contrary they are matters which have to be taken serious note of and dealt with a high degree of vigilance, care and concern. Pushpadevi v. M.L. Wadhavan, AIR 1987 SC 1748 : (1987) 3 SCC 367 : 1985 CrLJ 1888.

[8973] ● Person against whom order of detention passed not to be released on bail on bail bond.—So far as preventive detention under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Act, 1974 are concerned, the Act specifically lays down that a person against whom an order of detention has been passed shall not be released on bail or bail bond or otherwise (vide Section 12 (6) of the Act) and that any revocation or modification of the order of detention can be made only by the Government in exercise of its powers under Section 11. Incidentally it may be pointed out that by reason of sub-section (6) of Section 12 of the Act placing an embargo on the grant of bail to a detenue there was no necessity for the Legislature to make a provision similar to Section 389 (4) of the Code of criminal procedure, 1973 for excluding the period of bail from the term of detention period. For these reasons the plea for treating the period of parole as part of the detention period has to necessarily fail. Pushpadevi M. Jatia v. M.L. Wadhavan, Addl. Secretary, Govt. of India, AIR 1987 SC 1748 (1765) : (1987) 3 SCC 367 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 526 : 1987 CrLJ 1888 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 447 : (1987) 2 Crimes 705. TO THE SAME EFFECT : Pushpadevi Jatia v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 1748 (1765) : (1987) 3 SCC 367 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 526 : 1987 CrLJ 1888 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 447 : (1987) 2 Crimes 705.

[8974] ● Non-existent, not relevant irrational or invalid order of detention.—Though one or more of the grounds of detention were found to be vague, non-existent not relevant, not connected, irrational or invalid for any other reasons whatsoever the detention could be sustained on the remaining grounds Pushpadevi M. Jatia v. M.L. Wadhavan, Addl. Secretary, Govt. of India, AIR 1987 SC 1748 (1755) : (1987) 3 SCC 367 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 536 : 1987 CrLJ 1888 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 444 : (1987) 2 Crimes 705. TO THE SAME EFFECT : Pushpadevi Jatia v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 1748 (1755) : (1987) 3 SCC 367 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 536 : 1987 CrLJ 1888 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 444 : (1987) 2 Crimes 705.

[8975] ● Sufficiency of grounds not for Court but for detaining authority for formation of subjective satisfaction.—If material and vital facts which would influence the mind of the detaining authority one way or the other on the question whether or not to make the detention order are not placed, it would vitiate its subjective satisfaction rendering the detention order illegal.

Sufficiency of grounds is not for the Court but for the detaining authority for the formation of his subjective satisfaction that the detention of a person under Section 3 (1) of the Act is necessary with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the augmentation of foreign exchange.

The Government must, therefore, ensure that the constitutional safeguards of Art. 22(5), Constitution of India, read with sub-s. (1) of S.3 of the Act are fully complied with. In the instant case, however, there was no infraction of the constitutional safeguards contained in Art. 22(5). The relevant records of the Enforcement Directorate clearly show that there was sufficient material for the formation of the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority under sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the Act. They also show that detenu was afforded a reasonable opportunity for making an effective representation against his detention. Pushpadevi M. Jatia v. M.L. Wadhavan, Addl. Secretary, Govt. of India, AIR 1987 SC 1748 (1757) : (1987) 3 SCC 367 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 526 : 1987 CrLJ 1888 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 447 : JT 1987 (3) SC 296 : (1987) 2 Crimes 705. TO THE SAME EFFECT : Pushpadevi Jatri v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 1748 (1757) : (1987) 3 SCC 367 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 526 : 1987 CrLJ 1888 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 447 : JT 1987 (3) SC 296 : (1987) 2 Crimes 705.

[8976] ● Sufficiency of grounds for detaining authority not for Court.—It is quite apparent that the so-called factual mis-statements in the grounds of detention are not mis statements at all. The High Court rightly held that the alleged mistakes or infirmities pointed out were not so material or serious in nature as to vitiate the impugned order of detention. Sufficiency of the grounds is for the detaining authority and not for the Court. It cannot be said on a perusal of the grounds that there was no material on which the detaining authority could have acted. Pushpadevi v. M.L. Wadhavan, AIR 1987 SC 1748 : (1987) 3 SCC 367 : 1987 CrLJ 1888.

[8977] ● Non-service of summons under Section 108 Customs Act.—Non-service of summons under Section 108 Customs Act—No prejudice caused to detenu—Detention order—Valid. Poonam Lata v. M.L. Wadhawan, AIR 1987 SC 1383 : (1987) 3 SCC 347 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 506 : 1987 CrLJ 1130 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 410 : 1987 (1) Scale 849 : 1988 (63) CC 50 : 1987 (1) Bank CLR 108 : (1988) CCJ (SC) 1.

[8978] ● Revocation or modification of order of detention.—If the Advisory Board reports that there is in its opinion sufficient cause for the detention of the person, the concerned authority may confirm and continue the detention of the person for such period as it thinks fit. The expression "as it " thinks fit in Section 8(6) of the Act indicates that the concerned authority after considering the report of the Advisory Board may fix any period for detention. The authority is not required to give any special reason either for fixing a shorter period or for fixing the maximum period presented under Section 10. The opinion of the Advisory Board and the grounds of detention are the only basis for confirming and continuing the detention for any period, even up to the maximum presented. The detention order may at any time be revoked or modified. When the power to revoke the order of detention could be exercised at any time, it is not necessary for the authority to articulate special reasons for continuing the detention for any period much less for the maximum period presented under the Act. Vijay Kumar v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 934 (943) : (1988) 2 SCC 57 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 293 : 1988 CrLJ 951 : 1988 CrLR (SC)217.

[8979] ● Detenu entitled to assistance of friend.—The detenue is entitled to the assistance of a friend. The word "friend" used there was obviously not intended to carry the meaning of the term in common parlance. One of the meanings of the word "friend", according to the Collins English Dictionary is "an ally in a fight or cause; supporter". The term "friend" used in the various judgments of this Court was more in this sense than meaning "a person known well to another and regarded with liking, affection and loyalty". A person not being a friend in the normal sense could be picked up for rendering assistance within the frame of the law as settled by this Court. The Advisory Board has, of course, to be careful in permitting assistance of a friend in order to ensure due observance of the policy of law that a detenu is not entitled to representation through a lawyer. As has been indicated by this Court, what cannot be permitted directly should not be allowed to be done in an indirect way. Sundararajan, in the view of the matter, was perhaps a friend prepared to assist the detenu before the Advisory Board and the refusal of such assistance to the appellant was not justified. It is not for this Court to examine and assess what prejudice has been caused to the appellant on account of such denial. This Court has reiterated the position that matters relating to preventing detention are strict proceedings and warrant full compliance with the requirements of law.

The case before the Board involved certain facts which require acquaintance with the legal provisions and the procedure and practice adopted by the Customs authorities. It is the case of the appellant that he was not very much acquainted with them and that is why he had sought the assistance of Sundararajan and even brought him before the Board that day. In view of the position of law and the facts of the case it must be held that the refusal by the Advisory Board to permit the appellant to be assisted by Sundararajan as a friend was bad and continued detention of the appellant became vitiated. Johney D' Couto v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1988 SC 109 (112) : (1988) 1 SCC 116 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 70 : 1988 CrLJ 178 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 36 : JT 1987 (5) SC 248 : (1987) 3 Crimes 894.

[8980] ● Detenu when already under detention for offence bailable or non-bailable.—When a detenu is already under detention for an offence, whether bailable or non-bailable, the detaining authority will take into his consideration the fact of detention of the detenu and there must be compelling reasons to justify his preventive detention in spite of the fact that he is already under detention on a charge of a criminal offence. There must be material for such compelling reasons and the material or compelling reasons must appear from the grounds of detention that will be communicated to the detenu. In other words, two facts must appear from the grounds of detention, namely, (1) awareness of the detaining authority of the fact that the detenu is already in detention, and (2) there must be compelling reasons justifying such detention, despite the fact that the detenu is already under detention.

In the instant case, it has been already noticed that the detaining authority was aware of the fact that the appellant was arrested and produced before the Additional Metropolitan Magistrate, New Delhi. The grounds of detention also disclosed compelling reasons that the appellant should be preventively detained under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 in spite of his detention on a charge under Section 135 of the Customs Act. It is not the case of the appellant that the grounds of detention do not disclose compelling reasons. All that has been urged on behalf of the appellant is that there has been non-application of mind by the detaining authority of the fact of detention of the appellant. We are however unable to accept the contention made on behalf of the appellant that there has been non-application of mind by the detaining authority to the relevant facts. The detaining authority, besides being aware of the fact that the appellant was already in detention, has taken into consideration the relevant facts before passing the impugned order of detention under the Act, which is apparent from the grounds of detention. In the circumstances, the contention that the impugned order of detention should be struck down on the ground of non-application of mind by the detaining authority, is rejected. Vijay Kumar v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 934 (938) : (1988) 2 SCC 57 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 293 : 1988 CrLJ 951 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 217.

[8981] ● Satisfaction of detaining authority.—Detaining authority has correctly verified nature and purport of document containing retraction statements to arrive at its satisfaction. It was misdescribed in ground of detention. Detaining authority after considering the document was of the view that not much credence could be given to it. Error in description of document in grounds of detention could not in the situation vitiate detention order. State of Gujarat v. Sunil Fulchand Shah, AIR 1988 SC 723 : (1988) 1 SCC 600 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 201 : 1988 CrLJ 933 (SC) : 1988 CrLR (SC) 125 : (1988) 1 Crimes 854.

[8982] ● Order of detention—When made by officer especially empowered by Govt.—Even if an order of detention is made by a specially empowered officer of the Central Government or the State Government, as the case may be, the said order will give rise to obligations to be fulfilled by the Government to the same degree and extent to which it will stand obligated if the detention order had been made by the Government itself. If that be so, then it is the concerned Government that would constitute the detaining authority under the Act and not the officer concerned who made the order of detention, and it is to that Government the detenu should be afforded opportunity to make representation against the detention order at the earliest opportunity, as envisaged under Art. 22(5), and not to the officer making the order of detention in order to provide the detenu an opportunity to make a further representation to the State Government and thereafter to the Central Government if the need arises for doing so. Though by reason of Section 3(1) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act a specially empowered officer is entitled to pass an order of detention, his constitutional obligation is only to communicate expeditiously to the detenu the grounds of detention and also afford him opportunity to make representation to the appropriate Government against his detention. The only further duty to be performed thereafter is to place the representation made by the detenu before the concerned officer or the Minister empowered under the Rules of Business of the Government to deal with such representation if the detenu addresses his representation to the officer himself. State of Maharashtra v. Sushila Mafatlal Shah, AIR 1988 SC 2090 (2098, 2099) : (1988) 4 SCC 490 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1989 CrLJ 99 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 741 : JT 1988 (3) SC 646.

[8983] ● Detaining authority mentioned his satisfaction about necessity of detention.—A perusal of the grounds which run into many pages clearly indicates that the detaining authority was conscious of the fact that the petitioner was in judicial custody and was apprehensive that he would be released on bail. The detaining authority had mentioned his satisfaction about the necessity of the detention. Bal Chand Bansal v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 1175 (1177) : (1988) 2 SCC 527 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 356 : 1988 CrLJ 1092 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 256 : JT 1988 (2) SC 65.

[8984] ● Order of detention passed by officer specially empowered and by Govt. itself has same force.—Unlike in other Preventive Detention Acts such as the National Security Act, Maintenance of International Security Act, Preventive Detention Act, etc., the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 does not provide for any approval by the Government of an order of detention passed by an officer specially empowered to make a detention order. In all the above said Acts, an order of detention passed by an officer specially empowered under the Acts will cease to have force after the expiry of the number of days prescribed under the relevant Act unless the said order is approved by the Government within that period. On the contrary, the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 does not provide for the State Government or Central Government passing an order of approving of a detention order made by one of its officers and, therefore, the detention order will continue to be operative, for the full period of detention unless the order is revoked by the State Government or the Central Government or is quashed by the Court for any reason. This is an additional factor to show that an order of detention passed by an officer has the same force and status as an order of detention passed by the Government itself and this could happen only if an order of detention made by an officer is treated as an order of detention made by the Government itself, although through the instrumentality of an officer empowered under Section 3. State of Maharashtra v. Sushila Mafatlal Shah, AIR 1988 SC 2090 (2099) : (1988) 4 SCC 490 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1989 CrLJ 99 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 741 : JT 1988 (3) SC 646.

[8985] ● Unsatisfactory and unexplained delay between date of order of detention and date of securing arrest.—The question whether the prejudicial activities of a person necessitating to pass an order of detention is proximate to the time when the order is made or the live link between the prejudicial activities and the purpose of detention is snapped depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. No hard and fast rule can be precisely formulated that would be applicable under all circumstances and no exhaustive guidelines can be laid down in that behalf. It follows that the test of proximity is not a rigid or mechanical test by merely counting number of months between the offending acts and the order of detention. However, when there is undue and long delay between the prejudicial activities and the passing of detention order, the Court has to scrutinize whether the detaining authority has satisfactorily examined such a delay and afforded a tenable and reasonable explanation as to why such a delay has occasioned, when called upon to answer and further the Court has to investigate whether the casual connection has been broken in the circumstances of each case.

Similarly when there is unsatisfactory and unexplained delay between the date of order of detention and the date of securing the arrest of the detenu, such a delay, would throw considerable doubt on the genuineness of the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority leading to a legitimate inference that the detaining authority was not really and genuinely satisfied as regards the necessity for detaining the detenu with a view to prevent him from acting in a prejudicial manner. T.A. Abdul Rahman v. State of Kerala, AIR 1990 SC 225 : (1989) 4 SCC 741 : 1990 CrLJ 578 : JT 1989 (3) (SC) 444 (449).

[8986] ● Obligators on State Govt. to consider detenu's representation.—Article 22(5) of the Constitution of India itself does not say to whom the representation is made or who will consider the representation. By virtue of provision of the statute under which he has been detained. The appropriate Government is legally obliged to comply with these requirements. It is obligatory on the appropriate Government to consider the detenu's representation separate from the consideration of the detenu's case by the Advisory Board. Abdul Salam v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 1446 : (1990) 3 SCC 15 : 1990 CrLJ 1502 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 408.

[8987] ● Detenu in Jail—Authority if satisfied can make valid order of detention a few days before release.—If the authority is bone fide satisfied that such detention is necessary, he can make a valid order of detention a few days before the person is likely to be released. The antecedent history and the past conduct on which the order of detention would be based would, in such a case, be proximate in point of time and would have a rational connection with the conclusion drawn by the authority that the detention of the person after his release is necessary. Sanjay Kumar Aggarwal v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 1202 : (1990) 3 SCC 309 (314) : 1990 CrLJ 1238.

[8988] ● Detention order—Detenu already in jail.—In fact even in the grounds of detention, the detaining authority has mentioned that the High Court had granted conditional bail, but the detenu had not availed of it and his subsequent application for modification of the condition attached to the bail order was dismissed. Alocious Fernandez v. Union of India, (1990) 2 SCC 668 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 369 : (1990) 3 Crimes 270 (SC).

[8989] ● Detention—Goods imported in violation of condition of advance licence.—The detenu Madan Lal Anand was arrested on 21-6-1988 under S.104 of the Customs Act, 1962 for his involvement in the import, clearance and sale of polyester filament yarn and polyester fibre in the names of the above two firms and on his application he was released on bail. Again, the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Chandigarh, granted bail to the detenu on 11-7-1988 and adjourned the case sine die.

In Para 47 of the grounds of detention, it has been stated by the detaining authority that the detenu has played a very active and major role for obtaining advance licences in the names of the said firms, importing the polyester filament yarn and polyester fibre, getting the same cleared from Bombay customs and also for selling it in the local market in India in violation of the conditions of the Notification dated 9-6-1978 and also of the advance licences. The detenu has been abetting the smuggling of the goods and also has been dealing with smuggled goods otherwise than by engaging in transporting or concealing or keeping smuggled goods.

It is true that before the expiry of six months from the date of the first clearance of the imported goods, an abeyance order was passed against M/s Expo International. The question is whether by such abeyance order the said firm or the detenu was prevented from manufacturing the readymade garments and exporting the same within six months from the date of the first clearance. In the grounds of detention, It has been clearly stated with all relevant particulars that the said two firms had really no existence and they did not have any factory whatsoever or any manufacturing device for the purpose of manufacturing readymade garments. It is apparent from the grounds of detention and the counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the respondents that with a view to procuring the licences for the purpose of importation of the goods without payment of any duty and for selling the same in the market the said firms were created and/or set up by the detenus including the detenu Madan Lal Anand. In these circumstances, no exception can be taken to the passing of the abeyance order against M/s. Expo International and, as it was more than certain that the imported goods would not and could not be utilised in accordance with the condition of the advance licence, the provision of Section 111(I) of the Customs Act, was violated on the very importation of the goods. There is, therefore, no substance in the contention made on behalf of the appellant that there was no smuggling in this case and, as such, the order of detention was not at all justified. The contention is rejected. Madan Lal Anand v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 176 (178, 180) : (1990) 1 SCC 81 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 51 : 1990 CrLJ 659 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 69.

[8990] ● Preventive detention—Order of—Revocation of—Power as to.—Where an officer of the State Government or the Central Government has passed any detention order and on receipt of a representation he is convinced that the detention order needs to be revoked he can do so by virtue of Section 21 of the General Clauses Act since Section 11 of the Act does not entitle him to do so. If the State Government passes an order of detention and later desires to revoke it, whether upon receipt of a representation from the detenu or otherwise, it would be entitled to do so under Section 21 of the General Clauses Act but if the Central Government desires to revoke any order passed by the State Government or its officer it can do so only under clause (b) of Section 11(1) of the Act and not under Section 21 of the General Clauses Act. This clarifies why the power under Section 11 is conferred without prejudice to the provisions of Section 21 of the General Clauses Act.

Thus on a conjoint reading of Section 21 of the General Clauses Act and Section 11 of the Act it becomes clear that the power of revocation can be exercised by three authorities, namely, the officer of the State Government or the Central Government, the State Government as well as the Central Government. The power of revocation conferred by Section 8(f) on the appropriate Government is clearly independent of this power. It is thus clear that Section 8(f) of the Act satisfies the requirement of Article 22(4) whereas Section 11 of the Act satisfies the requirement of the latter part of Article 22(5) of the Constitution. The statutory of provisions, therefore, when read the context of the relevant clauses of Article 22, make it clear that they are intended to satisfy the constitutional requirements and provide for enforcement of the right conferred on the detenu to represent against his detention order. Viewed in this perspective it cannot be said that the power conferred by Section 11 of the Act has no relation whatsoever with the constitutional obligation cast by Art. 22(5). Amir Shad Khan v. L. Hmingliana, AIR 1991 SC 1983 : (1991) 4 SCC 39 : 1991 CrLJ 2713 : JT 1991 (3) SC 367.

[8991] ● Preventive Detention—Right to make representation.—When a person is placed under detention he has certain handicaps and if he makes a request that a representation prepared by him may be forwarded to the Central Government as well as the State Government for consideration after taking out copies thereof it would be a denial of his right to represent to the Central Government if the Detaining Authority as well as the State Government refuse to accede to his request and omit to forward his representation to the Central Government for consideration. It is difficult to understand why such a technical and rigid view should be taken by the concerned authorities in matters of personal liberty where a person is kept in preventive detention without trial. Detenus may be illiterate or it literate, they may have access to legal advice or otherwise, they may or may not be in a position to prepare more than one copy of the representation and if they make a request to the authorities which have the facilities to take out copies to do so and forward them for consideration to the Central Government would it be just and fair to refuse to do so? In such circumstances refusal to accede to their request would be wholly unreasonable and in total disregard of the right conferred on the detenu by Article 22(5) of the Constitution read with Section 11 of the Act. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the Detaining Authority as well as the State Government were not justified in taking a hypertechnical stand that they were under no obligation to take out copies of the representations and forward them to the Central Government. We think that this approach on the part of Detaining Authority and the State Government has robbed the appellants of their constitutional right under Article 22(5) read with S. 11 of the Act to have their representation considered by the Central Government. The request of the detenus was not unreasonable. On the contrary the action of the Detaining Authority and the State Government was unreasonable and resulted in a denial of the appellants' constitutional right. The impugned detention orders are, therefore, liable to be quashed. Amir Shad Khan v. L. Hmingliana, AIR 1991 SC 1983 : (1991) 4 SCC 39 : 1991 CrLJ 2713 : JT 1991 (3) SC 367.

[8992] ● Withdrawal of confessional statement.—Not placing the withdrawal of confessional statement by detenu before detaining authority Held, vitiates the order of detention. K. Satyanarayana Subudhi v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1375 : 1991 Supp (2) SCC 153 : 1991 CrLJ 1536.

[8993] ● Detenu already in Jail—Compelling reason to pass order of detention.—The detaining authority was aware that the detenue was in custody but he was satisfied that there is every likelihood of his being released on bail and he is likely to indulge in such smuggling activities. It is mentioned in the counter affidavit that the remand period of the detenue was to expire on 10-11-90 and that was also a ground which impelled the detaining authority to think that he was likely to be released on bail. This was the material before the detaining authority on the basis of which he was satisfied that there were compelling reasons to pass the detention order. Abdul Sathar Ibrahim Manak v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 2261 (2264) : (1992) 1 SCC 1 : 1991 CrLJ 3291 : JT 1991 (4) SC 103.

[8994] ● Detention order—Can be based on solitary incident.—Even a solitary incident which has been detected may speak volumes about the potentialities of the detenu and merely on the ground that there were no antecedents the detention order cannot be quashed. The authorities cannot and may not in every case salvage the antecedents but as noted above even a solitary incident may manifest the potentialities of a detenu on the activities of smuggling. Abdul Sathar Ibrahim Manak v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 2261 (2264) : (1992) 1 SCC 1 : 1991 CrLJ 3291 : JT 1991 (4) SC 103.

[8995] ● Detention order—Non-existent ground.—The submission of the learned counsel is that the petitioner being in custody in India can no more indulge in smuggling and therefore, the detention on the ground that he is likely to indulge in smuggling is on-existent. There is no force in this submission. The potentialities of the detenue as gathered from his act of smuggling that form basis for detention. It is difficult to comprehend precisely the manner in which such a detenue with such potentiabilities may likely to indulge in the activities of smuggling. It is for the detaining authority to derive the necessary satisfaction on the basis of the materials placed before him. Abdul Sathar Ibrahim Manak v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 2261 (2272) : (1992) 1 SCC 1 : 1991 CrLJ 3291 : JT 1991 (4) SC 103.

[8996] ● Representation—Delay in disposal of.—"The representations were received by the COFEPOSA Unit on 28th December, 1989. On the very next day, i.e., 29th December, 1989 they were forwarded to the sponsoring authority for comments.

The contention that the views of the sponsoring authority were totally unnecessary and the time taken by that authority could have been saved does not appeal to us because consulting the authority which initiated the proposal can never be said to be an unwarranted exercise." Kamarunnissa v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1640 (1644) : (1991) 1 SCC 128 : 1991 CrLJ 2058 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 88 : JT 1991 (4) SC 7.

[8997] ● Detention Order—Pre-execution challenge to Judicial review.—In face of clear provisions of the Constitution and the valid COFEPOSA Act, 1974, it is clear that the State or its delegate the detaining authority is not precluded from serving the grounds of detention on the detenu along with the order of detention. But it is not possible to accept the contention that the order of detention and the grounds of detention should be served on the proposed detenu in advance to enable him to challenge them in a Court of law before submitting it to the order as it would amount to securing to the proposed detenu the right to seek the judicial review of the detention order even before it is executed but also to enable him thereby to bypass the procedure laid down by the law to challenge it after it is executed. Additional Secretary to the Government of India v. Alka Subhash Gadia, 1992 SCC (Cri) 301 (303) : 1991 CrLR (SC) 128 : JT 1991 (1) SC 549.

[8998] ● Detention order—Pre-execution challenge to.—So far as detention orders are concerned if in every case a detenu is permitted to challenge and seek the stay of the operation of the order before it is executed the very purpose of the order and the law under which it is made will be frustrated since such orders are in operation only for a limited period. The Courts have power and they have used it in proper cases although such cases have been few and the grounds on which the Courts have interfered with them at the pre-execution stage are necessarily very limited in scope and number viz., where the Courts are prima facie satisfied.

(i) that the impugned order is not passed under the Act under which it is purported to have been passed;

(ii) that it is sought to be executed against a wrong person;

(iii) that it is passed for a wrong purpose;

(iv) that it is passed on vague, extraneous and irrelevant grounds; or

(v) that the authority which passed it had no authority to do so. Additional Secretary to the Government of India v. Alka Subhash Gadia, 1992 SCC (Cri) 301 (326) : 1991 CrLR (SC) 128 : JT 1991 (1) SC 549.

[8999] ● Detention order validity—Delay in arresting detenu.—If there is unreasonable delay between the date of the order of detention and the date of arrest of the detenue such delay unless satisfactorily explained throws considerable doubt on the genuineness of the requisite subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority in passing the detention order and consequently render the detention order bad and invalid because the "line and proximate link" between the grounds of the detention and the purpose of detention is snapped in arresting the detenue. A question whether the delay is unreasonable and stands unexplained depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. In the instant case the circumstances indicate that the detaining authority after passing the detention order was indifferent in securing the detenue by not taking proper action with greater promptitude. The police delayed its execution. In particular, the Inspector of police to whom the warrant was forwarded for execution, was indolent inspite of the repeated reminders and was giving evasive answers till the detenu was secured in his native place itself. This recalcitrant and refractory conduct of the Inspector has allowed the detenu to remain at large for such a long period and has consequently defeated the very purpose of the impugned order. For all the aforementioned reasons the impugned order of detention was set aside. P.U. Iqbal v. Union of India, AIR 1992 SC 1900 (1904) : (1992) 1 SCC 434 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 184 : 1992 CrLJ (SC) 2924.

[9000] ● Detention order—Validity—Delay in arresting detenu.—In the instant case the circumstances indicate that the detaining authority after passing the detention order was indifferent in securing the detenu by not taking proper action with greater promptitude. The Police officials have treated the warrant of arrest in a very casual manner and undue delay in the execution. In particular, the Inspector of Police to whom the warrant was forwarded for execution, was indolent in spite of the repeated reminders and was giving evasive answers till the detenu was secured in his native place itself. This recalcitrant and refractory conduct of the Inspector has allowed to detenu to remain at large for such a long period and has, consequently, defeated the very purpose of the impugned order. P.U. Iqbal v. Union of India, AIR 1992 SC 1990 (1904) : (1992) 1 SCC 434 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 184 : 1992 CrLJ 2924.

[9001] ● Representation of detenu—Undue and unexplained delay of 28 days in forwarding comments of sponsoring authority.—The sponsoring authority from whom the comments were called for had delayed in sending the comments upto 1.1.91 despite the facts that the comments were called for from him on 4.12.90. Barring that no explanation is forthcoming as to why the delay had occasioned at the hands of the sponsoring authority to send the parawise remarks or the comments to the first respondent. In our considered opinion, explanation now offered cannot be accepted for more than one reason. First, the first respondent has not preferred such explanation in his counter. Secondly, even accepting this present explanation, the delay cannot be said to have been explained, because the postal transmission, according to the learned counsel was by speed post. Thirdly, no supporting affidavit is filed by the sponsoring authority who alone could explain the delay at his end. The first respondent, thus, has failed to explain the undue delay of nearly 28 days in obtaining the comments by giving all necessary particulars. In these circumstances, we are constrained to hold that the undue and unexplained delay in the present case in the disposal of the representation of the detenu has rendered the impugned order invalid. Julia Jose Mavely v. Union of India, AIR 1992 SC 139 (141) : 1993 Supp (1) SCC 428 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 234 : 1992 CrLJ 109.

[9002] ● Section 5-A of COFEPOSA Act not invalid or void.—Section 5-A of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 is not invalid or void. It is not violative of Cl. (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution. Attorney General of India v. Amratlal Prajivandas, AIR 1994 SC 2179 : (1994) 5 SCC 54 : 1995 CrLJ 426 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1325 : JT 1994 (3) SC 583.

[9003] ● Retraction of confessional statement made by detenu not placed before detaining authority.—The detenu was apprehended on 26.8.1992 and was questioned and his statement along with the statements of others was recorded. On 18.9.1992 the detention order was passed. By then there was no retraction. However, the detenu claimed that he retracted on the same day and the fact remains that it was not before the detention order was passed. There is no such request for the presence of a lawyer which would have a bearing on the voluntary nature of the confession and the subsequent retraction. Therefore the retraction is clearly an after thought and if the same is not placed before the detaining authority that will not vitiate his subjective satisfaction. Noor Salman Makani v. Union of India, AIR 1994 SC 575 (578) : (1994) 1 SCC 381 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 521 : 1994 CrLJ 602 : 1994 CrLR (SC) 10 : (1993) 3 Crimes 1108.

[9004] ● Security of State and Security of India—Distinction.—The Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 is clearly relatable to Entry 3 List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution inasmuch as it provides for preventive detention for reasons connected with the security of the State as well as the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community. While Entry 3 of List III speaks of "Security of a State", Entry 9 of List I speaks of "Security of India". Evidently, they are two distinct and different expressions. "Security of a State" is a much wider expression. A State with a weak and vulnerable economy cannot guard its security well. It will be an easy prey to economic colonizers.

It is therefore idle to contend that the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 is unrelated to the security of the State. Indeed in the very Preamble to the Act, the Parliament states that the violations of foreign exchange regulations and smuggling activities are having an increasingly deleterious effect on the national economy thereby casting serious adverse effect on the security of the State. Attorney General of India v. Amratlal Projivandas, AIR 1994 SC 2179 : (1994) 5 SCC 54 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1325 : 1995 CrLJ 426 : JT 1994 (3) SC 583.

[9005] ● Representation before appropriate authority—Delay in disposal of.—Representation of the detenu addressed to the Joint Secretary, Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, New Delhi was forwarded by Dum Dum Central Jail authority under registered post on 15-10-1992 and it was received by the Ministry's Office on 22-10-1992 and it was forwarded to the Sponsoring Unit on 23-10-1992 who received it on 26-10-1992. After offering parawise comments, the same was sent by speed post to the Ministry's Office on 29-10-1992 which was received by the Ministry's Office on 2-11-1992. The representation was put up before the Joint Secretary on 3-11-1992 and the same was rejected on 4-11-1992. The Finance Secretary recommended the rejection of the representation on 5-11-1992 and finally the Minister for Finance rejected the same on the same day and a memo dated 6-11-1992 was issued to the petitioner intimating him about the rejection.

The entire delay was due to the delay in postal delivery. Therefore, the same cannot be said to be unreasonable and unexplained. As regards the period between 23-10-1992 and 2-11-1992, there were intervening two Saturdays and two Sundays. However, on receipt of the representation on 22-10-1992 the same was forwarded on 23-10-1992 for parawise comments. In this context, the High Court also has noted that to offer parawise remarks it would have taken some time because the representation contained several allegations against the Customs authorities and necessary information had to be gathered for offering the remarks. The Sponsoring Unit received it on 26-10-1992 and with the parawise remarks forwarded the same by speed post to the Ministry on 29-10-1992. In between there were two holidays and if we exclude these holidays then the delay comes to only five days which cannot be said to be undue. Noor Salman Makani v. Union of India, AIR 1994 SC 575 (576, 577) : (1994) 1 SCC 381 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 521 : 1994 CrLJ 602 : 1994 CrLR (SC) 10 : JT 1993 (6) SC 491 : (1993) 2 UJ (SC) 788 : 1993 (3) Crimes 1108.

[9006] ● Representation if received before case referred to Advisory Board.—In a case where the representation has been received before the case is referred to the Advisory Board, the appropriate Government must consider the same before the matter is referred to the Advisory Board and it would be justified in not considering the same only if there is no responsible time to consider and dispose of the representation before the case is referred to the Advisory Board and in such case, the representation may be forwarded to the Advisory Board alongwith the case of the detenu. In the instant case, the representation dated March 15, 1991, was received by the detaining authority on March 18, 1991 and the case of the appellant was referred to the Advisory Board on March 25, 1991, and the representation was actually considered by the Advisory Board on April 30, 1991. It is not the case of the respondents—and this is the important distinction in the case—that there was no time for the State Government to consider the said representation of the appellant before referring the matter of the appellant's detention to the Advisory Board on March 25, 1991, or before the said matter was considered by the Advisory Board. The only explanation that has been offered by the State Government is that there were holidays on March 23, 1991 and March 24, 1991 and there was hardly five days' time with the authorities between the time they received the representation and the time the reference was made to the Advisory Board. The State Govt. has not given any reason to indicate that the said period was insufficient. Moosa Husein Sanghar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1994 SC 1479 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 340 : (1993) 1 SCC 511 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 113 : JT 1993 (1) SC 44 : (1993) 1 Crimes 215.

[9007] ● Detention order passed—When Detenu in Jail.—In the instant case the submission is that the law requires that all the relevant materials and vital facts which would have bearing on the issue and would influence the mind of the detaining authority one way or the other ought to be placed before the authority empowered to make the declaration. According to the learned counsel, the stringent conditions imposed while releasing the detenue have not been placed before the authority. The detention order itself was passed when the detenu was in Jail and the detaining authority noted this fact and being satisfied that there was every possibility of his being released on bail, passed the detention order. If, subsequently, the detenu is released on bail even subject to certain conditions that does not bring about any material change. On the other hand, release on bail is a stronger ground showing that the detenu who is not in custody is likely to indulge in the prejudicial activities again. The conditions imposed would show that the detenu could move freely in the vast area of Calcutta Municipal Corporation, and therefore this order of release with conditions cannot be said to be vital document. Noor Salman Makani v. Union of India, AIR 1994 SC 575 (576-578) : (1994) 1 SCC 381 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 521 : 1994 CrLJ 602 : 1994 CrLR (SC) 10 : JT 1993 (6) SC 491 : (1993) 2 UJ (SC) 788 : 1993 (3) Crimes 1108.

[9008] ● Representation addressed to Advisory Board—State Govt. receiving same not absolved from obligation of considering it.—Sri Krishna Rao is right in his submission that even though the representation was addressed to the Advisory Board but since it was forwarded to the Advisory Board through the State Government, It was incumbent upon the State Government to have considered the said representation and it could not return the same to the appellant without considering it on the ground that it was not addressed to it but was addressed to the Advisory Board.

It must be held that merely because the representation was addressed to the Advisory Board and not to the State Government did not absolve the State Government from the Constitutional obligation flowing from Art. 22(5) to consider the said representation. Moosa Husein Sanghar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1994 SC 1479 (1481, 1482) : (1993) 1 SCC 511 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 340 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 113 : JT 1993 (1) SC 44 : 1993 (1) Crimes 215.

[9009] ● Order of detention to which Section 12-A of COFEPOSA applied—Validity.—An order of detention to which S. 12-A is applicable as well as an order of detention to which S. 12-A was not applicable can serve as the foundation, as the basis, for applying the Smugglers and Foreign Exchange Manipulators (Forfeiture of Property) Act, 1976 to such detenu and to his relatives and associates provided such order of detention does not attract any of the sub-clauses in the proviso to S. 2(2) (b). If such detenu did not choose to question the said detention (either by himself or through his next friend) before the Court during the period when such order of detention was in force—or is unsuccessful in his attack thereon—he, or his relatives and associates cannot attack or question its validity when it is made the basis for applying the Smugglers and Foreign Exchange Manipulators (Forfeiture of Property) Act, 1976 to him or to his relatives or associates. Attorney-General of India v. Anratlal Pragwandas, AIR 1994 SC 2179 : (1994) 5 SCC 54 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1325 : JT 1994 (3) SC 583.

[9010] ● Interference at pre-execution stage not justified.—Interference at pre-execution stage not justified and order is valid. Subhash Muljimal Gandhi v. L. Himingliana, (1994) 6 SCC 14 : (1994) 3 Crimes 242 (SC).

[9011] ● Order of detention—Challenge to.—The detenu or anyone on his behalf is entitled to challenge an order of detention without the detenu submitting or surrendering to it. Subhash Muljimal Gandhi v. L. Himingliana, (1994) 31 ACC 754 (SC).

[9012] ● Detention order to which Section 12-A of COFEPOSA Act applied—Order of detention for purpose of Section 2(2)(b) SAFEMA.—An order of detention made under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974, to which the provisions in S. 12-A applied, is an order of detention within the meaning of and for the purposes of S. 2(2) (b) of the Smugglers and Foreign Exchange Manipulators (Forfeiture of Property) Act, 1976 and can, therefore, constitute the basis for applying the Smugglers and Foreign Exchange Manipulators (Forfeiture of Property) Act, 1976 to such person. Attorney General of India v. Amrathal Prajivandas, AIR 1994 SC 2179 : (1994) 5 SCC 54 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1325 : JT 1994 (3) SC 583.

[9013] ● Order of detention to which Section 12-A of COFEPOSA Act applied.—The validity of an order of detention to which S. 12-A of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 applied, could yet be examined even during the emergency on the touchstone of the law as it obtained during the operation of the Presidential Order under Art. 359(1)—say on the ground that the provisions of S. 12-A were not complied with, or on other grounds, as may not have barred during the said period. But a person who could have so challenged the order of detention and yet chose not to do, cannot be allowed to do so when such an order of detention is made the basis for applying the Smugglers and Foreign Exchange Manipulators (Forfeiture of Property) Act, 1976 to him—this is for the reason that even if he is allowed to challenge the said order when, he is served with the notice under S. 6 of the Smugglers and Foreign Exchange Manipulators (Forfeiture of Property) Act, 1976, the challenge has to be examined with reference to the position of law as was obtaining at the time the said order was made and the law in force during the period the said order of detention was in operation. Same would be the position in the case of a person who challenged the order but failed in his challenges. Even in the case of a normal order of detention under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974, the position would be the same. A person who did not challenge, (either by himself or through his next friend) the order of detention or challenged it but failed cannot be allowed to challenge the order of detention when action is taken against him under the Smugglers and Foreign Exchange Manipulators (Forfeiture of Property) Act, 1976. Attorney General of India v. Amratlal Prajivandas, AIR 1994 SC 2179 : (1994) 5 SCC 54 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1325 : JT 1994 (3) SC 583.

[9014] ● Detention order under Section 3 of COFEPOSA Act passed during emergency to which S. 12-A thereof applied.—An order of detention made under S. 3 of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974, which was governed by S. 12-A thereof is yet an order of detention for the purpose of and within the meaning of S. 2(2)(b) of the Smugglers and Foreign Exchange Manipulators (Forfeiture of Property) Act, 1976. Since the President had issued an order under Art.

359(1) suspending Arts. 14, 21 and 22, it became competent for the Parliament, by virtue of cl. (1-A) of Art. 359 to enact S. 12-A of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 for the duration of and limited to the period for which the Presidential Order was in force. It was meant to achieve the purposes of emergency. Once S. 12-A is held to be a competent piece of legislation, orders of detention made thereunder (i.e., orders of detention to which the said provision applied) cannot be held to be not amounting to orders of detention for the purpose of and within the meaning of S. 2(2)(b) of the Smugglers and Foreign Exchange Manipulators (Forfeiture of Property) Act, 1976, particularly in view of the express language of S. 2(2) (b) (including proviso (iii) thereto), and the protection enjoyed by both the enactments by virtue of their inclusion in the IXth Schedule to the Constitution. Attorney General of India v. Amratlal Prajivandas, AIR 1994 SC 2179 : (1994) 5 SCC 54 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1325 : JT 1994 (3) SC 583.

[9015] ● Person detained be informed his right to make representation.—Having regard to the provisions of Art. 22(5) of the Constitution and the provisions of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 and the Prevention of Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1988, the question posed is answered as under : Where the detention order has been made under Section 3 of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 and the Prevention of Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1988 by an Officer specially empowered for that purpose either by the Central Government or the State Government the person detained has a right to make a representation to the said officer and the said officer is obliged to consider the said representation and the failure on his part to do so results in denial of the right conferred on person detained to make a representation against the order of detention. This right of the detenu is in addition to his right to make the representation to the State Government and the Central Government where the detention order has been made by an Officer specially authorised by a State Government and to the Central Government where the detention order has been made by an Officer specially empowered by the Central Government, and to have the same duly considered. This right to make a representation necessarily implies that the person detained must be informed of his right to make a representation to the authority that has made the order of detention at the time when he is served with the grounds of detention so as to enable him to make such a representation and the failure to do so results in denial of the right of the person detained to make a representation. Kamlesh Kumar Ishwardas Patel v. Union of India, (1995) 4 SCC 51 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 643 (659) : (1995) 3 Crimes 26.

[9016] ● Delay in disposal of petition of about 23 days not fatal.—It is not mandatory that the report of the sponsoring authority should be supplied to the detenu under Art 22 (5) of the Constitution. It is only a material furnished to the detaining authority. All the material on which reliance was placed for order of detention was admittedly supplied to the detenu. In the facts and circumstances of the case, the delay in disposal of the representation of about 23 days is not fatal. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Shakeel Ahmad, (1996) 1 SCC 337 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 108 (109) : JT 1995 (8) SC 561

[9017] ● Preventive detention—Challenge as to.—Though in the ordinary course, the death of a detenu should bring the writ petition challenging the order of detention to an end, the position in the instant case is different because of the fact that the order of detention is being made a foundation for initiating proceedings for forfeiting the petitioner's properties on the ground that she is a relative of the deceased-detenu. It is in these pecular circumstances the Court has adopted the unusual course and held that the wife can continue the writ petition of detenu challenging order of detention. Ganga Devi v. Union of Inida, AIR 1996 SC 401 : 1997 CrLJ 228.

[9018] ● Forfeiting of property held by detenu under SAFEMA subsequent petition.—An order of detention to which Section 112-A is applicable as well as an order of detention to which Section 12-A was not applicable can serve as the foundation, as the basis for applying SAFEMA to such detenu and to his relatives and associates provided such order of detention does not attract any of the sub-clauses in the proviso to Section 2(2). If such detenu did not choose to question the said detention either by himself or through the next friend before the Court during the period when such order of detention was in force—or is unsuccessful in his attack thereon—he or his relatives and associates cannot attack or question its validity when it is made the basis for applying SAFEMA to him or to his relatives or associates. State of Goa v. Hirabhai Somabhai Tandel, Nani, Daman, AIR 1998 SC 218 : (1998) 1 SCC 111 : 1998 CrLJ 386 (SC).

[9019] ● Order of detention—Habeas corpus—Petition against its validity.—True, it is not enough that there is a mere challenge and that challenge has to be upheld or negatived by the Court. When there is challenge to the legality of detention in writ of habeas corpus the challenge is in effect to the legality and validity of the grounds on which the order of detention is made. It is not that to challenge the legality and validity of the grounds on which order of detention is passed the detenu has to file a separate writ petition seeking a writ of certiorari. Once the detenu is released during pendency of his writ of habeas corpus by the detaining authority it cannot always be said that writ petition had become infructuous and that the grounds on which the order of detention is based become invalid. But then if the Court refuses or itself does not go into the merit of controversy in writ of habeas corpus when detenu is released the detenu on that account cannot be made to suffer holding that he did not successfully challenge his order of detention. Competent Authority Ahmedabad v. Amritlal Chandmal Jain, AIR 1998 SC 2083 : (1998) 5 SCC 615 : 1998 CrLJ 2920 (at 2923, 2924) (SC).

[9020] ● Undue delay in considering representation.—Where there was undue delay in considering representation before making declaration, of the continued detention of detenu was rendered. Narungal Pathamma v. Union of India, AIR 1999 SC 142 : (1998) 7 SCC 287 : 1999 CrLJ 26.

[9021] ● Section 5-A of COFEPOSA Act—Applicability of.—S. 5-A of COFEPOSA Act applies where the detention is based on more than one ground, not where it is based on single ground. A. Sowkath Ali v. Union of India, AIR 2000 SC 2662 : (2000) 7 SCC 148 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1304 (1305) : 2000 CrLJ 3691 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 568.

[9022] ● Parole granted to detenu in accordance with administrative rules or instructions framed by Govt.—Parole stricto sensu may be granted by way of temporary release as contemplated by Section 12(1) or Section 12(1-A) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 by the Government or its functionaries in accordance with the parole rules or administrative instructions framed by the Government which are administrative in character and shall be subject to the terms of the rules or the instructions as the case may be, for securing release on parole. A detenue has therefore to approach the Government concerned or the Jail authorities, who may impose condition as envisaged by Section 12(2) etc. and the grant of parole shall be subject to those terms and conditions. The Courts cannot, generally speaking, exercise the power to grant temporary release to detenus, on parole, in cases covered by COFEPOSA during the period an order of detention is in force because of the express prohibition contained in Section 12(6). Temporary release of a detenue can be ordered by the Govt. or an officer. The bar of judicial intervention to direct temporary release of a detenu would not affect the jurisdiction of the High Courts under Art. 226 of the Constitution or of this Court under Art. 32, 136 or Art. 142 of the Constitution to direct the temporary release of the detenu, where request of the detenu to be released on parole for a specified reason and/or for a specified period, has been, in the opinion of the Court, unjustifiably refused or where in the interest of justice, such an order of temporary release is required to be made. That jurisdiction, however, has to be sparingly exercised by the Court and even when it is exercised, it is appropriate that the Court leaves it to the administrative or Jail authorities to prescribe the conditions and terms on which parole is to be availed of by the detenu. Since the release on parole is only a temporary arrangement by which a detenu is released for a temporary fixed period to meet certain situations, it does not interrupt the period of detention and thus needs to be counted towards the total period of detention unless the rules, instructions or terms for grant of parole, prescribe otherwise. The period during which a detenu has been out of custody on temporary release on parole, unless otherwise prescribed by the order granting parole, or by rules, or instructions, has to be included as a part of the total period of detention because of the very nature of parole. An order made under S. 12 of temporary release of a detenu on parole does not bring the detention to an end for any period—it does not interrupt the period of detention—it only changes the mode of detention by restraining the movement of the detenu in accordance with the conditions prescribed in the order of parole. Sunil Fulchand Shah v. Union of India, AIR 2000 SC 1023 : (2000) 3 SCC 409 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 659 : 2000 CrLJ 1444 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 281 : JT 2000 (2) SC 230 : 2000 Cr AppR (SC) 374.

[9023] ● Representation to be dealt with utmost expedition.—Taking into account the facts that holidays intervened in between and the manner in which the representation has been dealt with by the authority concerned it must be held that the representation has been dealt with utmost expedition and there has been no delay in the manner of disposal of the representation. Kantilal Hirji Shah v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2000) 7 SCC 606 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1427 (1431) : 2002 CrLJ 261 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 728.

[9024] ● Preventive detention—Subjective satisfaction.—Action by way of preventive detention is largely based on suspicion and the Court is not an appropriate forum to investigate the question whether the circumstances of suspicion exist warranting the restraint on a person. The language of Section 3 indicates that the responsibility for making a detention order rests on the detaining authority which alone is entrusted with the duty in that regard and it will be a serious derogation from the responsibility of Courts if the Court substitutes its judgment.

The Court can only examine the grounds disclosed by the Government in order to see whether they are relevant to the object which the legislation has in view, that is, to prevent the detenu from engaging in smuggling activity. The said satisfaction is subjective in nature.

The authorities concerned have to take note of the various facts including the fact that this was a solitary incident in the case of the detenu and that he had been granted bail earlier in respect of which the application for cancellation of the same was made but was rejected by the Court. In this case, there has been due application of mind by the concerned authority to that aspect of the matter. Union of India v. Arvind Shergill, AIR 2000 SC 2924 : (2000) 7 SCC 601 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1422 (1425, 1426) : 2000 CrLJ 4055 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 756.

[9025] ● Solitary incident of smuggling—Detention order can be based on when.—It is true that in appropriate case, an inference could legitimately be drawn even from a single incident of smuggling that the person may indulge in smuggling activity but for that purpose antecedents and nature of the activities carried out by a person are required to be taken into consideration for reaching justifiable satisfaction that the person was engaged in smuggling and that with a view to prevent, it was necessary to detain him. It is also settled law that an order of preventive detention is founded on a reasonable prognosis of the future behaviour of a person based on his past conduct judged in the light of the surrounding circumstances. Such past conduct may consist of one single act of a series of acts. It must be of such a nature that an inference can reasonably be drawn from it that the person concerned would be likely to repeat such acts so as to warrant his detention. If there is non-application of mind by the authority on this aspect, then the Court is required and is bound to protect the citizen's personal liberty which is guaranteed under the Constitution. Subjective satisfaction of the authority under the law is not absolute and should not be unreasonable. The question, therefore, would be from the past conduct of the petitioner as set out in the grounds of detention or other circumstances, whether reasonable inference could be drawn that he is likely to repeat such acts in the future. Chowdarapu Raghunandan v. State of T.N., AIR 2002 SC 1460 : (2002) 3 SCC 754 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 714 : 2002 CrLJ 1836 : JT 2002 (3) SC 110 : (2002) 2 Crimes 47 (SC).

[9026] ● Petitioner not involved in smuggling activity.—In the present case, past conduct of the petitioner is that he is Engineering graduate and at the relevant time he was managing director of a public limited company. There is no other allegation that he was involved in any other anti-social activities. Only allegation is that he visited Singapore twice as a 'tourist'. Admittedly, the petitioner has filed bail application in a criminal prosecution for the alleged offence narrating the fact that his so-called statement was not voluntary and was recorded under coercion. The baggages were not belonging to him and there were no tags on the same so as to connect him with the said baggages and the crime. At the time of hearing of this matter also, it is admitted that the baggages were without any tags. It is also an admitted fact that there is nothing on record to hold that the petitioner was involved in any smuggling activity. Chowdarapu Raghunandan v. State of T.N., AIR 2002 SC 1460 : (2002) 3 SCC 754 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 714 : 2002 CrLJ 1836 : JT 2002 (3) SC 110 : (2002) 2 Crimes 47 (SC).

[9027] ● Power of detention—Preventive measure.—Conservation of COFEPOSA Act contemplates two situations for exercise of power of preventive detention (a) to prevent violation of foreign exchange regulations; and (b) to prevent smuggling activities. Under Section 2(e) of COFE POSA Act, "smuggling" is to be understood as defined under clause (39) of Section 2 of the Customs Act, 1962 which provides that "smuggling" in relation to any act or omission will render such goods liable to confiscation under Section 111 or Section 113. Section 111 contemplates confiscation of improperly imported goods and Section 113 contemplates confiscation of goods attempted to be improperly exported. This has nothing to do with the penal provisions, i.e., Sections 135 and 135-A of the Customs Act which provide for punishment of an offence relating to smuggling activities. Hence, to contend that for exercising power under COFE POSA Act for detaining a person he must be involved in criminal offence, is not born out by the said provisions. The other important aspect is that COFE POSA Act and the Foreign Exchange Management Act occupy different fields. COFE POSA Act deals with preventive detention for violation of foreign exchange regulations and Foreign Exchange Management Act is for regulation and management of foreign exchange through authorised person and provides for penalty for contravention of the said provisions. The object as stated above is for promoting orderly development and maintenance of foreign exchange market in India. Preventive detention law is for effectively keeping out of circulation the detenu during a prescribed period by means of preventive detention. (Pronam Lata v. M.L. Wadhawa, (1987) 3 SCC 347 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 506). The power of detention is clearly a preventive measure. It does not partake in any manner of the nature of punishment. It is taken by way of precaution to prevent mischief to the community. Union of India v. Venkateshan S., AIR 2002 SC 1890 : (2002) 5 SCC 285 : 2002 SCC (Cri)1121 : 2002 CrLJ 2790 : JT 2002 (4) SC 263.

[9028] ● Purpose of passing detention order to prevent detenu from continuing his prejudicial activity.—At the time of hearing of this matter learned counsel for the appellant pointed out that similar detention orders were passed against six persons during the period from 7.12.1995 to 12.8.1996. He pointed out that five out of six detention orders were revoked by the competent authority on the ground that the custom duty which was required to be paid was paid by them before the execution of the detention orders. Despite this fact the detention order passed against the appellant was not revoked even though he has also paid the custom duty as demanded. It has also been pointed out that the sponsoring authority submitted its report before the detaining authority to revoke the detention order which was passed against the appellant. He has also pointed out that after the detention order was passed the appellant surrendered his licence and had ceased all economic activities of exporting or importing of goods. In our view, there is no reason to discriminate the appellant and the reason given by the authority in not revoking the detention order could hardly be justified. It is true that normally before the execution of the detention order the same is not required to be quashed and set aside. However, considering the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case, in our view, no purpose will be served by continuing the detention order. It is pointed out that the appellant has ceased his activities in the field of import or export. He has already paid the tax with penalty as demanded by the authority. There is nothing on record that since the last five years the appellant has indulged in any such activity. It is to be noted that the purpose of passing the detention order is to prevent the detenue from continuing his prejudicial activity but not to punish him. Hence, in view of the facts and circumstances of the present case, the impugned order dated 30.7.1996 passed by the Joint Secretary to the Government of India under Section 3(1) of COFEPOSA is quashed and set aside. Pawan Bhartiya v. Union of India, (2003) 11 SCC 479 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 177 (178) : (2002) 82 ECC 1.

[9029] ● Order of detention passed by whom.—An order of detention under the COFEPOSA can be passed : (1) by an authority specially empowered by the Central Government; (2) by the State Government; and (3) by the Central Government. Union of India v. Sneh Khemka, (2004) 2 SCC 570 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 579 (583) : 2004 CrLJ 941.

[9030] ● Detenu entitled to make representation.—The detenu on being served with the order of detention having regard to the constitutional protection contained in clause (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution of India is entitled to be afforded an earliest opportunity of making a representation there against. Clause (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution of India obligates the authority making the order of preventive detention : (1) to communicate to the detenu the grounds on which the order of detention has been made; (2) to afford the detenu the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order of detention. Union of India v. Sneh Khemka, (2004) 2 SCC 570 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 579 (583-84) : 2004 CrLJ 941.

[9031] ● Detaining authority obligated to forward to Central Govt. report about service of order of detention.—Upon service of the order of detention on the detenu, the detaining authority or the State Government is obligated to forward to the Central Government a report thereabout; whereafter the latter is entitled to consider at its earliest opportunity, the validity or otherwise thereof so as to enable it to intervene in appropriate cases by exercising its power of revocation. Furthermore, the representation of the detenu if any, at a later stage is required to be considered by the Central Government in terms of Section 11 of the Act. Union of India v. Sneh Khemka, (2004) 2 SCC 570 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 579 (584) : 2004 CrLJ 941.

[9032] ● Power vested in Central or State Govt. to revoke order of detention.—Bare perusal of Section 11 of the Act would clearly show that the authority vested in the Central Government or the State Government to revoke an order of detention is without prejudice to the provisions contained in Section 21 of the General Clauses Act, 1897. In terms of Section 21 of the General Clauses Act, an authority who passes an order has the jurisdiction and can revoke the same.

The power of the State Government or the Central Government, therefore, is in addition to the power of the detaining authority to revoke an order of detention. A detenu in law, therefore, is entitled to make different representations before different authorities at different times in terms of statutory as also constitutional schemes.

Each authority, concededly, is required to apply its mind on the materials placed on record and pass an order either rejecting or allowing the said representation. A representation of the detenu having regard to clause (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution of India must also be disposed of within a reasonable time.

It is equally well settled that the constitutional right to make a representation includes the right to obtain proper consideration thereof by the authority to whom it is made. Union of India v. Sneh Khemka, (2004) 2 SCC 570 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 579 (584) : 2004 CrLJ 941.

[9033] ● Representation made before authority not to be considered by other authorities.—A representation made before an authority need not be considered by the other authorities, for disposal of representations made to them by the detenue. Union of India v. Sneh Khemka, (2004) 2 SCC 570 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 579 (585) : 2004 CrLJ 941.

[9034] ● Copy of representation of detenu—Placing of before authorities.—This Court has nowhere laid down that copy of the representation made by the detenu to one authority must be placed before all the authorities and all such authorities also should consider and pass orders on those representations, though really not made to any one of them. Union of India v. Sneh Khemka, (2004) 2 SCC 570 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 579 (587) : 2004 CrLJ 941.

[9035] ● Detenu's right to make representation to authorities.—The additional remedy or safeguard provided by Section 11 has been projected into the fabric of Article 22(5) so as to be absorbed into the ambit of safeguard provided by the latter part of Article 22(5). A provision like Section 11 may or may not be necessary to give effect to that safeguard, but, once a provision like Section 11 finds its place in the detention law, the detenu's constitutional right to make representation gets amplified. His right extends to making representations to all those authorities who can grant him relief and the opportunity afforded to the detenu to submit such representations thus becomes a part of the guaranteed right under Articles 22(5). A.C. Razia v. Government of Kerala, (2004) 2 SCC 621 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 618 (634).

[9036] ● Power under Section 11 of COFEPOSA supervisory in nature.—The principle is well settled that the Government in exercise of the power under Section 11 does not consider the question of sufficiency or adequacy of the grounds but it would only see whether the detention order is within the parameters of the power conferred under the statute. In other words, it will not review the case as if it is an original or appellate authority. That is why the power under Section 11 has been described as supervisory in nature. The proposition that the power conferred under Section 11 is supervisory does not, however, mean that the exercise of power is purely discretionary or that the process of consideration could be casual and superficial. No doubt, there need not be a speaking order in disposing of such representation. However, the Government has a duty to consider the representation in proper perspective in order to see whether the order of detention is in conformity with law. The Government, should, quite apart from the points raised in the representation, apply its mind broadly to the question whether the detention is in accordance with law. For instance, if the material relied upon by the detaining authority does not ex facie establish a nexus with the preconditions for the exercise of the power or the conclusions of the detaining authority are found to be wholly perverse or the prescribed procedure has not been followed by the detaining authority, the appropriate Government acting under Section 11 has a duty to interfere and revoke the order of detention. In order to achieve this end, the Central Government must necessarily have regard to the representation, the report received from the State Government, the detention order and the material relied upon in the detention order or referred to in the representation. The exercise of the power under Section 11 should not be a mere formality or a farce. Care and vigilance should inform the action of the Government while discharging its supervisory responsibility. A.C. Razia v. Government of Kerala, (2004) 2 SCC 621 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 618 (634).

[9037] ● Detention order when itself makes elaborate reference to statements/letters of concerned persons.—When the detention order itself makes an elaborate reference to the statements/letters of concerned persons which were either relied upon or rejected by the detaining authority in the detention order, the authority exercising the power under Section 11 would in no way be handicapped in dealing with the issue in general and the representation in particular. In the representations made by the petitioner (detenu's wife) the English version of which were on the record of Central Government, the plea taken was that the statements were obtained under threat and coercion and that is why they retracted from the previous statements. Of Course, certain other grounds. A.C. Razia v. Government of Kerala, (2004) 2 SCC 621 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 618.

[9038] ● Detention does not get vitiated where there is reasonable explanation for delay.—The question whether any or all of the documents which formed the basis of the detention order should be before the Central Government or not, depends on the facts of each case. There can be no hard-and-fast rule that the appropriate Government called upon to take a decision under Section 11 should necessarily have copies of all the documents relied upon by the detaining authority with the translated version thereof. It is unnecessary to furnish copies of documents to which casual or passing reference is made and which are not relied upon by the detaining authority. This Court is of the view that the proposition laid down by this Court that the copies of translated documents forming the basis of the detention order should be furnished to the detenu in order to give effect to the guarantee enshrined in Articles 22(5) cannot be imported while dealing with the question in the context of exercise of power of revocation under Section 11 on the basis of representation or otherwise. The question whether there was due consideration of representation has to be judged by general principles of administrative law. There is no constitutional requirement—Express or necessarily implied that the authority considering the representation should have before it all the documents referred to in detention order with translated version thereof. But, the availability or non-availability of such documents with the empowered authority under Section 11 will only have bearing on the manner of consideration of representation, which in turn depends on the facts of a particular case. The endeavour of the Court in this regard is only to assess whether there was fair and proper consideration by the Government by applying its mind to the crucial aspects warranting its attention. The necessity or otherwise of having copies of documents should be viewed in that light. The Court has to be satisfied that there was due application of mind to the crucial aspects. The points raised by the detenu in the representation would naturally assume importance, as pointed out by MATHUR, J. though the Government ought not to confine itself to the points highlighted in the representation alone. If, for the purpose of appreciating the points in the representation, the documents are required to be seen, naturally, the Central Government will be failing in its duty if it does not call for the documents with translation. For instance, the detenu may say that a particular statement relied upon in the detention order is something different and it was misread. The document has to be necessarily seen to appreciate that point. That apart, the Government shall have a clear idea of the nature of incriminating material against the detenu. If the detention order does not spell out the details thereof, but only makes a bare reference, here again, the need to peruse the crucial documents or statements so as to judge the validity of detention does arise; otherwise the Central Government will not be fulfilling the supervisory responsibility cast on it in the manner expected of it. However, we hasten to add that there can be no rule similar to the one laid down in the context of detenu's right under the first part of clause (5) of Article 22. The question whether there could have been due application of mind and proper consideration of representation by the Government in the absence of crucial documents/ translated copies thereof has to be decided on case-to-case basis. The approach cannot be abstract and unrealistic. No inflexible rule of general application can be laid down. However, we would like to make it clear that if in a given case, the perusal of certain documents becomes necessary, it is no answer to say that the translation involves delay. It is trite to say that where there is reasonable explanation for delay, the detention does not get invalidated. A.C. Razia v. Government of Kerala, (2004) 2 SCC 621 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 618 (637).

[9039] ● Duty to consider representation with reasonable expedition.—The dual rights under clause (5) are : (i) the right to be informed as soon as may be of the grounds on which the order has been made, that is to say, the grounds on which the subjective satisfaction has been formed by the detaining authority, and (ii) the right to be afforded the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order of detention. By judicial craftsmanship certain ancillary and concomitant rights have been read into this article so as to effectuate the guarantees/safeguards envisaged by the Constitution under clause (5) of Article 22. For instance, it has been laid down by this Court that the grounds of detention together with the supporting documents should be made available to the detneu in a language known to the detenue. The duty to apprise the detenu of the right to make representation to one or more authorities who have power to reconsider or revoke the detention has been cast on the detaining authority. So also the duty to consider the representation filed by or on behalf of the detenu with reasonable expedition has been emphasised in more than one case and where there was inordinate delay in the disposal of representation, the detention was set aside on that very ground. A.C. Razia v. Government of Kerala, (2004) 2 SCC 621 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 618 (637).

[9040] ● Power of Central Govt. to revoke orders made by State Govt. and officers specially empowered by State/Central Govt.—The combined effect of the constitutional and statutory provisions from the point of view of the detenu's right to make the representation is to provide more than one forum to re-examine or review the case of the detenu and to afford him various means of redressal of his grievance. Thus, the matter could be examined by : (i) the Advisory Board, (ii) the detaining authority, and (iii) the State or Central Governments acting under Section 11 or on receipt of Advisory Board's opinion. This is apart from the power of the Central Government to examine the validity of detention acting suo motu on receipt of report under Section 3(2). Under Section 11, which is of immediate relevance in the present case, the Central Government has the power to revoke the orders made by : (i) the State Government, (ii) an officer specially empowered by the State Government, and (iii) an officer specially empowered by the Central Government. The order passed by an officer specially empowered by a State Government can be revoked by the State Government as well. A.C. Razia v. Government of Kerala, (2004) 2 SCC 621 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 618 (637).

[9041] ● Petitioner not allowed to have unfair advantage and double benefit of his own action.—Merely because the High Court had granted stay of the order of detention, the respondent cannot take advantage of the order of stay passed by the High Court to contend that there is a passage of time. The petitioner cannot be allowed to have an unfair advantage and double benefit of his own action, which delayed the execution of the detention order. The reliance sought to be placed on the fate of proceedings taken against others is wholly inappropriate. The individual role, behavioural attitude and prognostic propensities have to be considered, personwise, and no advantage can be allowed to be gained by the petitioners in these cases based on considerations said to have been made as to the role of the others and that too as a matter of post-detention exercise undertaken so far as they are concerned. The appeal is allowed. The order of the High Court is set aside and the writ petition filed before the High Court shall stand dismissed. Union of India v. Amrit Lal Manchanda, AIR 2004 SC 1625 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 662 (669) : (2004) CrLJ 1426.

[9042] ● Judgments of Courts not to be construed as statutes.—Cases involving challenges to orders of detention before and after execution of the order stand on different footings. Courts should not place reliance on decisions without discussing as to how the factual situation fits in with the fact situation of the decision on which reliance is placed. Observations of Courts are neither to be read as Euclid's theorems nor as provisions of the statute and that too taken out of their context. These observations must be read in the context in which they appear to have been stated. Judgments of Courts are not to be construed as statutes. To interpret words, phrases and provisions of a statute, it may become necessary for judges to embark into lengthy discussions but the discussion is meant to explain and not to define. Judges interpret statutes, they do not interpret judgments. They interpret words of statutes; their words are not to be interpreted as statutes. Union of India v. Amrit Lal Manchanda, AIR 2004 SC 1625 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 662 (670) : (2004) 375 CrLJ 1426.

[9043] ● Cryptic observation that decision "is off the point".—Several grounds touching legality of grounds on which the order of detention was passed were raised in the writ petition. The present appellants filed a counter affidavit. Primarily, an objection was taken regarding the maintainability of the writ application before the order of detention was actually served and the detenu taken into custody. The various stands regarding the legality of the grounds of detention has been raised by the writ petitioner were also refuted and it was submitted that grounds stated were germane and relevant for directing detention. The High Court elaborately dealt with the legality of the grounds on which the order of detention was founded. But as regards the preliminary objection about the maintainability of the writ petition even before the order of detention was actually served, the same was dealt with and disposed of in a very casual and summary manner observing without even properly adverting to the law laid down by this Court, brought specifically to its notice as follows : "Before I proceed further into the matter, I may say that the case law which has been relied upon by Mr. Sharma is off the point." The High Court does not appear to have considered the case in the background of whether any relief was available to the writ petitioner even before the order of detention was executed. The cryptic observation that the decision "is off the point" seemed to be not only evasive but lacked judicious application of mind. Consequently, the order is liable to be set aside. Union of India v. Vidya Bagaria, 2004 SCC (Cri) 1696 (1698, 1699, 1701) : 2004 CrLJ 2480 : (2004) 2 Crimes 362.

[9044] ● Power under Section 11 Supervisory in nature.—The principle is well settled that the Government in exercise of the power under Section 11 does not consider the question of sufficiency or adequacy of the grounds but it would only see whether the detention order is within the parameters of the power conferred under the statute. In other words, it will not review the case as if it is an original or appellate authority. That is why the power under Section 11 has been described as supervisory in nature. A.C. Razia v. State of Kerala, (2004) 2 SCC 621 : 2004 SCC(Cri) 618 (634).

[9045] ● Representation of detenu—Consideration of.—The proposition that the power conferred under Section 11 is supervisory does not, however, mean that the exercise of power is purely discretionary or that the process of consideration could be causal and superficial. No doubt, there need not be a speaking order in disposing of such representation. However, the Government has a duty to consider the representation in proper perspective in order to see whether the order of detention is in conformity with law. The Government, should, quite apart from the points raised in the representation apply its mind broadly to the question whether the detention is in accordance with law. For instance, if the material relied upon by the detaining authority does not ex facie establish a nexus with the preconditions for the exercise of the power or the conclusions of the detaining authority are found to be wholly perverse or the prescribed procedure has not been followed by the detaining authority, the appropriate Government acting under Section 11 has a duty to interfere and revoke the order of detention. In order to achieve this end, the Central Government must necessarily have regard to the representation, the report received from the State Government, the detention order and the material relied upon in the detention order or referred to in the representation. The exercise of the power under Section 11 should not be a mere formality or a farce. Care and vigilance should inform the action of the Government while discharging its supervisory responsibility. A.C. Razia v. State of Kerala, (2004) 2 SCC 621 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 618 (634).

[9046] ● Failure to comply with statutory requirements.—Dispute an earlier order of the Supreme Court quashing the order of detention, primarily on account of lapses or the part of the State in not producing before the Supreme Court the relevant evidence to establish compliance with statutory requirement, the same mistake was again committed by the State which had filed a counter affidavit which had been found wholly unsatisfactory for the same reason. State was granted opportunity, but cast of Rs. 25000/- was imposed to be paid by State to the petitioner. Suram Chand v. State of J&K, (2005) 13 SCC 433 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 429 (429-430).

[9047] ● Application of mind.—Keeping in view the safeguards envisaged under Article 22 of the Constitution it was absolutely essential for the second respondent herein to apply her mind not only at the time of grant of approval to the proposal for detention but also when the actual order of detention and grounds thereof are prepared. To the aforementioned extent there has been no application of mind on the part of the second respondent herein, and, thus, the impugned order of detention dated 3.11.2004 cannot be sustained. Rajesh Vashdev Adnani v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 8 SCC 390 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 61 (64).

[9048] ● Delay in disposal of representation.—In the instant case, the detenu himself filed two representations and on his behalf, his counsel submitted another two representations and there is no allegation that these representations were not considered in time. But the representation filed by the present appellant, the wife of the detenu was disposed of only with a delay of 119 days. The delay was caused mainly due to non-availability of the translated copy of the representation. The representation was made in "Tamil" and it is submitted by the Union Government that it took about three months to get a proper translation of the representation and as soon as the translation was received, the authorities took urgent steps and it was disposed of within a short period. In the facts and circumstances of the case, there is inordinate delay in disposing of the representation. D. Anuradha v. Joint Secretary, (2006) 5 SCC 142 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 432 (440-41) : 2006 CrLJ 2784 : JT 2006 (5) SC 91 : 2006 (2) Crimes 290.

[9049] ● No limitation fixed for disposal of representation.—There is no right in favour of the detenu to get his successive representations based on the same grounds rejected earlier to be formally disposed of again and in any event no period of limitation is fixed for disposal of an application. D. Anuradha v. Joint Secretary, (2006) 5 SCC 142 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 432 (441) : 2006 CrLJ 2784 : 2006 (2) Crimes 290.

[9050] ● Withholding of irrelevant material.—The detention order itself is passed on various grounds and even if some materials are not placed before the detaining authority, it would only affect one of the grounds stated in the detention order and the detention order by itself is sufficient to stand on its own on the basis of other grounds. The detention as a whole cannot be held to be illegal. If there are severable grounds, the vague nature of the grounds would not vitiate the entire detention order. D. Anuradha v. Joint Secretary, AIR 2006 SC 3661 : (2006) 5 SCC 142 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 432 (442) : 2006 CrLJ 2784 : (2006) 2 Crimes 290 : 2006 (2) JCC 784 : 2006 (2) Cur Cr R 147 : 2006 (3) AICLR 602.

[9051] ● No prejudice caused to detenu due to non-placement of material before Advisory Board.—The appellant, the wife of the detenu sent a representation in Tamil and on 24.2.1996 and 26.2.1996 on behalf of the detenu, two representations were sent by S. Ramchander Rao, the Senior Advocate to the Central Government. The detenu also sent two other representations, one on 27th February in Tamil and another on 16.3.1996. Whatever materials were available with the State Government were sent to the Advisory Board and the representations were disposed of in time and the only representation sent by the appellant on 22.2.1996 was pending with the authorities when the reference was made. The non-placement of that representation had not caused any prejudice to the detenu. D. Anuradha v. Joint Secretary, AIR 2006 SC 3661 : (2006) 5 SCC 142 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 432 (439) : 2006 CrLJ 2784 : JT 2006 (5) SC 91 : 2006 (2) Crimes 290.

[9052] ● Delay in sending some relevant papers to Advisory Board.—The delay of only one week in sending some of the relevant records may not by itself make the whole reference illegal and vitiated. Under clause (c) of Section 8 of the COFEPOSA Act, a period of eleven weeks from the date of the detention is given to the Advisory Board to give its opinion. The Advisory Board is also empowered to call for any information from the appropriate Government. If the relevant materials were not placed before the Advisory Board at the time it had taken the decision, that would have been a serious violation of the right guaranteed under Article 22 of the Constitution. The fact that merely because some of the materials were inadvertently not sent along with the reference, will not vitiate the proceedings. D. Anuradha v. Joint Secretary, AIR 2006 SC 3661 : (2006) 5 SCC 142 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 432 (439) : 2006 CrLJ 2784 : 2006 (2) Crimes 290.

[9053] ● Sending representation to various authorities concerned.—In Union of India v. Paul Manikant, 2004 SCC (Cri) 239, the Apex Court deprecated the practice of sending representations to various authorities which were not directly or immediately concerned with the detention, and delay, if any, in disposing of such representations shall not be taken advantage of by the detenu. In the present case also, all the representations were not addressed to the authorities concerned. D. Anuradha v. Joint Secretary, AIR 2006 SC 3661 : (2006) 5 SCC 142 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 432 (441) : 2006 CrLJ 2784 : 2006 (2) Crimes 290.

[9054] ● Delay in passing detention order.—The allegations made against the detenu are of serious nature. It involved several crores of rupees. The various transactions had been done in a clandestine manner with the help of foreign nationals and the detenu himself had claimed to be a non-resident Indian. All these materials had contributed to the delay and the detaining authority had to consider these materials and cross-check the transactions. The contention regarding in passing detention order is liable to be rejected. D. Anuradha v. Joint Secretary, AIR 2006 SC 3661 : (2006) 5 SCC 142 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 432 (443) : 2006 CrLJ 2784 : 2006 (2) Crimes 290.

[9055] ● Non-resident Indian—Applicability of COFEPOSA Act.—Where no material was placed was placed before the Court to prove that he was a non-resident. Indian and therefore beyond the ken of provisions of COFEPOSA Act, it was held that the detention was rightly passed. D. Anuradha v. Joint Secretary, AIR 2006 SC 3661 : (2006) 5 SCC 142 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 432 (443) : 2006 CrLJ 2784 : 2006 (2) Crimes 290.

[9056] ● Failure to place before detaining authority detenu's letter retracting his confession.—In the instant case there was no reason as to why the detenu's letter retracting his confession should not have been placed before the detaining authority for his consideration. It was not disputed that the said letter contained the relevant material which ought to have been considered by the detaining authority before passing an order of detention since relevant material was held from the detaining authority, the order of detention was struck down as illegal. K.S. Nagamuthu v. State of T.N., AIR 2006 SC 374 : (2006) 4 SCC 792 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 414 (417-18) : 2005 CrLJ 5079 : 2005 (4) Crimes 282.

[9057] ● Sending of relevant material to improper authority.—The detenue had handed over the letter of retraction to his advocate, who got it delivered in the office of Assistant Commissioner of Customs. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, it cannot be said that the letter was not communicated to the appropriate authority because on that date the appellant had no knowledge that the order of detention was about to be passed under COFEPOSA Act. The Assistant Commissioner of Customs is a responsible officer and should have known to whom such letters should be sent. No broad proposition can be laid down, to the affect. That a letter addressed to any officer of any department of the Government would amount to service thereof on the State. It depends on the fact and circumstances of each case. In the fact of this case, we have found that the detenu addressed the letter of retraction to a responsible officer of the Department of Customs and in the circumstances he had no choice in the matter, as he could not anticipate that an order of detention may be passed and therefore, the letter should be addressed to the sponsoring authority. K.S. Nagamuthu v. State of T.N., AIR 2006 SC 374 : (2006) 4 SCC 792 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 414 (417) : 2005 CrLJ 5079 : JT 2005 (10) SC 216 : 2005 (4) Crimes 282.

[9058] ● Delay in passing detention order predetention order when can be quashed.—Where the delay caused in issuing the order of detention was not explained, the order of detention was held liable to be set aside. Rajinder Arora v. Union of India, AIR 2006 SC 1719 : (2006) 4 SCC 796 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 418 (425) : 2006 CrLJ 2102 : 2006 (2) Crimes 61.

[9059] ● Relevant material not taken into consideration.—Where the status report called for from the Custom Department was not taken into consideration by the competent authorities, it was held that the order of detention could not be sustained. Rajinder Arora v. Union of India, AIR 2006 SC 1719 : (2006) 4 SCC 796 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 418 (425) : 2006 CrLJ 2102 : 2006 (2) Crimes 61.

[9060] ● Subjective satisfaction of detaining authority.—It is, no doubt, that clause (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution mandates that all the procedural requirements contemplated thereby as also the relevant provisions of COFEPOSA are required to be strictly complied with in a case of preventive detention.

It is no doubt true that whether a detenu on the date of the passing of the order of detention was in custody or not, would be a relevant fact. It would also be a relevant fact that whether he is free on that date and if he is, whether he is subjected to certain conditions in pursuance to and in furtherance of the order of bail. If pursuant to or in furtherance of such conditions he may not be able to flee from justice, that may be held to be relevant consideration for the purpose of passing an order of detention but the converse is not true. Some such other grounds raised in the application for bail and forming the basis of passing an order of bail may also be held to be relevant. It would, however, not be correct to contend that irrespective of the nature of the application for bail or irrespective of the nature of the restrictions, if any, placed by the Court of competent jurisdiction in releasing the detenu on bail, the same must invariably and mandatorily be placed before the detaining authority and the copies thereof supplied to the detenu.

There is no universal rule that irrespective of the facts and circumstances of the case it would be imperative to place all applications for bail as also the orders passed thereupon before the detaining authority and copies thereof supplied to the detenu. On the petitioner's own showing, only that part of the application for grant of bail that the offence in question is bailable, was relevant. The question as to whether an offence is bailable or not be not a vital fact whereupon an order of bail can be based. Application of mind to the averments made in a bail application may be relevant where the grounds stated therein reveal certain facts which are vital for passing an order of detention. In a case of such nature, it may be said that the application for bail was necessary to be placed before the detaining authority and non-furnishing a copy thereof to the detenu would vitiate the order of detention. Sumla Jain v. Union of India, (2006) 3 SCC 321 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 90 : 2006 CrLJ 1636 : (2006) 1 Crimes 240.

[9061] ● All the documents placed before detaining authority not required to be supplied to detenu.—It is now well-settled that all the documents placed before the detaining authority are not required to be supplied. Only relevant and vital documents are required to be supplied. Sunil Jain v. Union of India, (2006) 3 SCC 321 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 90 (94, 95, 96, 97) : 2006 CrLJ 1636 : JT 2006 (2) SC 612 : 2006 (1) Crimes 240.

[9062] ● Judicial review.—At the highest, the case of the appellant is that the order of detention was belatedly passed and the State of Bihar thereafter took no steps whatsoever to implement the order of detention. Counsel for the appellant sought to bring this case under the third exception enumerated in Alka subhash Gadia, namely, that the order was passed for a wrong purpose. In the facts and circumstances of this case, it is not possible to accept the submission that the order was passed for a wrong purpose. Apparently the order has been passed with a view to prevent the appellant from smuggling goods or abetting the smuggling thereof, etc. The High Court was, therefore, justified in refusing to exercise jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution to quash the order of detention at the pre-arrest stage. This appeal is, therefore, devoid of merit and is dismissed. Naresh Kumar Goyal v. Union of India, AIR 2005 SC 4421 : (2005) 8 SCC 276 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 34 (41) : 2005 CrLJ 4539 : JT 2005 (12) SC 428 : 2005 (4) Crimes 147.

[9063] ● Placement of documents before the Detaining authority.—A reading of the whole of the detention order clearly shows that the detaining authority had placed reliance entirely upon the statement of the appellant Vinod K. Chawla himself and the documents and material recovered from the business premises and godowns of the firms which were admittedly owned by the appellant. The retraction of the statement by Asheesh Chawla has no bearing at all as it in no way could affect the formation of opinion and the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority. Therefore, the contention raised by the learned counsel for the appellant has no substance and is liable to be rejected. The law does not require that every document or material in possession of sponsoring authority must necessarily be placed by him before the detaining authority and in every case where any such document or material is not placed by the sponsoring authority before the detaining authority, the formation of opinion and the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority would get vitiated. Vinod K. Chawla v. Union of India, AIR 2006 SC 2864 : (2006) 7 SCC 337 : 2006 CrLJ 4079 (4084) : (2006) 3 Crimes 245.

[9064] ● Possibility of being released on bail—Detenu not yet filing bail application.—It was also submitted that since the detenu had not filed any bail application, the detaining authority could not have inferred that there was possibility of his being released on bail. Strong reliance is placed on several decisions of this Court. It has to be noted that whether prayer for bail would be accepted depends on circumstances of each case and no hard and fast rule can be applied. The only requirement is that the detaining authority should be aware that the detenu is already in custody and is likely to be released on bail. The conclusion that the detenu may be released on bail cannot be ipse-dixit of the detaining authority. On the basis of materials before him, the detaining authority came to the conclusion that there is likelihood of detenu being released on bail. That is his subjective satisfaction based on materials. Normally, such satisfaction is not to be interfered with. On the facts of the case, the detaining authority has indicated as to why he was of the opinion that there is likelihood of detenu being released on bail. Senthamulselvi v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2006) 5 SCC 676 : 2006 CrLJ 4605 (4607) : 2006 (3) Crimes 63.

[9065] ● Prayer for bail—Acceptance depends on circumstances of each case.—It has to be noted that whatever proper for bail would be accepted depends on circumstances of each case and no hard and fast rule can be applied. The only requirement is that the detaining authority should be aware that the detenu is already in custody and is likely to be released on bail. The conclusion that the detenu may be released on bail cannot be ipse dexit of the detaining authority. On the basis of materials before him the detaining authority came to the conclusion that there is likelihood of detenu being released on bail. That is his subjective satisfaction based on materials. Normally, such satisfaction is not be interfered with. On the facts of the case, the detaining authority has indicated as to why he was of the opinion that there is likelihood of detenu being released on bail. It has been clearly stated that in similar cases orders granting bail are passed by various Courts. Appellant has not disputed correctness of this statement. Strong reliance was placed by learned counsel for the appellant on Rajesh Gulati v. Govt. of NCT of Delhi and Another, (2002 (7) SCC 129). The factual scenario in that case was entirely different. In fact, five bail applications filed had been already rejected. In that background this Court observed that it was not "normal" case. The High Court was justified in rejecting the stand of the appellant. Ibrahim Nazeer v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2006 SC 3606 : (2006) 6 SCC 64 : 2006 CrLJ 3632 (3633, 3634) : 2006 (3) Crimes 83.

[9066] ● Delay in disposal of representation.—The grounds of detention in the present case are a long one running into 35 paragraphs which were accompanied by 82 documents running into 447 pages. The representation made by the appellant was a also a fairly long one. The representation made by the appellant on 24.3.1998 was received in the Ministry on 27.3.1998. The comments of the sponsoring authority were called on 30.3.1998 which were received on 17.4.1998. The comments were placed before the Secretary (R) through the A.D.G. on 22.4.1998 (18th and 19th being holidays). The decision of the Central Government was taken and communicated on 29.4.1998 (25th and 26th being holidays). The representation was also considered by the detaining authority in the meantime and was rejected on 21.4.1998. In the additional affidavit filed on behalf of the sponsoring authority before the High Court. It was stated that the representation was received by them on 2.4.1998 and the comments were dispatched on 17.4.1998. During this period, there were holidays on 4th, 5th, 8th to 12th April, and only seven working days were available. Again there were holidays on 18th , 19th , 25th and 26th April. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, we are clearly of the opinion that the entire time taken in consideration and disposal of the representation made by the appellant has been fully explained and it cannot be said by any stretch of imagination that there was any inordinate delay or unexplained delay in considering the representation made by the appellant. The challenge to the detention order made on the ground of delay in consideration of the representation made by the appellant has no substance and deserves to be rejected. Vinod K. Chawla v. Union of India, AIR 2006 SC 2864 : (2006) 7 SCC 337 : 2006 CrLJ 4079 (4086) : 2006 (3) Crimes 245.

[9067] ● Delay in disposal of representation.—Coming to the plea that there was delay in disposal of the representation it is to be noted that the order of detention is dated 1.12.2005. The representation was sent on 11.12.2005 which was received by the respondents on 15.12.2005. The details were called for on 16.12.2005 which were received on 20.12.2005. The file was submitted on 21.12.2005 and dealt with by the Under Secretary and Deputy Secretary on 22.12.2005. The concerned Minister passed order on 22.12.2005 and the order of rejection which was passed on 27.12.2005 was issued on 28.12.2005 which was sent to the Superintendent of the Jail where the detenu was incarcerated, which was communicated to the detenu. It was received by the Jail authority. The factual scenario indicated above indicates that the representation was dealt with utmost expedition. There can be no hard and fast rule as to the measure of reasonable time and each case has to be considered from the facts of the case and if there is no negligence or callous inaction or avoidable red-tapism on the facts of case, the Court would not interfere. Senthamulsevi v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2006) 5 SCC 676 : 2006 CrLJ 4605 (4606) : (2006) 3 Crimes 63.

[9068] ● Effective representation.—The grounds of detention showed that the detenu was not arrested on the basis of co-accused's statement. On the other hand it was clearly stated in the grounds of detention that the detenu was arrested on suspicion. It was not disputed that the confessional statement of the detenu was supplied to him. Held, the High Court was justified in coming to the conclusion that though reference was made to co-accused's statement, that was not relied-upon for the purpose of detention. The detenu was not deprived of his right of make effective representation against the detention. The detention was found not vitiated. Senthamulselvi v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2006) 5 SCC 676 : 2006 CrLJ 4605 : 2006 (3) Crimes 63.

[9069] ● Person himself evading service of detention order.—Where a person himself evades service of detention order, it is not open to him to contend that in view of the long period which has elapsed between the offending activities and the actual arrest and detention, the vital link had snapped and there was no ground for actually detaining him. An otherwise valid detention order cannot be rendered invalid on account of the own act of the detenu of evading arrest and making himself scarce. The contention thus raised has absolutely no merit and has to be rejected. Vinod K. Chawla v. Union of India, AIR 2006 SC 2864 : (2006) 7 SCC 337 : 2006 CrLJ 4079 (4086, 4087) : (2006) 3 Crimes 245.

[9070] ● Delay in disposal of representation.—Having regard to the nature of representation and reliance having been placed upon several judgments and remark of sponsoring authority, it was not required by the detaining authority to take five days to apply its mind. Detention order was held liable to be quashed. Harshale Santosh Patil v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 12 SCC 211 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 680.

[9071] ● Revocation of detention order—Remedy.—Revocation of detention order issued in respect of detenu is not to be governed by provisions of Section 127 F(2), Customs Act Alpesh Navinchandra Shah v. State of Maharashtra, 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 653 : (2007) 2 SCC 777 : 2007 (2) Crimes 192 (SC) : 2007 (3) SCR 223.

[9072] ● COFEPOSA and settlement commission under Customs Act.—The orders of the respective authorities should not and cannot be binding or influencing each other. Order of Settlement commission should not have any bearing on detention order under COFEPOSA. Alpesh Navinchandra Shah v. State of Maha- rashtra, 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 653 : 2007 (3) SCR 223 : 2007 (2) SCC 777 : 2007 (2) Crimes 192 (SC).

[9073] ● Authority to make detention order.—An order of detention can be made by (i) the central Government; or (ii) an officer specially empowered by the central Government; or (iii) the State Government; or (iv) an officer specially empowered by the State Government. Union of India v. Harish Kumar, AIR 2007 SC 1430 : 2007 CrLJ 1815 : 2007 (3) SCR 994 : JT 2007 (10) SC 254.

[9074] ● Non-consideration of ground—No arguments raised before High Court.—In the instant case no arguments were raised before the High Court relating to the documents though they existed in record before the High Court. It was held that the plea that the new ground which was the part of record before High Court was not taken into consideration by the High Court was meritless and liable to be rejected. Mukesh Tikaji Bora v. Union of India, 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 439 : 2007 (2) Crimes 236 (SC) : (2007) 9 SCC 28 : JT 2007 (5) SC 548.

[9075] ● Delay in execution of detention order—Delay explained.—Delay in execution of detention order was adequately explained. It was found to be the result of conduct of detenu in evading arrest. Dismissal of writ petition by the High Court was held proper. Mukesh Tikaji Bora v. Union of India, (2007) 9 SCC 28 : (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 439 : 2007 (2) Crimes 236 (SC) : 2007 (5) SCR 26 : JT 2007 (5) SCR 26.

[9076] ● Revocation of detention order of co-accused.—This case related to illegal import by firm belonging to the petitioner and his brother. The petitioner was released on bail on the basis of settlement and on the advice of Advisory Board under COFEPOSA Act. Held, the petitioner who is similarly placed and having also paid custom duty in pursuance of order of settlement commission and got unconditional immunity is entitled to the same treatment i.e. release on bail. Further, there is nothing on record to show that he has indulged in any such activity in the recent past. Detention order is liable to be quashed. Alpesh Navinchandra Shah v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 2 SCC 777 : JT 2007 (3) (SC) 630 : 2007 (1) SCR 653 : 2007 (2) Crimes 192.

[9077] ● Exoneration in judicial proceedings.—Exoneration in adjudication proceedings is no ground to nullify the order of detention. Mukesh Tikaji Bora v. Union of India, (2007) 9 SCC 28 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 439 : JT 2007 (5) (SC) 548 : 2007 (2) Crimes 236 (SC).

[9078] ● Failure on the part of central Govt to consider representation.—The failure on the part of the Central Government to independently consider the representation submitted by the detenu against the detention renders further detention of the detenu illegal. The initial order of detention passed under Section 3(1) of the COFEPOSA Act does not get vitiated. The very order of detention passed under Section 3(1) of COFEPOSA Act cannot be declared void ab initio Union of India v. Harish Kumar, AIR 2007 SC 1430 : (2008) 1 SCC 195 : 2007 CrLJ 1815 (1817) : JT 2007 (10) SC 254.

[9079] ● Failure of Central Government to independently consider representation.—The failure on the part of the Central Government to independently consider the representation submitted by the detenu against his detention renders further detention of the detenu illegal. The initial order of detention passed under section 3(1) of the COFEPOSA Act does not get vitiated. The very order of detention passed under section 3(1) of the COFEPOSA Act cannot be declared void ab initio. Union of India v. Harish Kumar, AIR 2007 SC 1430 : (2008) 1 SCC 195 : 2007 CrLJ 1815 (1817).

[9080] ● Legal aid to detenu before Advisory Board.—Though a detenu has no right under Section 8(e) of COFEPOSA Act to legal proceedings before the Advisory Board, he can make such a request to the Board and the Board would be bound to consider request, if made State of Maharashtra v. Zubair Haji Qasim, AIR 2008 SC 2825 : (2008) 12 SCC 792 : 2008 CrLJ 3508 : (2008) 10 SCR 832.

[9081] ● "Grounds"—Meaning.—"Grounds" meaning materials on which order of detention is primarily based. Tahira Haris v. Government of Karnataka, AIR 2009 SC 2184 : (2009) 11 SCC 438 : 2009 CrLJ 2451 : 2009 (5) SCR 941.

[9082] ● Documents and materials relied upon must be supplied to detenu.—The detenu has a right to be supplied copies of all documents, statements and other materials relied upon in the grounds of detention without any delay. The predominant object of communicating the grounds of detention is to enable the detenu at the earliest opportunity to make effective and meaningful representation against his detention. Thaira Haris v. Government of Karnataka, AIR 2009 SC 2184 : (2009) 11 SCC 438 : 2009 CrLJ 2451 (2456) : JT 2009 (5) SC 417.

[9083] ● Confirmation order detention order are distinct.—The order of detention was passed against Anil Kumar. According to the detaining authority, Anil Kumar was the master mind in the entire operation and allegation against the detenu is of abetting him in smuggling, therefore, any order of detention passed against Anil Kumar assumed great, significance and the same would weigh heavily with the detaining authority while passing the detention order. Admittedly the order of detention of Anil Kumar was not supplied to the detenu. The document supplied to the detenu was only the confirmation order passed under COFEPOSA Act. Both are different and distinct and, therefore, the High Court was wrong in holding that the detention order and confirmation was one and the same. Tahira Haris v. Government of Karnataka, AIR 2009 SC 2184 : (2009) 1 SCC 438 : 2009 CrLJ 2451 (2452) (SC).

[9084] ● Authority must consider disposal of representation and pass appropriate order.—It is true that whenever a representation is made either by the representative of the detenu or by the detenu himself, it is incumbent on the part of the named authority to consider disposal of the same and pass appropriate order and communicate it without any unreasonable delay. Pooja Batra v. Union of India, AIR 2009 SC 2256 : (2009) 5 SCC 296 : 2009 CrLJ 2797 (2800) : 2009 (2) Crimes 49 (SC).

[9085] ● Detention order passed on incomplete material.—Use of incomplete material which is either pending or inconsistent cannot be a basis for detention order. Pooja Batra v. Union of India, AIR 2009 SC 2256 : (2009) 5 SCC 296 : 2009 CrLJ 2797 : 2009 (2) Crimes 49 (SC).

[9086] ● Single instance of smuggling.—There is no dispute that even for a solitary instance of sufficient materials are available and if the detaining authority is subjectively satisfied that the detenu is indulging in smuggling activities which is detrimental to the interest of the department the detention order can be clamped. Pooja Batra v. Union of India, AIR 2009 SC 2256 : 2009 CrLJ 2797 (2800) : 2009 (2) Crimes 49 (SC) : JT 2009 (5) SC 194.

[9087] ● Delay in passing detention order.—Regarding delay in passing detention order, the alleged violation relates to Bill of Entry No. 589144 dated 25.04.2007, the detention order was passed on 05.12.2007. After the seizure of the goods from the container covered under Bill of Entry No. 589144 dated 25.04.2007, nobody appeared before the authorities to get the goods cleared till 23.07.2007. The detenu himself appeared before Customs Authorities for the first time on 03.08.2007. His statement under Section 108 of the Customs Act was recorded and he was arrested on 04.08.2007. It was explained that in the light of the fact that earlier also similar eight consignments were got cleared by the detenu, the investigation relied on the statement of witness as if he is the actual owner of the proprietary concern, the statement of the clearing agent and his nominee were recorded and it was only on 29.10.2007 the sponsoring authority recommended to the COFEPOSA Department for consideration of the matter to pass detention order against the detenu. All those actions, various orders/proceedings were mentioned in seriatim both in the grounds of detention, and in the counter affidavit filed by the very same authority. We have carefully gone through the same and find no merit in the contention. On the other hand, we are satisfied that there is proximity to the alleged offence and the detention order. In our view, there was no undue delay so as to snap the link between the incident and the alleged potentiality of the detenu in indulging in smuggling activity. Hence, we reject the said contention. Pooja Batra v. Union of India, AIR 2009 SC 2256 : (2009) 5 SCC 296 : 2009 CrLJ 2797 : 2009 (2) Crimes 49 (SC).

[9088] ● Non-supply of relied upon documents.—On proper construction of Clause (5) of Article 22 read with Section 3(3) of COFEPOSA Act, it is imperative for valid continuance of detention that the detenu must be supplied all documents, statements and other materials relied upon in the grounds of detention. In the instant case, admittedly, the relied upon document, the detention order of Anil Kumar was not supplied to the detenu and the detenu was prevented from making effective representation which has violated his constitutional right under Clause (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution.

Consequently, we accept appeals. The impugned detention order is quashed and the detenue is directed to be released forthwith, if not required in any other case. Thahira Haris v. Government of Karnataka, AIR 2009 (SC) 2184 : (2009) 11 SCC 438 : 2009 CrLJ 2451 (2456) : 2009 (5) SCR 941.

[9089] ● Detention order based on extraneous matter.—We have already pointed out that the authority are free to reopen the case in respect of import of eight consignment/Bill of Entries which is said to have been taking place prior to the Bill of Entry dated 25.04.2007. However even according to the department, those consignments were cleared under proper orders by the authority concerned. It is also not in dispute that on the date of the passing of detention order the authorities have issued notice calling for certain details in respect of import of those eight consignments. In other words, the said issue has not concluded as no adverse finding against him is passed on the date of the passing of the detention order. In such circumstances we are of the view that 'inconclusive state of investigation' can not legitimately help the authorities to pass an order of detention against the detenu on the perfunctory and inchoate material relied upon. Pooja Batra v. Union of India, AIR 2009 SC 2256 : (2009) 5 SCC 296 : 2009 CrLJ 2797 : 2009 (2) Crimes 49 (SC) : 2009 (5) SCR 67.

[9090] ● Consideration of extraneous and inconclusive material.—Section 111 of Customs Act, 1962 refers to goods brought from a place outside India shall be liable for confiscation. Unless there is proper enquiry and arrive at some conclusion in terms of Section 111 or Section 113 it cannot be concluded that smuggling had taken place. There is nothing in the order of detention which would indicate that any of the said earlier imports were effected in contravention of any of the provisions of the Customs Act, 1962, or that they could have been regarded as having been smuggled into the country within the meaning of Section 2(39) of the said Act. Except notice for reopening the order clearing eight consignments prior to Bills of Entry dated 25.04.2007, there is adjudication and final order by the authority concerned. In other words, the reference to alleged violation of the Customs Act in respect of import of eight consignments which were only at the premature stage and considering extraneous materials, which are inconclusive cannot be a valid ground for clamping detention under COFEPOSA Act. Inasmuch as the Detaining Authority has extensively relied upon the allegations that the detenu was involved in the import of eight consignments through M/s P.P. Dutta, reliance on those irrelevant material vitiates the detention order. This is more so as the said alleged earlier imports, apparently constitute the main basis for the opinion formed by the Detaining Authority that the detenu had the propensity and potentiality to indulge in smuggling activities in future. Pooja Batra v. Union of India, AIR 2009 SC 2256 : 2009 (5) SCC 296 : 2009 CrLJ 2797 : 2009 (5) SCR 67.

[9091] ● Delay in disposal of representation.—In the instant case, the detenu has taken the plea that he made a representation to the Secretary, Government of India as suggested in the detention order on 13.06.2008 which was received by the Suptd. Of Jail on 16.06.2008, and on the very same day it was forwarded to COFEPOSA Department. It is the contention of the counsel for the appellant that though the representation was sent to the COFEPOSA Department on 16.06.2008 itself and the fact that the Jail and COFEPOSA Department both located in Delhi yet it took time for more than ten days to respond in obtaining the comments from the sponsoring authority and get the same disposed of which is fatal and accordingly the detention order deserves to be quashed. As against the said detention, in the counter affidavit, it is clarified that the representation was received by them on 20.06.2008. The specific assertion made in the counter affidavit has not been refuted by the detenu in his rejoinder. On the same day, i.e. 20.06.2008 itself, it was sent to the sponsoring authority, i.e. Customs Authority, who sent their comments on 27.06.2008. The comments on the said representation were sent to the COFEPOSA department on 27.06.2008, 28/29.06.2008 were holidays being Saturday and Sunday and on the next day i.e. 30.06.2008, the representation of the denenu was considered by the competent officer of the COFEPOSA department and the same was rejected. The rejection order was communicated to the detenu on 01.07.2008 and received by him on 02.07.2008. In the light of the details furnished in the counter affidavit, there is no substance in the contention. There was no delay much more than the bare minimum time required to obtain the comments of the sponsoring authority. Pooja Batra v. Union of India, AIR 2009 SC 2256 : (2009) 5 SCC 296 : 2009 CrLJ 2797 : (2009) 2 Crimes 49.

[9092] ● Exercise of power under COFEPOSE Act.—The Act contemplates two situations for exercise of the power of preventive detention, viz., to prevent violation of foreign exchange regulations and to prevent smuggling activities. The justification for passing the order of detention is suspicion or reasonable probability of the person sought to be detained to prevent him in carrying on smuggling activities in the future. In other words, what needs to be proved is the potentiality or propensity of the person to engage in future prejudicial activities. Gimik Piotr v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 924 : (2010) 1 SCC 609 : JT 2009 (14) SC 273 : 2009 (13) Scale 706.

[9093] ● Power under sub-Section (1) of Section 3, COFEPOSA Act.—Sub-Section (1) of Section 3 authorises Central Government or State Government to prevent person from carrying on smuggling activities. Gimik Piotr v. State of Tamil

Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 924 : (2010) 1 SCC 609 : JT 2009 (14) SC 273.

[9094] ● Single instance of smuggling.—What emerges from the abovementioned cases is that even a single solitary act can prove the propensity and potentiality of the detenu to carry on with similar smuggling activities in future. The mere fact that on one occasion person smuggled goods into the country may constitute a legitimate basis for detaining a person under COFEPOSA. For this purpose, the antecedents of the person, facts and circumstances of the case need to be taken into consideration. Gimik Piotr v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 924 : 2010 (1) SCC 609 : JT 2009 (14) SC 273 : 2009 (13) Scale 706.

[9095] ● Section 3(1)(i), COFEPOSA Act—Preventive detention—Validity.—In the present case, the respondents seek to rely extensively on the confession statement made by the detenu, where he had admitted to be carrying the foreign policy in return for monetary consideration. In the statement made before the customs authorities, the appellant has only narrated his antecedents, the nature of business carried on by him while he was in Singapore and how he was induced to carry the foreign currency by a person who has business dealings in Singapore. In the statement so made, he has not even suggested that he had indulged himself in foreign currency smuggling activities earlier. It is not the case of the respondents that if he is not detained, he would indulge himself in foreign currency smuggling activity and it is their specific case that he may abet the smuggling activity. In matters of personal liberty, the standard of proof needs to be high to justify an order of preventive detention. In our considered view, there were no compelling reasons for the detaining authority to pass the impugned order. Therefore, the order of detention is unsustainable.

In the instant case as the facts reveal, that, there was no pressing need to curtail the liberty of a person by passing a preventive detention order. Foreign currency cannot be smuggled as the person cannot move out of the country on account of his passport being impounded. Merely because a person cannot otherwise survive in the country, is no basis to conclude that a person will again resort to smuggling activities, or abetting such activities by staying in the country. There is higher standard of proof required in these circumstances involving the life and liberty of a person. The material provided by the respondents is not enough to justify the curtailment of the liberty of the appellant under an order of preventive detention in the fact and circumstances of the case. Gimik Piotra v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 924 : (2010) 1 SCC 609 : 2010 CrLJ 877 (882, 883) (SC).

[9096] ● Object of the Act.—The object of the Act is to curb smuggling of foreign currencies and other valuable items from India to other countries which are having increasingly deleterious effect on national economy and thereby serious effect on security of State. Gimik Piotr v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 924 : (2010) 1 SCC 609 : JT 2009 (14) SC 273.

[9097] ● Compelling reasons for detention order.—The respondents contend that the confession made by the appellant proves that, the appellant is a part of a smuggling ring and hence his detention is warranted under the provisions of COFEPOSA. This submission of the respondent's learned counsel, in our view, has no merit. In the statement made before the customs authorities, the appellant has only narrated his antecedents, the nature of business carried on by him while he was in Singapore and how he was induced to carry the foreign currency by a person who has business dealings in Singapore. In the statement so made, he has not even suggested that he had indulged himself in foreign currency smuggling activities earlier. It is not the case of the respondents that if he is not detained, he would indulge himself in foreign currency smuggling activities and it is their specific case that he may abet the smuggling activity. In matters of personal liberty, the standard of proof needs to be high to justify an order of preventive detention. In our considered view, there were no compelling reasons for the detaining authority to pass the impugned order. Therefore, the order of detention is unsustainable. Gimik Piotr v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 924 : 2010 (1) SCC 609 : JT 2009 (14) SC 273 : 2009 (13) Scale 706.

CONSOLIDATION OF CASES

[9098] ● Consolidation of cases.—Consolidation of a police case and a complaint case is not permissible when the prosecution version on the police challan case and the complaint case are materially different, contradictory or mutually exclusive. Harjinder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1985 SC 404 : (1985) 1 SCC 422 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 93 : 1986 CrLJ 831 : 1986 Cr App R (SC) 26 : (1985) 1 SCWR 311 : 1985 SC Cr R 178 : (1984) 11 Cr LT 387 : 1985 BBCJ (SC) 38 : 1985 Pat LJR 32 : 1985 All Cr R 99 : (1985) 87 Punj LR 103.

[9099] ● Police report case and complaint case when clubbed together.—When a police report case and a complaint case are clubbed together, the cases should not be consolidated and that the evidence should be recorded separately in each case one after the other except to the extent that the witness for the prosecution who was common to both the cases be examined in one case and his evidence be availed as evidence in the other. Harjinder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1985 SC 404 : (1985) 1 SCC 422 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 93 : 1986 CrLJ 831.

CONSPIRACIES WHICH ARE SUBJECT MATTER OF TWO CASES, IF CAN BE ASSUMED TO BE ONE CONSPIRACY

SYNOPSIS

1. Omission in a charge of conspiracy 1867
2. Single conspiracy to cheat public is not converted into several conspiracies merely because of different acts of cheating different members etc.......................................1868
3. Section 120-B read with Opium Act Section 9 (a)...1869
4. Section 120 – B read with Section 135, Customs Act 1869

[9100] ● Conspiracy whether separate or one—Determination of.—The alleged object of the first conspiracy was to obtain possession of the pillars from the Court by cheating and to misappropriate them. The alleged object of the second conspiracy was the disposal of the stolen property by exporting the pillars to London. The offences alleged in the first case were Section 120-B read with Section 420 and Section 406, Indian Penal Code, while the offences alleged in the second case were Section 120-B read with Section 411, Indian Penal Code and Section 25 of the Antiquities and Art Treasures Act, 1972. It is true that the Antiquities and Art Treasure Act had not yet come into force on the date when the First Information Report was registered. It is also true that Omi Narang and Manu Narang were not extradited for the offence under the Antiquities and Art Treasures Act and, therefore, they could not be tried for that offence in India. But the question whether any of the accused may be tried for a contravention of the Antiquities and Art Treasures Act or under the corresponding provision of the earlier Act is really irrelevant in deciding whether the two conspiracies are one and the same.

Where the conspiracy discovered later is found to cover a much larger canvas with broader ramifications, it cannot be equated with the earlier conspiracy which covered a smaller field of narrower dimensions. We are clear, in the present case, that the conspiracies which are the subject-matter of the two cases cannot be said to be identical though the conspiracy which is the subject-matter of the first case may, perhaps, be said to have turned out to be part of the conspiracy which is the subject-matter of the second case. Ram Lal Narang v. State (Delhi Admn.), AIR 1979 SC 1791 : (1979) 2 SCC 322 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 479 : 1979 CrLJ 1346 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 154.

1. OMISSION IN A CHARGE OF CONSPIRACY

[9101] ● Omission in a charge of conspiracy.—Sections 221 and 222 of the Criminal Procedure Code which deal with the form and contents of the charge, require that the charge shall state the offence charged, the particulars of the time and place of the offence, and the person against whom it is committed. There is no statutory requirement to give the names of the fellow offenders. Therefore, when the offence charged is one under Section 120-B, Panel Code, it is not obligatory to state in the charge, the names of the fellow conspirators, though it is always desirable, that the charge should give their names in order to give to the accused, complete notice of the exact nature of the conspiracy alleged against them. But even assuming, that a charge in a case of conspiracy is defective, by reason of the omission of the names of all the fellow-conspirators, the effect of such omission is to be judged by the application of Sections 225, 232 and 537, CrPC and before a conviction can be set aside on this ground the appellate Court has to be satisfied that the omission has misled the accused in their defence, and has thus caused them prejudice by occasioning a failure of justice. If the convicted accused fail to satisfy the Court that they were so misled and prejudiced, the defect in the charge must be treated as having been cured by the provisions of Section 537, CrPC.

In the present case the prosecution case was that the offence of conspiracy had been committed by the five accused in the case together with one other person who had been made an approver.

The charge against each accused, however, mentioned that he along with "the other accused" committed the offence under Section 120-B and the charge did not give the name of the approver as having been privy to the conspiracy. On appeal to the Supreme Court one of the grounds taken against the legality of the trial was on the score of the defect in the charge arising out of the omission.

The omission of the name of the approver as having been privy to the conspiracy does not make the charge defective in law, but even assuming that it is, it is for the accused to show that he had been misled thereby and since the prosecution case from the beginning is entirely clear that the approver has taken part in the conspiracy from its inception along with the arraigned conspirators, it has to be held that the accused has not been misled in their defence in any way. Further, in view of the fact that the accused, who has been convicted did not raise any objection on the ground of such prejudice before the High Court when his appeal was heard, the Explanation to Section 537. CrPC applies, and he cannot be allowed, to urge the defect in the charge for the first time in his appeal to the Supreme Court. Bimbadhar Pradhan v. State of Orissa, AIR 1956 SC 469 : 1956 CrLJ 831 : 1956 SCA 857 : 1956 SCJ 441 : ILR (1956) Cut 409 : 1956 AWR (Sup) 89 : 1956 (2) MLJ (SC) 93.

2. SINGLE CONSPIRACY TO CHEAT PUBLIC IS NOT CONVERTED INTO SEVERAL CONSPIRACIES MERELY BECAUSE OF DIFFERENT ACTS OF CHEATING DIFFERENT MEMBERS ETC.

[9102] ● Single conspiracy to cheat public is not converted into several conspiracies merely because of different acts of cheating different members etc.—When only one conspiracy is formed with the object of cheating the members of the public, by offering to double currency notes, and it is in pursuance of that conspiracy that different members of the public are made to part with their moneys as a result of the deception practiced upon them by one or more of the conspirators, the fact that the conspiracy ran for several years, or that in course of time new members joined the original gang, or that several incidents of cheating took place at different times and different places in carrying out the object of the conspiracy, cannot change the character of that conspiracy and cannot go to convert one single conspiracy into several separate and distinct offences of conspiracy.

In such a case it makes no difference, whether the modus operandi employed in the different acts of cheating was the same or whether different ways of cheating were adopted for the purpose of inducing the victims to part with their moneys. The authority for joining the several acts of the accused under one charge of a single conspiracy was born of a single agreement between the conspirators, whether they were the original planners or whether they joined the common plan at a later stage after its inception, and not in the uniformity of the method of cheating which was adopted. Therefore, if on the facts on record it is established that the different instances of cheating were in pursuance of a single conspiracy to cheat, all those instances must be held to be parts of the same transaction. In such a case a charge of a single conspiracy against all the persons alleged to have agreed to the common plan is perfectly legal, and for the purpose of determining the legality of such a joint trial, consideration such as the long period covered by the conspiracy, the diversity in the different methods employed by different members thereof in carrying it out, and the spread of the net-work of the conspiracy over a vast area, are entirely immaterial. Swamirathnam, S. v. State of Madras, AIR 1957 SC 340 : 1957 CrLJ 422.

[9103] ● Conspiracy of issuing licenses in names of various fictitious firms.—A.G. Nelson, Assistant Controller of Imports, P.H. Shingrani, Upper Division Clerk in the Quota licensing section of the office of the Joint Chief Controller of Imports and Exports, Bombay, Shrichand Khetwani and Ramashanker Ramayan Bhargava were parties with other unknown persons to a criminal conspiracy and that, in pursuance of the said conspiracy, a number of licences in the name of several companies which has no existence were prepared. Some of these licenses were actually issued and that two of those licences issued were in the name of M.L. Trading Co., Bombay and were delivered to the appellant by Prabhaker Karnik, a postman, on May 15, 1959. The four conspirators were tried and all of them were convicted for an offence punishable under Section 120-B read with Section 409, IPC and Section 5(2) read with Section 5(1) (d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. On appeal, the High Court acquitted Bhargava and dismissed the appeals of the other three persons. Out of the three convicted persons, Shrichand Khetwani only preferred appeal to the Supreme Court by Special leave.

The charge, as framed, describes the conspiracy to be the agreeing of the various persons, including persons not put on trial, to do or cause to be done illegal acts. The acts to be done were the abuse of the official positions of Nelson and Shingrani for the issue of import licence in the names of bogus or unknown applicants on the basis of false particulars, etc; and the object of conspiring to do such acts by the persons in the conspiracy charged or not charged was to obtain pecuniary advantage. The charge of conspiracy was not that the conspiracy was entered into with each bogus individual firm for the benefit of that firm alone in connection with issue of licences to that particular firm. The charge was that out of the profits made from acts done in furtherance of the conspiracy, all the persons in the conspiracy were to benefit.

The finding that the various firms to whom licences were issued were fictitious is not questioned. The conspiracy was a general conspiracy to keep on issuing licences in the names of fictitious firms and to share the benefits arising out of those licences when no real person was the licensee. The various members of the conspiracy other than the two public servants must have joined with the full knowledge of the modus operandi of the conspiracy and with the intention and object of sharing the profits arising out of the acts of the conspirators. We do not, therefore, see that the mere fact that licences were issued in the name of eight different companies make out the case, against the appellant and other conspirators, to be a case of eight different conspiracies, each with respect to the licences issued to one particular fictitious company. Srichand K. Khetwani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1967 SC 450 : 1967 CrLJ 414 : (1967) 2 SCJ 178 : (1967) 1 SCWR 896 : (1967) SCD 1050 : 69 BomLR 313 : 1967 MPLJ 653 : 1967 MLJ (Cri) 609 : 1967 MahLJ 747.

3. SECTION 120-B READ WITH OPIUM ACT SECTION 9(A)

[9104] ● Section 120-B read with Opium Act Section 9(a).—In this case the appellants were convicted under the above sections. The plea of the appellants was that, each of them was living separately in the house, that they were not present at the time of the recovery of opium, and that it was possible for some outsider to have thrown the opium into the Court yard of the house. These pleas were all considered in detail by the trial Court and appellate Court as well as by the High Court in revision. The chance of any outsider having thrown the article into the Court-yard of the appellants had been eliminated, as it was found to be a place where various domestic articles were kept and had also been found to be a place in frequent use by the appellants and their presence had also been established at the time of the recovery. Hence, it was in their conscious possession. A further finding was that the presence of such a large quantity of opium could not have been possible without each of them taking the other into confidence. Hence, their conviction was correct. Appellants 2 and 3 were the sons of the first appellant and the fourth appellant was his nephew. Therefore, there was no legal error or infirmity committed by any of the Courts in arriving at that conclusion. Ashiq Miyan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1969 SC 4 : 1969 CrLJ 239 : 1969 SCD 193 : (1969) 1 SCJ 722 : (1968) 2 SCWR 668 : 1969 JabLJ 32 : 1968 MPWR 921 : 1968 BLJR 965 : 1969 MPLJ 200 : 1969 MahLJ 245 : 1968 ALJ 1058 : 1969 MLJ (Cri) 935 : (1968) 2 UmNP 924.

4. SECTION 120-B READ WITH SECTION 135, CUSTOMS ACT

[9105] ● Section 120-B read with Section 135, Customs Act.—Circumstances that the accused-appellant was found peeping into the flat which was being watched by the Customs Officials under orders of authorities, that he tried to run away on seeing the Customs Officials searching the premises, that he was in possession of duplicate keys of the flat and that he was found wearing a bandi which was special type of bandi suitable for carrying gold slabs secretly are not incompatible with his innocence. He was a close relative of A-12 who had been found to be the person really in charge of the flat and it would thus be natural for him to share the flat with the permission of A-12. In so living with his brother-in-law he might have been given to wear the bandi found on his person not for the purpose of carrying gold but just for use as ordinary raiment. Again, in a city like Bombay it was not unusual for persons sharing a particular accommodation to be provided with separate sets of keys for each in order to facilitate ingress or egress at will. Further, an innocent man finding his premises being watched by persons in authority might well feel funky at the prospect of a false implication on the basis of a mere suspicion (which might or might not be well founded) and might try to make himself scarce. Without more, the above circumstances, therefore, could not be regarded as incriminating circumstances. So the conviction of the appellant really rested on the confession attributed to him, which was found to be not voluntarily made and therefore untrustworthy. Conviction was set aside. Sevantilal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 705 : (1979) 2 SCC 58 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 360 : 1979 CrLJ 645 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 558 : (1979) 2 SCR 1160 : 1979 Cr AppR (SC) 119 : (1979) 3 Mah LR 122 : 1979 Chand LR (Cri) (SC) 165 : 1979 UJ (SC) 702.

1. MEANING AND IMPORT OF CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY

[9106] ● Meaning and import of criminal conspiracy.—In English law conspiracy first began as an agreement of persons who combined to carry on legal proceeding in vexatious or improper way. It is an offence at common law and was for a long time closely allied to attempts and was indeed often regarded as one form of attempt to commit a wrong. However in modern times conspiracy has become a separate crime and is defined as the agreement of two or more persons to effect any unlawful purpose, whether as their ultimate aim or only as a means to it. This definition presents four points for notice : (a) the actus reus. (b) the persons agreeing, (c) the purpose agreed upon, (d) mens rea : KENNY on outlines of Criminal Law, 19th edn. para 448. p. 426

[9107] ● Conspiracy consists in agreement of two or more persons to do unlawful act.—Conspiracy consists in the agreement of two or more persons to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. It is an indictable offence at common law, the punishment for which is imprisonment or fine or both in the discretion of the Court.

The essence of the offence of conspiracy is the fact of combination by agreement. The agreement may be express or implied, or in part express and in part implied. The conspiracy arises and the offence is committed as soon as the agreement is made; and the offence continues to be committed so long as the combination persists, that is until the conspiratorial agreement is terminated by completion of its performance or by abandonment or frustration or however it may be. HALSBURYS Laws of England, 4th edn. Vol 11, p. 44, para 58.

[9108] ● Criminal conspiracy Agreement gist of offence.—Criminal conspiracy is an agreement, by two or more persons to do, or cause to be done, an illegal act or an act, which is not illegal, by illegal means. The agreement is the gist of the offence. In order to constitute a single general conspiracy, there must be a common design and common intention of all to work in furtherance of the common design. Each conspirator plays his separate part in one integrated and united effort to achieve the common purpose. Each one is aware that he has a part to play in a general conspiracy though he may not know all its secrets or the means by which the common purpose is to be accomplished. The evil scheme may be promoted by a few, some may drop out and some may join at a later stage, but the conspiracy continues until it is broken up. The conspiracy may develop in successive stages. There may be a general plan to accomplish the common design by such means as may from time to time be found expedient. New techniques may be invented and new means may be devised for advancement of the common plan. A general conspiracy must be distinguished, from a number of separate conspiracies having a similar general purpose. Where different groups of persons co-operate towards their separate ends without any privity with each other, each combination constitutes a separate conspiracy. The common intention of the conspirators then is to work for the furtherance of the common design of his group only. Hussain Umar v. Dalipsinhji, AIR 1970 SC 45 : 1970 SC CrR 76 : 1970 CrLJ 9 : (1970) 1 SCJ 149 : 1970 SCD 58 : (1970) 1 SCR 130 : 1970 MLJ (Cri) 68 : 72 BomLR 774.

2. OBJECT OF SECTION 120-B.

[9109] ● Object to curb power to do mischief.—Law making conspiracy a crime, is designed to curb immoderate power to do mischief which is gained by a combination of the means. The encouragement and support which co-conspirators give to one another rendering enterprises possible which, if left to individual effort, would have been impossible, furnish the ground for visiting conspirators and abettors with condign punishment. Chaman Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 2009 SC 2972 : 2009 (11) SCC 721 : 2009 (5) SCR 351 : 2009 (5) Scale 12 : JT 2009 (4) (SC) 662.

[9110] ● Form of conspiracy.—The agreement may be express or implied, or in part express and in part implied. The conspiracy cases and the offence is committed as soon as the agreement is made; and the offence continues to be committed so long as the combination persists..... that is until the conspiratorial agreement is terminated by completion of its performance or by abandonment or frustration or however it may be. The actus reas in a conspiracy is the agreement to execute the illegal conduct, not the execution of it. It is not enough that the two or more persons pursued the same unlawful object at the same time or in the same place. It is necessary to show a meeting of minds, a consensus to effect an unlawful purpose. It is not however, necessary that each conspirator should have in communication with each other. Halsbury's Laws of England (Vide 4th Edn. Vol II, P 44, Para 58).

3. GIST AND INGREDIENTS

[9111] ● Gist and ingredients.—Conspiracy is a purely mental crime, consisting in the concurrence of the intentions of the parties. Here, as everywhere in our law, bare intention is no crime. 'Agreement', as Lord CHELMSFORD puts it clearly, is an act in advancement of the intention which each person has conceived in his mind'. It is not mere intention, but the announcement and acceptance of intensions. A distinction is to be drawn between the conspiracy and the overt acts which may be given as evidence of the conspiracy. Bodily movement, by word or gesture, is indispensable to effect it. In order of time, this precedes the act agreed upon. But the fact of the parties having come to such an arrangement suffices to constitute a conspiracy. Hence it is not necessary to show that they went on to commit some overt act towards carrying it out, though this (and also some consequent damage) would be necessary in an action of tort for conspiracy. It follows that a person may be convicted of a conspiracy as soon as it has been formed, and before any overt act to carry out the agreed purpose has been committed. The offence is complete as soon as the parties have agreed as to their unlawful purpose, although nothing has yet been settled as to the means and devices to be employed for effecting it. KENNY on Outlines of Criminal Law, 19th edn. Para 449 pp. 426-427.

[9112] ● Essential of offence—Agreement between two or move persons.—The gist of the offence under Section 120-A is that the agreement between two or more persons to do or cause to be done an illegal act or a legal act by illegal means subject to the proviso that the agreement does not except agreement to commit offence, amount to a conspiracy unless it is followed by an overt act done by one or more persons in pursuance of such an agreement. An agreement to do an illegal act which amounts to a conspiracy, will continue as long as the members of the conspiracy remain in agreement and as long as they are acting in accord and in furtherance of the object for which they entered into the agreement. Levart Schussler v. Director of Enforcement, New Delhi, AIR 1970 SC 549 : 1971 CrLJ 707 : (1971) 1 SCJ 199 : (1970) 2 SCR 760 : 1970 SCD 738.

[9113] ● Criminal conspiracy—Agreement gist of offence.—Criminal conspiracy as defined in Section 120A of the IPC is an agreement by two or more persons to do or cause to be done an illegal act or an act which is not illegal by illegal means. The agreement is the gist of the offence. In order to constitute a single general conspiracy there must be a common design and common intention of all to work in furtherance of the common design. Each conspirator plays his separate part in one integrated and united effort to achieve the common purpose. Each one is aware that he has a part to play in a general conspiracy though he may not know all its secrets or the means by which the common purpose is to be accomplished. The evil scheme may be promoted by a few, some may drop out and some may join at a later stage, but the conspiracy continues until it is broken up. The conspiracy may develop in successive stages. There may be a general plan to accomplish the common design by such means as may from time to time be found expedient. New techniques may be invented and new means may be devised for advancement of the common plan. A general conspiracy must be distinguished from a number of separator conspiracies having a similar general purpose. Where different groups of persons cooperate towards their separate ends without any privity with each other, each combination constitutes a separate conspiracy. The common intention of the conspirators then is to work for the furtherance of the common design of his group only. The cases illustrate the distinction between a single general conspiracy and a number of unrelated conspiracies. Mohd. Hussain Umar Kochra v. K.S. Dalipsinghji, AIR 1970 SC 45 : (1969) 3 SCC 429 : 1970 CrLJ 9 : 1970 (1) SCR 130.

[9114] ● Criminal conspiracy—Use of English cases.—Where there is a Code and where words have been designedly chosen in respect of a subject-matter, it is not proper to first go into the English cases on the subject without considering the words of the statute. Harihar Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1972) 3 SCC 89 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 409 : 1972 CrLJ 707.

[9115] ● Criminal conspiracy—Ingredients.—The principal object of the criminal conspiracy in the first charge was thus "cheating by personation", and without achieving that goal other acts would be of no material use in which any person could be necessarily interested. That the appellant himself did not personate another person, was beside the point when he was alleged to be a collaborator of the conspiracy with that object. Some persons had been individually and specifically charged with cheating by personation under Section 419, IPC. They were also charged along with the appellant under Section 120-B, IPC. The object of the criminal conspiracy was absolutely clear and there was no substance in the argument that the object was merely to cheat simpliciter under Section 417, IPC.

The offence of criminal conspiracy under Section 120-A is a distinct offence. The very agreement, concert or league is the ingredient of the offence. There must be unity of object or purpose but there may be plurality of means sometimes even unknown to one another, amongst the conspirators. It is not necessary that all the conspirators must know each and every detail of the conspiracy as long as they are co-participators in the main object of the conspiracy. There may be so many devices and techniques adopted to achieve the common goal of the conspiracy and there may be division of performances in the chain of actions with one object to achieve the real end of which every collaborator must be aware and in which each one of them must be interested. In achieving the goal several offences may be committed by some of the conspirators even unknown to the others. The only relevant factor is that all means adopted and illegal acts done must be and purported to be in furtherance of the object of the conspiracy even though there may be sometimes misfire or overshooting by some of the conspirators. Even if some steps are resorted to by one or two of the conspirators without the knowledge of the others, it will not affect the culpability of those others when they are associated with the object of the conspiracy. Yash Pal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 2433 : (1977) 4 SCC 540 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 5 : 1978 CrLJ 189 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 503 : 1977 Cr AppR (SC) 407 : 1978 ACrR 23 : 1978 CurLJ (Cri) 1 : 1978 SCCrR 55 : 1978 ACrC 10 : 1978 Chand LR (Cri) 106 (SC) : 1978 1 SCWR 349 : (1978) 1 SCR 781.

[9116] ● Conspiracy—Proof—Law in India similar to that in England.—Sections 120-A and 120-B have brought the law of conspiracy in India in line with the English Law by making the overt act unessential when the conspiracy is to commit any punishable offence. The most important ingredient of the offence of conspiracy is the agreement between two or more persons to do an illegal act. The illegal act may or may not be done in pursuance of agreement, but the very agreement is an offence and is punishable. Reference to Sections 120-A and 120-B IPC would make these aspects clear beyond doubt. Entering into an agreement by two or more persons to do an illegal act or legal act by illegal means is the very quintessence of the offence of conspiracy. Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1988 SC 1883 : (1988) 3 SCC 609 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 711 : 1988 CrLJ 1 : 1988 (3) Crimes 209 (SC).

[9117] ● Criminal conspiracy—Ingredients of.—The essential ingredient of the offence of criminal conspiracy is the agreement to commit an offence. In a case where the agreement is for accomplishment of an act which by itself constitutes an offence, then in that even no overt act is necessary to be proved by the prosecution because in such a situation criminal conspiracy is established by proving such an agreement. Where the conspiracy alleged is with regard to commission of a serious crime of the nature as contemplated in Section 120-B read with the proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 120-A, then in that event mere proof of an agreement between the accused for commission of. Such a crime alone is enough to bring about conviction under Section 120-B and the proof of any overt act by the accused or by any one of them would not be necessary. The provisions, in such a situation, do not require that each and every person who is a party to the conspiracy must do some overt act towards the fulfillment of the object of conspiracy, the essential ingredient being an agreement between the conspirators to commit the crime and if these requirements and ingredients are established, the act would fall within the trapping of the provisions contained in Section 120-B. Devender Pal Singh v. State of NCT of Delhi, AIR 2002 SC 1661 : (2002) 5 SCC 234 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 978 : 2002 CrLJ 2034 : (2002) 2 Crimes 133 (SC).

[9118] ● Criminal conspiracy, charge of.—So far as the charge under Section 120-B IPC is concerned, it stands proved by showing that two or more persons have agreed to do or cause to do an illegal act or an act which is not illegal by illegal means and that some overt act was done by one of the accused in pursuance of the same. Where their common object or design is itself to do an unlawful act, the specification of such act itself which formed their common design would suffice and it would even be unnecessary or superfluous to further substantial the means adopted by all or any of them achieve such object. All the more so, when their common object or design appears to be to commit a series of such serious crimes and proof of any overt act in such cases also is a mere surplus age and that mere proof that they or some of them were concerned in the overt acts alleged would, per se, go, long way to establish that there existed such agreement among them. Government of NCT of Delhi v. Jaspal Singh, (2003) 10 SCC 586 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 933 (941).

[9119] ● Privacy and secrecy more characteristics of conspiracy.—Privacy and secrecy are more characteristics of a conspiracy, than of a loud discussion in an elevated place open to public view. Direct evidence in proof of a conspiracy is seldom available; offence of conspiracy can be proved by either direct or circumstantial evidence. It is not always possible to give affirmative evidence about the date of the formation of the criminal conspiracy, about the persons who took part in the formation of the conspiracy, about the object, which the objectors set before themselves as the object of conspiracy, and about the manner in which the object of conspiracy is to be carried out, all this is necessarily a matter of inference. Sections 120-A and 120-B, IPC have brought the law of conspiracy in India in line with the English law by making an overt act unessential when the conspiracy is to commit any punishable offence. The most important ingredient of the offence being the agreement between two or more persons to do an illegal act. In a case where criminal conspiracy is alleged the Court must inquire whether the two persons are independently pursuing the same end or they have come together to pursue the unlawful object. The former does not render them conspirators but the latter does. For the offence of conspiracy some kind of physical manifestation of agreement is required to be established. The express agreement need not be proved. The evidence as to the transmission of thoughts sharing the unlawful act is not sufficient. A conspiracy is a continuing offence which continues to subsist till it is executed or rescinded or frustrated by choice of necessity. During its subsistence whenever anyone of the conspirators does an act or series of acts, he would be guilty under Section 120-B, IPC. Ram Narain Poply v. Central Bureau of Investigation, AIR 2003 SC 2748 : (2003) 3 SCC 641 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 869 (992, 994) : 2003 CrLJ 4801 : JT 2003 (1) SC 184 : (2003) 2 Crimes 312.

[9120] ● Criminal conspiracy—Element's of.—The elements of a criminal conspiracy have been stated to be (a) an object to be accomplished, (b) a plan or scheme embodying means to accomplish the object, (c) an agreement or understanding between two or more of the accused persons whereby, they become definitely committed to cooperate for the accomplishment of the object by the means embodied in the agreement, or by any effectual means, and (d) in the jurisdiction where the statute required an overt act. The essence of a criminal conspiracy is the unlawful combination and ordinarily the offence is complete when the combination is framed. From this, it necessarily follows that unless the statute so requires, no overt act need be done in furtherance of the conspiracy, and that the object of the combination need not be accomplished in order to constitute an indictable offence. Encouragement and support which co-conspirators give to one another rendering enterprises possible which, if left to individual effort, would have been impossible, furnish the ground for visiting conspirators and abettors with condign punishment. The conspiracy is held to be continued and renewed as to all its members wherever and whenever any member of the conspiracy acts in furtherance of the common design. (See American Jurisprudence, Vol. II, Section 23, p. 559). For an offence punishable under Section 120-B the prosecution need not necessarily prove that the perpetrators expressly agree to do or cause to be done illegal act; the agreement may be proved by necessary implication. Offence of criminal conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act by unlawful means. So long as such a design rests in intention only, it is not indictable. When two agree to carry it into effect, the very plot is an act in itself, and an act of each of the parties, promise against promise, actus contra capable of being enforced, if lawful, punishable if for a criminal object or for use of criminal means. K. Hashim v. State of T.N., AIR 2005 SC 128 : (2005) 1 SCC 237 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 292 (300) : 2005 CrLJ 143.

[9121] ● Conspiracy—Both approvers spoken of presence of A-2 during every transaction.—Both the approvers have spoken of the presence of A-2 during every transaction. He is not an innocent bystander as was tried to be contended. A stand was taken that there was no period indicated. Though in the examination-in-chief nothing was stated about the period but in the cross-examination by A-2 this matter was brought on record. The confession recorded by PW-19 amply proves the accusations. Though much was made of the fact that some of the seized notes were not produced in Court, the prosecution has explained this by bringing on record the fact that some of the seized notes were sent for the expert's view. There were two reports, one of the persons who had given the report was not available. But the authenticity of the report has been established by the other expert who was acquainted with the signature.

Judged on the background of the legal position as stated above the evidence of PWs-1 and 2 does not suffer from any infirmity to warrant rejection, for their evidence is not really uncorroborated as is submitted by learned counsel for the appellants. The evidence of PWs-8 and 19 clearly provides the materials. As noted above, even circumstantial evidence can provide the corroboration. In the instant case, the evidence of PWs-1 and 2, therefore, clearly meets the requirements of Section 114(b) in the background of Section 133 of the Evidence Act.

In view of the credible, cogent and reliable evidence tendered, the inevitable conclusion is that the appellants have been rightly convicted under Section 120-B read with Sections 489-A, 489-C and 489-D IPC and separately under Section 489-C of the Code. The sentences as imposed do not warrant interference, particularly in view of the object for which these provisions have been enacted. K. Hashim v. State of T.N., AIR 2005 SC 128 : (2005) 1 SCC 237 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 292 (299, 304, 306) : 2005 CrLJ 143.

[9122] ● Conspiracy—Proof of.—In the case of State v. Nalini, AIR 1999 SC 2640 : (1999) 5 SCC 253 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 691 : 1999 CrLJ 3124 : 1999 (2) Crimes 59. S.S.M. QUADRI, J., after a survey of case-law made the following pertinent observations : (SCC at pp. 568-69, para 662).

> "In reaching the stage of meeting of minds, two or more persons share information about doing an illegal act or a legal act by illegal means. This is the first stage where each is said to have knowledge of a plan for committing an illegal act or a legal act by illegal means. Among those sharing the information some or all may form an intention to do an illegal act or a legal act by illegal means. Those who do form the requisite intention would be parties to the agreement and would be conspirators but those who drop out cannot be roped in as collaborators on the basis of mere knowledge unless they commit acts or omissions from which a guilty common intention can be inferred. It is not necessary that all the conspirators should participate from the inception to the end of the conspiracy; some may join the conspiracy after the time when such intention was first entertained by any one of them and some others may quit from the conspiracy. All of them cannot but be treated as conspirators. Where in pursuance of the agreement the conspirators commit offences individually or adopt illegal means to do a legal act which has a nexus to the object of conspiracy, all of them will be liable for such offences even if some of them have not actively participated in the commission of those offences." State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1796) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[9123] ● Criminal conspiracy—Ingredients of.—In Yash Pal Mittal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 2433 : (1977) 4 SCC 540 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 5 : 1978 CrLJ 189. GOSWAMI, J., speaking for a three-Judge Bench analysed the legal position relating to criminal conspiracy. At SCC p. 543, para 9, the learned Judge observed that "the very agreement, concert or league is the ingredient of the offence" and that "it is not necessary that all the conspirators must know each and every detail of the conspiracy". It was then observed that : There must be unity of object or purpose but there may be plurality of means sometimes even unknown to one another, amongst the conspirators.

Every one of the conspirators need not take active part in the commission of each and every one of the conspirational acts. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1796) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[9124] ● Conspiracy—Tacit consents.—The criminal responsibility for a conspiracy requires more than a merely passive attitude towards an existing conspiracy. One who commits an overt act with knowledge of the conspiracy is guilty. And one who tacitly consents to the object of a conspiracy and goes along with other conspirators, actually standing by while others put the conspiracy into effect, is guilty though he intends to take no active part in the crime. State v. Naline, (1999) 5 SCC 253 : (1999) SCC (Cri) 691 referred to; State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1798) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[9125] ● Vague allegations.—In a case where conspiracy to issue false certificate was alleged against the senior offences of a company. In a letter written to alleged conspirators, M.D. of the company by the complainant regarding issuance of false certificate it was claimed that the M.D. Of the company did not raise any objection to the issuance of false certificate in question. It was held that the allegations of conspiracy were too vague and non-specific and therefore charge of conspiracy was not warranted. J.J. Irani v. State of Jharkhand, (2004) 13 SCC 106 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 755.

[9126] ● Conspiracy—Substantive offence—No need for overt act.—Sections 120-A and 120-B made conspiracy a substantive offence and rendered the mere agreement to commit an offence punishable. Even if an overt act does not take place pursuant to the illegal agreement, the offence of conspiracy would still be attracted. The gist of the offence is an agreement to break the law. The parties to such an agreement will be guilty of criminal conspiracy, though the illegal act agreed to be done has not been done. So too, it is not an ingredient of the offence that all the parties should agree to do a single illegal act. It may comprise the commission of a number of acts. If there is proof to the effect that the accused played a role, attended to certain things or took steps consistent with the common design underlying the conspiracy, that will go a long way in establishing the complicity of the accused, though it is not a legal requirement that the conspirator should do any particular act beyond the agreement to commit the offence. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1794, 1795, 1803) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[9127] ● Conspiracy—Nature of agreement.—Sections 120-A and 120-B were brought on the statute book by way of amendment to IPC in 1913. The Statement of Objects and Reasons to the amending Act reveals that the underlying purpose was to make a mere agreement to do an illegal act or an act which is not illegal by illegal means punishable under law. This definition is almost similar to the definition of conspiracy, which we find in Halsbury's Laws of England. The definition given therein is :

> "58. Conspiracy consists in the agreement of two or more persons to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. It is an indictable offence at common law.... The essence of the offence of conspiracy is the fact of combination by agreement. The agreement may be express or implied, or in part express and in part implied.... and the offence continues to be committed so long as the combination persists, that is until the conspiratorial agreement is terminated by completion of its performance or by abandonment or frustration or however it may be."

In America, the concept of criminal conspiracy is no different. In American Jurisprudence, 2nd Edn., Vol. 16, p. 129, the following definition of conspiracy is given :

> "A conspiracy is said to be an agreement between two or more persons to accomplish together a criminal or unlawful act or to achieve by criminal or unlawful means an act not in itself criminal or unlawful .... The unlawful agreement and not its accomplishment is the gist or essence of the crime of conspiracy." State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1795) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[9128] ● Conspiracy.—While appreciating the evidence of the conspiracy, it is incumbent on the Court to keep in mind the well-known rule governing circumstantial evidence viz. each and every incriminating circumstance must be clearly established by reliable evidence and the circumstances proved must form a chain of events from which the only irresistible conclusion about the guilt of the accused can be safely drawn, and no other hypothesis against the guild is possible. Criminal conspiracy is an independent offence in the Penal Code. The unlawful agreement is sine qua non for constituting offence under the Penal Code and not an accomplishment. Conspiracy consists of the scheme or adjustment between two or more persons which may be express or implied or partly express and partly implied. Mere knowledge, even discussion, of the plan would not per se constitute conspiracy. The offence of conspiracy shall continue till the termination of agreement. It is true that in most of the cases, it is not possible to prove the agreement between the conspirators by direct evidence but the same can be inferred from the circumstances giving rise to conclusive or irresistible inference of an agreement between two or more persons to commit an offence.

It is cumulative effect of the proved circumstances which should be taken into account in determining the guilt of the accused. Of course, each one of the circumstances should be proved beyond reasonable doubt. The acts or conduct of the parties must be conscious and clear enough to infer their concurrence as to the common design and its execution. K.R. Purushothaman v. State of Kerala, AIR 2006 SC 35 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 686 (692, 693) : 2005 CrLJ 4648 : JT 2005 (9) SC 38 : 2005 (4) Crimes 191.

[9129] ● Requirements.—A criminal conspiracy must be put to action inasmuch as so long a crime is generated in the mind of an accused, it does not become punishable—What is necessary is not thoughts, which may even be criminal in character, often involuntary, but offence would be said to have been committed thereunder only when that take concrete shape of an agreement to do or cause to be done an illegal act or an act which although not illegal by illegal means and then if nothing further is done the agreement would give rise to a criminal conspiracy—Words and Phrases —Criminal conspiracy—Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988—Section 13(1)(d)(ii) & (iii). State of Madhya Pradesh v. Sheetla Sahai, 2009 (8) SCC 617 : 2009 CrLJ 4436 : 2009 (12) SCR 1048 : 2009 (10) Scale 632. TO THE SAME EFFECT : R. Venkatakrishnan v. Central Bureau of Investigation, AIR 2010 SC 1812 : (2009) 11 SCC 737 : 2009 (12) SCR 762 : JT 2009 (10) (SC) 597.

[9130] ● Ingredients of offence.—The ingredients of Section 120A, IPC are (i) an agreement between two or more persons, (ii) an agreement must relate to doing or causing to be done either (a) an illegal act; (b) an act which is not illegal in itself but is done by illegal means.

What is, therefore, necessary is to show meeting of minds of two or more persons for doing or causing to be done an illegal act or an act by illegal means. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Sheetla Sahai, 2009 (8) SCC 617 : 2009 (12) SCR 1048 : 2009 (10) Scale 632. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 6 SCC 564 : 2009 (7) SCR 855 : 2009 (3) Crimes 8 (SC). (2) Sudhir Shantilal Mehta v. CBI, (2009) 8 SCC 1 : 2009 (2) SCR 682 : JT 2009 (10) (SC) 554.

[9131] ● Scope of Section 120A—Ingredients.––The ingredients of the offence of criminal conspiracy are: (i) an agreement between two or more persons; (ii) an agreement must relate to doing or causing to be done either (a) an illegal act; (b) an act which is not illegal in itself but is done by illegal means. Condition precedent for holding the accused persons to be guilty of a charge of criminal conspiracy must, therefore, be considered on the anvil of the fact which must be established by the prosecution, viz., meeting of minds of two or more persons for doing or causing to be done an illegal act or an act by illegal means. The Courts, however, while drawing an inference from the materials brought on record to arrive at a finding as to whether the charges of the criminal conspiracy have been proved or not, must always bear in mind that a conspiracy is hatched in secrecy and it is difficult, if not impossible, to obtain direct evidence to establish the same. The manner and circumstances in which the offences have been committed and the accused persons took part are relevant. For the said purpose, it is necessary to prove that the propounders had expressly agreed to it or caused it to be done, and it may also be proved consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act by unlawful means. So long as such a design rests in intention only, it is not indictable. When two agree to carry it into effect, the very plot is an act in itself, and an act of each of the parties, promise against promise, actus contra actum, capable of being enforced, if lawful, punishable if for a criminal object or for use of criminal means. Chaman Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 2009 SC 2972 : (2009) 11 SCC 721 : 2009 (5) SCR 351.

[9132] ● Essence of criminal conspiracy.—The essence of criminal conspiracy is the unlawful combination and ordinarily the offence is complete when the combination is framed. From this it necessarily fallows that unless the statute so requires, no overt act need be done in furtherance of the conspiracy, and that the object of the combination need not be accomplished in order to constitute an indictable offence. Chaman Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 2009 SC 2972 (2974) : (2009) 11 SCC 721 : 2009 (5) SCR 351.

[9133] ● Elements of criminal conspiracy.—The elements of a criminal conspiracy have been stated to be : (a) an object to be accomplished, (b) a plan or scheme embodying means to accomplish that object, (c) an agreement or understanding between two or more of the accused persons whereby, they become definitely committee to cooperate for the accomplishment of the object by the means embodied in the agreement, or by any effectual means, and (d) in the jurisdiction where the statute required an overt act. Chaman Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 2009 SC 2972 : (2009) 11 SCC 721 : 2009 (5) SCR 351 : 2009 (5) Scale 12.

[9134] ● Conspiracy consists in agreement between parties.—A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act by unlawful means, so long as such a design rests on intention only, it is not indictable. When two agree to carry it into effect, the very plot is an act in itself and an act of each of the parties, promise against promise, actus contra actum, capable of being enforced, if lawful, punishable if for a criminal object or for use of criminal means. Chaman Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 2009 SC 2972 (2974) : (2009) 11 SCC 721 : 2009 (3) SCR 351 : JT 2009 (4) SC 662.

4. OVERT ACT—NEED

[9135] ● Overt Act—Need.—The actus reus in a conspiracy is the agreement to execute the illegal conduct, not the execution of it. It is not enough that two or more persons pursued the same unlawful object at the same time or in the same place; it is necessary to show a meeting of minds, a consensus to effect an unlawful purpose. It is not, however, necessary that each conspirator should have been in communication with every other. Turning to the Expl. To Section 120-A, it may be found that no proof of any overt act is necessary for the metamorphosis of an agreement to criminal conspiracy when the agreement is to commit an offence. But some overt act is needed for, other types of agreements to do some act to amount to criminal conspiracy. HALSBURY'S Laws of England, Vol. 11 para 58 P 44.

[9136] ● Criminal conspiracy postulates agreement between two or more persons.—Criminal conspiracy under Section 120-B postulates an agreement between two or more persons to do or cause to be done, an illegal act or legal act by illegal means. Under Section 120-B a mere agreement to commit an offence is an offence even of no step is taken to carry out the agreement. Noor Mohammad v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1971 SC 885 : (1970) 1 SCC 696 : 1971 CrLJ 793 : (1971) 1 SCJ 43 : (1971) 1 SCR 119.

[9137] ● Offence of conspiracy distinct offence.—The offence of criminal conspiracy is a distinct offence. The very agreement, concert or league is the ingredient of the offence. There must be unity of object or purpose but there may be plurality of means sometimes even unknown to one another, amongst the conspirators. It is not necessary that all the conspirators must know each and every detail of the conspiracy as long as they are co-participators in the main object of the conspiracy. There may be so many devices and techniques adopted to achieve the common goal of the conspiracy and there may be division of performances in the chain of actions with one object to achieve the real end of which every collaborator must be aware and in which each one of them must be interested. In achieving the goal several offences may be committed by some of the conspirators even unknown to the others. The only relevant factor is that all means adopted and illegal acts done must be and purported to be in furtherance of the object of the conspiracy even though there may be sometimes misfire or overshooting by some of the conspirators. Even if some steps are resorted to by one or two the conspirators without the knowledge of the others, it will not affect the culpability of those others when they are associated with the object of the conspiracy. Yash Pal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 2433 : (1977) 4 SCC 540 : 1978 CrLJ 189.

[9138] ● Everyone of conspirators need not have taken active part.—Every one of the conspirators need not have taken active part in the commission of each and every one of the conspiratorial acts and it is not only then, the offence of conspiracy will be mode out. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Kishan Lal, AIR 1987 SC 773 : (1987) 2 SCC 17 : 1987 CrLJ 709.

5. ILLEGAL ACT

[9139] ● Illegal Act.—Under the principle contained in Section 10 of the Evidence Act, once a conspiracy to commit an illegal act is proved, act of one conspirator becomes the act of the other. Shivanarayan Laxminarayan Joshi v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1980 SC 439 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 493 : 1980 CrLJ 388 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 1 : 1980 CAR 78.

[9140] ● Everyone of conspirators need not take part in illegal act.—Everyone of the conspirators need not take part in the illegal act or in illegal means to achieve the conspiratory act, to make up conspiracy. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Kishanlal, AIR 1987 SC 733 : (1987) 2 SCC 17 : 1987 CrLJ 709.

[9141] ● Entire gist of conspiracy agreement to commit offence.—Similarly in a case certain office bearers and members of cooperative society sanctioned the loan to 16 members of society but instead of making payment to them misappropriated it. It was held that all were guilty for committing offence under Section 120-A. The entire gist of conspiracy is the agreement to commit the offence. Sixteen members, as per evidence, did not receive the loan in the manner alleged by the accused as certain cultivator-members did not take the loan but on records it was shown that the disbursement was made to each one of them. Sambhu Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 1595 : 1994 CrLJ 1584 (SC).

[9142] ● Criminal conspiracy—Ingredient.—To establish the charge of conspiracy knowledge about indulgence in either an illegal act or a legal act by illegal means is necessary. The prosecution has not to establish that a particular unlawful use was intended, so long as the goods or services in question could not be put to any lawful use. When the ultimate offence consists of chain of actions, it would not be necessary for the prosecution to establish, to prove the charge of conspiracy, that each of the conspirator had the knowledge of what collaborator would do, so long as it is known that the collaborator would put the goods or services to an unlawful use. State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, AIR 1996 SC 1744 : (1996) 4 SCC 659 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 820 : 1996 CrLJ 2448 : 1996 (2) Crimes 64.

6. TWO OR MORE PERSONS REQUIRED

[9143] ● Two or more persons required.—The need of two or more parties to constitute a conspiracy, may produce two interesting consequences namely,

(a) A Director who is the 'one man' of a 'one man' company cannot be convicted of conspiring with the company in spite of the fact that a company can be held guilty of conspiracy and is in law a separate entity from its directors. This is because, in order that there should be a conspiracy, there must be an agreement between two minds, and the director's mind is that of the company only in a purely artificial sense. A company can be convicted of conspiring with several of its directors, but presumably the rule with regard to the one man company would prevent two companies with the same 'one man' from being convicted of conspiring together.

(b) A husband and wife who are the only parties to an agreement cannot be guilty of conspiracy, a rule which has been held recently not to apply to the tort of conspiracy. It remains undecided whether the rule applies to a husband and wife whose marriage is of a type which is actually or potentially polygamous. It seems odd that if a husband and wife agree between themselves to commit an offence they cannot be convicted of conspiracy, whereas if the substantive offence is committed they can both be convicted of that offence. A husband and wife can be convicted of conspiring together with a third party. C. ROSS & JONES on Introduction to Criminal Law, 9th edn. Para 17.7 pp. 342-343

[9144] ● Conviction of one person for conspiracy.—By the terms of Section 120-A there must be an agreement between two or more persons to commit an offence for the purpose of constituting the offence of criminal conspiracy. One person alone cannot be held guilty of the charge for the simple reason that one man cannot conspire with himself. Therefore, if upon a charge of criminal conspiracy against several persons all the accused except one are acquitted, the remaining one also must be acquitted of that charge, unless the charge against him has been that he conspired to commit an offence not only with the acquitted co-accused but also with some other persons who have not been tried in the same case along with the others (for instance, an offender who cannot be traced), and such a charge has been proved. When all the accused except one are acquitted of the charge under Section 120-B and the prosecution case has been that the offence was committed by them alone, conviction of the remaining single accused on that charge is illegal even though he may have made a confession of conspiracy with the co-accused, or he may have pleaded guilty to the charge when questioned in Court. In the present case four accused were charged before a Magistrate under Section 120-B read with Sections 471 and 420 and also with substantive offences under those sections. The prosecution case was that they conspired to use forged documents and thereby induced the Controller of Imports to grant import licences. The Magistrate acquitted all the accused on all the charges. On appeal by the State, the High Court confirmed the acquittal of Accused Nos. 2, 3 and 4 but reversed the acquittal of Accused No. 1 and convicted him not only of the substantive offences of which he was charged, but also under Section 120-B. In view of the fact that the charge under Section 120-B as framed has been levelled against four named individuals who are the four accused in the case, and is not a charge against them and other persons unknown, the conviction of Accused No. 1 alone on that charge is clearly illegal. Conviction under Section 120-B is set aside, though his conviction for the substantive offences under Sections 471 and 420, Penal Code, is not interfered with. Topandas v. State of Bombay, AIR 1956 SC 33 : 1956 CrLJ 138 : 1955 SCA 74 : 1956 SCJ 86 : 1956 AWR (Sup) 24 : 1956 BLJR 139 : 1956 NLJ 204 : 1956 ALJ 161 : 1956 1 MLJ (SC) 60 : 1955 (2) SCR 881 : 58 BomLR 492 : 58 PunLR 178.

[9145] ● Accused charged with having conspired to do certain illegal acts.—The scope of the offence of criminal conspiracy defined in Section 120-A and made punishable in Section 120-B of the Penal Code is as under. The gist of the offence is an agreement to break the law. The parties to an agreement are all guilty of criminal conspiracy whether the illegal act agreed to be done has been done or has not been done. So too, it is not an ingredient of the offence that all the accused should agree to do single illegal act. The conspiracy may comprise the commission of a number of illegal acts. Where the accused are charged with having conspired to do different categories of illegal acts, the mere fact that all of them could not be convicted separately in respect of each of the offences has no relevance in considering the question—whether the offence of conspiracy has been committed by them all. They are all guilty of the offence of conspiracy to do illegal acts, though all of them may not be liable for all the individual offences for committing which the conspiracy was formed. In the present case, six persons were charged under Section 120-B Penal Code in respect of offences under the Prevention of Corruption Act, and of them three were public servants and three were not public servants. Such a charge is perfectly legal, even though it is true that the offences under the Act can be committed only by public servants. Barsay, Major E.G. v. State of Bombay, AIR 1961 SC 1762 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 828.

[9146] ● Conspiracy—Not necessary that each member to know all details of.—The accused was chosen for the purpose of the conspiracy because he had connection, both, with the Union Agencies and with Asia Udyog Ltd. He was in employment of Dalmia concern for a long time and as Director of Union Agencies knew that it had suffered heavy losses as a result of share speculation business and must have known how the funds, to meet the losses were secured from the funds of the Insurance Company, through Bhagwati Trading Company. He must have also known that this was wrong. It is only with knowledge that he could have been a party to the making of the false advices and vouchers. There could be no other reason. It could not have been possible for the prosecution to lead direct evidence about accused's knowledge, with respect to the full working of the scheme to provide for the losses of the Union Agencies from the funds of the Insurance Company. It is further not necessary, that each member of a conspiracy must know all the details of the conspiracy. R.K. Dalmia v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1962 SC 1821 : 1962 (2) CrLJ 805 : (1962) 32 Com Cas 699.

[9147] ● Offence of conspiracy not to survive acquittal of alleged conspirators.—The offence of conspiracy cannot survive the acquittal of the alleged co-conspirators. Fakhruddin cannot be convicted unless there be proof that he had conspired with person or persons other than his co-accused. If all the other accused have been acquitted of the charge of conspiracy, Fakhruddin alone cannot be held guilty. Moreover, the offences charged are such that they could have been perpetrated by different persons acting in the same manner but independently and the large number of petitions does not show per se that there was necessarily a conspiracy. When it must have been known that there was no verification, persons wishing to take advantage, need not have conspired for they could act on their own and similarity of method followed by them does not establish a planned operation by consensus. The charge of conspiracy must fail and Fakhruddin must, therefore, be acquitted of that charge and the sentence passed under that charge against him is set aside. Fakhruddin v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1967 SC 1326 : 1967 CrLJ 1197 : 1967 SCD 495 : (1967) 1 SCWR 449 : (1967) 2 SCA 135 : (1967) 2 SCJ 885 : 1967 ALJ 303 : 1967 AWR (HC) 322 : 1967 ACrR 222 : (1967) 2 ALT 38 : 1967 LLJR 318 : 1967 Jab LJ 441 : 1967 MPLJ 473 : 1967 MahLJ 571 : 1967 MLJ (Cri) 925.

[9148] ● Conspiracy—Agreement to do illegal act.—Where the agreement between the accused is a conspiracy to do or continue to do something which is illegal, it is immaterial whether the agreement to do any of the acts in furtherance of the commission of the offence does not strictly amount to an offence. The entire agreement must be viewed as a whole and it has to be ascertained as to what or fact the conspirators intended to do or the object they wanted to achieve— Lennart v. Director of Enforcement, AIR 1970 SC 549 : (1970) 1 SCC 152 : 1970 CrLJ 707 : 1970 SCD 738.

[9149] ● Criminal conspiracy—Agreement to acquire foreign exchange contrary to provision of FERA.—In these two appeals, against the judgment of the High Court dismissing the petitions of the appellants for quashing the complaint filed against them under Section 120-B, IPC, and Sections 4(3), 5 (1) (a) and 9 of the FERA, the facts were : The complainant reviewed information that A-2, Managing Director of the Rayala Corporation Ltd. was utilizing his position in acquiring foreign exchange illicitly. Some documents were recovered from the premises of A-2 on 20-12-1966. A-1 a Swedish national, was the export manager of the Swedish firm known as ASSAB. In August, 1963 A-2 met A-1 and agreed to purchase certain raw materials from ASSAB. A-2 informed A-1, that the arrangements made between him and the ASSAB was to over-invoice the value of the goods by 40% of the true value, and that he should be paid the difference of 40% thus received by crediting it to his personal account, and that since under the laws of India the said acquisition by him was unlawful and had to be kept secret, it should not be mentioned in the correspondence with Rayala Corporation by the Swedish firm. A-2 requested A-1 to help him in opening the account in a Swedish Bank in order to credit the difference in his personal account and A-1 agreed to do so. From time to time ASSAB was to intimate to A-1 the various amounts credited to A-2's account and A-1 was to keep a watch over the correctness of the account and to further intimate to A-2 the account position from time to time through unofficial channels and whenever A-1 came to India. Thus A-1 and A-2 were alleged to have contravened Sections 4(3), 5(1)(e) and 9 of the FERA and Rule 133-A of DOI (Amendment) Rules between August, 1963 and 1966. A combined effect of the several provisions of Section 21of the Act does not lead to the view that sub-section (1) covers a case of criminal conspiracy similar to Section 120-B IPC. Section 21 does not in terms deal with an agreement to commit an offence or a legal act in an illegal way but merely provides that an agreement or contract by itself ought not to evade or avoid the provisions of the Act. The contracts or agreements under Section 21 (1) are those which are entered into during the course of commercial transactions and it is the intention of the legislation to prohibit that such contracts or agreements ought not to provide for the evasion or avoidance of any of the provisions of the Act either directly or indirectly. The words directly or indirectly do not take in any agreement to do illegal acts in future. The entire agreement should be viewed as a whole and it had to be ascertained as to what in fact the conspirators intended to do or the object they wanted to achieve. Though initially the agreement between A-1 and A-2 might not have been an offence, it was an offence subsequently as A-1 did not withdraw from it and was said to have continued to carry out that agreement and A-1's help was necessary for A-2's design because otherwise he would not know whether ASSAB was in fact crediting his account with the Bank with the amount of over-invoice. The knowledge that the amount was being credited from time to time was an essential part of the agreement between them, and would be in furtherance of illegal and unlawful design to acquire foreign exchange contrary to the provisions of Act. Therefore, A-1 and A-2 could be charged with an offence, under Section 120-B. Appeals were dismissed. Lennart v. Director of Enforcement, AIR 1970 SC 549 : (1970) 1 SCC 152 : 1970 CrLJ 707 : 1970 SCD 738.

[9151] ● Charge against two persons of conspiracy.—Since conspiracy requires at least two persons, where two or more named persons only were charged and all but one of them were acquitted, the remaining accused could not be convicted under Section 120-B IPC, as he could not conspire with himself. Bhagat Ram v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1972 SC 1502 : (1972) 2 SCC 466 : 1972 CrLJ 909 (SC).

7. THERE MUST BE MEETING OF MINDS

[9152] ● There must be meeting of minds.—For proof of criminal conspiracy, there must be direct or circumstantial evidence to show that there was an agreement between two or more persons to commit an offense. This clearly envisages, that there must be a meeting of minds resulting in an ultimate decision taken by the conspirators regarding the commission of an offence. True in most cases it would be difficult to get direct evidence of an agreement to conspire but a conspiracy can be inferred, even from circumstances giving rise to a conclusive or irresistible inference of an agreement between two or more persons to commit an offence. State (Delhi Admn.) v. V.C. Shukla, AIR 1980 SC 1382 : (1980) 2 SCC 665 : 1980 SCCrR 345 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 561 : 1980 CrLJ 965 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 301.

[9153] ● Criminal conspiracy to be established.—Conspiracy under Section 120-B postulates an agreement between two or more persons to do, or cause to be done, an illegal or legal act by illegal means. Under Section 120-B a mere agreement is offence, even if no step is taken to carry out the agreement. Though there is a close association of conspiracy with incitement and abetment, the substantive offence of criminal conspiracy is somewhat wider in amplitude than abetment by conspiracy as contemplated by Section 107 of IPC. To substantiate a charge under Section 120-B there must be a criminal conspiracy at least between two or more persons. When there is absence of evidence of association of a particular accused with the conspiracy, charge against him must fall. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Sukbasi, AIR 1985 SC 1224 : 1985 Supp SCC 79 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 387 : 1985 CrLJ 1479 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 380 : 1985 (2) Crimes 465.

[9154] ● Conspiracy—Proof.—The offence of criminal conspiracy consists in a meeting of minds of two or more persons for agreeing to do or causing to be done an illegal act or an act by illegal means, and the performance of an act in terms thereof. In pursuance of the criminal conspiracy the conspirators commit several offences, then all of them will be liable for the offences even if some of them had not actively participated in the commission of the offences. Every one of the conspirators need not have taken active part in the commission of each and every one of the conspiratorial acts and it is not only then, the offence of conspiracy will be made out. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Kishan Lal, AIR 1987 SC

773 : (1987) 2 SCC 17 : 1987 CrLJ 709 : JT 1987 SC 349 : (1987) 1 (1) IJ Rep 393.

[9155] ● Conspiracy to kill former Prime-Minister—Point laid down relating to conspiracy by Supreme Court.—The former prime minister, Rajiv Gandhi was killed in bomb blast as a result of conspiracy to eliminate him and the same was proved successful. The High Court had awarded death sentence to all 26 accused but Supreme Court on appeal had partly reversed the decision and had laid down important point relating to conspiracy which was hatched by the accused persons. These are :—

(a) Association of accused with one of main accused or even his knowledge about conspiracy would not make him conspirator as agreement is sine quo non of agreement.

(b) Accused harbouring main accused persons knowing fully well their involvement in the commission of offence is itself not sufficient to infer that he was member of conspiracy.

(c) If accused had no knowledge of conspiracy as per evidence produced then his mere association with main conspirator would not make him member of the conspiracy.

(d) If main conspirator is looking after the welfare of the accused who has lost his leg and meeting his medical expenses, then in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that would not import accused with the knowledge of conspiracy.

(e) Wireless message showed that only main accused conspirators knew the object of conspiracy. So if accused said that he had strong suspicion that targeted person was Rajiv Gandhi, but it would certainly not make him member of conspiracy without something more.

(f) It is not necessary for the conspirator to be present at the scene of crime. If evidence showed that the accused was in thick of conspiracy then his plea that he derived the knowledge of incident after the explosion is not tenable specially when he himself had purchased the battery which he knew will be used for explosion of human bomb.

(g) Mere association with LTTE hard core militant or the fact that those militants turned out to be the persons responsible for the killing of Rajiv Gandhi, would not make them member of any conspiracy to kill the targeted person.

In this case the accused found responsible for killing were awarded death sentence u/s. 302/120B and those who had not played pivotal role were awarded imprisonment for life and those responsible for attempting to destroy evidence in order to save the accused from being apprehended and had provided them with shelter was convicted u/s. 212 and lessor punishment was awarded to him but his wife was acquitted as her only fault was that she was living with accused husband in the house where the shelter to main culprits was provided. State of Tamil Nadu v. Nalini, AIR 1999 SC 2640 : (1999) 5 SCC 253 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 691 : 1999 CrLJ 3124.

[9156] ● Statement by one conspirator in absence of other with reference to past acts done in actual course of carrying out of conspiracy.—The opening words in Section 10 are "where there is reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons have conspired together to commit an offence". If prima facie evidence of the existence of a conspiracy is given and accepted, the evidence of acts and statements made by any one of the conspirators in furtherance of the common object is admissible against all. Therefore, there should first be a prima facie evidence that the person was a party to the conspiracy before his acts or statements can be used against his co-conspirators. No worthwhile prima facie evidence apart from the alleged confessions have been brought to our notice to show that the petitioner along with A-2 and A-4 was party to a conspiracy. The involvement of the petitioner and A-2 and A-4 in the alleged conspiracy is sought to be established by the confessions themselves. The correct import of Section 10 was explained by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Mirza Akbar v. King Emperor, AIR 1940 PC 176 : 41 CrLJ 871, as under : (AIR p. 177)

> "The words of Section 10 are not capable of being widely construed so as to include a statement made by one conspirator in the absence of the other with reference to past acts done in the actual course of carrying out the conspiracy, after it has been completed. The words 'common intention' signify a common intention existing at the time when the thing was said, done or written by one of them. Things said, done or written while the conspiracy was on foot are relevant as evidence of the common intention, once reasonable ground has been shown to believe in its existence. But it would be a very different matter to hold that any narrative or statement or confession made to a third party after the common intention or conspiracy was no longer operating and had ceased to exist is admissible against the other party. There is then no common intention of the conspirators to which the statement can have reference." Jayendra Sarawathi Swamigal v. State of T.N., AIR 2005 SC 716 : (2005) 2 SCC 13 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 481 : 2005 CrLJ 883 : 2005 (1) Crimes 113.

[9157] ● What is conspiracy—Inference from circumstances.—It is manifest that the meeting of minds of two or more persons for doing an illegal act or an act by illegal means is sine qua non of the criminal conspiracy but it may not be possible to prove the agreement between them by direct proof. Nevertheless, existence of the conspiracy and its objective can be inferred from the surrounding circumstances and the conduct of the accused. But the incriminating circumstances must form a chain of events from which a conclusion about the guilt of the accused could be drawn. Yogesh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2008 SC 1116 : 2008 (10) SCC 394 : 2008 CrLJ 3872 : 2008 (6) SCR 1116 : 2008 (6) JT 299 : 2008 (6) Scale 469 : 2008 (6) SRJ 457 : 2008 (2) Crimes 263.

8. PROOF, MODE OF

[9158] ● Conspiracy proof of inferential.—In most cases proof of conspiracy is largely inferential though the inference must be founded on solid facts. Surrounding circumstances and antecedents and subsequent conduct among other factors, constitute relevant material. Noor Mohammad Mohd. Yusuf Momin v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1971 SC 855 : (1970) 1 SCC 696 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 274 : 1971 CrLJ 793.

[9159] ● Criminal Conspiracy—Proof.—In most cases it will be difficult to give direct evidence of an agreement to conspire but a conspiracy can be inferred from circumstances giving rise to a conclusive or irresistible inference of an agreement between two or more persons to commit an offence. V.C. Shukla v. State (Delhi Admn.), AIR 1980 SC 1382 : (1980) 2 SCC 665 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 561 : 1980 CrLJ 965.

[9160] ● Conspiracy, inference of.—Generally, a conspiracy is hatched in secrecy and it may be difficult to adduce direct evidence of the same. The prosecution will often rely on evidence of acts of various parties to infer that they were done with reference to their common intention. The prosecution will also more often rely upon circumstantial evidence. The conspiracy can be undoubtedly proved by such evidence direct or circumstantial. But the Court must enquire whether the two persons are independently pursuing the same end or they have come together to the pursuit of the unlawful object. The former does not render them conspirators, but the latter does. It is, however, essential that the offence of conspiracy required some kind of physical manifestation of agreement. The express agreement, however, need not be proved. Nor actual meeting of two persons is necessary. Nor is it necessary to prove the actual words of communication. The evidence as to transmission of thoughts, sharing the unlawful design may be sufficient. The relative acts or conduct of the parties must be conscientious and clear, to mark that concurrence as to what should be done. The concurrence cannot be inferred by a group of irrelevant facts artfully arranged so as to give an appearance of coherence. Innocuous, innocent or inadvertent events and incidents should not enter the judicial verdict.

In this case, A-3 having been charged under Section 302 and Section 120-B, IPC, the conviction of the said accused is correct....... (per JAGANNATHA SHETTY, J) Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), AIR 1988 SC 1883 : (1988) 3 SCC 609 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 711 : 1989 CrLJ 1 : (1988) Cal CrLR (SC) 146 : (1988) 3 Crimes 209 : (1988) 15 DRJ 114 : (1988) 2 ACrLR 575 : 1988 BLJR 630.

[9161] ● Conspiracies to be proved by circumstantial evidence.—Mostly conspiracies are proved by circumstantial evidence, as the conspiracy in seldom an open affair, usually both the existence of the conspiracy and its object have to be inferred from the circumstances and the conduct of the accused. (per WADHWA J.) State v. Nalini, AIR 1999 SC 2640 : (1999) 5 SCC 253 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 691 : 1999 CrLJ 3124 : 1999 (2) Crimes 59.

[9162] ● Conspiracy, link of.—Where trustworthy evidence establishing all links of circumstantial evidence is available, confession of co-accused as to conspiracy even without corroborative evidence can be taken into consideration—Evidence Act, 1872—Section 24. Mohd. Khalid v. State of W.B., (2002) 7 SCC 334 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1734 : (2002) 4 Crimes 160 (SC).

[9163] ● Conspiracies not hatched in open.—Conspiracies are not hatched in the open, by their nature, they are secretly planned, they can be proved even by circumstantial evidence, the lack of direct evidence relating to conspiracy has no consequence. Mohd. Khalid v. State of W.B., (2002) 7 SCC 334 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1734 : JT 2002 (6) SC 486 : (2002) 4 Crimes 132.

[9164] ● To establish charge of conspiracy—Agreement between parties necessary.—To bring home the charge of conspiracy within the ambit of Section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code, it is necessary to establish that there was an agreement between the parties for doing an unlawful act. It is difficult to establish conspiracy by direct evidence. Hira Lal Hari Lal Bhagwati v. Central Bureau of Investigation, AIR 2003 SC 2545 : (2003) 5 SCC 257 : 2003 CrLJ 3041 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1121.

[9165] ● Conspiracy, starting point of.—It is not necessary to mention in FIR the starting point of conspiracy since it is difficult to spell out with exactiude the details relating to the starting point of conspiracy. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715.

[9166] ● Expression "physical manifestation" not to be equated with "overt act".—There is one particular observation made by JAGANNATHA SHETTY, J. in Kehar Singh case, AIR 1988 SC 1883 : (1988) 3 SCC 609 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 711 : 1989 CrLJ 1 : 1988 (2) Crimes 981 which needs to be explained. The learned Judge observed : (SCC p. 733, para 275)

> "It is, however, essential that the offence of conspiracy requires some kind of physical manifestation of agreement. The express agreement, however, need not be proved. ... Nor it is necessary to prove the actual words of communication. The evidence as to transmission of thoughts sharing the unlawful design may be sufficient."

The expression "physical manifestation" seems to be the phraseology used in the article referred to by the learned Judge. However, the said expression shall not be equated to "overt act" which is a different concept. As rightly stated by the learned Senior Counsel Mr. Gopal Subramanium, the phrase has reference to the manifestation of the agreement itself, such as by way of meetings and communications. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1797) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[9167] ● Circumstantial evidence—Meeting of minds.—The Court for arriving at a finding as to whether the offence criminal conspiracy has been committed or not they take into consideration the circumstantial because conspiracy is ordinarily hatched up in secrecy. While considering circumstantial evidence the Court must keep in mind the meeting of minds. Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 6 SCC 564 : 2009 (7) SCR 855 : JT 2009 (7) SC 334. TO THE SAME EFFECT : R. Venkatakrishnan v. Central Bureau of Investigation, AIR 2010 SC 1812 : (2009) 11 SCC 737 : 2009 (12) SCR 762 : JT 2009 (10) (SC) 597.

[9168] ● Proof.—Criminal conspiracy is an independent offence. It is punishable separately. Prosecution, therefore, for the purpose of bringing the charge of criminal conspiracy read with provisions of Prevention of Corruption Act required to establish the offence by applying the same legal principles which are otherwise applicable for the purpose of bringing a criminal misconduct on the part of an accused. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Sheetla Sahai, 2009 (8) SCC 617 : 2009 CrLJ 4436 (4446) : 2009 (12) SCR 1048 : 2009 (10) Scale 632.

[9169] ● Mode of proof.—Often conspiracy is hatched in secrecy and for proving the said offence substantial direct evidence may not be possible to be obtained. An offence of conspiracy can also be proved by circumstantial evidence. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Sheetla Sahai, (2009) 8 SCC 617 : 2009 CrLJ 4436 (4446) : 2009 (12) SCR 1048 : JT 2009 (10) (SC) 388.

[9170] ● Conspiracy—Not proved.—Sufficient evidence is available on record to show that the Officers had done so for the purpose of promoting the business of the Bank. In relation whereto or in respect whereof, initiatives had been taken by P.Ws. 19 and 20. It is furthermore not denied or disputed that after the cheque discounting facility was stopped in April, 1989 by Accused No. 4, there has been a meeting at the residence of P.W. 20. In his deposition, the said witness categorically admitted that the said meeting was arranged at the instance of Accused No. 1. It is incomprehensible that a meeting has been arranged at his residence on the day he was on leave at the instance of Accused No. 1. He must have developed grievance against the Accused No. 4 as regards the stoppage of the said facility. If immediately thereafter the said facility had been restored by the Accused No. 4, a stand taken by him that it was done under the oral instructions of the higher authorities appears to be plausible.

The prosecution apart from the fact that it had utterly failed to bring on record any evidence of conspiracy must also be held to have failed to bring on record any evidence of wrongful gain so as to attract the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 or otherwise.

The entire argument of Mr. B. Datta, learned Additional Solicitor General as also the findings arrived at by the learned Special Judge as also the High Court proved the ingredients of offence under Section 409 of the IPC. The accused persons, however, have not been charged for commission of the said offence. Conspiracy by and between the Bank officials and the Accused Nos. 1 to 3 has been stated to be for commission of the offence of cheating for the purpose of arriving at a finding that there has been a conspiracy so as to cheat the Bank. It was necessary for the prosecution to establish that there had been a meeting of mind at the time when the facility had been granted. Such meeting of mind on the part of the accused persons has not been proved. Furthermore, the prosecution case even if given face value and taken to be correct in its entirety does not lead to a finding that even Accused Nos. 1 to 3 had any wrongful intention at the time when the contract was initiated.

We do not mean to suggest that in the matter of operating the account, no offence might have been committed by them. The offence, if any, it will be bear repetition to state, was committed under Section 409 of the IPC. S.V.L. Murthy v. State, AIR 2009 SC 2717 (2727, 2728) : (2009) 6 SCC 77 : 2009 CrLJ 3930 : 2009 (7) SCR 784.

9. JOINT TRIAL—PROOF OF CONSPIRACY

[9171] ● Joint trial—Proof of conspiracy.—In Daniel Youth v. R., AIR 1945 PC 140 : 1945 All LJ 269 the Privy Council warned that in a joint trial care must be taken to separate the admissible evidence against each accused and the judicial mind should not be allowed to be influenced by evidence admissible only against others. "A co-defendant in a conspiracy trial", observed JACKSON, J.(US p. 454), "occupies an uneasy seat".

> "it is difficult for the individual to make his own case stand on its own merits in the minds of jurors who are ready to believe that birds of a feather are flocked together". In State v. Nalini, AIR 1999 SC 2640 : (1999) 5 SCC 253 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 691 : 1999 CrLJ 3124 : 1999 (2) Crimes 59 WADHWA, J. pointed out, at p. 517 of SCC, the need to guard against prejudice being caused to the accused on account of joint trial with other conspirators. The learned Judge observed that : (SCC p. 517, para 583)
> "There is always difficulty in tracing the precise contribution of each member of the conspiracy but then there has to be cogent and convincing evidence against each one of the accused charged with the offence of conspiracy."

The pertinent observation of Judge Hand in U.S. v. Falcone, 109 F 2d 579 Land Cir 1940 was referred to : (SCC p. 511, para 572).

> "The distinction is especially important today when so many prosecutors seek to sweep within the dragnet of conspiracy all those who have been associated in any degree whatever with the main offenders."

At para 518, WADHWA J., pointed out that the criminal responsibility for a conspiracy requires more than a merely passive attitude towards an existing conspiracy. The learned Judge then set out the legal position regarding the criminal liability of the persons accused of the conspiracy as follows : (SCC p. 518, para 583)

> "One who commits an overt act with knowledge of the conspiracy is guilty. And one who tacitly consents to the object of a conspiracy and goes along with other conspirators, actually standing by while the others put the conspiracy into effect, is guilty though he intends to take no active part in the crime." State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1798) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[9172] ● Proof of criminal conspiracy—Standard.—Mere circumstantial evidence to prove involvement of particular accused is not sufficient to prove criminal conspiracy. A meeting of mind to form a criminal conspiracy is also to be proved by substantive evidence. S. Arul Raja v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2010) 8 SCC 233 : 2010 (3) Crimes 320.

10. SECTION 120-A AND SECTION 34, IPC

[9173] ● Section 34 and 109, IPC—Relative Scope.—Section 34 embodies the principle of joint liability in the doing of a criminal act, the essence of that liability being the existence of a common intention; participation in the commission of the offence in furtherance of the common intention invites its application. Section 109 may, on the other hand, be attracted even if an abettor is not present when the offence abetted is with one or more other persons and in the conspiracy to commit an offence and in pursuance of that conspiracy some act or illegal omission takes place or has intentionally aided the commission of an offence by an act or illegal omission. Under Section 120-B, IPC criminal conspiracy postulates an agreement between two or more persons to do or cause to be done an illegal act or an act which is not illegal by illegal means. It differs from other offences in that here a mere agreement is made an offence even if no step is taken to carry out the agreement. Noor Mohammad v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1971 SC 885 : 1971 CrLJ 793 : 1971 SCD 81 : 1971 Mah LJ 792 : (1971) 1 SCJ 43 : 1971

Mad LJ (Cri) 33 : 73 Bom LR 516 : (1971) 1 SCR 19.

11. SECTION 120-B AND 34 IPC— RELATIVE SCOPE

[9174] ● Conspiracy—Theory of agency not to be extended to.—The theory of agency cannot be extended thus far, that is to say, to find all the conspirators guilty of the actual offences committed in execution of the common design even if such offences were ultimately committed by some of them, without the participation of others. Those who committed the offences pursuant to the conspiracy by indulging in various overt acts will be individually liable for those offences in addition to being liable for criminal conspiracy; but, the non-participant conspirators cannot be found guilty of the offence or offences committed by the other conspirators. There is hardly any scope for the application of the principle of agency in order to find the conspirators guilty of a substantive offence not committed by them. Criminal offences and punishments therefore are governed by the statute. The offender will be liable only if he comes within the plain terms of the penal statute. Criminal liability for an offence cannot be fastened by way of analogy or by extension of a common law principle.

> "Conspiracy to commit a crime itself is punishable as a substantive offence and every individual offence committed pursuant to the conspiracy is separate and distinct offence for which individual offenders are liable to punishment, independent of the conspiracy."

Thus, a distinction was maintained between the conspiracy and the offences committed pursuant to the conspiracy. It is only in order to prove the existence of conspiracy and parties to the conspiracy, that a rule of evidence is enacted in Section 10 based on the principle of agency.

Whether or not the conspirators will be liable for substantive offences other than the conspiracy and, if so, to what extent and what punishment has to be given for the conspiracy and the other offences committed pursuant thereto, depend on the specific scheme and provisions of the penal law. The offence cannot be spelt out by applying the principle of agency if the statute does not say so. For instance, in the case of Section 34, IPC, the constructive liability for the crime is specifically fastened on each of those who participate in the crime in furtherance of the common intention. But Section 120-B does not convey that idea.

Once the application of theory of agency is negatived, there is no scope to hold that the appellant, in spite of not having done any act or thing by using the weapons and substances set out in Section (1)(a) POTA, he, as a conspirator, can be brought within the sweep and ambit of sub-sections (1) and (2) POTA. The wording of clause (a) of Section 3(1) POTA is clear that it applies to those who do any acts or things by using explosives substances etc. with the intention referred to in clause (a), but not to conspirators who remained in the background. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 1715 (1799, 1801, 1856) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

[9175] ● Section 120-B and 302 IPC—Criminal Conspiracy hatched by family members.— Thus according to the prosecution version, when accused, A-1 to A-5, A-11 and A-12 learnt about the marriage of Kunal with some other girl, they hatched a conspiracy to teach a lesson to the father of Kunal, the deceased. In furtherance thereof, accused A-1 contracted one of the assassins to kill Kunal. It is alleged that accused A-1 to A-4 also contacted accused A-16, a notorious criminal. In other words, the gravamen of the accusation by the prosecution is that it is accused A-1 to A-5, A-11 and A-12 who had hatched the conspiracy; acted in concert to give effect to their plan to get Kunal murdered and in pursuance of the aforesaid criminal conspiracy, the other accused facilitated commission of the said crime. It is common ground that the case of the prosecution is based on the circumstantial evidence, namely, threatening calls from the side of the accused to the complainant his family and the earlier relationship between the deceased and accused No. 4. From the material on record, it is manifestly clear that it was the family members of the appellant, one of their employees and a friend who allegedly had all entered into an agreement to eliminate the deceased. However, as noted above, accused A-1, A-2, A-4, A-11 and A-12 already stand discharged from the charges framed against them under Sections 120B and 302 I.P.C. vide orders dated 7th July, 2006 and 14th May, 2007, passed by the High Court and the Sessions Judge respectively. While discharging the said accused, both the Courts have come to the conclusion that there is no material on record to show that they had hatched a conspiracy to commit murder of Kunal. Thus, the stand of the prosecution to the effect that the parents, sister and friends of the appellants had entered into a criminal conspiracy stands rejected by virtue of the said orders of discharge. Furthermore, in its order dated 7th July, 2006 the High Court has opined that the circumstances, relied upon by the prosecution, even if accepted in its entirety, only create a suspicion of motive, which is not sufficient to bring home an offence of murder. As noted above, State's petition for special leave against the said judgment has already been dismissed.

"We are, therefore, of the view that in the light of the subsequent events, namely, the orders of the High Court dated 7th July, 2006 in Criminal Writ Petitions No. 1283 & 1284 of 2006, discharging appellant's mother, sister and two close associates, accused Nos. 2, 4, 11 and 12 respectively; order dated 30th April, 2007 passed by this Court dismissing the Special Leave Petition preferred by the State against order dated 7th July, 2006 and order dated 14th May, 2007 passed by the Sessions Judge, Satara, discharging the father (A-1) of the appellant, stated to be the mastermind behind the entire conspiracy, for offences under Sections 120B and 302 I.P.C., on same set of circumstances and accusations, no sufficient ground survives to proceed against the appellant for the aforementioned offences". Yogesh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2008 SC 2991 : (2008) 10 SCC 394 : 2008 CrLJ 3872 : 2008 (6) SCR 1116 : 2008 (2) Crimes 263.

[9176] ● Forgery of permit.—P.W. 6 stated in his examination-in-chief that he knew the accused persons, viz., A1 to A3 and that A2 was working in Civil Supplies Inspector's Office in the rank of UDC and that he had earlier worked with him in the Finance Department. P.W. 6 has however, nowhere stated in the examination-in-chief that the present instance of interpolation or forgery was in the hand of A2. In the cross-examination, P.W. 6 stated that although he had worked along with A2 in the Finance Department, but he was working in a different Section of the Department. He has clearly stated that he was working in the Budget Section called F1 whereas A2 was working in the Motor Conveyance Section called F2 Section. It has also been brought to our notice that in cross-examination, it was said that the files dealt by A2 and F2 Section in the Finance Department never came to the F1 Section where P.W. 6 was working. Therefore, in our considered opinion the interpolation as also the initials appended thereto have not been proved and established to be in the hand of A2 and A1. Ravichandran v. State, AIR 2010 SC 1922 : 2010 CrLJ 2879 : JT 2010 (3) 571.

CONSPIRACY AND ABETMENT

[9177] ● Conspiracy containing element of abetment.—There is no analogy between Section 120-B and Section 109, IPC. There may be an element of abetment in a conspiracy; but conspiracy is something more than an abetment. Offences created by Sections 109 and 120-B, IPC are quite distinct and there is no warrant for limiting the prosecution to only one element of conspiracy, that is, abetment when the allegation is that what a person did was something over and above that. Where a number of offences are committed by several persons in pursuances of a conspiracy it is usual to charge them with those offences as well as with the offence of conspiracy to commit those offences. Though it is not desirable to charge the accused persons with conspiracy with the ulterior object of letting in evidence which would otherwise be inadmissible and though it is undesirable to complicate a trial by introducing a large number of charges spread over a long period this is only a question of propriety and it should be left to the Judge or the Magistrate trying the case to adopt the course which he thinks to be appropriate in the facts, and circumstances of the case. Such a trial is not prohibited by the Code of Criminal Procedure. State of Andhra Pradesh v. Kandimalla, AIR 1961 SC 241 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 302 : 1962 (1) SCR 194.

[9178] ● Offence of abetment of conspiracy—Mere agreement not enough.—When for an offence of abetment by conspiracy, mere agreement is not enough; an act or illegal omission must take place in pursuance thereof, for an offence of conspiracy the very agreement or plot is an offence. Promotha Nath v. Saroj Ranjan, AIR 1962 SC 876 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 770 : 1962 SCA 253.

[9179] ● Close association between conspiracy and incitement and abetment.—There is indeed a close association between conspiracy on the one hand and incitement and abetment, the substantive offence of criminal conspiracy is somewhat wider in amplitude then abatement by conspiracy as contemplated by Section 107, IPC. Noor Mohammed v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1971 SC 885 : (1970) 1 SCC 696 : 1971 CrLJ 793 : (1971) 1 SCJ 43 : 1971 MadLJ (Cri) 33.

[9180] ● Conspiracy hatched in secrecy.—It is urged on behalf of A-3 (Kehar Singh) that there was no charge against him under Section 109, IPC and without such a charge the accused are liable to be sentenced only for the offence of abetment and not for murder and so the validity of sentence of death on A-3 was questioned.

When an accused is a party to a criminal conspiracy, which led to the commission of the offence of murder by his co-accused, it cannot be said that the accused (conspirator) who did not himself participate in the commission of the offence, could not be sentenced for the main offence of murder, and that he could be sentenced only for abetment of the offence in the absence of a charge under Section 109 against him. There is vital difference between the two crimes : (i) abetment in any conspiracy, (ii) criminal conspiracy. The former is defined under the second clause of Section 107 and the latter is under Section 120-A. The gist of the offence of criminal conspiracy created under Section 120-A is a bare agreement to commit an offence which is made punishable under Section 120-B. The offence of abetment created under Section 107 (2) requires that there must be something more than a mere conspiracy. There must be some act or illegal omission in pursuance of that conspiracy. That would be evident by the wording of Section 107 (Secondly) : "engages in any conspiracy..... for the doing of that thing, if an act or illegal omission takes place in pursuance of that conspiracy...." The punishments for these two categories of crimes are also quite different. Section 109, IPC, is concerned only with the punishment of abetments for which no express provision is made under the Penal Code. A charge under Section 109 should, therefore, be along with some other substantive offence committed in consequence of abetment. The offence of criminal conspiracy is, on the other hand, an independent offence. It is made punishable under Section 120-B for which a charge under Section 109, IPC, is unnecessary and indeed inappropriate. Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1988 SC 1883 : (1988) 3 SCC 609 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 711 : 1989 CrLJ 1 : (1988) 3 Crimes 209.

[9181] ● Conspiracy and abetment—Punishment for.—Earlier to the introduction of Sections 120-A and 120-B, conspiracy per se was not an offence under the Penal Code except in respect of the offence mentioned in Section 121-A. However, abetment by conspiracy was and still remains to be an ingredient of abetment under clause secondly of Section 107, IPC. The punishment therefor is provided under various sections viz. Sections 108 to 117. Whereas under Section 120-A, the essence of the offence of criminal conspiracy is a bare agreement to commit the offence, the abetment under Section 107 requires the commission of some act or illegal omission pursuant to the conspiracy. A charge under Sections 107/109 should therefore be in combination with a substantive offence, whereas the charge under Sections 120-A/120-B could be an independent charge. State (NCT of Delhi v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1795) : 2005 CrLJ 3950 : 2005 (3) Crimes 87.

1. FOREIGNER HATCHING UP CONSPIRACY OUTSIDE INDIA—INPLEMENTATION IN INDIA

[9182] ● Foreigner hatching up conspiracy outside India—Implementation in India.—In view of Section 3, IPC, a foreigner committing offence within India without being physically present in India may be held liable under the Act. In view of the phrase "as if such act had been committed within India" in Section 3—the words "every person" comprehending all persons without limitation irrespective of nationality allegiance, status etc. barring as may be specially exempted by virtue of Art. 361 (2) of the Constitution of India and any other statutory provisions of some well-recognised international law Mobank Ali v. State of Bombay, AIR 1957 SC 857 : 1957 CrLJ 1346 : 1958 SCR 328.

CONSPIRACY CHARGE—ACQUITTAL FROM BASIC OFFENCE

[9183] ● Conspiracy charge—Acquittal from basic offence.—If an accused has been charged under Section 120-B and also with a substantive offence and he has been acquitted of the charge in respect of the substantive offence, he cannot contend merely on that account, that he should also be acquitted of the charge under Section 120-B. It is because conspiracy itself is a distinct and substantive offence. The offence of criminal conspiracy consists in the agreement to commit an offence, irrespective of whether the offence in respect of which, the conspiracy is hatched, is in fact committed or not. The very fact of the agreement constitutes the offence and nothing more needs to be proved to have been done in pursuance of the criminal agreement. Bimbadhar Pradhan v. State of Orissa, AIR 1956 SC 469 : 1956 CrLJ 831 : 1956 SCA 857 : 1956 SCJ 441 : 1956 2 MLJ (SC) 93.

1. VENUE OF CONSPIRACY

[9184] ● Venue of Conspiracy.—When offence of criminal conspiracy is tried along with other offence committed in pursuance thereof committed in different local limits, the Court having jurisdiction to try offence of conspiracy can also try the offence committed outside his jurisdiction, if the offence is committed in pursuance of the conspiracy. Purushottam Das Dalmia v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1961 SC 1589 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 728 : 1962 (2) SCR 101.

[9185] ● Territorial jurisdiction.—A Court trying an accused for an offence of conspiracy is competent to try him for all offences committed in pursuance of conspiracy inspective of the fact that any or all the other offences were not committed within the territorial jurisdiction. Rajendra Ramchandra Kavalekar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 1792 : (2009) 11 SCC 286 : 2009 CrLJ 1592, 1596 (SC) : 2009 (1) SCR 480.

2. JOINT TRIAL

[9186] ● Joint trial.—Where the alleged offences have been committed in the course of the same transaction the limitation placed by Section 219, CrPC cannot operate. Where the offence is alleged to have been committed not by just one person but by all the accused all these persons can be jointly tried in respect of all these offences. To this kind of charge Section 223 would apply. It would, however, be desirable to split up the charge suitably so that the accused persons will not be prejudiced in answering the charges and in defending themselves. State of Andhra Pradesh v. Kandimalla, AIR 1961 SC 1241 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 302 : (1962) 1 SCR 194.

3. SANCTION

[9187] ● Sanction.—This section has to be read along with Section 196 (1-A)(2), CrPC, which requires previous sanction of the State Government or the District Magistrate to launch prosecution in respect of a criminal conspiracy to commit an offence punishable with less than two years' imprisonment. The new section introduced by CrPC, 1973 brings about a change. The old section classified criminal conspiracies into two groups and made a fine distinction as to the manner of initiating proceedings in respect of each. This refinement has since been done away with. The section has, therefore, been simplified and revised without any change in the core of the provision as interpreted by the Supreme Court. Bhanwar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1968 SC 709 : 1968 CrLJ 867.

[9188] ● Cheating by personation.—Thus where the object of the conspiracy was cheating by false personation under Section 419, IPC, which is an offence punishable with three years' imprisonment, the mere fact that there were other non-cognizable offences for which too the accused had been charged would not vitiate the trial in absence of sanction under Section 196(1-A)(2), CrPC, as that section is meant to be applicable to a case where the object of the conspiracy is to commit an offence punishable with less than two years' imprisonment. Yash Pal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 2433 : (1977) 4 SCC 540 : 1978 CrLJ 189.

[9189] ● Accused cheating Bank in furtherance of conspiracy—All acts committed in India—Sanction of Central Govt. for prosecution not necessary.—The agreement does not come to an end with its making, but would endure till it is accomplished or abandoned or proved abortive. Being a continuing offence, if any acts or omissions which constitute an offence are done in India or outside its territory the conspirators continuing to be parties to the conspiracy and since part of the act were done in India, they would obviate the need to obtain sanction of the Central Govt. All of them need not be present in India nor continue to remain in India.

A conspiracy thus, is a continuing offence and continues to subsist and committed wherever one of the conspirators does an act or series of acts. So long as its performance continues, it is a continuing offence till it is executed or rescinded or frustrated by choice or necessity. A crime is complete as soon as the agreement is made, but it is not a thing of the moment. It does not end with the making of the agreement. It will continue so long as there are two or more parties to it intending to carry into effect the design. Its continuance is a threat to the society against which it was aimed at and would be dealt with as soon as that jurisdiction can properly claim the power to do so. The conspiracy designed or agreed abroad will have the same effect as in India, when part of the acts, pursuant to the agreement are agreed to be finalised or done, attempted or even frustrated and vice versa.

Sanction under Section 188 is not a condition precedent to take cognizance of the offence. If need be it could be obtained before trial begins. Conspiracy was initially hatched at Chandigarh and though itself is a completed offence, being continuing offence, even accepting appellant's case that he was at Dubai and part of the conspiracy and overt acts in furtherance thereof had taken place at Dubai and partly at Chandigarh; and in consequence thereof other offences had been ensued. Since the offences have been committed during the continuing course of transaction culminated in cheating PNB at Chandigarh, the need to obtain sanction for various offences under proviso to Section 188 is obviated. Therefore, there is no need to obtain sanction from Central Govt. The case may be different if the offences were committed outside India.

Preparation of bill of lading at Dubai or payment at Dubai were not isolated acts. They were part of chain activities between the appellant and his associates with whom he entered into agreement to cheat the bank at Chandigarh, Any isolated act or omission committed at Dubai was insufficient to constitute an offence. The illegal act of dishonestly inducing the bank at Chandigarh was committed not by preparation of bill at Dubai but its presentation in pursuance of agreement to cheat. The submission thus founded was on residence or on preparation of bills of lading or encashment at Dubai are of no consequence.

Nor is there nay merit in the submission that even part of the offence would attract Section 188 as the section operates when offence is committed outside India. An offence is committed when all the ingredients are satisfied. The section having used the word offence it cannot be understood as part of the offence. Section 179, CrPC empowers a Court to try an offence either at a place where the offence is committed or the consequences ensue. On the allegations in the complaint the act or omissions were committed in India. In any case the consequence of conspiracy, cheating and forging having taken place at Chandigarh the offence was not committed outside the country therefore provisions of Section 188, CrPC were not attracted. Ajay Agarwal v. Union of India, AIR 1993 SC 1637 : (1993) 3 SCC 609 : 1993 CrLJ 2516 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 445 : 1993 (2) Crimes 342.

[9190] ● Minister for electricity entering into criminal conspiracy with co-accused—Connected with official duty as Minister attracts protection of Section 197(1), CrPC.—There can be no general proposition that whenever there is a charge of criminal conspiracy levelled against a public servant in or out of office, the bar of Section 197(1) of the Cr PC would have no application. Such a view would render Section 197(1) of the Cr PC specious. Therefore, the question would have to be examined in the facts of each case.

In the present case, the appellant is charged with having entered into a criminal conspiracy with the co-accused while functioning as a Minister. The criminal conspiracy alleged is that he sold electricity to an industry in the State of Karnataka without the consent of the Government of Kerala which is an illegal act under the provisions of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1948 and the Kerala Electricity Board Rules framed thereunder. The allegation is that he in pursuance of the said alleged conspiracy abused his official position and illegally sold certain units to the private industry in Bangalore (Karnataka) which profited the private industry to the tune of Rs. 19,58,630.40 or more and it is, therefore, obvious that the criminal conspiracy alleged against the appellant is that while functioning as the Minister for Electricity he without the consent of Government of Kerala supplied certain units of electricity to a private industry in Karnataka. Obviously, he did this in the discharge of his duties as a Minister. The allegation is that it was an illegal act in as much as the consent of the Government of Kerala was not obtained before this arrangement was entered into and the supply was effected. For that reason, it is said that he had committed an illegality and, hence, he was liable to be punished for criminal conspiracy under Section 120-B, IPC. It is, therefore, clear from the charge that the act alleged is directly and reasonably connected with his official duty as a Minister and would, therefore, attract the protection of Section 197(1) of the Code. R. Bala Krishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, AIR 1996 SC 901(903) : (1996) 1 SCC 478 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 128.

CONSPIRACY IS A CONTINUING OFFENCE

[9191] ● Conspiracy is a continuing offence.— Although conspiracy is committed as soon as the agreement for the unlawful act is made out, it is clear that conspiracy is a continuing offence and is committed not only when agreement is first reached but also as long as the agreement to effect the unlawful object continues- CROSS and JONES on Introduction to Criminal Law 9th edn. Para 17.6, p. 342.

A conspiracy thus is a continuing offence and continues to subsist and committed wherever one of the conspirators does an act or series of acts. So long as its performance continues, it is a continuing offence till it is executed or rescinded or frustrated by choice or necessity. A crime is complete as soon as the agreement is made, but it is not a thing of the moment. It does not end with the making of the agreement. It will continue so long as there are two or more parties to it intending to carry into effect the design. It's continuance is a threat to the society against which it was aimed at and would be dealt with as soon as that jurisdiction can properly claim the power to do so. The conspiracy designed or agreed abroad will have the same effect as in India. When part of the acts, pursuant to the agreement are agreed to be finalised or done, attempted or even frustrated and vice versa. Ajay Agarwal v. Union of India, AIR 1993 SC 1637 : (1993) 3 SCC 609 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 1637 : 1993 CrLJ 2516.

CONSPIRATOR'S CONNECTION WITH CONSPIRACY

[9192] ● Conspirator's connection with conspiracy.—Every conspirator is an agent of his associate in carrying out the object of the conspiracy. Section 10 of the Evidence Act, which is an exception to the general rule, while permitting the statement made by one conspirator to be admissible against another conspirator restricts it to the statement made during the period when the agency subsisted. Once it is shown that a person became snapped out of the conspiracy, any statement made subsequent threats cannot be used as against the other conspirators under Section 10. Whether a particular accused had ceased to be a conspirator or not, at any point of time, is a matter which can be decided on the facts of that particular case. Normally, a conspirator's connection with the conspiracy would get snapped after he is nabbed by the Police and kept in their custody because he would thereby cease to be the agent of the other conspirators. Of course we are not unmindful of rare cases in which a conspirator would continue no confabulate with the other conspirators and persists with the conspiracy even after his arrest. That is precisely the reason why we said that it may not be possible to lay down a proposition of law that one conspirator's connection with the conspiracy would necessarily be cut off with this arrest. State of Tamil Nadu v. Nalini, AIR 1999 SC 2640 (2666) : (1999) 5 SCC 253 : 1999 CrLJ 3124 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 424 : JT 1999 (4) SC 106 : 1999 GLJ 3124 : (1999) 2 Crimes 59.

CONSPIRATORS COMMITTING SEVERAL OFFENCES : CONVICTION

[9193] ● Conspirators committing several offences : Conviction.—The offence of criminal conspiracy consists in a meeting of minds of two or more persons for agreeing to do or causing to be done an illegal act or an act by illegal means, and the performance of an act in terms thereof. If pursuant to the criminal conspiracy the conspirators commit several offences, then all of them will be liable for the offences even if some of them had not actively participated in the commission of the offences. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Krishan Lal Pradhan, AIR 1987 SC 773 : (1987) 2 SCC 17 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 270 : 1987 CrLJ 709

CONSPIRATORS NEED HAVE KNOWLEDGE OF ALL OBJECTS AND MEANS

[9195] ● Conspiracy, accused intending to carry agreement into effect.—A person is not to be convicted of conspiracy unless it is shown that he intended to carry the agreement into effect; but if he did so intend, it is immaterial that nothing was done in pursuance of it. Where the agreement is to do an unlawful act it must be shown that the parties knew of the circumstances which rendered that act unlawful. Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th Edn. Vol. II, para 60 p. 46.

[9196] ● Conspirators need not know each and every detail of conspiracy.—It is not necessary that all the conspirators must know each and every details of the conspiracy as long as they are co-participators in the main object of the conspiracy. There must be unity of object but there may be plurality of means sometimes even unknown to one another. Yash Pal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 2433 : (1977) 4 SCC 540 : 1978 CrLJ 189.

1. ARTICLES 5 TO 11

[9197] ● Articles 5 to 11 of Constitution govern question of Indian citizenship.—Articles 5 to 11 which form Part II of the Constitution deal with the question of citizenship. Article 5 provides that every person, (a) who has his domicile in India at the commencement of the Constitution and (b) who was either born in India, or whose either parent was born in India or who has been residing in India for more than 5 years before such commencement is a citizen of India. Article 6 extends the right of Indian citizenship to persons who have migrated to India from Pakistan at the commencement of the Constitution if the requirements of clauses (a) and (b) thereof are satisfied. Article 8 confers the right of Indian citizenship on persons of Indian origin who reside outside India upon registration as an Indian citizen in the prescribed manner. Thus, Articles 5, 6 and 8 lay down the different manners by which a person can claim Indian citizenship.

Article 7 provides that notwithstanding anything contained in Articles 5 and 6, a person who has migrated to Pakistan after March 1, 1947, shall not be deemed to be an Indian citizen unless he has returned to India under a permit for resettlement or for permanent return. Article 9 provides that an Indian citizen shall lose his Indian citizenship on his acquiring the citizenship of any foreign State. Thus, Articles 7 and 9 lay down the circumstances in which a person loses his Indian citizenship.

Article 10 provides for continuance of Indian citizenship, subject to any law made by the Parliament and Article 11 recognises the power of the Parliament to make laws with respect to acquisition and termination of citizenship and all other matter relating to citizenship.

This in brief is the scheme of Articles 5 to 11 which govern the question of Indian citizenship. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Peer Mohammad, AIR 1963 SC 645 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 617 : 1963 (1) SCA 649 : (1963) 2 SCJ 655 : 1963 MLJ (Cri) 609.

2. ARTICLE 5(C)

[9198] ● Article 5(c).—Domicile means the place which a person has fixed as habitation of himself and his family, not for a mere special and temporary purpose, but with a present intention of making it his permanent home. Every person must have a domicile. A person cannot have two simultaneous domiciles. Domicile denotes connection with the territorial system of law. The burden of proving a change in domicile is on those who allege that a change has occurred. In order to attract Article 5 (c), one must have an Indian domicile. Mere residence is not domicile. Abdus Samad v. State of W.B., AIR 1973 SC 505 : (1973) 1 SCC 451 : 1973 CrLJ 1 : 1972 SCD 1134.

3. ARTICLES 5, 21 AND 32 AND ARMY ACT (46 OF 1950) PERSONS SUBJECT TO ARMY ACT ARE CITIZENS OF INDIA AND THEY ARE NOT WHOLLY DEPRIVED OF THEIR RIGHTS UNDER THE CONSTITUTION

[9199] ● Articles 5, 21 and 32 and Army Act (46 of 1950) Persons subject to Army Act are citizens of India and they are not wholly deprived of their rights under the Constitution.—The reference in Article 7 of the Constitution to Articles 5 and 6, taken in conjunction with the fact that both Articles 5 and 6 are concerned with citizenship at the commencement of the Constitution, points to the conclusion that the "migration" referred to in Article 7 is migration before the date when the Constitution came into force. Article 7 does not contemplate migration from India to Pakistan after January 26, 1950. State of Andhra Pradesh v. Abdul Khader, AIR 1961 SC 1467 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 573 : (1961) 2 SCA 643 : 63 PunLR 751 : 1961 ALT 816 : 1961 AWR (HC) 564 : 1961 ACrR 347 : 1962 MLJ (Cri) 80.

*[9200] ● Article 7 of Constitution refers to migration taking place between 1.3.1947 and 26.1.1950.—Under Article 7, a person who shall not be deemed to be citizen of India is one "who has after the first day of March, 1947 migrated" from India to Pakistan. It is true that migrations after January 26, 1950, would be migration after March 1, 1947. However, it is clear that a person who has migrated after January 26, 1950, cannot fall within the relevant clause because the requirement of the clause is that he must have migrated at the date when the Constitution came into force. The words "has migrated" cannot possibly include cases of migration after the date when Article 7 came into force. The use of the present perfect tense is decisive of the question of the period to which Article 7 refers.

Article 7 clearly refers to migration which has taken place between March 1, 1947 and January 26, 1950 and a person who leaves India for Pakistan after January 26, 1950, is not covered by Article 7.

The question about the citizenship of persons who have migrated to Pakistan from India after January 26, 1950, has to be determined under the provisions of the Citizenship Act, 1955 which has been passed by the Parliament under the powers conferred and recognised by Articles 10 and 11 of the Constitution.

The result is that the respondent cannot be said to be a foreigner by reason of his migration to Pakistan after January 26, 1650. That being so, Clause 7 of the Order made under the Foreigners Act did not apply to him and he could not be prosecuted under Section 14 of the Act. Izhar Ahmed Khan v. Union of India, AIR 1962 SC 1052, referred to. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Peer Mohammad, AIR 1963 SC 645 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 617 : (1963) 1 SCA 649 : (1963) 2 SCJ 655 : 1963 MLJ (Cri) 609.

[9201] ● Persons subject to Army Act—Citizens of India.—Persons subject to Army Act are citizens of India. They are not wholly deprived of their rights under the Constitution. Deprivation of their liberty must be preceded by an inquiry ensuring fair, just and reasonable procedure and trial by a Judge of unquestioned integrity and wholly unbiased. Marked difference in the procedure for trial of an offence by the Criminal Court and the Court-Martial is apt to generate dissatisfaction arising out of this differential treatment. Prithi Pal Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 1413 : (1982) 3 SCC 140 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 642 : (1983) 1 SCR 393 : 1983 CrLJ 647 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 523 : 1982 UJ (SC) 695 : (1982) 2 Serv LJ 582 : (1983) 1 Lab LN 9 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 37 : (1983) 2 Chand LR (Cri) 287 : (1983) 1 Serv LR 365.

4. ARTICLES 5 & 7 AND FOREIGNERS ACT, 1946, S. 2(A)

[9202] ● Articles 5 & 7 and Foreigners Act, 1946, S. 2(a).—The word "law" in Article 13 (2) means only Acts and other enactments made by the Union Parliament or by any State Legislature in the exercise of its ordinary powers of legislation under the Constitution, and not those Acts which amend the Constitution itself and which are made by the Parliament in the exercise of its sovereign constituent powers under Article 368. The constitutionality of a Constitution Amendment Act cannot be questioned on the ground of infringement or violation of any fundamental right existing before the time when such Act comes into force. Sankari Prasad Singh Deo v. Union of India, AIR 1951 SC 458 : 1951 SCJ 775 : 1952 SCR 89 : 1951 RD (BR) 219 (SC) : 64 MLW 1005 : 1951 ALJ 740 : 1951 (2) MLJ 683 : 88 CalLJ 281 : 30 Pat 1176.

[9203] ● Constitution—Retrospective operation.—The Constitution has no retrospective effect or operation. It is wholly prospective. Every statute is prima facie prospective in its operation, unless it is expressly or by necessary implication made retrospective, and this rule of interpretation applies to the Constitution as much as it does to other statutes.

Section 6 of the General Clauses Act provides that when a law is repealed, the repeal shall not affect any right which has already accrued or any liability which has already been incurred under the repealed law before its repeal, nor shall it affect any proceeding in respect of any such right or liability which is pending at the date of the repeal.

Article 367 of the Constitution provides that the General Clauses Act shall apply for the interpretation of the Constitution, as it applies for the interpretation of other laws.

The combined effect of Section 6 of the Act and Article 367 on the interpretation of Article 13 is as under :

a. When a law existing at the date of the Constitution is declared under Article 13 to be void for being in violation of any fundamental right, the effect of such declaration is the same as the effect would be if that law had been repealed.

b. As a result of the declaration of voidness, the law is not obliterated altogether and for all purposes and is not totally erased or wiped out from the statute-book. It remains good and effective for the purpose of rights and liabilities which arose and were completed before the date when the Constitution came into force.

c. It follows that if an offence under any pre-Constitution law has been committed before 26-1-1950 and prosecution in respect of that offence is pending on that date, such prosecution could not be stayed merely by reason of the fact that the law in question has been declared to be void. Such a prosecution can legally be proceeded with even after the date when the law is declared to be void, and conviction of the accused would not be illegal. Keshavan Madhava Menon v. State of Bombay, AIR 1951 SC 128 : 52 CrLJ 860 : 1951 SCJ 182 : 1951 SCR 228 : 1951 MWN (Cri) 60 : 1951 MWN 232 : 1951 (1) MLJ 370 : 1951 ALJ (SC) 23 : 64 MLW 382 : 28 Bom CrC 155 : 53 Bom LR 458 : ILR (1951) Hyd 294.

[9204] ● Word "Law" in Article 13(2) of Constitution—Meaning.—The word "law" in Article 13(2) means only Acts and other enactments made by the Union Parliament or by any State Legislature in the exercise of its ordinary powers of legislation under the Constitution, and not those Acts which amend the Constitution itself and which are made by the Parliament in the exercise of its sovereign constituent powers under Article 368. The constitutionality of a Constitution Amendment Act cannot be questioned on the ground of infringement or violation of any fundamental right existing before the time when such Act comes into force. Sankari Prasad Singh Deo v. Union of India, AIR 1951 SC 458 : 1951 SCJ 775 : 1952 SCR 89 : 1951 RD (BR) 219 (SC) : 64 MLW 1005 : 1951 ALJ 740 : 1951 (2) MLJ 683 : 88 Cal LJ 281 : 30 Pat 1176.

[9205] ● Guarantee of 'equal protection of law'—Meaning.—FAZAL ALI J.—The guarantee of 'equal protection of the laws' means protection of equal laws. All that Article 14 requires is that all persons under like circumstances and conditions are treated alike, and that none is singled out as a special subject for arbitrary and discriminatory selection. In construing this Article we should not adopt a doctrinaire approach which might choke off all beneficial legislation.

MUKHERJEE J.—Article 14 which gives the guarantee of equal protection of the laws, does not mean that the same rules of law should apply to all persons irrespective of differences of circumstances and conditions. All that it guarantees is that there should be no discrimination between one person and another who are both in the same position.

DAS J.—"Equal protection of the laws" means subjection to equal laws applying alike to all persons in the same or similar situations. Article 14 protects all persons against discriminative legislation by prohibiting legislation which singles out persons for special treatment which is different from that given to others in like situations, but it does not prevent the State from making laws classifying persons according to differing requirements. Chiranjit Lal Chowdhuri v. Union of India, AIR 1951 SC 41 : 1951 SCJ 29 : 1950 SCR 869 : 64 MLW 47 : 1951 MWN 111 : 53 BomLR 499 : ILR (1951) Hyd 461.

[9206] ● Classification made by Act must be intelligible.—FAZAL ALI J.—Article 14 requires that a classification made by an Act, in order to be justified, must be intelligible and must bear a reasonable relation to its object. There is no hard and fast rule for determining what is "reasonable" and it is a matter for determination in each case as to whether the relation of the classification to the object sought to be achieved by the Act, is or is not reasonable, depending upon the objectives which the legislature seeks to secure.

MUKHERJEE J.—The test for determining whether a classification is "reasonable" and not arbitrary, is this—does the classification rest upon some substantial distinction bearing a just relation to the thing in respect of which it is made?

S.R. DAS J.—Article 14 does not take away the power of the State to classify persons for legislative purposes according to varying conditions requiring special and separate treatments, such as geographical limits, objects, occupations, etc. Each classification will necessarily produce some inequality, but that in itself will not make it unconstitutional, provided it bears a reasonable and just relation to the thing in respect of which it is made. The test of the constitutionality of a law is, whether the classification made by it has a reasonable relation to its object, or whether not having any such relation it is arbitrary and discriminatory. Chiranjit Lal Chowdhuri v. Union of India, AIR 1951 SC 41 : 1951 SCJ 29 : 1950 SCR 869.

[9207] ● Class of persons for whom law made.—A class of persons for whom a law is made may well be quite small, and even a single person or corporation may form a class, provided there are special reasons applicable to that class which are not applicable to anyone else. If such reasons exist, legislation applicable even to a single individual or corporation is perfectly constitutional. Chiranjit Lal Chowdhuri v. Union of India, AIR 1951 SC 41 : 1951 SCJ 29 : 1950 SCR 869.

[9208] ● Guarantee of equal protection of law—Meaning.—The guarantee of the equal protection of the laws does not mean that every law must have universal application for all persons whether they are or are not in the same position or circumstance, and Article 14 does not take away from the State the power of classifying persons upon reasonable grounds of distinction.

Every classification must in some degree produce some inequality, and a law does not become obnoxious merely because of that, provided it deals equally with all persons falling within a particular class. Article 14 permits classification which rests upon some real and substantial distinction which bears a reasonable and just relation to the object sought to be attained by the law in question, and inhibits only such discrimination as singles out a particular person or group for special hostile treatment which takes away from that person or group the rights and freedoms which are enjoyed under the general law by all others in the same class. State of Bombay v. F.N. Balsara, AIR 1951 SC 318 : 52 CrLJ 1361 : 1951 SCJ 478 : 1951 SCR 682 : 1951 (2) MLJ 141 : 53 BomLR 982.

[9209] ● Substantive liabilities already incurred before law declared to be void.—The decision in Keshavan Madhava Menon's case related only to substantive liabilities which had already been incurred before a law was declared to be void, and it had no application to the question whether continuation of a pending trial after 26-1-1950 under a procedure which had been declared to be void was or was not unconstitutional and invalid.

There was no vested right in any particular course of procedure, and this applied as much to the State as to the subject. Therefore once the Supreme Court declares that a statute laying down a special procedure for a criminal trial is unconstitutional, continuance of such a trial after 26-1-1950 under that procedure is illegal, and conviction of the accused at the conclusion of such trial is otherwise than in accordance with "procedure established by law" within the meaning of Article 21, and has to be set aside.

After the Constitution came into force, the accused had the right not to be discriminated against in matters of procedure and were entitled to be tried according to law. Lachmandas Kewalram Ahuja v. State of Bombay, AIR 1952 SC 225 : 1952 SCA 575 : 1952 SCR 869 : 1952 SCJ 305 : 65 MLW 642 : 1952 MWN 507 : 90 Cal LJ 86 : 1952 (2) MLJ 251.

[9210] ● Law in force at commencement of Constitution when declared to be void.—Once a law which is in force at the commencement of the Constitution has been declared to be void, the effect of such declaration is not to render it void ab initio; even after the declaration, it is not altogether obliterated from the statute book, and it remains operative as regards obligations incurred before 26-1-1950. But with that exception, the declaration as to the unconstitutionality of a law under Article 13 renders it nullified and entirely ineffectual. On the other hand, if a law which conflicts with a fundamental right is a post-Constitution law, it is void from its very birth and is completely devoid of any legal force or effect.

However, so far as obligations and liabilities incurred after 26-1-1950 are concerned, the effect of a law being declared to be void is absolutely the same whether the law is pre-Constitution or post-Constitution, and in either case it has to be treated as being obliterated and effaced from the statute-book for all intents and purposes. Behram Khurshed Pesikaka v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 123 : 1955 SCA 1 : 1955 SCJ 73 : 1955 SCR 613 : 1955 CrLJ 215 : 1954 MWN 985 : 57 Bom LR 575 : 1955 (1) MLJ (SC) 32 : 1955 ALT (Cri) 1.

The question as to the meaning and effect of the expression "shall be void" is no longer res integra, and the matter stands concluded by the judgment in Keshavan Madhava Menon's case. By virtue of the operation of Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, even after the declaration that a pre-Constitution law is void, its entire operation does not cease and it is not altogether wiped out of the statute-book; it continues to remain in force so far as concerns the enforcement of all past liabilities incurred under it before 26-1-1950. Further, if the fundamental right with which such law is in conflict accrues under the Constitution only to Indian citizens, such law remains in force even after the declaration of its unconstitutionality so far as it concerns non-Indians residing in India. Bhikaji Narain Dhakras v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1955 SC 781 : 1956 SCA 1 : 1955 SCJ 48 : (1955) 2 SCR 589 : 1956 (1) MLJ (SC) 37.

[9212] ● Distinction between fundamental rights and statutory rights.—There is a distinction between fundamental rights and statutory rights. Under the Constitution a fundamental right cannot be taken away or abridged by any legislation and if under any law such right is infringed or violated, the person affected can move the Court under Article 32 to get such law declared under Article 13 to be void, and for appropriate relief against the State by the issue of a suitable direction, order or writ. There are no similar provisions in the Constitution in respect of statutory rights, and in the absence of any such provision the, constitutional machinery cannot be of any avail for enforcing what is merely a right conferred by statute. What is given by statute can be taken away by statute, and when a law takes away or abridges some right conferred on the petitioner by some previous law, the validity of that law cannot be questioned on the ground that it is discriminatory or unreasonable.

It follows that when a petitioner seeks to have a law declared to be void under Article 13 on the ground that it invests the executive with uncontrolled power, the Court is bound to inquire whether both the following conditions are satisfied :

a. that the right claimed by the petitioner is a fundamental right conferred by the Constitution and not merely a right given by some statute, and

b. that the power exercised by the executive is violative of such fundamental right.

If the Court finds that the right taken away or curtailed is only statutory, there is no question of invoking Article 13 and the petition under Article 32 has to be dismissed as being misconceived, even though the Court may find that the exercise of power which has been challenged was illegal. The proper remedy in such a case is to move against the Government under the ordinary law, and not by way of a petition under the Constitution. Pannalal Binjraj v. Union of India, AIR 1957 SC 397 : 1957 SCA 660 : 1957 SCR 233 : (1957) 31 ITR 565.

[9213] ● Pre-Constitutional law not unconstitutional.—Pre-Constitution laws are not to be regarded as unconstitutional. All existing laws are continued till the Supreme Court declares them to be in conflict with a fundamental right and therefore void. The burden must be placed on those who contend that a particular law has become void after coming into the force of the Constitution by reason of Article 13(1) read with any of the guaranteed freedoms. Madhu Limaye v. S.D.M., Monghyr, AIR 1971 SC 2486 : (1970) 3 SCC 746 : 1971 CrLJ 1720 : (1971) 2 SCJ 479 : 1971 MLJ (Cri) 629.

[9214] ● Person migrated to Pakistan between 1.3.1947 and 26.1.1950 not citizen of India.—Where a person has migrated to Pakistan between 1-3-1947 and 26-1-1950, he shall not be deemed to be a citizen of India. Such a person coming to India on a short visit on Pakistan passport and visa is a "Foreigner". State of Assam v. Jilkadar Ali, AIR 1972 SC 2166 : (1972) 2 SCC 320 : 1972 CrLJ 1441.

[9215] ● Charge of over-staying after expiration of permit.—It is not proper for the prosecuting authorities to have proceeded with the case against the respondent, when upon the facts set up by the respondent, it became clear that the respondent could not be prosecuted or convicted without a determination under Section 9 of the Citizenship Act that he had voluntarily acquired the citizenship of Pakistan between 26-1-1950 and the commencement of the Act on 30-12-1955. Without a decision on that question whether the respondent is a foreigner and had overstayed, neither an acquittal nor a conviction could be recorded. As no finding can be given by criminal or civil Courts, in a case in which an issue triable exclusively by the Central Government has properly arisen, the question of burden of proof dealt with in Section 9 of the Foreigners Act is immaterial. State of Gujarat v. Yakub Ibrahim, AIR 1974 SC 645 : (1974) 1 SCC 283 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 107 : 1974 CrLJ 597 : (1974) 1 SCWR 290 : 15 Guj LR 334.

[9216] ● Departmental instructions.—Departmental instructions like installation of high-voltage wires on the prison walls are neither "law" within the meaning of Article 13 (3)(a) nor are they "procedure established by law" within the meaning of Article 21 of the Constitution. D.B.M. Patnaik v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 2092 : (1975) 3 SCC 185 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 803 : 1975 CrLJ 556 : 1974 SCD 931.

[9217] ● Constitutionality of pre-Constitution statute like Prisons Act.—While examining the challenge of constitutionality of a pre-Constitution statute like of Prisons Act, the Courts must, consciously and deliberately, focus their attention to one fundamental fact that it is required to examine its validity in the context of the modern reformist theory of punishment, jail being treated as a correctional institution. The Court has, therefore, to strike a just balance between the dehumanising prison atmosphere and the preservation of internal order and discipline, the maintenance of institutional security against escape, and the rehabilitation of the prisoners. Sunil Batra v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1978 SC 1675 : (1978) 4 SCC 494 : 1978 CrLJ 1741.

[9218] ● Ordinance issued by President or Governor as much law as Act.—Ordinance issued by the President or the Governor is as much a law as an Act passed by the Parliament and subject to the same inhibitions. It is law within the meaning of Article 21. President's satisfaction in issuing an Ordinance is justifiable. Ordinance making power is not confined to virgin land or fresh field. Ordinance cannot obliterate

Articles 14, 19 and 21. Preventive detention is constitutionally valid. Amendments introduced by the 44th Amendment Act of the Constitution become part of the Constitution only when they are brought into force by a notification under Section 1(2) of the Act by the Central Government. Section 1(2) is not ultra vires. Mandamus cannot be issued against the Central Government for not issuing a notification to bring into force Section 3 of the Amendment Act. Section 1(2) is not violative of Article 14 as conferring uncontrolled power on the Executive. Not bringing into force Section 3 of the Act cannot be said that the Central Government is actuated by any ulterior motive. A.K. Roy v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 710 : (1982) 1 SCC 271 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 152 : 1982 CrLJ 340 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 176 : 1982 BLT (Rep) 164 : (1982) 2 SCJ 68 : (1982) 2 Chand LR (Cri) 333 : 1982 MLJ (Cri) 524.

5. MEANING OF THE EXPRESSION "EQUALITY BEFORE THE LAW"

[9219] ● Meaning of the expression "equality before the law".—In examining the question whether the restrictions imposed by any law on a citizen's right under Article 19(1) are or are not "reasonable" within the meaning of that expression as used in clauses (2) to (6) of that Article, the Court has the power to look into the substantive as well as the procedural parts of that law. In other words, the Court has the power not only to determine whether the substance of the restriction imposed is "reasonable", but also to determine whether the method of imposing that restriction and the procedure provided for putting that restriction into operation is as well reasonable. Khare, N.B. (Dr.) v. State of Delhi, AIR 1950 SC 211 : 51 CrLJ 550 : 1950 SCR 519 : 1950 SCJ 328 : 1950 ALJ 506 : 1950 AWR (HC) 514 : 86 CLJ 83 : 1950 MWN 440.

[9220] ● Imposing restrictions.—When a law purports to authorise the imposition of restrictions on a fundamental right conferred by Article 19(1) in language which is wide enough to cover both restrictions which are permissible and those which are not, and its language is not severable so as to apply it to permissible restrictions only, it must be declared to be altogether void. The reason for so holding lies in this that the language in which that law is couched allows it to transgress constitutional limits and the possibility remains that the executive may apply it for purposes not sanctioned by the Constitution. Romesh Thappar v. State of Madras, AIR 1950 SC 124 : 51 CrLJ 1514 : 1950 SCR 594 : 1950 SCJ 418 : 1950 ALJ 485 : (1950) 2 MLJ 390 : 63 MLW 929 : 1950 MWN 435.

[9221] ● Article 19 of constitution no application to legislation dealing with preventive detention.—Article 19 has no application to a legislation dealing with preventive detention as its direct object. It deals with freedoms conferred and restrictions imposed on a person who is in possession of his personal liberty and the moment a person is deprived of his personal liberty, he ceases to be entitled to the freedoms conferred by Article 19(1), except as to the right conferred by clause (1)(f) thereof.

In other words, Article 19 protects only some of the important attributes of personal liberty and not the right to personal liberty itself. It protects the freedom enjoyed by a free citizen and ceases to apply when he is deprived of his personal liberty under a procedure established by a valid law.

The true test of the application of Article 19 is the directness of the legislation, and not the indirect effect of that legislation on the freedoms conferred by that Article. A law relating to detention, whether punitive or preventive, is primarily directed towards deprivation of personal liberty and its impact on the freedoms conferred by Article 19 is only an incidental consequence of such deprivation. It follows that Article 19 cannot be invoked for the purpose of questioning the "reasonableness" of such a law, and it does not have to run the gauntlet of this Article before its validity can be accepted. If a law relating to preventive detention satisfies the requirements of Article 22(4) to (7) and lays down a procedure for detention which is in accordance therewith, the question of its "reasonableness" within the meaning of Article 19 does not nice.

Article 19 thus protects only freedoms which can be exercised by a citizen in possession of his personal liberty, and once he is deprived of his personal liberty under a valid and constitutional law and ceases to be a free citizen, he also ceases to be entitled to the benefit of Article 19. In other words, a citizen's rights to the freedoms conferred by Article 19 are incidents of personal liberty which attach themselves only to a free citizen. Gopalan, A.K. v. State of Madras, AIR 1950 SC 27 : 51 CrLJ 1383 : 1950 SCJ 174 : 1950 SCR 88 : (1950) 2 MLJ 42 : 63 MLW 638 : 1950 MWN 495.

[9222] ● Liberty of press essential part of freedom of expression.—Liberty of the press is an essential part of the right to freedom of expression conferred by Article 19(1)(a), and every man has the right to lay before the public his sentiments on any matter of public interest. Imposition of a restraint on this right by requiring advance submission to the Government of any matter proposed to be published in a newspaper, and by authorising its publication only when it was approved by an executive officer appointed in that behalf, amounted to imposition of pre-censorship on the press and would destroy its liberty.

Article 19(2) (as it stood before its amendment in the year 1951) authorised the imposition of restrictions on the right to freedom of expression only on the ground of "security of the State". Maintenance of public order was not a ground covered by that Article. It could not be said that every publication involved a threat to the security of the State merely because it might remotely disturb the maintenance of public order. Restrictions on fundamental rights have to be construed strictly, and if a law is found to have imposed restrictions which are not within the permissive cover of Article 19(2) that law is not "reasonable" within the meaning of that Article, and has to be declared to be unconstitutional and void as being an infringement of Article 19(1)(a).

The Act impugned in the present case authorised the State Government to demand the advance submission to the Government of matters proposed to be published in newspapers and to forbid publication of any matter which was not approved.

The Act is unconstitutional and void as imposing pre-censorship on the press, and the executive order issued under it had to be quashed by the issue of an appropriate test against the policy of the State Government, such as, "A and B hai hai" may be provocative and annoying to the members of the public who hear those slogans, and may even have a bad effect, but that in itself cannot amount to undermining public order or to incitement to an offence of violence against the State or its representatives.

Those in public positions must not be sensitive of skin, and must accept even unfair and undeserved attacks and criticisms with grace. Vulgar abuse or criticism must be taken as a necessary appendage of public office, and it is better to ignore it, rather than giving it importance by prosecution in a Criminal Court. Brij Bhushan v. State of Delhi, AIR 1950 SC 129 : 51 CrLJ 1525 : 1950 SCJ 425 : 1950 SCR 609 : 1950 ALJ 491 : (1950) 2 MLJ 431 : 63 MLW 934 : 1950 MWN 429.

[9223] ● Law relating to externment falls within permissive cover of Article 19(5) of Constitution.—A law relating to externment falls within the permissive cover of Article 19(5) only when the restrictions imposed by it are "reasonable" and in the interest of the general public.

In determining whether such restrictions are "reasonable", the Court must examine the law not only as to its substance but also as to its procedure. A restriction is "reasonable" only when it is reasonable as to all the following things, namely, (a) its duration, (b) its territorial limits, and (c) the procedure it provides for putting the order of externment into operation.

A law relating to externment cannot be assailed as being unreasonable, (a) merely because the question as to the particular person against whom the order of externment should be passed and as to the previous activity of that person which requires the making of such an order, is left to the subjective satisfaction of the executive officer or authority, or (b) merely because it excludes from a judicial review the merits of the order of externment and makes such satisfaction non-justiciable.

A provision in a law relating to externment which authorises the executive to extern a person without communicating to him the grounds for his externment is not reasonable within the meaning of Article 19(5) and must be declared to be void. Khare N.B. v. State of Delhi, AIR 1950 SC 211 : 51 CrLJ 550 : 1950 SCJ 328 : 1950 SCR 519 : 1950 ALJ 506 : 1950 AWR (HC) 514 : 86 CLJ 83 : 1950 MWN 440.

[9224] ● Law relating to preventive detention not justifiable on ground of "reasonableness under Article 19(5) of Constitution".— MAHAJAN J. : The provisions of a law relating to preventive detention are not justiciable on the ground of "reasonableness" under Article 19(5). The express provisions of Article 22 must be taken to exclude the operation of Article 19(1)(d) so far as concerns a law relating to preventive detention. If "reasonableness" under Article 19(5) were to be made the test of the legality of a law relating to preventive detention, the provisions of Article 22 would become redundant. Both are enabling provisions, and one enabling provision in the Constitution cannot be held to be a safeguard against another enabling provision therein.

MUKHERJEE J. : Article 19(1)(d) contemplates only freedom of movement and not freedom from detention. Freedom of movement is only an aspect of personal liberty and the validity of a law which takes away liberty has to be determined only by the application of Articles 20, 21 and 22. The freedoms conferred by Article 19 are excluded from the concept of "personal liberty" and vest only in a citizen who is free and in possession of his liberty.

S.R. DAS J. : Article 19(1)(d) is not concerned with personal liberty and it would be placing a strain on its plain language to squeeze into it the notion of personal liberty. The expressions "right of free movement" and "personal liberty" are not synonymous. Article 21 protects a person not only against procedural invasions but also against substantive invasions of personal liberty, and it cannot be contended that it protects only against procedural invasions of the right to personal liberty while Article 19(1)(d) protects against invasions which are substantive in their nature.

Article 19(1)(d) asserts only the citizen's right to move freely throughout the whole of the territory of India unhindered by any State barriers, and Articles 19(1)(d) and 19(5) together mean that except when general public interest demands a restriction on that movement (for example, in the case of a leper, or for keeping people out of strategic areas), a free citizen has the right to go anywhere he likes in the Union Territory.

Article 19(1)(d) gives protection only to the right to freedom of movement and has nothing to do with freedom of person or personal liberty as such. The right which it gives can be exercised only by a free citizen in possession of his personal liberty, and if freedom of a person is taken away by any valid law, whether it be a law relating to punitive or to preventive detention, such detention operates as a bar to the exercise of the right to freedom of movement so that Articles 19(1)(d) and 19(5) cannot be invoked for questioning the "reasonableness" of the restrictions imposed by that law upon personal liberty. Gopalan A.K. v. State of Madras, AIR 1950 SC 27 : 51 CrLJ 1383 : 1950 SCJ 174 : 1950 SCR 88 : (1950) 2 MLJ 42 : 63 MLW 638 : 1950 MWN 495.

[9225] ● Municipal bye-law imposing restrictions on right to carry on particular trade within municipal area.—A municipal bye-law which authorised the municipality to place a complete ban on the right to carry on a particular trade within the municipal area on all persons except one, in effect authorised the municipality to create a virtual monopoly in that trade in favour of one person to the exclusion of all other persons in that trade. Such a law imposed restrictions on the right of other traders carrying on the same trade within the municipal area which amounted to a total prohibition and was clearly unreasonable.

The impugned bye-law constituted an infringement of the right of the petitioners under Article 19(1)(g) and had to be declared to be void. Rashid Ahmed v. Municipal Board, Kairana, AIR 1950 SC 163 : 1950 SCJ 124 : 1950 SCR 566 : 63 MLW 867 (2).

[9226] ● Imposition of restrictions on right to freedom of speech and expression.—Article 19(2).—(As it stood before its amendment by the Constitution First Amendment Act, 1951) permitted the imposition of restrictions on the right to freedom of speech and expression conferred by Article 19(1)(a) only as regards matters which "undermined the security of the State" or which tended to "overthrow the State". There was no power under Article 19(2) before its amendment to make laws imposing restrictions in the interests of "public order".

The Madras Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949, which authorised the State Government to prohibit the entry into and circulation within the State of outside publications on a ground which was outside the permissive cover of Article 19(2) is void as constituting an infringement of the right guaranteed under Article 19(1)(a).

(i) Freedom of speech and expression conferred by Article 19(1)(a) includes the freedom of publication and circulation. Publication and circulation are the essential attributes of the freedom of expression.

(ii) "Public order" no doubt includes in its concept the security of the State, but it is not every act which disturbs public order which can be said to disturb such security. It is only that serious and aggravated form of public disorder which endangers the security of the State which can justify legislative restriction under Article 19(2).

(iii) The right vested in a State Legislature to impose by law restrictions on the fundamental right to freedom of expression has to be exercised within the strict constitutional limits laid down in Article 19(2), and if a restriction so imposed transgresses such limits it must be held to be "unreasonable". As has been said, "it is far better to leave a few noxious branches to their growth, than, by pruning them away, to injure the vigour of those which yield the proper fruit".

(iv) The impugned Act was "unreasonable" and outside the cover of Article 19(2) inasmuch as it authorised a restraint upon the entry into the State and circulation within it of a publication on a ground which was outside the purview of Article 19(2) (as it then was).

(v) Since the language of the Act was not severable, and it authorised the State executive to impose restrictions upon a publication not only when its circulation within the State involved a danger to the security of the State but also when no such danger was involved, and since the possibility remained that the Act might be applied by the executive for the purpose of restraining such entry and circulation even when there was no such danger, the whole law had to be declared to be void as being an infringement of the fundamental right to freedom of expression guaranteed under Article 19(1)(a). Romesh Thappar v. State of Madras, AIR 1950 SC 124 : 1951 CrLJ 1514 : 1950 SCJ 418 : 1950 SCR 594 : 1950 ALJ 485 : (1950) 2 MLJ 390 : 63 MLW 929 : 1950 MWN 435.

[9227] ● Previous permission of Provincial Govt. required if any publication fell within the meaning of word "news-sheet".—Under Section 15(1) of the impugned Act, if any publication fell within the meaning of the word "news-sheet" as defined in Section 2(b) of the Act, previous permission of the Provincial Government was required for its publication, and under Section 18 of the Act, it was an offence to punish a news-sheet the publication of which had not been so authorised.

The appellant in the present case was prosecuted under the said Section 18.

(1) The impugned provisions of the said Act are unconstitutional and void as being an infringement of the fundamental right guaranteed under Article 19(1)(a).

(2) However, inasmuch as the offence had occurred and the prosecution had been started before the Constitution came into force, the declaration by the Court that the said provisions are void cannot affect the legality of the proceeding which is pending in respect of an offence which was completed before 26th January, 1950. Keshavan Madhava Menon v. State of Bombay, AIR 1951 SC 128 : 52 CrLJ 860 : 1951 SCJ 182 : 1951 SCR 228 : 1951 MWN (Cri) 60 : 1951 MWN 232 : 1951 (1) MLJ 370 : 1951 ALJ (SC) 23 : 64 MLW 382 : 28 BomCrC 155 : 53 BomLR 458 : ILR (1951) Hyd 294.

[9228] ● Law of preventive if satisfied requirements of Article 22 and Article 22 and Article 22(4) to (7) of Constitution.—If a law relating to preventive detention satisfies the requirements of Article 21 and Article 22(4) to (7), its validity cannot be questioned on the ground that its effect is to curtail the detenu's right to freedom of expression guaranteed under Article 19(1)(a).

The question whether a law relating to preventive detention is "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(2) does not at all arise, because Article 19 cannot be invoked for the purpose of adjudging the constitutionality of a law relating to preventive detention.

The principles relating to the application of Article 19(1)(a) laid down in the case of Romesh Thappar and Brij Bhushan can be of no help to a person detained under the Preventive Detention Act because of two reasons. Firstly, the benefit of Article 19 can be availed of only by a free citizen, and the moment a citizen's personal liberty is taken away under a law which satisfies the requirements of Articles 21 and 22, he ceases to have the right to invoke Article 19. Secondly, "maintenance of public order" is a good ground for a law relating to preventive detention, under Entry 3 of List III. Ram Singh v. State of Delhi, AIR 1951 SC 270 : 52 CrLJ 904 : 1951 SCJ 374 : 1951 ALJ (SC) 111 : 1951 SCR 451 : 1951 MWN 765 : 1951 MWN (Cri) 233.

[9229] ● Article 19 of Constitution when can be invoked.—Article 19 can be invoked only when a law imposes a direct restriction on one of the freedoms guaranteed by that Article, and not when a right guaranteed under it is abridged or curtailed indirectly as a result of the operation of a law relating to punitive or preventive detention. The true approach is to consider the directness of the legislation and not its indirect effect on a person's mode of life.

Therefore, if a law relating to preventive detention satisfies the requirements of Articles 21 and 22, its validity cannot be challenged on the ground that its effect is to curtail the detenu's right to freedom of speech, or to freedom of movement.

A law relating to preventive detention is governed, not by Article 19, but by Articles 21 and 22. Maintenance of public order is a good ground for such a law (see Entry 3 of the List III), and curtailment of speech is only an indirect effect of its operation. Therefore, Article 19(1)(a) cannot be invoked for the purpose of challenging its validity. The decisions in Romesh Thappar's case and Brij Bhushan's case can be of no help for that purpose, because in both cases the law in question was not one relating to preventive detention. Ram Singh v. State of Delhi, AIR 1951 SC 270 : 52 CrLJ 904 : 1951 SCJ 374 : 1951 SCR 451 : 1951 ALJ (SC) 111 : 1951 MWN 765 : 1951 MWN (Cri) 233.

[9230] ● Reasonable restriction—Meaning of.—The law impugned in the present case was the Central Provinces and Berar Act No. 54 of 1948. The object of the Act was to provide for an adequate supply of agricultural labour which was scant in certain areas of the Province. In order to carry out this object, the Act authorised the Government to issue notification whereby the manufacture of "bidi" was totally prohibited in any notified area during any notified agricultural season. The object of the impugned Act was perfectly reasonable, but the constitutional validity of a law was determined not by its object but by its effect and operation. The object of maintaining an adequate supply of agricultural labour during the busy season could well have been achieved by putting a reasonable restraint on the employment of agricultural labour in the bidi trade during the busy season. For that purpose it was not necessary to place a total restraint on that trade. Imposition of total ban on that trade even for a notified period was a restriction which was not "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(6), and since the language of the Act was not severable so as to apply it to reasonable restrictions only, the whole Act had to be declared to be void. Chintaman Rao v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1951 SC 118 : 1950 SCJ 571 : 1950 SCR 759 : 64 MLW 370 : 1951 ALJ (SC) 82 : ILR (1951) Hyd 221.

[9231] ● Taking over of management of industrial concern grossly mismanaged.—A law under which the management of an industrial concern which had been grossly mismanaged was taken over by the Government, but the rights of the shareholders to hold or dispose of their shares were left untouched, was "reasonable and in the interest of the general public" within the meaning of Articles 19(5) and 19(6). Chiranjitlal Chowdhuri v. Union of India, AIR 1951 SC 41 : 1951 SCJ 29 : 1950 SCR 869 : 64 MLW 47 : 1951 MWN 111 : 53 Bom LR 499 : ILR (1951) Hyd 461.

[9232] ● Prohibiting person from commending or encouraging use of intoxicants.—Sections 23(a), 23(b) and 24(1)(a) of the Bombay Prohibition Act, 1949, which prohibited a person from commending or encouraging the use of intoxicants were void as being an infringement of a person's right to freedom of speech and expression guaranteed under Article 19(1)(a). State of Bombay v. F.N. Balsara, AIR 1951 SC 318 : 52 CrLJ 1361 : 1951 SCJ 478 : 1951 SCR 682 : 1951 (2) MLJ 141 : 53 BomLR 982.

[9233] ● Closure of shops for one day in a week.—A provision in a State law, relating to shops and establishments—the Punjab Trade Employees Act, 1940—which required that shops in the State shall remain closed for one day in the week, and which extended the restriction to all shops in the State, whether they were run by paid employees or were run only by family members of the owner, was perfectly "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(6) and did not infringe the right of any such shop owner under Article 19(1)(g). Manohar Lal v. State, AIR 1951 SC 315 : 52 CrLJ 1237 : 1951 SCJ 475 : 1951 SCR 671 : 1951 (2) MLJ 139 : 1951 ALJ 605 : 1951 MWN 763 : 64 MLW 943 : 1951 MWN (Cri) 231.

[9234] ● Prohibiting manufacture sale purchase and use of liquid medicinal—Toilet preparations containing alcohol.—Application of Articles 19(1)(f) and 19(5) to Sections 2(24)(a), 12 and 13 of the Bombay Prohibition Act, 1949, in so far as they prohibited the manufacture, sale, purchase, consumption and use of liquid medicinal and toilet preparations containing alcohol. These provisions were void as being an infringement of Article 19(1)(f). State of Bombay v. F.N. Balsara, AIR 1951 SC 318 : 52 CrLJ 1361 : 1951 SCJ 478 : 1951 SCR 682 : 1951 (2) MLJ 141 : 53 BomLR 982.

[9235] ● Reasonable restriction—Meaning of.—Article 19.—The phrase "reasonable restrictions" in clauses (2) to (6) of Article 19 means that the restrictions imposed on a fundamental right guaranteed under Article 19(1) should not be of an arbitrary or excessive nature, and should not be beyond what is required in the interests of the general public. The word "reasonable" implies due care and thought and the choice of a course dictated by a rational approach. A law cannot be said to be "reasonable" if it does not strike an even balance between individual freedom and social control permitted in public interest. If a law fails to strike such a balance, it must be held to be unreasonable, so as to fall outside the permissive cover of Article 19(2) to (6). Chintaman Rao v. State of M.P., AIR 1951 SC 118 : 1950 SCJ 571 : 1950 SCR 759 : 1951 ALJ (SC) 82.

[9236] ● Object of law good and laudable not enough.—It is not enough that the object of a law is good and laudable. It is the effect of it which is the test of its "reasonableness". The restriction imposed has got to be reasonable, that is, it must have a reasonable relation to the object of the legislation. If the restriction imposed is so drastic in its scope and effect as to go far beyond the object of the legislation, the law must be held to be an infringement of Article 19, however laudable its object may be. Chintaman Rao v. State of M.P., AIR 1951 SC 118 : 1950 SCJ 571 : 1950 SCR 759.

[9237] ● Duty of Supreme Court to guard fundamental rights conferred on citizen.—The Constitution has cast a duty on the Supreme Court to guard the fundamental rights conferred on the citizen and to judge for itself whether a law made by the State is or is not a violation of any such right vested in the petitioner. The State cannot contend that the Legislature is the best judge of what is "reasonable" or that its determination of what is reasonable should be final and conclusive. In other words, the question whether a restriction imposed by any law is or is not "reasonable" is a justiciable issue. Chintaman Rao v. State of M.P., AIR 1951 SC 118 : 1950 SCJ 571 : 1950 SCR 759.

[9238] ● Law—Authorising executive to impose restrictions on fundamental right.—If the language employed in any law is so wide as to authorise the executive to impose restrictions on a fundamental right, some of which are permissible as well as some of which are not, and if its language does not allow of any severance, so that, if that law is allowed to stand, the possibility remains that it might be applied for enforcing restrictions not sanctioned by the Constitution, then the whole law must be declared to be void. Such a law cannot be held to be valid partially in view of the fact that a severance between reasonable and unreasonable restrictions is shut out by its very language. Chintaman Rao v. State of M.P., AIR 1951 SC 118 : 1950 SCJ 571 : 1950 SCR 759.

[9239] ● Expression on "equality before the law".—The expression "equality before the law" means that as between all subjects of the State placed in the same or similar circumstances, the law of the State must lay an even hand. That, however, does not mean that every law must have a universal application so as to cover persons who are not in the same or similar position. Article 14 recognises that the varying needs of different classes of subjects may require different treatments, and that different laws must be made to meet the differing needs of different people. Therefore it leaves a power to the State to enact laws on special subjects which may apply only to a particular class of persons or things, and to create varying classifications which may be based on different considerations, such as, geographical limits, similarity of occupations etc. Such classification will necessarily produce some inequality between persons falling within that class and persons outside it, but a law creating such classification cannot be said to be violative of Article 14 merely because it has no application to persons who are outside the class created thereby. State of W.B. v. Anwar Ali Sarkar, AIR 1952 SC 75 : 1952 CrLJ 510 : 1952 SCJ 55 : 1952 SCA 148 : 1952 SCR 284 : 1952 MWN 460 : 1952 MWN (Cri) 124.

[9240] ● Test of permissible classification—Law if fails to satisfy.—Before a law can escape the inhibition of Article 14 it must satisfy the following test :

a. the differentia on which the classification is based must be intelligible, and

b. the differentia must bear a reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved by the law.

It is not enough that the object of the law is reasonable, or that the classification is clear and intelligible; it is absolutely necessary for the constitutionality of a law that the interrelation between the differentia and the object of the law is reasonable and rational. If a law fails to satisfy this test of a permissible classification it must be held to be in violation of Article 14. State of West Bengal v. Anwar Ali Sarkar, AIR 1952 SC 75 : 1952 CrLJ 510 : 1952 SCJ 55 : 1952 SCR 284.

[9241] ● Law if creates special class and applies to it special provision.—If a law creates a special class and applies to it special provisions which are not applicable to it under the general law of the land, such law must disclose on the face of it the reasonable grounds for the distinction made. It cannot be urged that it must be presumed that the Legislature knew its own business and that it had in its mind the just grounds for the classification it has created. To accept such a contention will render Article 14 nugatory and the protection it affords a mere eye-wash.

For a charge of denial of equality before the law to succeed, it must be shown that the impugned statute denies to the petitioner the rights or privileges enjoyed by others placed in a similar position or situation. No doubt, the burden of proving this lies upon the petitioner; but if he discharges that burden to the satisfaction of the Court, the unconstitutional character of the impugned statute must be held to have been established.

In order to succeed, it is not incumbent upon the petitioner to go further and show that the Legislature was animated by a hostile or inimical intention. What the intention of the Legislature was, is not the subject of a judicial inquiry. Courts are concerned only with the effect and the operation of a law. So much so that even if the State affirmatively proves that the Legislature had no intention at all to create any discrimination, even that cannot save the law if the result of its operation is in effect to create a discrimination.

There is no reference in Article 14 to intention, and its gravamen is equality of treatment. It would be dangerous to introduce a subjective test in a matter as to which the Article itself lays down only a clear objective test. "Discriminatory" and "hostile" mean the same thing in the present context, because a law which is discriminatory in treatment as between persons who are similarly situated is necessarily "hostile" in the sense that it affects injuriously the person whom it hits. State of West Bengal v. Anwar Ali Sarkar, AIR 1952 SC 75 : 1952 CrLJ 510 : 1952 SCJ 55 : 1952 SCR 284.

[9242] ● Law whom not make arbitrary discrimination.—Even when a law does not itself expressly make any arbitrary discrimination, if it leaves an unfettered discretion to the executive so as to make it possible for it to make an arbitrary selection between person and person both of whom fall within the same class, that law is as bad as a law which itself creates an arbitrary discrimination. To urge that such law is saved from the taint of discrimination merely because it does not expressly authorise discrimination, is to ignore the fallacy which lies in overlooking the fact that the authority for such discrimination is incorporated in the Act itself. The question as to how the discrimination is worked out is absolutely immaterial, if discrimination is the actual result of the operation of an Act. In either case, the Act must be struck down as being in violation of Article 14. State of West Bengal v. Anwar Ali Sarkar, AIR 1952 SC 75 : 1952 CrLJ 510 : 1952 SCJ 55 :

[9243] ● Fundamental rights—Guaranteed and protected.—Fundamental rights are guaranteed and protected not only against unconstitutional laws but also against unconstitutional executive orders and actions. A statute is violative of Article 14 not only when it itself creates an arbitrary discrimination but also when it leaves uncontrolled power to the executive to make such discrimination, and in either case it has to be struck down. However, a law may be such that its constitutionality cannot be challenged on the ground of discrimination, but even so, if the executive officer entrusted with the working out of that law makes an arbitrary selection between persons falling within the same class, the executive order so made will be struck down, though the law itself will be left untouched. State of West Bengal v. Anwar Ali Sarkar, AIR 1952 SC 75 : 1952 CrLJ 510 : 1952 SCJ 55.

[9244] ● Rule of procedure as much within purview of Article 14 as rule of substantive law.—A rule of procedure comes as much within the purview of Article 14 as a rule of substantive law, and all persons who are similarly situated have a right to be governed by the same procedure in a criminal trial and to receive the same facilities of defence. State of West Bengal v. Anwar Ali Sarkar, AIR 1952 SC 75 : 1952 CrLJ 510 : 1952 SCJ 55.

[9245] ● Difference in procedure according to different needs of different parts of territory within State.—Per SASTRI C.J.—Difference in procedure according to the differing needs of different parts of the territories within a State is not in itself sufficient to rebut the presumption of the constitutionality of any impugned law. When a law prescribes a special procedure applicable only to a particular class of persons, it necessarily creates an inequality between persons falling under that class and persons outside it, merely because such law introduces a procedure for application to a special class which differs or varies from the normal procedure under the general law of the land, such law cannot be condemned as being a violation of the right to equality before the law. A charge of conflict with Article 14 can succeed only when it is shown that the differentiation involves an element of unfavourable bias and that the disparity in treatment goes far beyond the necessity of the occasion.

Per FAZAL ALI J.—The Legislature is entitled to take into consideration the special necessities of the occasion and to pass special laws which meet the requirements of a local area in special circumstances.

Per MUKHERJEA J.—For the purpose of dealing with the complex problems that arise out of an infinite variety of human relations, the legislatures have been given the power to pass laws which necessarily apply only to selected classes of persons. The necessary consequence of such classification is to differentiate the persons belonging to that class from others outside it. That by itself cannot make the law unconstitutional as being in violation of the equality clause under Article14. The violation occurs only when the law operates unequally on persons grouped within the same class, or when it leaves power to the executive to make a capricious selection between members of the same class, or when the law is a palpable abuse of legislative power by making a classification which has no reasonable relation to its object, or when it goes far beyond the necessity of the occasion. Kathi Raning Rawat v. State of Saurashtra, AIR 1952 SC 123 : 1952 CrLJ 805 : 1952 SCJ 168 : 1952 SCR 435 : 1952 SCA 245 : 1952 MWN 762 : 1952 MWN (Cri) 210.

[9246] ● Kinds of statutes to be considered under Article 14 of Constitution.—Three kinds of statutes which have to be considered under Article 14. (a) Those which lay down the object and policy of the legislature and also make a classification. (b) Those which lay down the object and policy, but leave the classification to the executive. (c) Those which do not lay down any clear policy and yet leave the power of selection to the executive.

Laws in class (a) : When examining the constitutionality of laws in class (a), the Court has merely to see whether the classification made is founded upon an intelligible differentia and whether the special features of the class created under it bear a reasonable relation to the object and policy of the law.

Laws in class (b) : A law is not violative of Article 14 merely because it itself does not make a classification and leaves it to the executive to make a classification at the proper time in accordance with the objectives indicated in the law itself. In such a case the law itself remains good and only the validity of the executive action is to be determined, by seeing whether it has acted in conformity with the policy laid down in the Act for its guidance and whether the classification made by it is reasonable on the same test as is mentioned above, that is, whether the differentia on which it is founded is intelligible and whether it bears a just relation to the object of the Act. The Court will then uphold or strike down the executive order or action depending upon whether it finds that it has or has not passed the aforesaid test, but in either case the Act itself will be left untouched.

Laws in class (c) : An Act which does not lay down any clear policy or objective, and yet confers upon the executive an uncontrolled and unguided power to make at its will and pleasure a classification taking away the rights or privileges under the general law of the land of the persons grouped within that class bears on its very face the stamp of unconstitutionality. In the case of such an Act, the mischief lies in the Act itself and is inherent in its very structure. Such an Act must be straightaway declared to be void as being in clear conflict with Article 14. It follows that every order or action of the executive under such an Act is invalid and has to be put aside. Kathi Raning Rawat v. State of Saurashtra, AIR 1952 SC 123 : 1952 CrLJ 805 : 1952 SCJ 168 : 1952 SCR 435.

[9247] ● Right to form association and unions fundamental right.—The right to form associations and unions is a fundamental right of great value and importance to the citizen, and its curtailment without just cause is fraught with grave reactions in the fields of politics and economics and must be zealously guarded against.

A law which authorises the Government to declare any association to be unlawful on the ground that it had for its object interference with the administration of law or maintenance of public order, and yet denies to that association the right to have the merits of the executive order or action tested by a judicial inquiry, is not "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(4). Such a restriction may be justified in the case of a law which imposes it on grounds which are anticipatory, such as, a law relating to preventive detention or a law relating to externment, because in the case of such laws the decision has necessarily got to be left to the subjective satisfaction of the executive. However, no such reason exists in the case of laws in which the grounds on which restrictions are imposed are entirely factual, and the question whether any reasonable ground does in fact exist can be objectively determined in a judicial inquiry. Therefore, in the case of a law in which restrictions are imposed on a citizen's right to form associations on grounds which are only factual, if the law goes further and either expressly or by implication denies to the person affected the right to a judicial inquiry such law is outside the cover of Article 19(4). In such a case even though the law may provide a formula whereunder the association is given the right to make a representation to an Advisory Board appointed under the Act, it cannot be contended that such a right is an adequate substitute for the right to a judicial inquiry. A law which shuts out a right to a judicial inquiry can be justified only on very exceptional grounds such as those mentioned above.

A law which empowers the State to declare an association to be unlawful if its object is interference with public order and to make it an offence to be a member of such association after the declaration, has to be "reasonable" not only in its substance but also in its procedure, so that the restriction imposed must be such as could be justified not only as regards its duration and extent, but also as regards the manner and method prescribed for its imposition. If under any such law the Government is empowered to declare an association to be unlawful and to ban its membership for an indefinite period or until such time as the Government is pleased to cancel the notification issued in that behalf, the law is not "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(4). Similarly, if such a law does not provide for adequate communication of the notification to the office-bearers of the association by due service or proclamation at the place where it carries on its activities, the law cannot be said to be "reasonable", because notification in the Gazette is not due communication. State of Madras v. V.G

[9248] ● Power under Sections 15, 16 and 16A of Criminal Law Amendment Acts 1908 (as amended by Madras Act of 1950)—Validity.— The powers given under the impugned Sections 15, 16 and 16-A of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908 (as amended by Madras Act XI of 1950 to the State Government imposed restrictions on the right guaranteed by Article 19(1)(c) which were not "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(4), for all the following reasons, namely, (a) that they by implication denied to the petitioner Society and its members the right to have the propriety and merits of the Order issued by the Government in the exercise of its powers under the Act objectively tested by a judicial inquiry, (b) that the declaration issued by the Government could under these provisions remain in force for an indefinite period at the pleasure of the executive authorities, and (c) that the impugned sections contained no provision for an adequate communication to the association concerned of the Order issued against it. For all these reasons the impugned sections of the Act fell outside the cover of Article 19(4) and were violative of the right conferred by Article 19(1)(c). State of Madras v. V.G. Row, AIR 1952 SC 196 : 1952 CrLJ 966 : 1952 SCJ 253 : 1952 SCR 597.

[9249] ● Law placing restriction upon right guaranteed under Article 19 if ultra vires.—If a law placing any restriction upon a right guaranteed under Article 19 is ultra vires as being beyond the powers of the State Legislature which has made it, the restraint placed by it is necessarily bad and constitutes an infringement of Article 19. An illegal impost must at all times be an "unreasonable" one, and therefore the question of its reasonableness or otherwise on its merits does not have to be considered at all. An illegal impost is necessarily an "unreasonable" impost, without proof of anything more besides its illegality. Mohammad Yasin v. Town Area Committee, Jalalabad, AIR 1952 SC 115 : 1952 SCA 237 : 1952 SCJ 162 : 1952 SCR 572 : 1952 ALJ 313 : 1952 MWN 492.

[9250] ● Law imposing restriction on fundamental rights.—A law which authorises the executive to impose restrictions upon fundamental rights guaranteed under Article 19(1) at its discretion, and goes further and denies to the Court the right to test objectively the "reasonableness" of the imposition must be examined with great care before it is held to be constitutional.

A formula which denies to the person concerned a right to have an encroachment upon a fundamental freedom objectively tested by a judicial inquiry cannot be accepted with approval as a general pattern, and can be considered "reasonable" only in exceptional cases and within the narrowest limits. No doubt, such a formula in which the only authority which could review the merits of an executive order was an Advisory Board appointed under the Act itself, was accepted by the Court in the cases of A.K. Gopalan and Dr. N.B. Khare, but neither case in an authority for the proposition that such a formula should be approved as a general pattern in such matters, and in both these cases the formula was accepted for the special reasons applicable to those cases only.

So far as preventive detention is concerned, the Constitution itself sanctions such a formula in Article 22, and therefore the question of its reasonableness under Article 19 does not at all arise. It was on this ground that the formula was accepted in Gopalan's case. Dr. Khare's case related to externment, and there the majority of the Court again accepted the formula on account of the peculiar features of an order of externment. Preventive detention and externment are precautionary and anticipatory measures, based upon reasonable belief arising out of the data in the possession of the executive authority relating to the previous activities of the person concerned. The action taken is a preventive measure taken in public interest for the maintenance of public security and order. Both cases involve an element of urgency requiring prompt action. In both cases the grounds of action are anticipatory so as to prevent future prejudicial activity, and when the ground are anticipatory it is inevitable that the decision has to be left to the subjective satisfaction of the executive officers. On the other hand, when the grounds on which a restriction on a fundamental freedom is imposed are factual, the existence of those grounds is a matter which can be objectively determined, and if by any law a judicial inquiry into the facts underlying an order is shut out, the law is not "reasonable" and its validity cannot be sustained. State of Madras v. V.G. Row, AIR 1952 SC 196 : 1952 CrLJ 966 : 1952 SCA 399 : 1952 SCJ 253 : 1952 SCR 597 : 65 MLW 420 : 1952 MWN 397 : 1952 MWN (Cri) 101 : 1952 (2) MLJ 135 : 90 CalLJ 218.

[9251] ● Law authorising State of declare association unlawful unreasonable.—An Act which authorises the State to declare an association to be unlawful and makes it an offence to be a member of an association so declared to be unlawful is "unreasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(4) if it excludes a judicial inquiry into the merits of the executive order and subjects it only to a scrutiny by an Advisory Board appointed under the Act. State of Madras v. V.G. Row, AIR 1952 SC 196 : 1952 CrLJ 966 : 1952 SCA 399 : 1952 SCJ 253 : 1952 SCR 597.

[9252] ● Law imposing restrictions upon freedom of citizens to be reasonable.—A law which authorises the State to impose restrictions upon the freedoms of a citizen guaranteed under Article 19 has to be reasonable both in its substance as well as its procedure. The Court has the power to examine the impositions and see not only whether the restrictions are justified as regards their duration and extent, but also whether the manner and method prescribed for the enforcement of those restrictions are as well reasonable. State of Madras v. V.G. Row, AIR 1952 SC 196 : 1952 CrLJ 966 : 1952 SCR 597 : 1952 SCJ 253.

[9253] ● Law "unreasonable" taking away fundamental right.—If an impugned law is a permanent measure, and it authorises the executive Government to take away a fundamental right or place a restriction upon it for an indefinite period until the executive thinks it fit at some later stage to cancel the notification under which the restriction is imposed, such law must be held to be "unreasonable." State of Madras v. V.G. Row, AIR 1952 SC 196 : 1952 CrLJ 966 : 1952 SCA 399 : 1952 SCJ 253.

[9254] ● Notification in gazette not good substitute for adequate communication.—If the impugned law authorises the imposition of restrictions on a fundamental right, but the procedure laid down in it does not provide for an adequate communication of the notification imposing the restriction to the persons concerned, by such means as personal service or service by affixture or any proclamation at the place where they carry on their activity, the procedure is "unreasonable". Notification in the gazette is not a good substitute for some form of adequate communication, since the possibility always remains that the notification may not reach the notice of the persons concerned sufficiently in time for them to make the representation against it which the Act itself provided for. State of Madras v. V.G. Row, AIR 1952 SC 196 : 1952 CrLJ 966 : 1952 SCA 399 : 1952 SCJ 253 : 1952 SCR 597.

[9255] ● Test of reasonableness depend in each case.—The test of "reasonableness" will depend in each case upon the peculiar features of that case, and no abstract standard or general pattern can be laid down for application to all cases, even though the constitutional criterion is reduced to a single word. In each case the decision must necessarily depend upon the cumulative effect of the various factors governing that case. It follows that a decision in an earlier case depending upon the peculiar facts and circumstances of that case, cannot have much value as a precedent when deciding the validity of a restriction in a later case. State of Madras v. V.G. Row, AIR 1952 SC 196 : 1952 CrLJ 966 : 1952 SCA 399 : 1952 SCJ 253 : 1952 SCR 597.

[9256] ● Whether impugned enactment reasonable—Factors to be considered.—In arriving at a decision as to whether an impugned enactment is "reasonable", the Court will have to consider the following factors :

(1) the nature of the right infringed;
(2) the purpose of the restriction imposed;
(3) the extent of the evil sought to be remedied;
(4) the extent of the restriction in relation to the evil it seeks to check;
(5) the prevailing conditions in the area sought to be covered by this law; and
(6) the manner and the method of the imposition. State of Madras v. V.G. Row, AIR 1952 SC 196 : 1952 CrLJ 966 : 1952 SCA 399 : 1952 SCJ 253 : 1952 SCR 597.

[9257] ● Excessive judicial interference with social legislation.—It is inevitable that judicial interference with legislation on the ground of its being unreasonable will be affected by the social philosophy of the Judges of the Supreme Court participating in the decision, but it must be borne in mind that their ever present consciousness of their solemn responsibility, will never allow them to forget that the Constitution is meant for all the people of this country and not only for those of their own way of thinking, and that the elected representatives of the people have, in making such a law, considered the restriction imposed to be reasonable. In view of this, the fear of excessive judicial interference with social legislation on the ground of "unreasonableness" is entirely groundless. State of Madras v. V.G. Row, AIR 1952 SC 196 : 1952 CrLJ 966 : 1952 SCA 399 : 1952 SCJ 253.

[9258] ● Maintenance of public order good ground for imposing restriction on right to freedom speech and expression.—Article 19(2) as it originally stood covered only laws which imposed restrictions on activities which "undermined the security of the State". In Romesh Thappar's case and in Brij Bhushan's case it was held that Article 19(2) could not be extended to give cover to laws which imposed restrictions on the right to freedom to expression only for the purpose of maintenance of public order, and that since there was a possibility that an Act which sought to restrain such activities might be abused by placing restrictions on activities which in no way undermined the security of the State, the whole Act had to be declared to be unconstitutional and void.

But after these decisions were pronounced, Article 19(2) has been amended by the First Amendment Act of 1951 with retrospective effect, and therefore maintenance of public order can now be a good ground for imposing a restriction on the right to freedom of speech and expression, and the decisions in the cases of Romesh Thappar and Brij Bhushan are no longer applicable to laws imposing restrictions on that right for the purpose of maintenance of public order.

Sections 3 and 4 of the Indian Press (Emergency Powers) Act, 1931, authorised a State Government to demand a security from the keeper of a press which was used for printing matter inciting people to the commission of serious crimes of violence.

The provisions fell within the permissive cover of Article 19(2) since the restrictions imposed by them were reasonable and were meant to restrain activities which affected public order. State of Bihar v. Shailabala Devi, AIR 1952 SC 329 : 1952 CrLJ 1373 : 1953 SCA 152 : 1952 SCJ 465 : 1952 SCR 654.

[9259] ● Construction of document—Writing to be considered as a whole.—In order to determine whether a particular publication falls within the ambit of a law relating to public security, it has to be considered in a fair and liberal spirit, not dwelling too much upon isolated passages or upon a strong word used here and there. The document should be viewed as a whole and in its proper perspective, keeping in mind the place, the circumstances, the occasion and the background of the publication.

In the present outlook of our country, writings such as these, leave their readers cold and unmoved, and nobody takes serious notice of expressions which are the stock-in-trade of political demagogues, and time is long past when they could excite people to violence.

Unless it can be shown that underneath the generalities forming the bulk of a pamphlet there was something concrete and tangible pointing against particular individuals, a cry against "oppressors" generally will not bring a publication within the mischief of a penal provision.

Rhetoric of this kind might, in conceivable circumstances inflame passions and incite people to violence, but if such circumstances exist, it is for the Government to establish them.

The respondent in the present case was the keeper of a press in which a pamphlet was printed which contained objectionable matter. The Government required the press to furnish security, and against that order the respondent moved the High Court under Section 23 of the Act. The High Court allowed the application and set aside the said order. Against the order of the High Court the State appealed to the Supreme Court.

Section 4(1)(a) of the Act was constitutional. However, the pamphlet in question did not, when read as a whole, have any tendency to excite the public to commit crimes of violence, and hence the order issued against the press was misconceived. State of Bihar v. Shailabala Devi, AIR 1952 SC 329 : 1952 CrLJ 1373 : 1953 SCA 152 : 1952 SCJ 465.

[9260] ● Illegal impost.—If it is once found that a licence fee imposed for carrying on any trade or business cannot be justified on the basis of any valid law, the imposition is necessarily unreasonable. An illegal impost is of its very nature an unreasonable restriction, and is necessarily an infringement of the citizen's right to carry on his trade or business under Article 19(1)(g). Mohammad Yasin v. Town Area Committee, Jalalabad, AIR 1952 SC 115 : 1952 SCA 237 : 1952 SCJ 162 : 1952 SCR 572 : 1952 ALJ 313 : 1952 MWN 492.

[9261] ● Article 19(1)(d) of Constitution applicability of to law relating to preventive detention.—The question whether Article 19(1)(d) applies to a law relating to preventive detention is concluded by the decision of the Court in Gopalan's case, and it is now settled that this Article cannot be invoked for the purpose of challenging the validity of any detention and that the question has to be decided by the application of Articles 20, 21 and 22 only.

The impugned Act provided that when any Muslim abducted person was found by any police officer of a designates rank in any place, he had to take that person into custody and deliver him or her to the officer-in-charge of the nearest refugee camp and that such officer was required to keep that person in the camp until arrangements were made for his or her delivery to some relative entitled to take charge of that person.

Such custody and detention could not be challenged on the ground that the restrictions authorised by the Act were not "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(5). State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, AIR 1953 SC 10 : 1953 CrLJ 180 : 1952 SCJ 664 : 1952 SCA 791 : 1953 SCR 254 : 1953 MWN 355 : ILR (1953) Punj 121.

[9262] ● Removing stands and terminals of—Transport vehicles.—A Rule made under the Motor Vehicles Act which authorised the Transport Authority to alter from time to time stands and terminals of transport vehicles for meeting public convenience, and an order made on an owner of a bus-stand in the exercise of the powers conferred under such Rule directing him to remove a stand from one place to another, could not be considered to be unreasonable restrictions on the right to carry on any trade or business under Article 19(1)(g). Ibrahim T.B. v. Regional Transport Authority, Tanjore, AIR 1953 SC 79 : 1953 SCA 277 : 1953 SCJ 31 : 1953 SCR 290 : 1953 (1) MLJ 205.

[9263] ● Act authorising Court of wards to take over management of estate at his discretion.—An Act which authorised a Court of Wards to take over the management of an estate at his discretion, and which denied to the owner the right to resort to a civil Court for the purpose of testing the merits of the executive decision, was clearly unreasonable and the imposition was an infringement of the owner's right to hold property under Article 19(1)(f) : [Article 19(1)(f) has since been deleted by Constitution (Fourty Fourth) (Am.) Act, 1978. It's place has been occupied by Article 300-A, Constitution of India.] Raghubir Singh v. Court of Wards, Ajmer, AIR 1953 SC 373 : 1953 SCA 629 : 1953 SCJ 505 : 1953 SCR 1049 : 1954 MWN 433.

[9264] ● Scope of equal protection.—Legislatures have to deal with diverse problems arising out of the infinite variety of human relations. They must, therefore, have the power to make special laws for the purpose of achieving special objects. In making such laws the Legislatures have necessarily got to exercise large powers of section and classification of persons and things. It will, therefore, be seen that a law does not per se fall within the inhibition of Article 14 merely because of inequality of treatment between the class of persons or things for whom the law is made and the persons or things remaining outside that class. To attract the operation of Article 14 it is necessary to establish that the classification made under a law is unreasonable or unintelligible or that it has no rational relation to the object of the law. Ameerunnissa Begum v. Mahboob Begum, AIR 1953 SC 91 : 1953 SCA 565 : 1953 SCJ 61 : 1953 SCR 404 : ILR (1953) Hyd 93.

[9265] ● Meanest citizens right of access to Court of law to redress his grievance.—The meanest of citizens has a right of access to a Court of law for the redress of his grievances. If any law seeks to take away that right in respect of particular transactions between the State and a particular class of persons by imposing a disability which is not imposed on anyone else, without laying down any reasonable and just basis for such imposition, it is one of the worst forms of discrimination.

Laws such as these which do not clearly lay down the distinguishing features of the class of persons to whom they are made to apply, and yet seek to take away from them the rights and liberties which the general law gives to all others, constitute a clear invasion of Article 14. If encouraged, such laws will drain away all vitality from the rule of law, and it is hoped that democratic processes, will not function along such lines. Ram Prasad Narayan Sahi v. State of Bihar, AIR 1953 SC 215 : 1953 SCA 578 : 1953 SCJ 267 : 1953 SCR 1129 : 32 Pat 375.

[9266] ● All laws not to have to be general and universal in their application.—All laws do not have to be general and universal in their application, and the Legislatures have the power to make laws applicable only to special class, provided such laws are based on intelligible principles which are reasonably related to the objects sought to be achieved thereby.

If a law does not lay down any clear policy and leaves it to the unfettered and unregulated discretion of the executive to apply the special procedure created by it to any person or group of persons at its will and pleasure, such law is a clear negation of Article 14. The mischief lies in the fact that in the absence of any regulative principle or policy the uncontrolled discretion of the executive is the sole determining factor for the application of that law.

On the other hand, if a law clearly indicates its policy and lays down the standards for its application, it is not obnoxious to Article 14 merely because it does not itself create the class to which it may be applied, and leaves it to the executive to decide when, against whom, and in what circumstances it is to be applied.

However, even when a law is not violative of Article 14, it may happen that the executive officer or authority entrusted with its application may exceed the limits of its powers and may seek to proceed under it against persons or in circumstances not contemplated by it. In such a case, even though the aggrieved person cannot succeed in challenging the constitutionality of the law itself, it will be open to him to invoke Article 14 and get the illegal order set aside. Kedar Nath Bajoria v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1953 SC 404 : 1953 CrLJ 1621 : 1953 SCA 835 : 1953 SCJ 580 : 1954 SCR 30.

[9267] ● Court not to adopt doctrinaire approach in construing Article 14 of Constitution.—In construing Article 14, Courts should not adopt a doctrinaire approach which will choke off all beneficial legislation based upon a rational classification. If a classification is based upon existing local conditions and special circumstances, and bears a reasonable relation to the object which the law seeks to achieve, it cannot be attacked as being a denial of the right to the equal protection of the laws guaranteed under Article 14. Harnam Singh v. Regional Transport Authority, Calcutta, AIR 1954 SC 190 : 1954 SCA 47 : 1954 SCJ 646 : 1954 SCR 371 : 1954 (1) MLJ 79.

[9268] ● Classification can validly founded upon geographical or regional considerations.—A classification can validly be founded upon geographical or regional considerations. But when only one area in a State is selected for the operation of a special law, while all the other areas in the State continue to remain under the general law, the State must establish that the basis of such differentiation lies in the special local conditions, prevailing in the area which is selected for the operation of that special legislation. If the State is unable to show any rational basis for such differentiation, the law must be declared to be in contravention of Article 14. State of Rajasthan v. Rao Manohar Singhji, AIR 1954 SC 297 : 1954 SCA 491 : 1954 SCJ 439 : 1954 SCR 996 : 1954 RajLW 220.

[9269] ● Classification allowed by Article 14 of Constitution.—The guarantee of equal protection of the laws does not mean that the same law should apply to all persons whether they be in the same or different situations or circumstances. Classification is permissible provided it is based upon a differentia which has a relation to the object of the law in question. Syed Mohammed and Co. v. State of Andhra, AIR 1954 SC 314 : 1954 SCA 400 : 1954 SCJ 390 : 1954 SCR 1117 : 1954 (1) MLJ 619 : 67 MLW 611.

[9270] ● Article 14 of Constitution prohibits State from making special law which singles out a person or class of persons.—Article 14 prohibits the State from making a special law which singles out a person or class of persons for a special treatment which is different from the treatment meted out under the general law to all other persons placed in the same or similar circumstances. However, Article 14 does not prohibit the State from making a law which creates a special class of persons for the purpose of applying to them a special rule of procedure, provided that the classification is based on a reasonable and substantial distinction which separates those persons from all others, and such distinction bears a just and reasonable relation to the object sought to be attained by that law.

When an Act or Notification applying a special rule of procedure to a special class of persons is challenged on the ground of violation of Article 14, the test for deciding whether it is or is not hit by Article 14, is this—is the classification made thereunder founded upon a clear distinguishing feature which separates the class to whom the enactment applies from all other persons governed by the general law, or is the segregation made thereunder without any foundation so that an arbitrary discrimination is made between persons falling under the same or similar circumstances? There is no conflict between the earlier decisions of the Court on this subject. The principles relating to the scope and operation of Article 14 which were first laid down in Anwar Ali Sarkar's case have not lost any of their force by reason of the later decisions. It is the same test which has been applied throughout, and it is by the application of the same test that some laws have been held to be consistent with Article 14 while others have been held to be violative of that Article. Dhirendra Kumar Mandal v. Supdt. and R.L.A. to Govt. of West Bengal, AIR 1954 SC 424 : 1954 CrLJ 1036 : 1954 SCA 588 : 1954 SCJ 582 : (1954) 2 MLJ 128 : 1954 MWN 664 : 1955 SCR 224.

[9271] ● Charge of discrimination against any Act to be made out on merits of Act itself.—A charge of discrimination against any Act has to be made out on the merits of the Act itself, and not by its comparison with other Acts made on the same subject in another State or by the Centre. A State legislation on any matter cannot be challenged on the ground that its provisions compare unfavourably with, or are in contrast with, the provisions of another Act on the same or a similar subject which prevails in some other State. It is the discriminatory character of the impugned Act itself which determines its unconstitutionality, and for that purpose the Court must look at the Act itself and nothing else. State of Madhya Pradesh v. G.C. Mandawar, AIR 1954 SC 493 : 1954 SCA 767 : 1954 SCJ 503 : 1955 SCR 599 : (1954) 2 MLJ 51.

[9272] ● Article 14 of Constitution assures equality of treatment.—Article 14 assures equality of treatment to all persons who are in the same or similar place or situation, and guarantees that the same mode of procedure will be applied to them all. If an Act lays down a procedure for a particular matter which is different from the procedure relating to that matter under the general law, and if it leaves it to the will and pleasure of the executive to apply its provisions to any person, while others placed in the same situation continue to be governed by the general law, the Act has to be held to be violative of Article 14, and it is not a good defence to say that the special procedure under the Act is a fair substitute for the procedure under the general law or to say that it does full justice to the person to whom it is applied. The only question for consideration when judging that constitutionality of an impugned law is whether the classification made under it is arbitrary and discriminatory or whether it is reasonable and just and rationally related to the object of the Act. If the classification made under the Act is found to be discriminatory, the Act must be declared to be void as being an infringement of Article 14, and in such case the question of its fairness or of its being a good substitute for the general law does not at all arise. Suraj Mall Mohta and Co. v. A.V.V. Sastri, AIR 1954 SC 545 : 1954 SCA 743 : 1954 SCJ 611 : 1955 SCR 448 : 67 MLW 759 : (1954) 26 ITR 1.

[9273] ● State no longer "Police State".— The State today is no longer the "police State" of olden times and it has to discharge all the functions of a "Welfare State". If a law creates classification which places the State in a special category to enable it to discharge any of the functions of a Welfare State, it is not subject to the charge of discrimination because such a classification is perfectly just and reasonable and bears a rational relation to the object of the legislation. Saghir Ahmed v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 728 : 1954 SCA 1218 : 1954 SCJ 819 : 1955 SCR 707 : 1954 (2) MLJ 622 : 1955 AWR 23 : 68 MLW 8 : 1955 ALJ 38.

[9274] ● Excise Regulation "reasonable" within meaning of Article 19(6).—An Excise Regulation—the Ajmer Excise Regulation No. 1 of 1915—which prohibited retail trade in intoxicating liquors and authorised the State Government to hold annual public auctions of the monopoly right to sell such liquor, was "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(6). Cooverjee B. Bharucha v. Excise Commissioner, Ajmer, AIR 1954 SC 220 : 1954 SCA 256 : 1954 SCJ 246 : 1954 SCR 873.

[9275] ● Validity of law relating to preventive detention not to be judged by application of Article 19 of Constitution.—In A.K. Gopalan's case the correlation between Article 19 and Articles 21 and 22 was explained, and it was held by the majority that the rights conferred by Article 19(1) [except the right under Article 19(1)(f)] could be enjoyed only so long as a citizen was free and had the liberty of his person, and that the moment a citizen was deprived of his personal liberty under a valid law which satisfied the requirements of Articles 21 and 22, he ceased to be entitled to the benefit of Article 19. Applying this principle the majority held that the validity of a law relating to preventive detention could not be judged by the application of the provisions of Article 19.

In the case of Ram Singh v. State of Delhi, it was held as under :—

(a) Personal liberty has a content sufficiently comprehensive to include the freedoms enumerated in Article 19(1), and deprivation of personal liberty results in the extinction of those freedoms.

(b) The Constitution has, however, treated these civil liberties as rights distinct from personal liberty, and a law which authorises deprivation of personal liberty does not fall within the purview of Article 19 and its validity could not be judged by the criteria indicated in that Article.

(c) The validity of a law relating to preventive detention depended entirely on its compliance with the requirements of Articles 21 and 22 and if it satisfied those requirements, it was perfectly constitutional.

The combined effect of these decisions is as under :—

(a) The freedoms conferred by Article 19(1) [except Article 19(1)(f)] are guaranteed to a citizen of India while he is a free man. But as soon as he is deprived of his personal liberty as a result of detention, punitive or preventive, he loses his capacity to exercise those freedoms and cannot complain of the infraction of any of them.

(b) These freedoms, even when they are available, are not absolute and unbridled, but are subject to social control, and reasonable restrictions may be imposed on them by law.

(c) A law which deprives a citizen of his personal liberty inevitably destroys his civil freedoms under Article 19, and its validity cannot be judged by the test of reasonableness laid down in clauses (2) to (6) of that Article. Its validity can be determined only by the application of Articles 21 and 22. State of West Bengal v. Subodh Gopal Bose, AIR 1954 SC 92 : 1954 SCA 65 : 1954 SCJ 127 : 1954 SCR 587 : 67 MLW 206 : 1954 (1) MLJ 314.

[9276] ● Essentials of what is "reasonable".—A law placing restrictions on individual freedoms guaranteed under Article 19 fails to contain the quality of "reasonableness" when it confers upon executive officers a power which is unfettered and unregulated by any rule or principle, and leaves it entirely to their discretion to do anything they like, without any check or control by any higher authority.

The essentials of what is "reasonable" have been laid down in Chintaman Rao's case.

If an Order made by the Government gives to an executive officer uncontrolled and unregulated power to exempt any person from the operation of the order, without laying down the grounds of such exemption, and without providing any check by any higher authority over his decisions, so as to enable him to make arbitrary decisions which cannot be questioned by anyone, the Order is on the face of it "unreasonable".

Similarly, an Order vesting an executive officer with uncontrolled power to grant or refuse a licence at will without laying down any principle of guidance or policy, and without making any rules or giving any directions to guide or regulate the discretion of the officer, was "unreasonable", because it placed no check upon possible injustice resulting from improper exercise of the powers given in the Order. Dwarka Prasad Laxmi Narain v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 224 : 1954 SCA 204 : 1954 SCJ 238 : 1954 SCR 803 : 1954 ALJ 203.

[9277] ● Right of landlord to evict tenants.—A law which had for its object prevention of hardship to certain classes of tenants in urban areas and which for the purpose of achieving that object amended the existing law relating to revenue sales collection by landlords by providing that the landlord shall not have the right to evict the tenants except under certain conditions specified in the Act was not unconstitutional.

(Note:—In this case differing views were expressed by Their Lordships as to the interrelation between Article 19(1)(f) and Article 31 both of which deal with the citizen's right to property, and as to the application of Article 19(1)(f) when a concrete right to property is restricted by legislation. However, since this question has nothing whatever to do with criminal law and is outside the scope of the present work it has been left untouched.) State of West Bengal v. Subodh Gopal Bose, AIR 1954 SC 92 : 1954 SCA 65 : 1954 SCJ 127 : 1954 SCR 587 : 67 MLW 206 : 1954 (1) MLJ 314.

[9278] ● Uncontrolled and arbitrary power in regulating trade or business.—A law or order—the Uttar Pradesh Coal Control Order, 1953,—which confers on the Government or any executive officer or authority uncontrolled and arbitrary power in the matter of regulating trade or business in a particular commodity, for example, by giving to a licensing officer absolute power to grant or to refuse to grant any licence to any person at his will and pleasure, must be held to be void as imposing an unreasonable restriction upon the freedom of trade and business guaranteed under Article 19(1)(g) which does not come within the cover of Article 19(6). Dwarka Prasad Laxmi Narain v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 224 : 1954 SCA 204 : 1954 SCJ 238 : 1954 SCR 803 : 1954 ALJ 203.

[9279] ● Imposition of restrictions regarding management of properties belonging to institution.—A law which imposes in the Head of a religious institution restrictions regarding the management of the properties belonging to the institution which interfere with the discharge by him of his obligations and duties as the spiritual head of a religious fraternity is not "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(5) and is void as being in conflict with his right to hold property guaranteed under Article 19(1)(f). Commissioner, Hindu Religious Endowments, Madras v. Shri Laxmindra Tirtha Swamiar, AIR 1954 SC 282 : 1954 SCA 415 : 1954 SCJ 335 : 1954 SCR 1005 : 1954 (1) MLJ 596 : 20 CutLT 250 : 1954 MWN 363 : 67 MLW 1220.

[9280] ● Search and seizure of property to be produced in criminal proceedings.—The provisions of Section 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code relating to search and seizure of property required to be produced in any criminal proceeding under a warrant issued by a Magistrate are reasonable restrictions on the right to hold property which are covered by Article 19(5). These provisions do not offend against the right guaranteed under Article 19(1)(f). Sharma, M.P. v. Satish Chandra, District Magistrate, Delhi, AIR 1954 SC 300 : 1954 CrLJ 865 : 1954 SCA

449 : 1954 SCJ 428 : 1954 SCR 1077 : 1954 (1) MLJ 680 : 1954 MWN 566 : 56 PunLR 366.

[9281] ● Freezing stocks of essential commodity.—Clause 25 of the Rajasthan Foodgrains Control Order, 1949 : An Order which authorises an executive officer appointed in that behalf to freeze stocks of any essential commodity with a view to secure its supply and distribution to the public at fair prices is perfectly "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(6).

But if that Order goes further and gives power to such officer to acquire the stocks of that commodity held by dealers at any price fixed by himself, and does not lay down any principle or standard for his guidance in the fixation of the price at which he can requisition those stocks, it cannot be said to be "reasonable" and since it authorises the placing of an unreasonable restriction upon the right to carry on trade or business, the Order is void as being an infringement of the rights of those dealers under Article 19(1)(g). State of Rajasthan v. Nath Mal, AIR 1954 SC 307 : 1954 SCA 347 : 1954 SCJ 404 : 1954 Raj LW 253 : 1954 SCR 982.

[9282] ● Law authorising Govt. to appoint—Executive officer for settling scheme in respect of running and management of religious institution.—A law which authorises the Government to appoint an executive officer for settling a scheme in respect of the running and management of a religious institution, and goes further and provides that the Head of that institution shall accept such scheme without having the right of having its merits and utility tested by a judicial inquiry, imposes restrictions on the right of that person to hold property which are not "reasonable" and is, therefore, void as being an infringement of his right under Article 19(1)(f). Mahant Sri Jagannath Ramanuj Das v. State of Orissa, AIR 1954 SC 400 : 1954 SCA 569 : 1954 SCJ 329 : 1954 SCR 1046 : 1954 (1) MLJ 591 : 20 CutLT 293 : ILR (1954) Cut 334.

[9283] ● Law made by State Legislature if ultra vires.—If a law made by a State Legislature is ultra vires as being outside the powers of that Legislature, imposition of any tax by the State under such a law is necessarily in violation of the assessee's right under Article 19(1)(g), because an impost which is illegal is of its very nature unreasonable. Himmatlal Harilal Mehta v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 403 : 1954 SCA 654 : 1954 SCJ 445 : 1954 SCR 1122 : 1954 (1) MLJ 690 : 67 MLW 629 : 1954 MWN 802.

[9284] ● Seizure of goods by police otherwise than under due compliance with provisions of CrPC.—A seizure of goods by the police otherwise than under due compliance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code is of its very nature an illegality, and for that reason such illegal seizure of goods is an infringement of the right of the owner of those goods under Article 19(1)(f). Nothing which is against the law can be held to be "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(5). Wazir Chand v. State of H.P., AIR 1954 SC 415 : 1954 CrLJ 1029 : 1954 SCJ 600 : 1954 SCA 1257 : 1955 SCR 408.

[9285] ● Section 3 of Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act and Cotton Textile (Control Movement) Order 1948—Validity of.—Section 3 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, and the Cotton Textile (Control of Movement) Order, 1948 : if an Order does not deprive a citizen of his right to dispose of his goods as he pleases, but only requires him to obtain a permit for enabling him to transport them, it cannot be said that such a requirement imposes an unreasonable restriction on the citizen's right under Article 19(1)(f) or 19(1)(g). Such a restriction is covered by Articles 19(5) and 19(6). Harishankar Bagla v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 465 : 1954 CrLJ 1322 : 1954 SCA 824 : 1954 SCJ 637 : 1955 SCR 380 : (1954) 2 MLJ 211 : 1954 AWR (Supp) 63 : 1954 MWN 749.

[9286] ● Section 9 of Bar Councils Act, 1926—Validity of.—Section 9 of the Bar Councils Act, 1926, which vests in the High Court an absolute discretion to refuse admission on the roll of advocates of that High Court to any advocate applying for such admission, is perfectly "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(6) and does not infringe the right to practise any profession guaranteed by Article 19(1)(g). Babul Chandra Mitra v. The Chief Justice and Other Judges, Patna High Court, AIR 1954 SC 524 : 1954 SCA 395 : 33 Pat 553.

[9287] ● Clause 4 of Cotton Control order not infringement of Article 19(1)(g) of Constitution.—A Cotton Control Order whereunder forward contracts in cotton are prohibited in a particular Association operating within that State for a specified period for the purpose of placing a check on speculative activities, places a restriction on the right to trade which is entirely "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(6) and it cannot be said that the Order in question is an infringement of the Association's right under Article 19(1)(g). Madhya Bharat Cotton Association Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1954 SC 634.

[9288] ● Restriction imposed on licencee's right to carry on business.—A Cinematograph Act which requires the licensee to exhibit at each show at his theatre a fixed length of films which have been previously approved by the officer appointed in this behalf by the State Government, imposes a restriction on the licensee's right to carry on his business which is not "reasonable" and hence is void as being an infringement of his right under Article 19(1)(g). Seshadri, R.M. v. District Magistrate, Tanjore, AIR 1954 SC 747 : 1954 SCA 1214 : 1954 SCJ 842 : 1955 SCR 677 : 1954 (2) MLJ 717 : 68 MLW 3.

[9289] ● Right to represent workers in particular industry.—The provisions of these Acts which give the right to represent workers in a particular industry only to a Union which commands a minimum percentage of those workers, and which deny to unions which do not command such percentage the right to interpose in disputes between the mill owners and the representative union, and to exhort workers to go on strike while the dispute is pending before an Industrial Tribunal, do not infringe the constitutional rights under Articles 14, 19(1)(a) and 19(1)(c) of any worker who does not belong to the representative union. No violation of the fundamental rights to freedom of speech or to form unions and associations is involved in such a restriction. Raja Kulkarni v. State of Bombay, AIR 1954 SC 73 : 1954 CrLJ 351 : 1954 SCA 973 : 1954 SCJ 50 : 1954 (1) MLJ 83 : 1953 AWR (HC) 146 : 1954 MWN 136 : 56 BomLR 459.

The provisions of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, lay down only the manner in which an election campaign can be carried out, and prescribe the conditions which must be observed by a person who wants to get himself elected. They do not stop him from speaking. If he wants to exercise his fundamental right to freedom of speech otherwise than as a candidate at an election, the impugned provisions do not stop him from doing so. The impugned Act does not constitute any infringement of a citizens fundamental right to freedom of speech guaranteed under Article 19(1)(a). Jumuna Prasad v. Lachhi Ram, AIR 1954 SC 686 : 1955 SCA 151 : 1954 SCJ 835 : 1955 SCR 608 : 1954 (2) MLJ 711 : 1955 NagLJ 112 : MadhBLR 1955 Civ 308.

[9291] ● Right to use public highway.—All public pathways and highways vest in the State. However, the State holds them as trustees on behalf of the citizens who are in the position of beneficiaries. A citizen is entitled as a beneficiary to the use of all public roads as a matter of right, but this right is limited by similar rights possessed by every other citizen. As a trustee, the State is entitled to impose on the use of public roads by citizens such limitations as are requisite for protecting the rights of the public generally, but subject to such limitations a member of the public has full right of user of public roads and this right includes the right to use them for running any vehicle of transport, whether for private use or for carrying on any trade or business in public or private transport. Such a right cannot be denied by the State on the ground that it owns the public roads, and a law which seeks to prohibit that right to any citizen or to restrict that right save on grounds which are reasonable and in the general public interest is in violation of Article 19(1)(d), Saghir Ahmad v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 728 : 1954 SCA 1218 : 1954 SCJ 819 : 1955 SCR 707 : 1954 (2) MLJ 622 : 1955 AWR 23 : 68 MLW 8 : 1955 ALJ 38.

[9292] ● Fixing rate for smaller taxies lower than larger—Taxies reasonable.—A Notification issued by a transport officer in the exercise of his powers under the Motor Vehicles Act and Rules by which a rate of tariff is fixed for smaller taxies which is lower than that fixed for larger taxies is a "reasonable" restriction and there is no infringement of Article 19(1)(g). Harnam Singh v. Regional Transport Authority, Calcutta, AIR 1954 SC 190 : 1954 SCA 47 : 1954 SCJ 46 : 1954 SCR 371 : 1954 (1) MLJ 79.

[9293] ● Validity of provisions of Sections 3, 4 and 5 of Minimum Wages Act 1948.—The provisions of the Minimum Wages Act, 1948, Sections 3, 4 and 5, which empower the Government to fix the minimum rate of wages in an industrial dispute between the employer and his employees, imposes restrictions on the employer's right of trade which are "reasonable" and "in the interest of the general public" within the meaning of Article 19(6), since they carry out the Directive Principle of State Policy embodied in Article 43, and hence their constitutionality cannot be challenged on the ground of violation of Article 19(1)(g). Bijay Cotton Mills Ltd. v. State of Ajmer, AIR 1955 SC 33 : 1955 SCA 37 : 1955

SCJ 51 : 1955 SCR 752 : 1955 (1) MLJ (SC) 10 : (1955) 1 LabLJ (SC) 129.

[9294] ● Orissa Municipal Act not—Violative of Articles 19(1)(g).—The provisions of Section 16(1) of the Orissa Municipal Act, 1950, whereunder legal practitioners engaged on behalf of or against the Municipality are disqualified from election to a seat in that Municipality, do not violate right to practise his profession guaranteed to such practitioners under Article 19(1)(g). Sakhawat Ali v. State of Orissa, AIR 1955 SC 166 : 1955 SCA 353 : 1955 SCJ 262 : 1955 SCR 1004 : 21 CutLT 88.

[9295] ● Right to hold fair on his own land.—A Rule made by a State Government which authorises an executive officer to refuse to grant a permit to hold a fair on his own grounds to any person without giving any reasons for such refusal, is in effect a law which authorises the imposition of a total prohibition of the exercise of the petitioner's right to hold and enjoy his property, and is thus an infringement of his right guaranteed under Article 19(1)(f). Ganpati Singhji v. State of Ajmer, AIR 1955 SC 188 : 1955 SCA 252 : 1955 SCJ 119 : 1955 SCR 1065.

[9296] ● Articles 14 of Constitution guarantees equal protection.—Article 14 guarantees equal protection to all persons placed in the same situation or proposition, not only as to substantive law but also as to rules of procedure. Two different laws of procedure cannot be allowed to operate in the same field, at the will of the executive, against persons falling under the same class, and it is forbidden by Article 14 that parallel and alternative sets of rules of procedure be left under an Act to the choice of the executive without any provision guiding it in making the choice of a particular set, so that it could at its unregulated and uncontrolled will and pleasure apply either of the two sets of rules against one person while it could apply the other set to another person falling under the same class. Such unfettered selection left to the executive is a clear piece of discrimination, and has to be put down as being in violation of Article 14. Shree Meenakshi Mills Ltd. v. A.V.V. Sastri, AIR 1955 SC 13 : 1954 SCA 1271 : 1955 SCJ 62 : 1955 SCR 787 : 1954 (26) ITR 713 : 1955 AnWR (SC) 21 : 1955 (1) MadLJ (SC) 21.

[9297] ● Legislation enacted for achieving certain object need not be all-embracing.—If a classification made under any law passes the test of a permissible classification, it cannot be assailed on the ground that the disabilities imposed under it on a particular class of persons for the purpose of achieving its object have not been imposed also on some other class of persons who could also have been covered by the same legislation. A law aiming at a particular object which in itself is quite laudable does not have to be all-embracing for the purpose of passing the test of Article 14, and merely because the Legislature has not thought it fit to cover under the Act certain categories other than those included within it which stand on the same footing, it cannot be said that the Act is violative of Article 14. Sakhawat Ali v. State of Orissa, AIR 1955 SC 166 : 1955 SCA 353 : 1955 SCJ 262 : 1955 SCR 1004 : 21 CutLT 88.

[9298] ● General principles relating to meaning scope and effect of Article 14.—The general principles relating to the meaning, scope and effect of Article 14 which have been well settled in the earlier decisions of the Court may be summarised as under :

(a) While Article 14 forbids class legislation, it does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation.

(b) In order, however, to pass the test of permissible classification, two conditions must be fulfilled, namely,

   (i) that the classification must be founded upon an intelligible differentia which distinguishes the persons or things that are grouped together from others left out of that group, and

   (ii) that such differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute in question.

   In other words, what is necessary for a permissible classification is that there must be nexus between the basis of the classification and the object of the Act under consideration.

(c) A classification may be founded on different bases, namely, geographical, or according to objects or occupations, or the like.

(d) Article 14 condemns discrimination not only by a substantive law but also by a law of procedure.

Whenever the validity of a law is challenged before the Court, the matter has to be decided by the application of the above principles. Budhan Choudhury v. State of Bihar, AIR 1955 SC 191 : 1955 CrLJ 374 : 1955 SCA 173 : 1955 SCJ 163 : 1955 (1) SCR 1045 : 1955 ALT (SC) 135 : 1955 AWR 241 : 1955 BLJR 249 : 1955 ALJ 309.

[9299] ● Article 14 prohibits classification.— As between persons placed in substantially similar positions and circumstances, Article 14 prohibits classification which is discriminatory and arbitrary. It does not prohibit classification which is based upon an intelligible differentia which distinguishes the persons grouped under it from others left out of the group. Therefore, in judging whether a law is hit by Article 14, the test is whether the classification made under it is of the first or the second category.

A classification founded upon a geographical basis is perfectly valid if its object is to promote the welfare of the residents of a particular locality or area, and a State is entitled to make a law which confers on the bona fide residents of that State special benefits from which non-residents are excluded. Such a law is not hit by Article 14. Joshi, D.P. v. State of M.B., AIR 1955 SC 334 : 1955 SCA 511 : 1955 SCJ 298 : 1955 SCR 1215 : 1955 MWN 406.

[9300] ● Article 14 prohibits unequal treatment of persons standing in same situation.— What Article 14 prohibits is only unequal treatment of persons standing in the same or similar situation. If different conditions prevail in different areas of a State, it is open to that State to make a law which applies only to a particular area within it. Classification on a territorial or regional basis is definitely permissible if conditions vary from locality to locality, and a law made on such a basis will be justified provided the State is able to make out the special conditions prevailing in a locality which justify the making of such a law. Kishan Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1955 SC 795 : 1956 SCJ 14 : 1956 SCA 402 : 1955 (2) SCR 531.

[9301] ● State not to deny any person equality before law.—Per S.R. DAS, C.J.—Article 14 enjoins that the State shall not deny to any person equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws. The word "State" includes all the Legislatures, including Parliament, and all the executive Governments within the territory of India. What the right to equality given by Article 14 means and what the scope and effect of that Article is, has been laid down in a series of cases ending with the case of Budhan Choudhury v. State of Bihar (see supra), and when any law is challenged on the ground of violation of Article 14, the question has to be decided in the light of the principles laid down in those cases. (Here the judgment cites the classical passage in Budhan Choudhury's case. Bidi Supply Company v. Union of India, AIR 1956 SC 479 : 1956 SCA 560 : 1956 SCJ 492 : 1956 SCR 267 : 1956 (29) ITR 717.

[9302] ● Article 14 sets out attitude of mind rather than precise rule of law.—Per BOSE J.— To my mind, Article 14 sets out an attitude of the mind and a way of life, rather than a precise rule of law. The question of its application narrows down to a question of fact which must be determined, as each case arises, by the highest judges of the land, always keeping it in mind that the heart and core of democracy lies in the judicial process and in the rule of law.

However rational and scientific a classification may be, and however reasonable the relation between it and the object sought to be achieved by any law, if that object itself is discriminatory, or if the classification made thereunder is discriminatory, or even when the law does not itself make any discriminatory classification, if it invests the executive authority with uncontrolled and unrestricted power of discrimination by authorizing it to pick and choose between persons placed in the same or similar circumstances,— then, in each such case, the law must be held to be violative of Article 14. In other words, the test is whether there is or is not any substantial discrimination between persons in the same situation, and that is a question of fact to be determined on the circumstances of each case as it arises.

In matters which affect the weal of the people, a law cannot be permitted to make or authorise or render possible any discrimination in violation of the right of the subject to equal protection of the laws, and the executive authorities cannot be vested with powers of discrimination which even Parliament does not possess. A law which seeks to encroach upon that right has to be struck down forthwith as being a contravention of Article 14. Bidi Supply Company v. Union of India, AIR 1956 SC 479 : 1956 SCA 560 : 1956 SCJ 492 : 1956 SCR 267 : 1956 (29) ITR 717.

[9303] ● Provocative or irresponsible conduct of person when offence against law relating to public security.—However provocative or irresponsible the conduct of a person may be, it cannot be said he has committed an offence against a law relating to public security unless his conduct is such as to undermine public order or security.

Inciting people to commit acts of violence against particular individuals or the State is undoubtedly an offence, but it is for the State to establish that the man's conduct was of that nature.

Shouting of slogans against State Ministers during a procession taken out to protest against the policy of the State Government, such as, "A and B hai hai" may be provocative and annoying to the members of the public who hear those slogans, and may even have a bad effect, but that in itself cannot amount to undermining public order or to incitement to an offence of violence against the State or its representatives.

Those in public positions must not be sensitive of skin, and must accept even unfair and undeserved attacks and criticisms with grace. Vulgar abuse or criticism must be taken as a necessary appendage of public office, and it is better to ignore it, rather than giving it importance by prosecution in a Criminal Court. Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 541 : 1956 CrLJ 945 : 1956 SCJ 539 : 1956 SCR 476 : 1956 SCA 775 : ILR (1956) Punj 1190 : 1956 NagLJ 628 : 1956 AWR (Sup) 109.

[9304] ● Restriction imposed upon fundamental right amounting to total prohibition when.—If under any law a restriction is imposed upon a fundamental right which in effect amounts to a total prohibition against the exercise of that right, such a restriction cannot be said to be reasonable, and that law must be declared to be void to the extent of such restriction. Virendra v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 896 : 1958 SCJ 88.

[9305] ● Reasonableness of restriction— Factors to be considered.—In judging whether a restriction imposed under an Act is "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(2) or Article 19(6), the Court should take into consideration all the following factors, namely,—

(a) the nature of the restriction imposed,

(b) its underlying purpose,

(c) the extent and urgency of the evil sought to be remedied thereby, and

(d) the prevailing conditions of the time.

The words "in the interest of" in Articles 19(2) to 19(6) are words of great amplitude and they make the ambit of the protection given thereby to any statute very wide. A law may not have been designed to directly maintain the public order or to directly protect the general public against any particular evil, and yet that law may be said to have been enacted "in the interest of " the public order or the general public interest, as the case may be.

Although free propagation of ideas and interchange of views is a fundamental right, our Constitution recognises that circumstances may arise which may require a reasonable subordination of this right to the needs of our social interest, and for that purpose it permits the imposition of reasonable restrictions on that right in the interest of public order or public welfare. Virendra v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 896 : 1958 SCJ 88.

[9306] ● Fundamental and statutory rights—Distinction between.—There is a distinction between fundamental and statutory rights. Though a statutory right can be taken away by a later statute, a fundamental right cannot be so taken away.

Therefore, when the constitutionality of a Statute is challenged on the ground that it invests the executive authority with "unreasonable" power and is therefore violative of Article 19, the Court has to be satisfied, before it can declare the statute to be void, that both the following conditions are fulfilled, namely :

(1) that the right invaded is a fundamental right, such as, the right to freedom of speech or the right to carry on trade, and not merely a statutory right, and

(2) that the restriction imposed on it, say by censorship or by requiring a permit, is "unreasonable" or "not in public interest".

Article 19 can be invoked only when both these conditions are satisfied. If the right claimed is found to be only statutory and not fundamental, the question as to the second condition does not at all arise, because what is given by statute can be taken away or restricted by statute, and the question whether a restriction or bar imposed by any law is or is not reasonable cannot be raised when no fundamental right is involved.

When an executive order is challenged on the ground of "unreasonableness", it is not enough for the State in its defence to show that the law under which it was made is perfectly constitutional and falls within the cover of the permissible restrictions allowed under Article 19(2) to (6). The question still remains whether the order itself is "reasonable". Pannalal Binjraj v. Union of India, AIR 1957 SC 397 : 1957 SCA 660 : 1957 SCR 233 : 1957 (31) ITR 565.

[9307] ● Abuse of power—Burden of.—The burden of showing that there has been an abuse of power lies on the petitioner, but the burden is not by way of proof to the hilt. If he can show circumstances which prima facie make out that the exercise of power was unreasonable, or if there are circumstances which render the absence of bona fides to be reasonably probable, the burden will be taken to have been discharged, and thereafter it will be for the States to satisfy the Court that the order was reasonable and not mala fide.

An executive order will be held to be bad if principles of natural justice have not been observed before making it. These principles require the following three things :

(1) notice to the person concerned;

(2) a reasonable opportunity to him to represent his case and to show cause why the order should not be passed; and

(3) a written order setting down the reasons for making it.

If any of these basic rules of natural justice has been violated, the order will be bad without proof of anything more, and its mala fide character will be taken to have been established. In such a case, even though the order may be found to be reasonable on merits, it will be struck down as being in violation of a fundamental right vested in the petitioner. Pannalal Binjraj v. Union of India, AIR 1957 SC 397 : 1957 SCA 660 : 1957 SCR 233.

[9308] ● Protection of lawful trading activities.—An activity undertaken and carried on with a view to earning profits from a business which for all intents and purposes is a business of betting and gambling, will not be protected as falling within the right guaranteed under Article 19(1)(g) even though all the forms and semblances of a genuine business are kept up. It is the true intent and object of the activity which determines its character, and not merely its outward appearance. Chamarbaughwala, R.M.D. v. Union of India, AIR 1957 SC 628 : 1957 SCA 912 : 1957 SCJ 593 : 59 BLR 973 : (1957) 2 MLJ (SC) 76 : (1957) 1 MLJ (Cri) 547 : (1957) 2 AWR 76 : 1957 MPC 630.

[9309] ● Section 58 of Bihar Wakfs Act whether imposes unreasonable restriction on exercise of his duties as Mutawalli.—The Bihar Wakfs Act, 1948, Section 58 : The provisions of a law relating of Wakfs which require the Mutawalli of a Wakf to prepare the annual budget of the trust property for each succeeding year and to send it to the Majlis within a specified time and which make non-compliance with this rule a criminal offence, are "reasonable" within the meaning of Article 19(6) having regard to the fact that the Mutawalli occupies the position of a manager of a public religious institution and that the preparation of a budget is indispensable to the proper management of every public institution. Such a law cannot be held to be void as being an infringement of the Mutawalli's right under Article 19(1)(g) to carry on his occupation as a Mutawalli. Bashiruddin Ashraf v. State of Bihar, AIR 1957 SC 645 : 1957 CrLJ 1023 : 1957 SCJ 714 : (1957) 1 MLJ (Cri) 680 : 1958 BLJR 1 : ILR 36 Pat 942.

[9310] ● Freedom of trade, commerce and inter course—Extent of.—There are certain activities which can under no circumstances be regarded as legitimate trade or business or commerce, although the usual forms and instruments of business and commerce are employed therein. To exclude such activities from the meaning of the words "occupation, trade or business" in Article 19(1)(g) is not to cut down the meaning of those words, but is only to say that such activities are not within the true meaning of those words. A law which saves trade and commerce from antisocial activities having as their object the earning of profits from gambling and betting cannot be held to be an interference with the right guaranteed under Article 19(1)(g). State of Bombay v. R.M.D. Chamarbaughwala, AIR 1957 SC 699 : 1957 SCA 867 : 1957 SCJ 607 : 59 BLR 945 : (1957) 2 MLJ (SC) 87 : (1957) 1 MLJ (Cri) 558 : (1957) 2 AWR (SC) 87.

[9311] ● To outrage religious feelings of any class of citizens.—Section 295-A, Penal Code which makes it an offence to outrage the religious feelings of any class of citizens of India by insulting their religious beliefs is both "reasonable" as well as "in the interest of public order" within the meaning of Article 19(2) and a conviction under that section cannot be challenged as being an infringement of the right to freedom of speech and expression guaranteed under Article 19(1)(a). Ramji Lal Modi v. State of U.P., AIR 1957 SC 620 : 1957 CrLJ 1006 : 1957 SCJ 522 : (1957) 2 MLJ (SC) 65 : (1957) 2 AWR (SC) 65 : 1957 ALJ 773 : 1957 MPC 653 : 1957 BLJR 723 : (1957) 1 MLJ (Cri) 771 : 60 PLR 11 : 1957 AWR (HC) 651.

[9312] ● Right to freedom of speech and expression—Sections 2 and 3 of Punjab Act 38 of 1956—Validity.—The right to freedom of speech and expression cases with it the right to propagate and circulate one's views, but the right is subject to reasonable restrictions imposed on it by the State in the interest of public order.

If the circumstances prevailing in a State at any time are such that agitation in the Press on any controversial topic is likely to bring about a flare-up of communal frenzy between two hostile factions in the State, and that this might at the slightest notice create a danger to the safety of the State, it is only right that a law be made which vests wide powers in the executive to take effective action for placing reasonable restrictions on the Press.

Quick decision and swift action are of the very essence of such powers, and if they are to be effectively exercised they must necessarily be left to the subjective satisfaction of the executive Government. To make the exercise of such powers justiciable and subject to judicial scrutiny would defeat the very purpose of the enactment.

Sections 2 and 3 of the Punjab Special Powers (Press) Act, 1956 Act and the notifications issued thereunder did not take away the entire right to freedom of speech and expression; they only imposed restrictions on that right with reference to a particular topic. A total prohibition on a fundamental right is undoubtedly unconstitutional and there is no question of testing its reasonableness because its very nature renders it unreasonable. But when as distinct from total prohibition what a law imposes is merely a restriction, the Court has to go into the question whether the restriction is reasonable for the purpose of determining the constitutionality of that law.

The impugned provisions laid down the precise purpose for which, and the evils for the prevention of which, the powers given under them had to be exercised, and hence they were in the interest of public order and general public welfare. However that in itself is not enough for the determination of the constitutionality of an impugned law. A restriction may be reasonable in its substance, but the Court has further to see whether the method of imposing that restriction which is prescribed under that law is also reasonable.

Section 2 of the Punjab Special Powers (Ben) Act, 1956 Act provided that purpose for which a notification was issued had to be set out therein and that such purpose could be only the one which was mentioned in the section. The power under this section could not be exercised for any other purpose. Further, the two provisos under clause (1) thereof provided, firstly for a time-limit of two months for the continuance in operation of the notification issued under Section 2, and secondly for the right to make a representation against the order made to the State Government which it was required to consider on its merits. Having regard to these provisions, the power which Section 2 gave to the executive authorities to impose restrictions on the Press was quite reasonable and was in the interest of public order within the meaning of Article 19(2), both as regards substance as well as procedure, and the notifications issued thereunder were themselves perfectly valid.

As regards Section 3 Punjab Special Powers (Ben) Act, 1956 though it did lay down that the purpose for which any notification thereunder could be issued must be the one which was mentioned in the Act, strangely enough, it did not contain any safeguard on the lines of Section 2, so that the notification issued thereunder was not subject to any time-limit and could be continued in effect for an indefinite period at the will of the executive, and further, the person concerned had no right of representation against it. The absence of these safeguards in Section 3 made its provisions unreasonable, and hence Section 3 and the notification issued thereunder had to be declared to be violative of Article 19(1)(a) and hence void. Virendra v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 896 : 1958 SCJ 88 : 1958 SCR 308.

[9313] ● Invoking Article 14 of Constitution.—Article 14 can be invoked only when a law creates a new rule of procedure which is materially and substantially different from the normal procedure provided under the general law, and not when it only makes deviations from it which are only of a minor character. If under a special law the citizen retains all his normal rights under the general law, so that the treatment meted out to him under it is substantially the same and is not different in any material particulars from that received by all others under the general law of the land, such special law is not hit by Article 14. Pannalal Binjraj v. Union of India, AIR 1957 SC 397 : 1957 SCA 660 : 1957 SCR 233 : 1957 (31) ITR 565.

[9314] ● Basic principles relating to meaning scope and effect of Article 14.—The basic principles relating to the meaning, scope and effect of Article 14 have been considered by the Court in a number of cases ending with the case of Budhan Choudhury v. State of Bihar, AIR 1955 SC 191 : 1955 (1) SCR 1045, and they have been summarized in the said case as under.

Statutes challenged on the ground of violation of Article 14 fall under one or the other of the following five classes :

(1) Statutes which are directed against named persons or things, and the basis of the classification made thereunder either appears on the face of the statute itself or can be gathered from surrounding circumstances.

In determining the validity of such a statute, the test is whether the classification is based or can be regarded as based upon some intelligible differentia which distinguishes the persons or things grouped together under the statute from others left out of that group, and whether such differentia bears a reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute. If this test is satisfied the validity of the statute will be upheld, and if not, it will be declared to be void as being in violation of Article 14. In determining this question it is immaterial whether the statute is intended to apply to a single person or thing or to a class of persons or things.

The statutes considered by the Court in the following cases fell under this class, and by the application of the aforesaid test they were all held to be valid and constitutional.

(2) Statutes which are directed against named persons or things, but the basis of the classification cannot be gathered either from the statute itself or from any surrounding circumstance.

In the case of such a statute, since the very basis of the classification is absent, the question of applying the aforesaid test of a permissible classification does not at all arise, and the statute has to be struck down as a piece of naked discrimination. The statutes considered by the Court in the following two cases belonged to this class, and were held to be unconstitutional.

(3) Statutes which neither name the persons or things to whom they are intended to apply nor make any basis of classification, and yet leave uncontrolled power of applying the statute to the executive.

This class of statutes does not lay down any principle or policy for the guidance of the executive in the matter of selection or classification of persons or things for the application of the statute, and yet leaves the question of its application entirely to the arbitrary and uncontrolled will and pleasure of the executive, so as to enable it to discriminate between persons or things in the same or similar situation or falling in the same class. In the case of such a statute, the possibility of arbitrary discrimination is inherent in the statute itself, and that being so, not only must the Court strike down the executive action taken under the statute, but also the statute itself. The reason why such a statute is bad is not because it does not itself make a classification, but because as a result of the absence of any guiding principle or policy it enables discrimination by the executive between persons or things belonging to the same group. The statutes considered in the following cases all belonged to this class, and they were all declared to be hit by Article 14.

(4) Statutes which leave the classification thereunder to the discretion of the executive, but the policy or principle which has to be followed by the executive when making that classification is clearly laid down.

Such statutes no doubt leave the power of classification to the executive, but the power is not uncontrolled and unregulated and it is meant to be exercised only in the manner and in accordance with the principle and the policy laid down in the statute itself. Such a statute does not carry the vice of discrimination, because that vice lies not in the absence of classification but in leaving the power of classification to the unguided and uncontrolled will and pleasure of the executive. Such statutes are perfectly constitutional. The statute considered in the case of Kathi Raning Rawat v. State of Saurashtra, AIR 1952 SC 123, belonged to this class, and was upheld as not being in violation of Article 14.

(5) Statutes which are themselves admitted by the impugner to be quite constitutional, but only the executive order or action made or taken thereunder is challenged.

It is now well settled that Article 14 can be invoked, not only against laws which are violative of Article 14, but also against executive action under a valid law which suffers from that vice. Therefore, even when a law is found or admitted to be quite constitutional, it is open to the impugner to claim that the executive power exercised under it against him was discriminatory and violative of Article 14. In such a case even though the Court may hold that the law itself is good, it has to go into the further question whether the executive action taken thereunder is or is not in accordance with the principle and the policy laid down in the statute, and if it finds that it is not, the Court will strike that action down but will leave the law itself untouched. Ram Krishna Dalmia v. Justice S.R. Tendolkar, AIR 1958 SC 538 : 1958 SCA 754 : 1959 SCJ 147 : (1959) 1 MLJ (SC) 67.

[9315] ● Basic principles relating to scope and effect of Article 14.—The basic principles relating to the scope and effect of Article 14, which are now quite settled and established as a result of the earlier decisions of the Court, were summarized in the case of Ram Krishna Dalmia v. Justice S.R. Tendolkar, AIR 1958 SC 538, as under:

(a) While Article 14 forbids class legislation, it does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation.

(b) In order, however, to pass the test of a permissible classification, two conditions must be fulfilled, namely,

- (i) that the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes the persons or things that are grouped together under it from others left out of that group, and
- (ii) that the differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute in question.

(c) The classification may be founded upon different bases (such as geographical, or according to objects or occupations, or the like), but what is always necessary is that there must be a nexus between the basis of the classification and the object of the Act under consideration.

(d) Article 14 condemns discrimination not only by a substantive law, but also by a law of procedure. Rehman Shagoo v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1960 SC 1 : 1960 CrLJ 126 : 1960 SCJ 172 : (1960) 1 SCR 680.

[9316] ● Permissible classification need not be of persons only.—In order to repel the charge of discrimination, a classification need not be of persons only; if a classification made under any special law passes the above laid down test of a permissible classification, it may well be one which creates a new offence not found in the Penal Code and it is open for the Legislature to provide that such offence shall be triable only by a special Court established in that behalf and only under a special procedure which may be more drastic and stringent than the one laid down under the general law.

A law such as this cannot be assailed as being discriminatory. No one has any vested right to a particular procedure, and it is open to the State to enact a law creating a new offence, and if the offence so created is of an aggravated type which demands a special treatment, it is equally open to it to provide a special procedure for its trial, without encountering the charge of discrimination. Such a law applies equally to all persons who have committed that offence, and of its very nature complies with the right to equality before the law guaranteed by Article 14. Rehman Shagoo v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1960 SC 1 : 1960 CrLJ 126 : 1960 SCJ 172 : (1960) 1 SCR 680.

[9317] ● Principles relating to scope effect and application of Article 14.—The principles relating to the scope, effect and application of Article 14 have been considered by the Court in a large number of cases, and they have been repeated so often that they now sound almost platitudinous. The enunciation of these principles is fairly easy; difficulty arises only in their application to different sets of facts presented by different cases. However, the result of these decisions is that whenever the validity of a statute is impugned on the ground of violation of the right to equality before the law guaranteed by Article 14, the question has to be determined in the following manner:

(a) The Court shall apply to the classification made under the statute the following dual test—

- (i) is it reasonable and based on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes the persons or things grouped under it from others left out of the group, and
- (ii) does the differentia bear a rational relation to the policy and object of the statute in question?

(b) For the proper application of this test, the Court has to ascertain the policy underlying that statute, the object which it seeks to achieve, and the true effect of its provisions which are under challence. For that purpose the Court has to examine the whole scheme of the statute, including both its preamble and its material parts.

(c) After such examination, if the Court finds that the classification made under the statute satisfies the aforesaid test of a permissible classification, it must be held to be valid, and if not, it must be struck down as being a violation of Article 14.

(d) If any state of facts can reasonably be conceived whereunder the classification made can be sustained, the Court is bound to assume the existence of that state of facts, unless he who assails the statute discharges the burden which lies upon him to show their non-existence.

(e) If the classification made under the statute is found to be permissible, it is outside the realm of judicial inquiry to consider whether the same result which is achieved under the statute in question could or could not have been better achieved by adopting a different classification.

(f) If the classification made under a statute is found to be permissible, the statute must be declared to be valid, even though the Court finds that the order or notification issued by an executive authority in the exercise of its powers under that statute is in excess of its powers, or is colourable or mala fide. Such abusive exercise of power by the executive must undoubtedly result in the Court declaring such order or notification, and the proceedings held under it, to be invalid, but the vice of the executive action cannot affect the validity or the vires of the statute itself which on its own independent examination has been found to be quite constitutional. In other words, the decision as to the validity or otherwise of a statute must in every case depend only upon the examination of the statute itself, its policy and object, the classification which it makes, and the character of its operative provisions, and not upon the nature of the executive action taken under it. Kangshari Haldar v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1960 SC 457 : 1960 CrLJ 654 : 1960 SCJ 629 : (1960) 2 SCR 646 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 448.

[9318] ● Rational basis for making classification mentioned in Section 421, CrPC 1898.—There is a rational basis for making the classification mentioned in Section 421, CrPC (now Section 384), and it has a reasonable connection with the object of the legislation providing for appeals under Chapter 31 of the Code. When the convicted person who is not in jail is able to present his petition of appeal in person or through a pleader, or when a convicted person who is in jail is able to present his petition through a pleader, his position is entirely different from that of a convicted person who is in jail and is unable to present his petition through a pleader. In the case of a convicted person who presents his petition through the Jailor, no question could arise of his being heard in person because he has not presented the appeal in person, nor could there be any question of his pleader being heard because no pleader has been engaged by him to present his appeal. On the other hand, when a convicted person presents his petition of appeal in person or through a pleader, entirely different considerations arise, and the appeal having been so presented, he or his pleader are required to be heard before the appeal is summarily dismissed. There is, therefore, a rational basis for making the classification which has a reasonable connection with the object of the Code, and it could not be said that the proviso to Section 421 offends against Article 14. Pratap Singh v. State of V.P., AIR 1961 SC 586 : 1961 (1) CrLJ 733 : (1961) 2 SCR 509 : 1961 ACrR 257 : 1961 AWR (HC) 468.

[9319] ● Classification to be valid must rest on intelligible differentia.—The principles governing the application of Article 14 are well settled and may be stated as under Article 14 prohibits hostile legislation directed against individuals or groups of individuals, but it does not forbid reasonable classification. In order that a classification be valid, it must rest on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes it from others, and further, that classification must have a reasonable relation to the object of the legislation.

There can be a valid classification based on a geographical differentia, but even then, the differentia must be pertinent to the object of the legislation. Jia Lal v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1962 SC 1781 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 1 : 64 PunLR 1051 : 1962 ACrR 431 : 1962 AWR (HC) 56.

[9320] ● Rule when challenged on ground of violation of Article 14.—When a rule of this nature is challenged on the ground of violation of Article 14, the Court must start with the strong presumption that the rule creates a valid classification and the burden lies on the petitioner to show by adducing evidence which is cogent and reliable and that the classification made has no rational basis. State of U.P. v. Kartar Singh, AIR 1964 SC 1135 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 229 : 1964 (1) SCWR 435 : 1964 SCD 939 : (1964) 2 SCJ 666 : 1964 ALJ 732 : 1964 MLJ (Cri) 633 : (1965) 1 ALT 1.

[9321] ● Provisions in Army Act not become void because it affects fundamental right.—Under Article 33, the Parliament has the power to make a law determining the extent to which the fundamental rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution shall be restricted or abrogated, in their application to the members of the Armed Forces or the forces charged with the maintenance of public order. The result is that even if it is found that any of the provisions of the Army Act, 1950, are not consistent with any of the Articles in Part III, it must be taken that to the extent of the inconsistency Parliament had modified the fundamental rights under those Articles in their application to the persons subject to the Act. Each and every provision of the Act is as much "law" as the entire Act itself, and if any such provision tends to affect any fundamental right, it does not on that account become void, because it must be taken that Parliament intended to exercise its powers under Article 33 in enacting that provision.

Apart from that, even on the merits it cannot be said that Section 125 of the Army Act which gives power to the Officer Commanding the unit in which the accused person is serving to decide whether the accused shall be tried by a Criminal Court or by a Court Martial, is violative of Article 14 because the discretion vested in the military officer is not an uncontrolled or arbitrary discretion and has to be exercised in accordance with the policy laid down in the Act. Further, in case of difference of opinion between the Criminal Court and the military authority about the forum of the trial, the final choice rests with the Central Government, both under Section 126(2) of the Act and Section 549 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Ram Sarup v. Union of India, AIR 1965 SC 247 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 236 : 1964 SCD 661 : (1964) 2 SCJ 619 · (1965) 5 SCR 931 : 1964 CurLJ (SC) 169 : 1964 MLJ (Cri) 629.

[9322] ● Section 337 (Section 306 of new Code), CrPC not offend Article 14.—Section 337 (Section 306 of the new Code) does not offend Article 14. The matter of taking accomplice evidence outside Section 337, CrPC. (Section 306 now), by using Section 494, CrPC (now Section 321) or otherwise and the power to tender self-confessed criminal as a witness instead of trying him as an accused does not violate the Constitution. To hold otherwise would shut out accomplice evidence completely. Choraria v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 938 : 1968 CrLJ 1124 : (1968) 1 SCA 682 : 1968 SCD 743 : (1968) 2 SCJ 589 : (1968) 2 SCR 624 : 10 BomLR 595 : 1968 MLJ (Cri) 614 : 16 Law Rep 473.

[9323] ● Public servant head of—Department found activity responsible for directing commission of offences by subordinates.—If the accused who was the head of the department was actively responsible for directing the commission of offences by its subordinates in a particular manner, he cannot be allowed to take the plea that unless the subordinates were also joined as co-accused with him the case should not be allowed to proceed. The argument that the accused was singled out from a number of persons who had aided him in the commission of various acts of misconduct and that they were really in the position of accomplices cannot be accepted. The prosecution might have felt that if the subordinate officers were joined along with the accused as co-accused, the whole case might fall for lack of evidence. P. Sirajuddin v. State of Madras, AIR 1971 SC 520 : (1970) 1 SCC 595 : 1971 CrLJ 523 : (1971) 2 SCJ 591 : (1970) 3 SCR 931 : 1970 SCCrR 457 : 1971 MLW (Cri) 46 : (1971) 2 MLJ (SC) 97 : (1971) 2 AnWR (SC) 97.

[9324] ● Detention pursuant to order of remand under Section 344, CrPC 1898.—When a case is postponed or adjourned and the accused is in custody, the Court has to exercise its judicial discretion whether or not to continue him in custody by making a remand order. The Court is neither bound to make an order of remand nor is it bound to release the accused person. The discretion to make a suitable order is to be exercised judicially keeping in view all the facts and circumstances of the case including the nature of the charge, the gravity of the alleged offence, the area of investigation, the antecedents of the accused and all other relevant factors which may appropriately help the Court in determining whether to keep the accused in custody or to release him on bail. The power conferred being judicial, the absence of an express, precise standard or determination of question would not render the section unconstitutional. Detention pursuant to an order of remand which appropriately falls within the terms of Section 344 of the Code is accordingly not open to challenge in habeas corpus. If the discretion is exercised in an arbitrary or unjudicial manner, remedy by way of resort to the higher Courts is always open to the aggrieved party. Not only are the guidelines clearly contained in the statute but the discretion being judicial is required to be exercised on general principles guided by rules of reason and justice on the facts of each case, and not in any arbitrary or fanciful manner. Lakshamanrao v. Judicial Magistrate, Parvathipuram, AIR 1971 SC 186 : 1971 CrLJ 253 : (1970) 3 SCC 501 : (1971) 2 SCJ 391 : 1971 CrAppR (SC) 45 : 1971 MLJ (Cri) 608 : (1971) 2 AnWR (SC) 92 : (1971) 2 MLJ (SC) 92 : 1971 CurLJ 1040.

[9325] ● Area of detention by Magistrate under CrPC and preventive detention laws under Article 22.—Area of detention by Magistrates under the CrPC and that under the preventive detention laws under Article 22 are entirely different and therefore there is good classification. Madhu Limaye v. S.D.M., Monghyr, AIR 1971 SC 2486 : (1970) 3 SCC 746 : 1971 CrLJ 1720 : (1971) 2 SCJ 479 : 1971 MLJ (Cri) 629.

[9326] ● Persons contravening provisions specified in Section 23(1A) of FERA not similarly situated with persons contravening other provi- sions of Act.—The question was whether persons contravening the provisions specified in Section 23(1)(a) of FERA, 1947, were similarly situated with persons contravening the other provisions of the Act with respect to the purpose or object of the Act, or whether by reason of the nature of the offences resulting from the contravention of the provisions specified in Section 23(1)(a) the persons contravening them formed class by themselves distinct from the persons contravening the other provisions of the Act and therefore the legislative judgment to deal with them under a different procedure was justified with reference to the ultimate purpose of the Act. Often at times the Courts held that under-inclusion did not deny the equal protection of laws under Article 14. The Government thought that imposition of penalty by departmental adjudication would prove a more effective means of checking certain types of foreign exchange offences as against the previous system of prosecution of all offences on the basis of the strict standard of proof required for criminal prosecution—which proof was, by and large, so much within the special knowledge of the offender and so much out of the reach of the department. It was only on the basis of the experience gained by the working of the Act that a decision could be taken about the classification of offences in respect of which trial by a Court would be expedient and those in respect of which summary procedure visualized by Section 23(1)(a) might be necessary. The basis of the classification was that in cases where there was likelihood of getting sufficiently unimpeachable evidence as, for instance, in cases involving contravention of Sections 14, 13(2), 15, 18, etc., where the Reserve Bank of India as a specialized agency came into the picture and be in possession of relevant materials, those cases were left to be dealt with under Section 23(1A) by criminal Courts. Broadly speaking, the classes of offences which were brought under Sections 23(1) and 23-A were what might be termed as "primary" offences and those brought under Section 23(1A) may be termed as "secondary" offences. Primary offences were those which needed detection and action at executive or field level by the concerned specialized agency. It was not a question of the seriousness or the gravity of the offences. The difference was that primary offences were distinguished by the volume and areas of incidence and might need greater deterrence which sometimes might lie in large pecuniary penalty and sometimes in criminal punishment by way of imprisonment. In respect of secondary offences there were already built-in institutional checks laid down by the Reserve Bank or other Government agencies. Hence the classification made in Section 23(1A) was not discriminatory. Even according to the respondents, it was the classification made in Section 23(1)(a) which was under-inclusive and was therefore unreasonable. The High Court was wrong in holding that Section 23(1A) was bad. Superintendent & Remembrr., West Bengal v. G. Navalkha, AIR 1975 SC 1030 : (1975) 4 SCC 754 : 1975 CrLJ 874.

[9327] ● Racial discrimination—Rules in Punjab Jail manual.—Rules in the Punjab Jail Manual discriminating between Indian and European prisoners in the matter of treatment and diet, are obsolete and are inconsistent with the equality enshrined in Articles 14 and 15. But the Supreme Court was not inclined to examine the matter more incisively for two reasons : (1) that the petitioner was no longer in prison and (2) that the Solicitor-General assured the Court that he would draw the attention of the Punjab Government to the need for revision of the impugned rules from the point of view of racial equality. Madhu Limaye v. Supdt., Tihar Jail, AIR 1975 SC 1505 : (1975) 1 SCC 525 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 235 : 1975 CrLJ 1319.

[9328] ● Special Judge to apply well established tests for appreciation of accomplice evidence.—Where a person has accepted a tender of pardon under Section 337(1) of the Code (Section 306 of the new Code) at the stage of investigation in a case involving any of the offences specified in sub-section (2)(b) (Section 306(2) of the new Code), the prosecution can file the charge-sheet either in the Court of a competent Magistrate or before the Special Judge empowered under Section 8(1) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1952, to take cognizance of the offence without the accused being committed to him for trial. It follows that if the Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence, the approver will have to be examined as a witness twice, once in the Court of the Magistrate and again in the Court of the Special Judge to whom the Magistrate has to send the case for trial, but if the charge-sheet is filed directly in the Court of the Special Judge, he can be examined once only before the Special Judge. Though in such a case there would be no previous evidence of the approver against which his evidence at the trial could be tested, that does not affect in any way the jurisdiction of the Special Judge to take cognizance without committal. The fact that the approver's evidence cannot be tested against any previous statement does not make any material difference to the detriment of the accused transgressing Article 14 of the Constitution. The Special Judge in any case will have to apply the well-established tests for the appreciation of the accomplice's evidence. There is no qualitative difference in the two procedures whether a witness is examined once or twice as it does not make any substantial difference, viz., that one of them could be described as more drastic than the other. Iqbal Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1977 SC 2437 : (1977) 4 SCC 536 : (1978) 2 SCR 174 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1978 CrLJ 192 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 508 : 1978 SCCrR 52 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 396 : 1978 ACrC 105 : 1978 ChandLR (Cri) 59.

[9329] ● Sections 7 and 16 of PFA Act not unconstitutional.—The fact that small retail traders will have to suffer the standardised imprisonment on some variations in the chemical composition of food sold, without mens rea may be because some bigger trader has fobbed off inferior commodities on them and the fact that there is no executive policy which guides prosecution of offenders and the fact that the petty victuallers and big sharks operate on society in different degrees and draconian equality will be tempered by flexible policy—is a matter of penal policy in constitutionality and so it is in a sense out of bounds for judicial advice. Prescription of equal protection is not breached either, because within the range of judicial discretion the Court deals out to each what he deserves according to established principles. Judge-proof sentencing is not per se bad. Fact that Sections 7 and 16 of the Act read together imposed inflexible minimum sentence of 6 months' R.I. on offenders, does not by itself render those provisions unconstitutional. Inderjeet v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 1867 : (1979) 4 SCC 246 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 966 : 1979 CrLJ 1410 : 1979 UJ (SC) 679 : 1979 ACrR 428 : (1979) 2 FAC 153 : (1980) 1 SCWR 33 : 1979 ACrC 350 : ILR (1979) HP 148.

[9330] ● Different procedure prescribed for collection of tax.—In Taxation Laws, different procedures for collection of tax, levy of penalty and criminal prosecution, cannot be held to be invalid. Commissioner is given discretion under the Act to resort to one of the two remedies as the facts of the case may require. In graver cases he will be justified in taking the drastic remedy and resorting to prosecution in the criminal Court if he is satisfied that such a course in necessary for the collection of the tax expeditiously. If the discretion is not properly exercised, the Court may be justified in interfering in such cases but the law cannot be held to be invalid. In the instant case there is nothing illegal in the Commissioner coming to the conclusion that resort to prosecution is necessary. S.T. Commissioner, M.P. v. Radhakrishan, AIR 1979 SC 1588 : (1979) 2 SCC 249 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 620 : 1979 SCC (Tax) 108 : (1979) 2 SCR 33 : (1978) 2 SCWR 410 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 36 : 1978 STI (SC) 103 : 43 STC 4 : 1979 CSNR 46 : 118 ITR 534 : 1979 TaxLR 1843 : 1979 UPTC 719 : 1979 JabLJ 654.

[9331] ● State to organise special strategies to protect and punish brutality by Police.—The State, at the highest administrative and political levels, must organise special strategies to prevent and punish brutality by police methodology. Otherwise, the credibility of the rule of law in our Republic vis-à-vis the people of the country will deteriorate. Raghubir Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1980 SC 1087 : (1980) 3 SCC 70 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 526 : 1980 CrLJ 801 : (1980) 2 SCJ 261 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 125 : 1980 UJ (SC) 424 : ILR (1980) HP 175 (SC) : 1980 CurLJ (Cri) 89 : 1980 (6) ALR 266.

[9332] ● Handcuffing inhuman.—Handcuffing is prima facie inhuman and therefore unreasonable, over-harsh and arbitrary and is violative of Articles 14, 19 and 21. It will be unreasonable to fetter a person's limbs unless the State is able to make out that no other practical way of forbidding escape is available, the prisoner being so dangerous and desperate and the circumstances, so hostile to safe-keeping. Even in cases where, in extreme circumstances, handcuffs have to be put on the prisoner, the escorting authority must record contemporaneously the reasons for doing so. Otherwise, under Article 21 the procedure will be unfair and bad in law. Para 26. 22(1)(d), (e) and (f) also however perilously near unconstitutionality unless it is absolutely necessary. The rule regarding a prisoner in transit between prison house and Court house is freedom from handcuffs and the exception, under conditions of Judicial supervision. will be restraints with irons, to be justified before or after. Prem Shankar v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1980 SC 1535 : (1980) 3 SCC 526 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 815 : 1980 CrLJ 930.

[9333] ● Special Courts Act not to contravene Article 14 of Constitution.—The Special Courts Act does not contravene the provisions of Article 14. 'High public or political offices' in the Act has not been defined. The term is self-explanatory. Mere absence of definition of the expression would not vitiate the classification made by the Act. Act is not void on the ground of some persons getting special benefit on account of some fortuitous circumstances, arising out of a peculiar situation if there is equality and uniformity within each group, so long as some included in a class are not singled out for special treatment even though they get an advantage over others. Act is not void on the ground of vice of excessive delegation of power. Act is not void even if the procedure provided by it is held to be harsher than that available under the ordinary law as the Act complies with the dual test laid down by the Supreme Court as regards the classification made by the Act and is a reasonable classification. On the other hand, the procedure prescribed by the Act cannot be said to be prejudicial or less advantageous to the accused, much less or more rigorous than the one provided in the CrPC.

Under the Special Courts Act not only is the appointment of Special Judge made free of control by the Government as it now rests with the Chief Justice of the High Court concerned subject to the only condition that he must obtain the concurrence of the Chief Justice of India therefor. A provision for transfer of cases from one Special Court to another Special Court has also been inserted in Section 10(1). The Act cannot be challenged on the ground of violation of Article 21 of the Constitution. State (Delhi Administration) v. V.C. Shukla, AIR 1980 SC 1382 : (1980) 2 SCC 665 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 561 : 1980 CrLJ 965 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 301 : 1980 SCCrR 345.

[9334] ● Law of preventive detention to pass test not only of Article 22 but also of Article 21.—Law of preventive detention has to pass the test not only of Article 22 but also of Article 21 and if the constitutional validity of any such law is challenged the Court would have to decide whether the procedure laid down by such law for depriving a person of his personal liberty is reasonable, fair and just. Prisoner or detenu would be entitled to have interviews with the members of his family and friends and no prison regulation or procedure laid down by prison regulation, regulating the right to have interviews with members of family and friends can be upheld as constitutionally valid under Articles 14 and 21, unless it is reasonable, fair and just. Hence clause 3(b)(ii) of the Conditions of Detention Order, which restricts the interview only to one in a month in the case of a detenu cannot be regarded as reasonable and non-arbitrary, particularly when a detenu stands on a higher pedestal than an under-trial prisoner or a convict for whom Rule 559-A and Rule 550 of the Rules set out in the Manual for the Superintendence and Management of Jails in the Punjab provide facility of interviews with relatives and friends twice in a week.

Clause 3(b)(i) of the said Detention Order regulating the right of a detenu to have interview with a legal adviser of his choice is violative of Articles 14 and 21 because it prescribes that a detenu can have interview with a legal adviser only after obtaining prior permission of the District Magistrate, Delhi and the interview has to take place in the presence of an Officer of Customs/Central Excise/Enforcement to be nominated by the local Collector of Customs/Central Excise or Deputy Director of Enforcement who has sponsored the case for detention. Francis Coralie v. Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1981 SC 746 : (1981) 1 SCC 608 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 212 : 1981 CrLJ 306 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 437 : (1981) 19 DLT 271 : (1981) CrAppR (SC) 112 : (1981) 2 SCJ 18 : 1981 MLJ (Cri) 331 : (1981) 2 SCR 516.

[9335] ● Human dignity not to be ignored even in prison.—Flimsy grounds like 'loitering in the prison', 'behaving insolently and in an uncivilised manner', 'tearing of his history ticket' cannot be the foundation for the torturesome treatment of solitary confinement for long periods from 8 to 11 months and cross-bar fetters. It is enough to be regarded as barbarous and would amount to breach of fundamental rights. Solitary confinement disguised as 'keeping in separate cell' and imposition of fetters are not to be resorted to, save in the rarest of rare cases and with strict adherence to the procedural safe-guards contained in the decisions of the Supreme Court relating to punishment of prisoners. Section 46 of the Prisons Act and the relevant rules of the Rajasthan Prisons Rules should not be read in the absolutist expansionism. The old rules and circulars and instructions issued under the Prisons Act were read incongruously with the Constitution especially Article 21 and interpretation put upon it by the Supreme Court. All the State Governments in the country are directed to convert the rulings of the Supreme Court bearing on Prison Administration into rules and instructions forthwith so that violation of the prisoners' freedoms could be avoided. Use of "third degree" methods by police is deprecated and importance of human life underlying Article 21 emphasised. Kishor Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1981 SC 625 : (1981) 1 SCC 503 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 191 : 1981 CrLJ 17 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 59 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 41 : 1981 MLJ (Cri) 401 : (1981) 2 SCJ 97.

[9336] ● Custodial violence to women prisoners.—In a complaint of custodial violence to women prisoners whilst confined in police lock-up, certain guidelines were laid down for ensuring protection against torture and maltreatment of women in police lock-up. Directions were given for making available legal aid to indigent prisoners in general and legal assistance to under-trial and convicted prisoners. Duty of lawyers to help people in distress was also indicated. Sheela Berse v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1983 SC 378 : (1983) 2 SCC 96 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 353 : 1983 CrLJ 642 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 207 : (1983) 15

[9337] ● Removal of encroachment on footpath—Procedure applied.—The procedure applied for removal of encroachments on footpaths cannot be treated as unreasonable, unfair or unjust. Olga Tellis v. Bombay Municipal Corpn., AIR 1986 SC 180 : (1985) 3 SCC 545 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 24 : 1985 (2) Scale 5.

[9338] ● Article 14 guarantees general right of equality.—Article 14 enshrines the fundamental right of equality before law or the equal protection of the laws within the territory of India. It is available to all, irrespective of whether the person claiming is a citizen or not. Article 15 prohibits discrimination on some social grounds- religion, race, caste, sex, place of birth or any of them. It is available to citizens only, but is not restricted to any employment or office under the State. Article 16(1) guarantees equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or office under the State and clause (2) prohibits discrimination on certain grounds in respect of any such employment or appointment. Yogendra Pal Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 1015 (1023) : (1987) 15 SCC 631 : (1987) 1 Cur LR 178 : (1987) 54 Fac LR 225.

[9339] ● Every action of executive authority must be subject to rule of law.—Where there is arbitrariness in State action, Article 14, Constitution springs in and judicial review strikes it down – Every action of executive authority must be subject to rule of law and must be informed by reason, so, whatever be the activity of the public authority, it should meet the test of Article 14. Dwarka Das Marfatia v. Port Trust Bombay, AIR 1989 SC 1642 (1648) : (1989) 3 SCC 293. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Srilekha Bidyarthi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1991 SC 537 (555) : (1991) 1 SCC 212.

[9340] ● Absence of arbitrariness first essential of rule of law.—The absence of arbitrary power is the first essential of the rule of law upon which our whole constitutional system is base. In a system governed by rule of law, discretion, when conferred upon executive authorities must be confined within defined limits. The rule of law from this point of view means that decisions should be made by the application of known principles and rules and, in general, such decisions should be predictable and the citizen should know where he is. If a decision is taken without any principle or without any rule it is unpredictable and such a decision is the antithesis of a decision taken in accordance with the rule of law. Delhi Transport v. D.T.C. Majdoor, AIR 1991 SC 101 (108-109) : 1991 Supp (1) SCC 600 : 1991 SCC (Lab) 1213.

[9341] ● Expressions "equality before law" or the "equal protection of laws".—Article 14 of the Constitution enjoins upon the State not to deny to any person "equality before law" or "the equal protection of laws" within the territory of India. The two expressions do not mean the same thing even if there may be much in common. The meaning of these expressions has to be found and determined having regard to the context and scheme of our Constitution. It appears that the word 'law' in the former expression is used in a generic sense – a philosophical sense whereas the word "laws" in the latter expression denotes specific laws in force. A facet which is of immediate relevant herein is the obligation upon the State to bring about, through the machinery of law, a more equal society envisaged by the preamble and Part IV of our Constitution. Equality before law can be predicated meaningfully only in an equal society i.e., in a society contemplated by Article 38 of the Constitution. Srinivasa Theatre v. Govt. of T.N., AIR 1992 SC 999 : (1992) 2 SCC 643.

[9342] ● Doctrine of equality has many facts.—Doctrine of equality has many facets. It is a dynamic, and an evolving concept. Its main facets relevant in Indian Society have been referred to in the preamble and the articles under the subheading "Right to equality" (Article 14 to 18). In short the goal is "equality of status and of opportunity". Articles 14 to 18 must be understood not merely with reference to what they say but also in the light of several articles in Part IV (Directive Principles of State Policy) as the sum total of the aspiration incorporated in Part IV of the Constitution. Indra Sawhney v. Union of India, AIR 1993 SC 47 (502) : (1992) 4 SCC 363.

6. ARTICLE 17

[9343] ● Court to keep in mind constitutional goals and purpose of Act and interprets provisions of Act.—The thrust of Article 17 is to liberate the society from blind and ritualistic adherence and traditional beliefs which lost all legal or moral base. It seeks to establish new ideal for society – equality to the Dalits, at par with general public, absence of disabilities, restrictions or prohibitions on grounds of caste or religion, availability of opportunities and a sense of being a participant in the main stream of national life. In interpreting the Act, the Judge should be cognizant to and always keep at the back of his/her mind the constitutional goals and the purpose of the Act and interpret the provisions of the Act in the light thus, shed to annihilate untouchability, to accord to the Dalits and the Tribals right to equality, social integration a fruition and fraternity a reality. Harijans were stopped on point of gun from taking water from well on the ground of their untouchability. It is an offence under Section 4, Protection of Civil Rights Act. State of Karnataka v. Appa Balu Ingale, AIR 1993 SC 1126 : 1993 CrLJ 1029 (SC).

[9344] ● Race club—Acquisition and transfer of under Act.—The consistent policy of the State Government, as projected through various legislations from 1949 onwards, had been to declare horse racing as gambling and as such prohibited under the two Acts namely Madras City Police Act, 1888 and J.N. Gambling Act, 1930. The operation of the 1974 Act was stayed by this Court and as consequence the horse races are continuing under the orders of the Supreme Court. The policy of the State Government as projected in all the enactments on the subject prior to 1985 shows that the State Government considered horse racing as gambling and as such prohibited under the law. The 1985 Act on the other hand declares horse racing as a public purpose and in the interest of the general public. There is apparent contradiction in the two stands. It is understand on to how the State Government can acquire and take over the functioning of the race club when it has already enacted the 1974 Act with the object of declaring horse racing as gambling.

Having enacted a law to abolish betting on horse racing and stoutly defending the same before this Court in the name of public good and public morality, it is not open to the State Government to acquire the undertaking of horse racing again in the name of public good and public purpose. It is ex facie irrational to invoke public gambling and as such prohibited under law, and at the same time speak of public purpose and public good for acquiring the race club and conducting the horse racing by the Government itself. Arbitrariness is writ large on the face of the provisions of the 1985 Act. K.R. Lakshmanan v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1996 SC 1153 : (1996) 2 SCC 226 : 1996 CrLJ 1635.

[9345] ● Freedom of Press regarded as mother of all other liberties.—The freedom of Press is regarded as the mother of all other liberties, in a democratic society. But it has to be remembered that this freedom of Press is not absolute, unlimited and unfettered as all times and in all circumstances as giving an unrestricted freedom of the speech and expression would amount to an uncontrolled licence. If it were wholly free even from reasonable restraints it would lead to disorder and anarchy. In fact, the element of responsibility must be present in the conscience of the journalists. In an organised society, the rights of the Press have to be recognised with its duties and responsibilities towards the society. The protective cover of Press freedom must not be thrown open for wrong doings. If a newspaper publishes what is improper mischievously false or illegal and abuses its liberty it must be punished by Court of law. The Editor of the News paper or a journal has a greater responsibility to guard against untruthful news and publications of greater circulation and impact than the utterance of an individual and by reason of their appearing in print they are likely to be believed by the ignorant. That being so, certain restrictions are essential even for preservation of the freedom of the press itself. In re Harijai Singh, AIR 1997 SC 73 : (1996) 6 SCC 460 : 1997 CrLJ 58 (SC).

7. ARTICLE 19

[9346] ● Restriction imposed be reasonable and in interest of general public.—The provisions of Article 19(1) which guarantee to the citizen the protection of important fundamental rights have to be construed broadly and liberally in favour of the citizen. But at the same time the Court has to keep in mind the limitations on those rights set out in Article 19 itself in clauses (2) to (6) which are for the general welfare of all citizens taken as a whole. Therefore, the proper construction of Article 19 demands that when determining the validity of any law challenged on the ground of violation of any right under Article 19(1) the Court has to see that the restriction imposed under it on such a right is "reasonable" and in the interest of the general public welfare. If the limitation on the citizen's right is arbitrary, or disproportionately heavy or unnecessarily restrictive, the law must be struck down as being not "reasonable". But if the limitation does not suffer from the vice of unreasonableness, the law must be upheld notwithstanding the restrictions it places on the citizens' rights. Hamdard Dawakhana v. Union of India, AIR 1960 SC 554 : 1960 CrLJ 735 : (1960) 1 SCA 314 : 1960 SCJ 611 : (1960) 2 SCR 671 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 358 : (1960) 2 AnWR (SC) 1 : (1960) 2 MLJ (SC) 1.

[9347] ● Reasonableness of restrictions Comparison with corresponding laws in other countries.—It cannot be contended that in determining whether a restriction imposed under any law is "reasonable", the Court is required to compare that law with corresponding laws in other countries relating to the same subject and to see whether the impugned section is or is not as liberal as the corresponding section of the foreign law. Such a contention is not tenable. The question whether a restraint imposed under the impugned law is unduly heavy and disproportionate to the object sought to be achieved by that law or is reasonable in the general public interest has to be judged on its own merits, and it is not a proper approach to compare that restriction with a parallel restriction under a foreign law and then to hold it to be unreasonable on the basis of the difference between the two. Conditions in the two countries may differ, though the evil sought to be checked or eradicated may be the same, and a restriction which could be considered improper, looking to the conditions prevailing in one country, may be considered quite appropriate by the legislature of another country in view of different conditions prevailing there. Hamdard Dawakhana v. Union of India, AIR 1960 SC 554 : 1960 Cri LJ 735

[9348] ● Drugs and Magic Remedies (objectionable Advertisements) Act, its object.—[Note.—The Drugs and Magic Remedies (Objectionable Advertisements) Act, 1954, had for its object the control to advertisements of drugs and medicinal remedies alleged to possess magic qualities. The operative provisions of the Act were assailed in this case on various constitutional grounds including the one that they constituted an infringement of the right to freedom of expression guaranteed under Article 19(1)(a).]

It cannot be contended that every limitation on the right to advertise proprietary goods necessarily constitutes an infringement of the right to freedom of speech and the right to carry on trade and business. Such a broadly stated contention is not true, and what the Court has to see is whether the limitation placed in each case on the right to advertise goods is reasonable and is not offensive to decency and morality. An advertisement is no doubt a form of speech, but its true character is reflected by the object which it seeks to promote. When an advertisement seeks to propagate ideas, whether they be social or political or economic, or seeks to further public thought on any subject or matter by bringing it to the notice of the public, it holds the attributes and elements of the right to freedom of speech. When, however, an advertisement does no such thing, but only commends to the public the value or importance of a certain drug or medicine in the treatment of certain diseases, it takes on element of an activity which seeks to promote some trade or business, and does not fall within the concept of the right to freedom of speech. Therefore, it cannot be said that every advertisement is necessarily a matter containing the concept of freedom of speech and expression of ideas. One has to see in each case what is the nature of the advertisement and what particular activity it seeks to promote.

In a civilized and freedom loving society, freedom of speech goes to the very heart of the natural right to impart and acquire ideas and information about matters of common interest, and if any limitation is placed on that right which results in depriving society of the benefit of free exchange of ideas and information, then, no doubt, such a limitation operates as a restriction on the right to freedom of speech and expression guaranteed by Article 19(1)(a). But if what a limitation does is only to deprive a trader from commending his wares, it does not have to be considered in the light of Article 19(1)(a) and its validity has to be judged with reference only to Article 19(1)(g).

(i) The advertisements banned under Section 3 of the Drugs and Magic Remedies (Objectionable Advertisements) Act, 1954 related only to commerce and trade and not to propagation of ideas. The Act read as a whole, enforced a ban upon a particular form of trade or business, and its main purpose and aim was to prevent self-medication, and for that purpose it prohibited advertisements commending certain drugs and medicines. It did not restrict any of the elements or attributes of the right to freedom of speech. Therefore, the ban imposed under Section 3 of the Band Act on advertisements of prohibited drugs did not constitute any infringement or abridgement of the right to freedom of speech and expression guaranteed under Article 19(1)(a).

(ii) Even assuming that the ban imposed by Section 3 incidentally interfered with the petitioner's right to freedom of speech, there was no direct interference with that right. In its true nature and character, the Act imposed only restrictions on trade or business, and it is the true character of a law which determines the validity of its impositions. In other words, the question whether a law does or does not constitute an infringement of a right claimed by the petitioner depends upon its pith and substance, that is, upon its real character and not upon its incidental operation, and even if there is some incidental interference with some right other than the one which the law directly restrains, that in itself cannot be urged as a ground for casting a doubt on its validity. Hamdard Dawakhana v. Union of India, AIR 1960 SC 554 : 1960 CrLJ 735 : (1960) 1 SCA 314 : 1960 SCJ 611 : (1960) 2 SCR 671 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 358 : (1960) 2 AnWR (SC) 1 : (1960) 2 MLJ (SC) 1.

[9349] ● Challenge to validity of criminal proceedings instituted against any person for contravention of notification.—When a notification is issued by any officer or authority under the powers vested in him by an Order made by the Government in the exercise of powers vested in it under any Act, and criminal proceedings are instituted against any person for a contravention of such Notification, it is open to that person to challenge the validity of such proceedings on any of the following alternative grounds—

(a) that the Act itself is ultra vires and unconstitutional, and hence neither the Order made under it nor the Notification issued under that Order could be held to be valid;

(b) that the Act itself is not bad, but the Order made by the Government is unreasonable and not in conformity with the policy and the principles laid down in the Act;

(c) that though both the Act and the Order made thereunder may not be unconstitutional, the actual direction in the Notification issued by such officer or authority is unreasonable as being in excess of the requirements of the situation or mala fide and in abuse of the power vested in him.

If the petitioner succeeds on any one of these alternative grounds, the proceedings taken against him under the Notification have to be declared to be invalid. Union of India v. Bhanamal Gulzarimal Ltd., AIR 1960 SC 475 : 1960 CrLJ 664 : 1960 SCJ 584 : (1960) 2 SCR 627 : 1960 (1) SCA 438 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 349 : ILR (1960) 1 Punj 895.

[9350] ● Nothing unreasonable in leaving power to State Govt. to determine time and extent to which restriction be imposed.—There is nothing unreasonable in leaving the power to the State to determine the time when, the extent to which, and the person against whom a restriction under any law may be imposed. It is the executive Government of a State which is charged with the duty to preserve law and order in the State, and it alone is in possession of all the material facts from which to assess the urgency of a situation, and it alone is in a position to determine what anticipatory action that situation calls for. Therefore, the determination of the question as to the time for taking action, the person against whom it should be taken, and the extent of the action, must necessarily be left to the judgment and discretion of the executive authorities. Union of India v. Bhanamal Gulzarimal Ltd., AIR 1960 SC 475 : 1960 CrLJ 664 : 1960 SCJ 584 : (1960) 2 SCR 627 : 1960 (1) SCA 438.

[9351] ● Law not in itself violative of any fundamental right when.—Even when a law is not in itself violative of any fundamental right, the possibility always remains that the executive authority entrusted with the powers under that law may act in excess or in abuse of those powers. Merely because such possibility exists, it cannot be urged that the law itself is unreasonable. May be, that an executive officer exercising the powers under an Act may untruthfully say, as a matter of form that he has been satisfied, when in fact he is not; but merely on that account it cannot be contended that the law which gave him that power is itself bad because it does not provide for the prevention of such excess or abuse. The contention cannot be accepted for two reasons. Firstly, no argument can be allowed to be based on the assumption that the State Government or the authority to whom the power is given will act in abuse of that power, and secondly, even if it is found that in a particular case such abuse has in fact occurred, what will be struck down is not the law itself, but only the abusive order made thereunder. Union of India v. Bhanamal Gulzarimal Ltd., AIR 1960 SC 475 : 1960 CrLJ 664 : 1960 SCJ 584.

[9352] ● Act constitutional and not violative of any fundamental right.—Once it is held that an Act is constitutional and not in violation of any fundamental right, an Order issued by the Government in the exercise of the powers vested in it under the Act, whereby the policy of the Act is implemented and carried out, cannot be challenged on the ground of violation of the same fundamental right.

If the provisions of an Order issued under an Act form part of an integrated scheme whereunder the whole policy of the Act is worked out, it is not open to any person to pick out for attack any particular provision therein, because each such provision is only a measure which is necessary for carrying out the policy of the Act. Union of India v. Bhanamal Gulzarimal Ltd., AIR 1960 SC 475 : 1960 CrLJ 664 : (1960) 1 SCA 438.

[9353] ● Public order—Connotation.—The words "public order" are words of a very wide connotation and mean "orderly state of society in which citizens can follow their normal activities of life in peace, tranquility and safety". So defined, public order is synonymous with public safety, peace and tranquillity. Supdt. Central Prison, Fatehgarh v. Ram Mohan Lohia (Dr.), AIR 1960 SC 633 : 1960 CrLJ 1002 : 1960 SCJ 567 : (1960) 2 SCR 710 : 1960 ALJ 320 : 1960 AWR (HC) 247 : 1960 ACrR 166.

[9354] ● Public order equated with public safety, peace and tranquillity.—In Romesh Thappar v. State of Madras, and in Brij Bhushan v. State of Delhi, the Court had before it Article 19(2), only as it originally stood before its amendment in the year 1951 by the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951, when it did not carry the words "public order" and was limited in its application to laws which were made only in the interest of "the security of the State". Quite naturally, the Court laid down the following two propositions as result of the construction of Article 19(2) as it then stood, namely, (a) that offences against the State were divisible into two categories,—major offences which affect the very security of the State, and minor offences which affect public order and peace in local areas within the State, but which did not affect the security of the State itself, and (b) that a law restricting the citizen's right to freedom of speech and expression fell within the permissive cover of Article 19(2) only when the restriction imposed under it prohibited an incitement to commit major offences which undermined the security of the State; and that if the incitement prohibited under it was in respect only of some offence which affected the maintenance of public order, the law was outside the cover of Article 19(2) and had to be declared to be void as being an infringement of Article 19(1)(a).

These principles cannot be invoked now after the amendment of Article 19(2) because that Article as it now stands covers laws made "in the interest of public order", and the validity of a law which prohibits incitement to commit an offence affecting public order cannot any longer be questioned provided that such law is reasonable in its substance and procedure.

As said above, "public order" is equated with public safety, peace and tranquility, and any law which prohibits incitement to acts which disturb public peace or tranquillity or which endanger public safety has to be held to be valid, irrespective of the question whether the prohibited incitement relates or does not relate to acts affecting the security of the State. Supdt. Central Prison, Fatehgarh v. Ram Manohar Lohia (Dr.), AIR 1960 SC 633 : 1960 CrLJ 1002 : 1960 SCJ 567 : (1960) 2 SCR 710.

[9355] ● Restriction in "interest of public order".—In Ramji Lal Modi v. State of U.P., AIR 1957 SC 620 and Virendra v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 896, the Court observed that the words used in Article 19(2) are "in the interest of" and not "for the maintenance of". On the basis of this distinction it was held that a law may not have been designed for the direct maintenance of public order, and yet it can be a law "in the interest of" public order. These observations meant only that if a law had the effect of bringing about the preservation of public order as a result of its operation, then, even if that law did not directly and expressly purport to be for the maintenance of public order, it would still be within the cover of Article 19(2) as being "in the interest of public order". These observations could not be construed as laying down that any remote or fanciful connection between the impugned Act and public order is sufficient for sustaining its validity.

Fundamental rights cannot be permitted to be restricted or curtailed on hypothetical or imaginary considerations, and a restriction on the right to freedom of speech is reasonable and in the interest of public order only when there is a real and proximate relation or nexus between the restriction and preservation of public order. In other words, the existence of an intimate connection between the restriction imposed and preservation of public order is essential in every case before it could be said that the Act imposing that restriction is in the interest of public order. If the connection sought to be established between the two is not real and proximate but only remote or far-fetched or hypothetical or problematic, it cannot be said that the restriction is either "reasonable" or "in the interest of public order". The use of the word "reasonable" in this context means that the restriction imposed by any law will be upheld only if it has a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the Act and does not go in excess of that object. Supdt. Central Prison, Fatehgarh v. Ram Manohar Lohia (Dr.), AIR 1960 SC 633 : 1960 CrLJ 1002 : 1960 SCJ 567.

[9356] ● Section 3 of U.P. Special Powers Act to be struck down as being infringement of fundamental right to freedom of speech and expression.—The accused in the present case was prosecuted under Section 3 of the U.P. Special Powers Act, 1932, which made it an offence to instigate any person or class of persons not to pay any tax or revenue to the Government. The case against the accused was that he had made public speeches in which he instigated the persons gathered not to pay to the Government the dues for the supply of irrigation waters at rates which had been recently enhanced. The accused contended that he was justified in making such speeches since the enhancement was oppressive and uncalled for. On behalf of the State it was contended that in a democratic set-up there is no scope for an agitational approach, that if a law is thought to be bad and if an imposition under it is thought to be excessive, the only way in which the position can be rectified is by the democratic process of getting the law amended, that an instigation to break the law is itself a breach of public order, and that, in any case, an instigation not to pay a tax or a revenue due to the Government under any law is an act which may ignite a movement which is destructive of public order, and a law which prohibits such an act is within the cover of Article 19(2).

Laws imposing restrictions on the right to freedom of speech and expression cannot be sustained on such hypothetical considerations as were advanced on behalf of the State. If those arguments were accepted without any reservation, the effect would be to destroy altogether the right to freedom of speech and expression which is the very foundation of a democratic way of life. Every restriction on that right to be justified had to be intimately connected with the preservation of public order. There was no such proximate connection between the restriction imposed by Section 3 of the impugned Act and preservation of public order, and hence the restriction could not be said to be either reasonable or in the interest of public order. For these reasons Section 3 of the Act had to be struck down as being an infringement of the fundamental right to freedom of speech and expression guaranteed by Article 19(1)(a). Supdt. Central Prison, Fatehgarh v. Ram Monohar Lohia (Dr.), AIR 1960 SC 633 : 1960 CrLJ 1002 : 1960 SCJ 567.

[9357] ● Iron and Steel (Control of Production and Distribution) Order—Validity.—Clause II-B of the Iron and Steel (Control of Production and Distribution) Order, 1941 : A provision in an Order which authorises the executive officer entrusted with the implementation of that Order to fix the maximum selling price of an essential commodity like iron or steel with a view to secure its supply to the public at fair prices, and with that object empowers him to issue Notifications from time to time whereunder dealers and stockists in such commodity are prohibited from selling that commodity at any price above the maximum price fixed in such notification, is not unconstitutional as being an infringement of Article 19(1)(f) or 19(1)(g). Such an Order authorises the imposition of restrictions which are absolutely "reasonable" and "in the interest of the general public" within the meaning of Articles 19(5) and 19(6). Union of India v. Bhanamal Gulzarimal Ltd., AIR 1960 SC 475 : 1960 CrLJ 664 : (1960) 1 SCA 438 : 1960 SCJ 584 : (1960) 2 SCR 627 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 349 : ILR (1960) 1 Punj 895.

[9358] ● Drugs and Magic Remedies (Objectionable Advertisement) Act—Prohibition of advertisement under.—The Drugs and Magical Remedies (Objectionable Advertisements) Act, 1954; A law which imposes restrictions on advertisements which are objectionable and unethical, with a view to discourage the use of proprietary drugs and medicines for the purpose of self-medication and self-treatment is within the permissive cover of Articles 19(5) and 19(6), and it cannot be said that the prohibition of such advertisements is either unreasonable or otherwise than in the general public interest.

Further, if under such an Act a ban is imposed not only on advertisements in newspapers and other publications, but also on advertisements on the cartoons and labels and wrappers of medicine bottles, such a ban cannot be challenged as being too wide and disproportionate to the object of the Act. The definition of the word "advertisement" in such an Act has necessarily got to be broad enough to include advertisements in the packages in which such medicines are sold, and if that definition were not so inclusive, the very purpose for which the Act was brought into existence would be defeated. Hamdard Dawakhana v. Union of India, AIR 1960 SC 554 : 1960 CrLJ 735 : (1960) 1 SCA 314 : 1960 SCJ 611 : (1960) 2 SCR 671 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 358 : (1960) 2 AnWR (SC) 1 : (1960) 2 MLJ (SC) 1.

[9359] ● Section 44, CrPC validity section does not confer arbitrary power on Magistrate.—Section 144 authorises the placing of restrictions which are in the interests of the general public and also in the interest of public order. The power conferred by the section is not arbitrary or unlimited or untrammelled, but one which is to be exercised upon material facts gathered either from proper enquiry or based upon proper report and only upon being satisfied that a disturbance of public order exists or is to be apprehended and the factors conditioning its exercise in fact exist. The power is to be judicially exercised as is subject to judicial review, and is not left to the subjective satisfaction of the Magistrate. Anticipatory action by the executive is often essential for preventing disturbance of public order, and the power given to take such anticipatory action is quite reasonable. Therefore, Section 144 is valid and constitutional. The restrictions which it authorises a Magistrate to place by a prohibitory order are reasonable and in the interests of public order. They are covered by clauses (2) and (3) of Article 19 and hence the section is not violative of Article 19(1)(a) or 19(1)(b). It is true that Section 144 does not expressly mention that order made under it must be preceded by an enquiry. But the section must be construed as a whole. The latter part of sub-section (1) requires that the order must set out the material facts of the case. This clearly requires the making of an enquiry unless the Magistrate is satisfied about the facts from personal knowledge or on a report made to him which he accepts as correct. Clearly, therefore, Section 144 does not confer any arbitrary power on the Magistrate in the matter of making the order.

No doubt, though the powers conferred on the Magistrate under Section 144 are very wide and authorise him to place restrictions which are heavy, the power can be exercised only in an emergency and only for purposes of preventing activities which are dangerous to the safety or the health of the public generally or are disruptive of public peace. No one has a right to carry on activities of such a nature. In view of the factors which condition the exercise of the powers under Section 144, it would be wrong to regard these powers as being unlimited or untrammelled. It must be assumed that the powers given under Section 144 will be exercised legitimately and honestly and the section cannot be struck down on the ground that the Magistrate may possibly abuse his powers.

The provisions of Section 144 are attracted only in an emergency, and the initial judge of an emergency which attracts its provisions is the Magistrate named in the section. But then, the maintenance of law and order is primarily the duty and the function of the executive department of the State and it is inevitable that the question of formation of the opinion as to whether an emergency has arisen or not must necessarily rest in the first instance with the persons through whom the executive exercises its functions and discharges its duties. It would be wrong to require that the State Government itself must exercise those functions and duties in each and every case. It must, therefore, be held that the provisions of Section 144, which assign to a Magistrate belonging to any of the classes mentioned therein the power to decide whether an emergency requiring the exercise of the powers under Section 144 has arisen or not, are not unreasonable.

The satisfaction of the Magistrate as to the necessity of promulgating the order under Section 144 is not made entirely subjective by the section and has to be based upon adequate material.

It cannot be said that the section has given unrestricted powers to the Magistrate merely because no appeal has been provided in the Code against the orders made under Section 144. Under Section 435 read with Section 439 of the Code, the High Court has power to entertain an application for revision of such an order, and to quash the order if it is found that it cannot be supported by the materials upon which it purports to be based. When dealing with such a revision application, the High Court has the power to examine the propriety of the order as well as its legality. And further, in a prosecution under Section 188, Penal Code for infringement of the order made under Section 144, it would be open to the accused to challenge the validity of the order in his defence. It will, thus, be seen that the exercise of power given under Section 144 is not entirely left to the subjective satisfaction of the Magistrate. It is subject to judicial review and the remedy of judicial review is substantial, and not illusory as contended.

Section 144, CrPC confers upon the Magistrate mentioned therein to take action not only where present danger exists but also when there is an apprehension of danger, and thus casts upon the Magistrate the duty to maintain law and order by taking immediate appropriate action.

Anticipatory action taken by a Magistrate in an emergency where danger to public order is genuinely apprehended is only action taken in the discharge of the duty to maintain public order, and it cannot be said that this power to determine apprehension of acts dangerous to public order is unreasonable.

The framework of our Constitution is different from that of the Constitution of the United States, and whatever may be the law there about anticipatory action of the kind authorised under Section 144, CrPC., it cannot be said that such action is not permissible under Article 19(1) of our Constitution. The fundamental rights guaranteed under Article 19 are not absolute rights, but are subject to the restrictions placed in the subsequent clauses of that Article. In clauses (2) and (3) of Article 19 power is expressly given to the legislature to make laws placing reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the rights conferred by clause (1) in the interest of public order. In order to ensure the maintenance of public order, action has often necessarily got to be taken in advance for the purpose of averting anticipatory disturbance of public order. Therefore, it is competent to the legislature to pass a law permitting the appropriate authority to take anticipatory action and to place reasonable anticipatory restrictions upon activities which are likely to endanger or disturb public tranquillity and public order. In fact, in circumstances such anticipatory action is the only safe method of discharging the duty of maintaining public order. Therefore, it cannot be said that a law which authorises such anticipatory action substitutes suppression of the lawful activities or rights of the citizens for it is the duty of the public authorities to maintain public order. It must, therefore, be held that the power given under Section 144 of the Code to the specified Magistrates to take anticipatory action in advance of apprehended disturbance of or danger to public order is a reasonable restriction within the meaning of clauses (2) and (3) of Article 19. Babulal Parate v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 884 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 16 : 1961 (2) SCJ 497.

[9360] ● Slaughter of bulls, bullocks and buffaloes.—The question which arose in this case was whether certain Acts passed by different State Legislatures for the purposes of preservation of animals useful to humanity, such as, bullocks, cows and buffaloes, and prevention of their indiscriminate slaughter, were "reasonable restrictions" within the meaning of clauses (5) and (6) of Article 19 on the exercise of the rights conferred by Articles 19(1)(f) and 19(1)(g) of the Constitution on the owners of such animals.

(In examining the provisions of the impugned Acts the Court laid down the general principles governing the question of the correct approach in determining the "reasonableness" of a statute assailed on the ground of violation of Articles 19(1)(f) and 19(1)(g). The principles enunciated find place in different parts of a long judgment.)

(1) Though the Legislature is the best judge of what is good for the community the ultimate responsibility of determining validity of the law made by the legislature is cast by the Constitution on the Supreme Court and so that responsibility must always rest with the Court, and it cannot shrink from the solemn duty placed upon it by the Constitution.

(2) In deciding whether laws which place restrictions on the citizen's rights to carry on a particular trade or business or to dispose of property is or is not violative of Article 19(1), the test of "reasonableness" must be applied to each individual statute which is impugned as and when the question arises, and no abstract standard or general pattern of "reasonableness" can be laid down as being applicable to all cases.

(3) In arriving at a decision on this question of the "reasonableness" of an impugned statute, all the following considerations must enter into the judicial verdict—

   (a) the nature of the right alleged to have been infringed,

   (b) the underlying purpose of the restrictions imposed,

   (c) the extent of the evil sought to be remedied thereby,

   (d) the urgency of the need to remove that evil,

   (e) the prevailing conditions at the time of the passing of the Act, and

   (f) the proportion or disproportion of the restrictions imposed under the Act to the evil which it seeks to cure or remedy.

(4) The word "reasonable" connotes that the restriction or limitation imposed under the Act on the rights of the citizen should not be arbitrary or of an excessive nature, or beyond what is required in the interests of the general public. It implies intelligent care and deliberation, that is, the choice of a course which reason dictates.

(5) Legislation which arbitrarily or excessively invades the rights conferred by Article 19(1) cannot be said to have the quality of "reasonableness", and if it does not strike a proper balance between the freedoms guaranteed in Article 19(1) and the social control permitted by clauses (5) and (6) of that Article, it must be held to be wanting in that quality.

(6) Within the limits laid down in Article 19, it is open to the Legislature to enact ancillary provisions to give effect to the main object of the Act, and the restrictions placed in that regard must be considered to be "reasonable" if they are necessary to secure the efficient enforcement of the valid provisions of the Act and to serve its object. In other words, it is the undisputed right of the Legislature to decide what substantive provisions are necessary to give effect to the main object of the Act, and to make ancillary provisions necessary for reducing to the minimum the possibility of its evasion. Abdul Hakim Qureshi v. State of Bihar, AIR 1961 SC 448 : (1961) 1 CrLJ 573 : (1961) 2 SCR 610 : (1961) 1 SCA 713.

[9361] ● Test of reasonableness—Interest of general public.—The test of "reasonableness" laid down in clauses (2) to (6) of Article 19 has to be applied to a statute in the context of all the relevant factors governing the case, such as, the purpose of the restriction imposed, the extent and the urgency of the evil sought to be remedied, the prevailing conditions at the time, the nature of restrictions imposed are all relevant matters which have to be carefully considered. The central principle underlying the structure of Article 19 is that a balance must be held between the guaranteed rights of the citizen and the need for social control by the State in the larger interest of the community as a whole.

If a law in the form and with the amplitude necessary for the prevention of an evil is found to be reasonable and in the interests of the public generally, that law cannot be said to be unreasonable merely because a marginal small section of the public might be adversely affected thereby. It is open to the legislature to make a law placing effective restrictions on the rights of the individual which are reasonable even though the effect thereof is to restrict or even prohibit actions of a small section of the public which are innocent in themselves. A law which is reasonable and valid in the context of the wider interest of the community as a whole cannot be stamped with the character of unconstitutionality by looking merely at its effect on a marginal section of the community. Collector of Customs, Madras v. Nathella Sampathu Chetty, AIR 1962 SC 316 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 364 : (1962) 1 SCJ 68 : (1962) 3 SCR 786 : 1962 MLJ (Cri) 1 : (1962) 1 MLJ (SC) 43 : (1962) 1 AnWR (SC) 43.

[9362] ● Unconstitutionality of legislation.—It is now well settled that the possibility of the abuse of the powers given under a statute by the executive is no ground for declaring the provisions contained in that statute to be unreasonable or void. The principle is founded upon the fact that the powers given under a statute are capable of being exercised reasonably as well as unreasonably, and the manner of their exercise cannot have any bearing on the question whether the statute itself is reasonable. The validity of a measure has to be determined by an examination of its contents and the nature of the powers conferred under it on the executive and not by the manner of its actual application to particular cases.

Since the possibility of abuse of a statute valid in itself does not impart to it any element of invalidity, the converse also must follow, namely, that a statute which is in itself invalid as placing restrictions upon the rights of the citizen which are unreasonable cannot be saved by its being administered in a reasonable manner. The constitutional validity of the statute would have to be determined on the basis of its provisions and the ambit of its operation. If so tested, it passes the test of reasonableness it must be held to be valid and the possibility of improper use of the powers conferred by it, is no ground for pronouncing the law itself to be invalid. Similarly, if the law on being tested in the light of constitutional requirements, does not pass the test it cannot be held to be valid merely because it is administered in a manner which might not conflict with the constitutional requirements. Collector of Customs, Madras v. Nathella Sampathu Chetty, AIR 1962 SC 316 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 364 : (1962) 1 SCJ 68.

[9363] ● Section 178-A—Sea Customs Act—Validity of.—In the present case, the question was whether Section 178-A of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, was in violation of Articles 19(1)(f) and 19(1)(g) of the Constitution. It was urged that the Central Board of Revenue had issued certain administrative instructions as regards the manner in which the Customs Officers should regulate their procedure in adjudging the confiscation of the goods seized under the provisions of the Act. The argument was that as Section 178-A was being administered subject to the safeguards contained in those instructions, the provision must be held to be a reasonable restriction within the meaning of clause (6) of Article 19. The contention that the said administrative instructions had relevance on the question of validity of Section 178-A of the Sea Customs Act is incorrect and must be rejected. Collector of Customs, Madras v. Nathella Sampathu Chetty, AIR 1962 SC 316 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 364 : (1962) 1 SCJ 68 : (1962) 3 SCR 786.

[9364] ● Constitutional provisions dealing with citizenship—Articles 5 to 11.—The Constitutional provisions dealing with citizenship are Articles 5 to 11. Article 5 provides that every person who at the commencement of the Constitution has his domicile in India and who was either born in India or was born of an Indian parent shall be a citizen of India. Article 6 lays down that a person who has migrated to India from Pakistan shall be deemed to be citizen of India if he satisfies the tests prescribed in that Article. Article 7 provides that notwithstanding anything contained in Article 5 and 6, a person who has migrated from India to Pakistan after 1-3-1947, shall not be deemed to be a citizen of India. Article 8 provides for citizenship of India by registration of persons of Indian origin residing outside India. Article 9 provides that if any person has voluntarily acquired the citizenship of a Foreign State prior to the commencement of the Constitution, he shall not be able to claim Indian citizenship by virtue of Articles 5, 6 and 8. Article 10 guarantees continuance of the rights of citizenship to every person who is or is deemed to be a citizen of India under Article 5, 6 or 8, but this guarantee is subject to the condition that Parliament is empowered to make any law affecting this right. Then comes the last Article 11 which empowers Parliament to make laws regulating the right of citizenship and provides that nothing in Part II shall derogate from this power of the Parliament.

It will thus be seen that under the Constitution, Parliament is expressly vested with the power to make laws relating to acquisition, continuance and termination of citizenship and a law so made cannot be impeached on the ground of inconsistency with provisions of Part II of the Constitution. Therefore, the sovereign legislative competence of Parliament to deal with the topic of citizenship under List I, Entry 17, of the Seventh Schedule is not fettered by the provisions of Articles 5 to 10, and it cannot be contended that a provision in an Act of Parliament or Rule made thereunder is ultra vires because it affects the status of citizenship conferred under any Article in Part II of the Constitution.

The scheme of the relevant Article of Part II which deals with citizenship clearly suggests that the status of citizenship can be adversely affected by a statute made by the Parliament in exercise of its legislative powers. If may prima facie sound somewhat surprising, but it is nevertheless true, that though the citizens of India are guaranteed the fundamental rights specified in Article 19 of the Constitution, the status of citizenship on which the existence or continuance of the said rights rests is itself not one of the fundamental rights guaranteed to anyone. If a law is properly passed by the Parliament affecting the status of citizenship of any citizen in the country, it can be no challenge to the validity of the said law that it affects the fundamental rights of those whose citizenship is thereby terminated. Article 19 proceeds on the assumption that the person who claims the rights guaranteed by it is a citizen of India. If the basic status of citizenship is validly terminated by a Parliamentary statute, the person whose citizenship is terminated has no right to claim the fundamental rights under Article 19.

For these reasons, it must be held that the validity of Section 9(2) of the Citizenship Act, 1955, which delegates to the Central Government the power to determine the question as to whether an Indian citizen has acquired the citizenship of another country cannot be challenged, on the ground of violation of the right of citizenship conferred under Part II of the Constitution, or on the ground of violating the right to residence in India guaranteed under Article 19(1)(e). Izhar Ahmad Khan v. Union of India, AIR 1962 SC 1052 : 1962 (2) CrLJ 215 : (1963) 1 SCA 136 : 1963 BLJR 99.

[9365] ● Reasonable restrictions on fundamental rights.—There are situations when the points regarding a violation of Article 14 and an objection that a restriction is not reasonable with the meaning of clause (5) or (6) of Article 19 may converge and may appear as presenting the same question viewed from different angles. Such, for instance, are cases where the denial of equality before the law is based on the ground that the power vested in an administrative authority to affect the rights guaranteed to a citizen is arbitrary, being unguided and uncanalised. The vesting of such a power in the executive would also amount to the imposition of an unreasonable restriction on the exercise of the guaranteed right to trade or carry on business. In such cases, it might be open to urge that once the challenge to the validity of the impugned provision on the ground of violation of Article 14 is rejected, the reasoning by which it is rejected would cover also the attack on its validity on the ground of infringement of Article 19(1)(f) and (g).

However, where there is a guidance and the challenge is only on the ground that the law imposes a restraint which is unreasonable, the scope and the content of the enquiry is far removed from the tests of conformity to rational classification adopted for judging whether the law is violative of Article 14. In such a case, it cannot be said that the previous decision, in which the contention that the impugned law was violative of Article 14 was rejected, also covers the question of infringement of Articles 19(1)(f) and 19(1)(g). Collector of Customs, Madras v. Nathella Sampathu Chetty, AIR 1962 SC 316 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 364 : (1962) 1 SCJ 68 : (1962) 3 SCR 786 : 1962 MLJ (Cri) 1 : (1962) 1 MLJ (SC) 43 : (1962) 1 AnWR (SC) 43.

[9366] ● Regulation 236 of U.P. Police Regulations—Constitutional validity of.—The question which arose in this case was as to the constitutional validity of Regulation 236 of the U.P. Police Regulations which defines "surveillance" as consisting of any of the following measures, namely :

(a) secret picketing of the houses or approaches to the houses of suspects;

(b) domiciliary visits at night;

(c) inquiries into the repute, habits, associations, income, expenses and occupation;

(d) reporting by constables and chowkidars of movements and absences from home;

(e) verification of movements and absences by means of inquiry slips; and

(f) collection and record on a history-sheet of all information bearing on conduct.

The Regulations had no statutory basis and were not made under Section 12 or any other provision of the Indian Penal Code. They were merely executive or departmental instructions for the guidance of the police officers. Therefore, the only question was whether action taken under Regulation 236 by the executive was violative of the freedom guaranteed under Article 19(1).

"Secret picketing" in clause (a) of Regulation 236 clearly meant secret watch over the house of the suspect for finding the nature of his activities. Such watch would not affect either his right of free movement or his personal liberty. That only can constitute an infringement of these rights which is both direct as well as tangible, and it would not be that what was intended to be protected was mere personal sensitiveness. Under this clause the police had no power to offer resistance to the movements of the suspect or to prevent anyone from visiting the suspect.

"Domiciliary visit" means visit to a private dwelling by official person for search or inspection. Under the provision, the police authorities were authorised to enter the premises of the suspect and have it opened and search it for the purpose of ascertaining his presence in the house. Such an intrusion into the house of a citizen, however annoying it might be, by causing him personal discomfort and disturbance to his sleep, does not impede any right to free movement and hence would not constitute a violation of Article 19(1)(d). However, unauthorised intrusion into a person's home and the disturbance caused to him thereby is a violation of his right to personal liberty guaranteed under Article 21. Therefore, clause (b) of Regulation 236 was plainly violative of Article 21 and as there was no law on which the Regulation was based, it must be struck down as unconstitutional.

Clauses (c), (d) and (e) may be dealt with together. They authorised actions in the nature of shadowing of the person concerned for the purpose of building up a record of his movements and activities. They did not involve any physical obstruction or restraint upon the movement of the person. Article 19(1)(d) does not contemplate or include psychological inhibitions. These clauses did not infringe Article 19(1)(d) or Article 21. Kharak Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1963 SC 1295 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 1329. (Per SINHA, C.J., AYYANGAR and MUDHOLKAR, JJ.) Per SUBBA RAO and SHAH, JJ.

[9367] ● Regulation 236 of U.P. Police Regulations unconstitutional.—We are of the opinion that not only clause (b) of the Regulation, but the entire Regulation is unconstitutional as it infringes both Article 19(1)(d) and Article 21 of the Constitution. The petition raises a question of far reaching importance, namely, the right of a citizen to lead a free life subject to control imposed by valid law.

The operation of the Regulation includes posting of policemen near the person's house, close and constant watch over his movements, entering his house at night and waking him up at any hour of the night, inquiry about his habits, associations, income, expenses and occupation. In short, his entire life day to day is made an open book and every activity of his closely followed and observed. It cannot be said that this is possible without the knowledge of the person concerned or his friends and associates and others in the locality. It is not realistic to dissect and cut down this act of surveillance into its various parts. All the measures taken under Regulation 236 are parts of one process of surveillance, and the question which has to be decided is whether such surveillance is constitutionally valid. The person under the constant shadow of surveillance is certainly deprived of his right to freedom of movement, that is, the right to go where he likes and do what he likes, and to speak to whomsoever he wants, without any apprehension or restraint. He can move physically but he cannot do so freely when all his movements are watched and he is constantly shadowed. The shroud of surveillance necessarily places inhibitions and restraints which prevent him from moving and acting freely as he would like to do. Similarly, the right of personal liberty in Article 21 is equally infringed by such surveillance. The right to personal liberty takes in the right to be free from encroachments and intrusions on his movements and on his private life. A person's house is his "castle", that is, his rampart against encroachment on his personal liberty, and that includes security of one's privacy against arbitrary intrusion by the police. We would, therefore, define the right to personal liberty in Article 21 as a right to be free from all restrictions and encroachments on one's liberty, whether they are directly imposed or indirectly brought about by calculated measures.

It must, therefore, be held that the entire Regulation 236 offends both Article 19(1)(d) and Article 21 of the Constitution. Kharak Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1963 SC 1295 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 1329. (Per Subba Rao and Shah, JJ.) Per Sinha, C.J., and Imam, Ayyangar and Mudholkar, JJ.

[9368] ● Term "Liberty" in Article 21 of Constitution connotation.—By the term "liberty" in Article 21 something more is meant than mere freedom from physical restraint or the bounds of a prison. It is true that the word "liberty" is qualified by the word "personal", but the qualifying adjective has been used only in order to avoid overlapping between the elements and incidents of "liberty" like freedom of speech or freedom of movement which are already dealt with in Article 19(1) and the "liberty" guaranteed by Article 21.

The "liberty" comprehended by Article 21 is not to be construed narrowly so as to mean nothing more than freedom from physical restraint or freedom from confinement within the bounds of a prison, but must be construed as including within it all varieties of rights which go to make up the "personal liberties" of man other than those already dealt with in the several clauses of Article 19(1). In other words, while Article 19(1) deals with particular species or attributes of that freedom, "personal liberty" in Article 21 takes in and comprises the residue of the rights which go to make up "liberty", such as, the sanctity of a man's home, and his rights to personal security and normal comforts, such as, his right to sleep at nights undisturbed by invasions and intrusions by the police. An unauthorised invasion or intrusion upon a person's home and causing him disturbance in the enjoyment of his privacy and personal security is clearly a violation of his right to "personal liberty" within the meaning of Article 21. Kharak Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1963 SC 1295 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 329 : 1963 ALJ 711. (Per Sinha, C.J., and Imam, Ayyangar and Mudholkar, JJ.) Per Subba Rao and Shah, JJ.

[9369] ● Expression "personal liberty"—Right to.—The expression "personal liberty" is a comprehensive expression and the right to move freely is an attribute of personal liberty. But both are independent fundamental rights, though there is overlapping and it cannot be said that the freedom to move freely is carved out of personal liberty and therefore personal liberty in Article 21 excludes that attribute. There is no question of one being carved out of another. The fundamental right of life and personal liberty has many attributes and some of them are found in Article 19. The right to personal liberty takes in, not only a right to be free from restrictions placed on his movements, but also the right to be free from encroachments on his private life. The right to privacy is an essential ingredient of personal liberty.

Every person has a right to his domestic life undisturbed by encroachments and intrusions which are not authorised by law. In the last resort, a person's house, where he lives with his family is his "castle"; it is his rampart against encroachment on his personal liberty. Encroachments on a man's private life affect him even more than physical restraints on his movements, and nothing is more harmful to a man's happiness and health than a calculated interference with his privacy.

We would, therefore, define the right to personal liberty in Article 21 as a right to be free from restrictions or encroachments on his person, whether they are direct physical restraints or are indirectly brought about by calculated measures which interfere with his privacy and private life. Kharak Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1963 SC 1295 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 329 : 1963 ALJ 711.

[9370] ● Violation of rights under Article 19(1) as a result of some action taken by police.—In a case in which the petitioner urges the violation of rights under Article 19(1) as a result of some action taken against him by the offices of a State department, such as, the police, if the infringement of any of his freedoms guaranteed to him by Article 19 is established, then, the only way in which such violation could be defended would be by reference to a valid law, be it a statute or a statutory rule or regulation. If the regulation which is pleaded by way of justification for the action taken has no statutory basis, but is merely in the nature of executive or departmental instructions framed for the guidance of the police officers, it does not have the force of law. As such a regulation is not "law" within the meaning of any of the clauses (2) to (6) of Article 19, it would not be available to the State in order to regulate or curtail any of the fundamental rights conferred by Article 19(1), nor would the same be "a procedure established by law" within Article 21. In such a case, the question whether the impugned regulation imposes restrictions which are "reasonable" or are designed to preserve public order or are in the public interest does not at all arise for consideration and is entirely out of place, and the question whether the actions taken by the police authorities under the regulation constitute an infringement of Article 19(1) has to be decided purely on its merits. Kharak Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1963 SC 1295 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 329 : 1963 ALJ 711.

[9371] ● Section 52-A of Sea Customs Act constitutional validity.—In the present case the constitutional validity of Section 52-A of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, was challenged by a foreign company carrying on the business of transport of passengers and cargo by sea between Japan and India whose ship, "Eastern Saga" was ordered to be confiscated under Section 167(12-A) of the Act on its being proved that the offence under Section 52-A had been committed as the ship which entered the Port of Calcutta from Japan carried secret constructions in several parts of the ship which were meant for the purpose of concealing goods imported in violation of the Act. The validity of Section 52-A was challenged on the ground of violation of Article 19(1)(f).

The appellant was a foreign company, and as such it was not entitled to claim the benefit of Article 19. It is only citizens of India who have been guaranteed the right to the freedoms enshrined in that Article.

The whole argument was that the appellant had been deprived of its property by the operation of the provisions of Section 52-A of the Act which was invalid. A foreign company is not entitled to the benefit of Article 19. The rights guaranteed to the citizens of India on the strength of the rights guaranteed under Article 19 are not available to foreigners. It is not open to a foreign company to resist the confiscation of its ship on the ground that Section 52-A of the Act is invalid as being in violation of Article 19(1)(f) of the Constitution, or as being in violation of Article 14 or Article 31(1) when the plea regarding the violation of these Articles is necessarily based upon the right conferred by Article 19(1)(f). Indo-China Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. v. Additional Collector of Customs, Calcutta, AIR 1964 SC 1140 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 234 : (1964) 34 Com Cas 435.

[9372] ● Use of premises being dangerous to life, health or property—Opinion of corporation as to.—A provision in a Municipal Act dealing with the power of the Corporation to require a person using any premises to take out a license for such use is unreasonable and violative of Article 19(1)(g) in so far as it lays down that the opinion of the Corporation as to the nature of the use being dangerous to life, health or property shall be conclusive and shall not be justiciable in any Court. Corporation of Calcutta v. Calcutta Tramways Co. Ltd., AIR 1964 SC 1279 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 354.

[9373] ● Refusal by State Govt. to send manuscript of detenu book out of Jail for publication.—Article 358 of the Constitution suspends the provisions of Article 19 of Part III of the Constitution during the period the proclamation of emergency is in operation; and the order passed by the President under Article 359 suspended the enforcement, inter alia, of Article 21 during the period of the said emergency. But the President's order was a conditional one. In effect, it said that the right to move the High Court or the Supreme Court remained suspended if such a person had been deprived of his personal liberty under the Defence of India Act, 1962, or any rule or order made thereunder. If a person was deprived of his personal liberty not under the Act or a rule or order made thereunder but in contravention thereof, his right to move the said Courts in that regard would not be suspended. The question, therefore, in the instant case was whether the first respondent's liberty had been restricted in terms of the Defence of India Rules whereunder he was detained. If it was in contravention of the said Rules, he would have the right to approach the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution.

In exercise of the power conferred under sub-rule (4) of Rule 30 of the Rules, the Government of Maharashtra determined that the conditions as to maintenance, discipline and punishment of offences and breaches of discipline governing persons ordered to be detained in any place in the State of Maharashtra, shall be the same as those contained in the Bombay Conditions of Detention Order, 1951. The Bombay Conditions of Detention Order, 1951, does not contain any condition as regards the writing of books by a detenue or sending them out of jail for publication. Briefly stated, the scheme of the said provisions is that a person can be detained if the appropriate Government is satisfied that in order to prevent him from doing the prejudicial acts mentioned in Rule 30 of the Rules it is necessary to detain him in prison subject to the conditions imposed in the manner prescribed in sub-rule (4) of Rule 30 of the Rules. To put it in a negative form, no restrictions other than those prescribed under sub-rule (4) of Rule 30 can be imposed on a detenue. If the appropriate authority seeks to impose on a detenue a restriction not so prescribed the said authority will be interfering with the personal liberty of the detenue in derogation of the law whereunder he is detained. If that happens, the High Court, in terms of Article 226 of the Constitution, can issue an appropriate writ or direction to the authority concerned to act in accordance with law.

We have gone through the provisions of the Bombay Conditions of Detention Order, 1951. There is no provision in that order dealing with the writing or publication of books by the detenue. There is, therefore, no restriction on the detenue in respect of that activity.

Here, the first respondent's liberty is restricted under the Defence of India Rules subject to conditions determined in the manner prescribed in sub-rule (4) of Rule 30 thereof. We find it difficult to accept the argument that the Bombay Conditions of Detention Order, 1951, which lays down the conditions regulating the restrictions on the liberty of a detenue, conferred only such privileges on the detenue as are set out in the order. If this argument were to be accepted it would mean that the detenue could be starved to death, if there was no condition providing for giving food to the detenue. In the matter of liberty of a subject such a construction cannot be given to the said rules and regulations, unless for compelling reasons. We, therefore, hold that the said conditions regulating the restrictions on the personal liberty of a detenue are not privileges conferred on him but are the conditions subject to which his liberty can be restricted. As there is no condition in the Bombay Conditions of Detention Order, 1951, prohibiting a detenue from writing a book or sending it for publication, the State of Maharashtra infringed the personal liberty of the first respondent in derogation of the law whereunder he is detained. The appellant, therefore, acted contrary to law in refusing to send the manuscript book of the detenue out of the jail to his wife for its eventual publication. State of Maharashtra v. Prabhakar Pandurang Sanzgiri, AIR 1966 SC 424 : 1966 CrLJ 311 : (1966) 1 SCA 14 : 1966 MadMN 16 : 1966 MPLJ 165 : 1966 MahLJ 141.

[9374] ● Foreigner not entitled to any fundamental right.—A foreigner as defined in the Foreigners Act, not being a citizen, is not entitled to any fundamental right guaranteed under Article 19. The only rights which he can claim are those contained in Articles 20 to 22. Anwar v. State of J&K, AIR 1971 SC 337 : (1971) 3 SCC 104 : 1970 UJ (SC) 702 : (1971) 1 SCA 519 : (1971) 1 SCJ 502 : (1971) 1 SCR 637.

[9375] ● Imposition of reasonable restriction on right to freedom of speech and expression.—Assuming that Article 19(2) applies to the law relating to contempt, it imposes reasonable restriction on the right to freedom of speech and expression guaranteed by the Constitution. C.K. Daphtary v. O.P. Gupta, AIR 1971 SC 1132 : (1971) 1 SCC 626 : 1971 CrLJ 844 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 483.

[9376] ● Express "public order"—Meaning of.—The expression 'public order' includes absence of all acts which are a danger to the security of State and also acts which are comprehended by the expression 'ordre publique' under French Law meaning absence of insurrection, riot, turbulance or crimes of violence but not acts which disturb only the serenity of others. The words "public order" and "public tranquillity" overlap to a certain extent but there are matters which disturb public tranquillity without being a disturbance of public order. No doubt public order also requires absence of disturbance of a state of serenity in society but it goes no further. The expression "in the interests of public order" in the Constitution is very wide and is capable of taking within itself not only those acts which disturb the security of the State or are with ordre publique but also certain acts which disturb public tranquillity or are breaches of the peace. It is not necessary to give to the expression a narrow meaning as in the case of the phrase used in the preventive detention law as embracing only graver episodes not involving cases of law and order which are not disturbances of public tranquillity but of ordre publique. Madhu Limaye v. S.D.M., Monghyr, AIR 1971 SC 2486 : (1970) 3 SCC 746 : 1971 CrLJ 1720 : (1971) 2 SCJ 479 : 1971 MLJ (Cri) 629.

[9377] ● Anything tending to overthrow State prejudicial to security of State.—Anything tending to overthrow the State must necessarily be prejudicial to the security of the State and therefore a law can be made, placing reasonable restrictions on the right to freedom of speech and expression in that respect, in the interests of security of the State. Prima facie, therefore, Section 9 of the Act clearly falls within the express language of Article 19(2). The fundamental right guaranteed by Article 19(1)(a) and the interest of public protected by Article 19(2) must be properly adjusted and reasonable balance struck between the two. The test of reasonableness of the restriction has to be considered in each case in the light of the nature of the right infringed, the purpose of the restriction, the extent and the nature of the mischief required to be suppressed and the prevailing social and other conditions at the time. There can be no abstract standard or general pattern of reasonableness. Our Constitution provides reasonably precise, general guidance in this matter. Section 9 of the Act is plainly within the legislative competence of the Punjab Legislature. Santokh Singh v. Delhi Admn., AIR 1973 SC 1091 : (1973) 1 SCC 659 : 1973 CrLJ 846.

[9378] ● Right of privacy itself fundamental right.—It was contended on behalf of the petitioner that right to privacy was itself a fundamental right and that right was violated as M.P. Police Regulation 856 provided for domiciliary visits and other incursions into it. The question whether right to privacy was itself a fundamental right flowing from the other fundamental rights guaranteed to a citizen under Part III was not easy of solution. Even assuming that the right to personal liberty, the right to move freely throughout the territory of India and the freedom of speech created an independent right of privacy as an emanation from them which one could characterize as a fundamental right, that right was not absolute. Drastic inroads directly into the privacy and indirectly into the fundamental rights, of a citizen would be made if M.P. Police Regulations 855 and 856 were to be read widely. To interpret the rule in harmony with the Constitution was, therefore, necessary and canalisation of the powers vested in the police by the two Regulations became necessary, if they were to be saved at all. The relevant Articles of the Constitution compelled the Supreme Court to narrow down the scope for play of the two Regulations. Depending on the character and antecedents of the person subjected to surveillance as also the objects and the limitation under which surveillance was made, it could not be said surveillance by domiciliary visits would always be unreasonable restriction upon the right of privacy. Assuming that the fundamental rights explicitly guaranteed to a citizen had penumbral zones and that the right to privacy was itself a fundamental right, that fundamental right should be subject to restriction on the basis of compelling public interest. As Regulation 856 had the force of law, it could not be said that the fundamental right of the petitioner under Article 21 had been violated by the provisions contained in it, as the procedure for deprivation of liberty was reasonable. The question would then arise whether Regulation 856 was a law imposing reasonable restriction in public interest on the freedom of movement falling within Article 19(5); or, even if it be assumed that Article 19(5) did not apply in terms, as the right to privacy of movement could not be absolute, a law imposing reasonable restriction upon it for compelling interest of State should be upheld as valid. When there were two interpretations, one wide and unconstitutional and the other narrower but within constitutional bounds, the Supreme Court would read down the overflowing expressions to make them valid. So read, the two Regulations were more restricted than the Counsel for the petitioner sought to contend. Regulation 855 empowered surveillance only of persons against whom reasonable materials existed to induce the opinion that they showed a determination to lead a life of crime involving public peace or security only and if they were dangerous security risks. Mere convictions in criminal cases where nothing gravely imperilling safety of society was involved could not be regarded as warranting surveillance under that Regulation. Similarly, domiciliary visits and picketing by the police should be reduced to the clearest cases of danger to community security and not routine follow-up at the end of a conviction or release from prison or at the whim of a police officer. In truth, legality apart, those Regulations ill-accorded with the essence of personal freedoms and the State would do well to revise those old Police Regulations verging perilously near unconstitutionality. With those observations, the writ petition was dismissed. Govind v. State of M.P., AIR 1975 SC 1378 : (1975) 2 SCC 148 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 468 : 1975 CrLJ 1111.

[9379] ● Law prescribing procedure for trial of offence by Court Martial.—Section 21 of the Army Act merely confers an additional power to modify rights conferred by Article 19(1)(a) and (c) by Rules and such rules may set out the limits of restriction. Therefore the law prescribing procedure for trial of offences by Court Martials need not satisfy the requirement of Article 21 because to the extent the procedure is prescribed by law and if it stands in derogation of Article 21, to that extent Article 21 in its application to the Armed Forces is modified by an enactment of the procedure in the Army Act itself. Article 33 confers power on the Parliament to determine to what extent any of the rights conferred by Part III shall, in their application to the members of the Armed Forces, be restricted or abrogated so as to ensure the proper discharge of duties and maintenance of discipline amongst them. Prithipal Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 1413 : (1982) 3 SCC 140 : 1982 UJ (SC) 695 : (1982) 2 Sev LJ 582.

8. ARTICLE 20

[9382] ● Fundamental right guaranteed under Article 20(2) Constitution enunciates principle of double jeopardy.—The fundamental right guaranteed under Article 20(2) enunciates the principle of "autre fois convict" or "double jeopardy" which means that no person can be punished twice for the same cause and that once a person has been convicted of an offence by a competent Court, such conviction shall operate as a bar to a subsequent criminal proceeding for the same offence or on the same facts for any other offence.

The test for the application of this principle is whether the former offence and the offence subsequently charged have the same ingredients, that is, whether the facts which constituted the first offence were sufficient to justify a conviction for the second offence. The test is not whether the State relies at the subsequent trial on the same facts on which it relied at the previous one.

The word "offence" in Article 20(2) has not been defined in the Constitution, but is has been defined in Section 3(38) of the General Clauses Act. Article 367 provides that the General Clauses Act applies for the interpretation of the Constitution. Therefore, the word "offence" in Article 20(2) must be taken to mean "any act or omission made punishable by any law" as defined in Section 3(38) of the General Clauses Act.

The words "before a Court of law or a judicial tribunal" are not found in Article 20(2). But the various expressions used in Article 20 such as "convicted", "commission of offence", "penalty", "prosecuted and punished", etc., indicate that this Article contemplates criminal proceedings before a Court of law or a judicial tribunal and further contemplates that there was a judicial decision in the previous proceeding under which punishment was awarded for the commission of an offence.

Article 20(2) can, therefore, be invoked only when all the following conditions are satisfied :—

1. that there has been a previous proceeding before a Court of law or a judicial tribunal;
2. that the previous proceeding was of a criminal nature and in respect of the commission of an "offence", that is, act or omission which is punishable under any law;
3. that there was a judicial decision in the previous proceeding;
4. that under the decision a "punishment" was awarded; and
5. that the offence of which the offender is now being tried is the same offence or has the same ingredients as the previous offence, or is based on the same facts which constituted the previous offence.

In short, Article 20(2) can be invoked only when there has been a previous prosecution for an offence before a Court or judicial tribunal which has resulted in a punishment, and not otherwise. Maqbool Hussain v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 325 : 1953 CrLJ 1432 : 1953 SCA 641 : 1953 SCJ 456 : 1953 SCR 730.

[9383] ● Custom Authority administrative body.—A Customs Authority is merely an administrative body with administrative powers and was not a judicial tribunal, and the proceeding before him is not in the nature of a judicial proceeding.

The order of confiscation is only in the nature of a proceeding in rem, and not in the nature of a proceeding in personam.

The proceedings taken by the Revenue Authorities not being a "prosecution for an offence" and the order of confiscation not being "punishment" of the offender, within the meaning of Article 20(2), they cannot operate as a bar to subsequent prosecution of the offender for an offence under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act. Maqbool Hussain v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 325 : 1953 CrLJ 1432 : 1953 SCA 641 : 1953 SCJ 456.

[9384] ● Action of Jail superintendent.—Another case decided under the same judgment related to a riot which had broken out among detenu prisoners in a jail in course of which some jail officials were assaulted.

The rioting detenus having gone after the incident on a hunger strike, the jail superintendent, acting under his powers under the Rules framed under Section 4(a) of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, passed orders under which the hunger-strikers were placed under solitary confinement and their correspondence and interviews with outsiders were stopped. Thereafter, a complaint was filed in the Court of a Magistrate for prosecution of the rioting detenus for offences under the Penal Code.

Inasmuch as the action taken under the jail rules was only for breach of jail discipline and was not a judicial order made in a judicial proceeding, it could not be said to be prosecution and punishment within the meaning of Article 20(2), and could not operate as a bar to the prosecution of the offenders for offences under the Penal Code. Maqbool Hussain v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 325 : 1953 CrLJ 1432 : 1953 SCA 641 : 1953 SCJ 456 : 1953 SCR 730.

[9385] ● Article 20(1) prohibits imposition of penalty greater than imposed under law in force.—Article 20(1) on its true construction prohibits the imposition of a penalty which is greater than that which could have been imposed under the law in force at the time when the act for which the penalty is imposed was done.

If the law in force at the time when an offence was committed imposed a particular punishment therefor, and thereafter another law comes into force which provides a higher punishment, then upon conviction, the Court is bound, so far as award of punishment is concerned, by the old law, and cannot impose a punishment higher than the punishment provided under it. Kedar Nath Bajoria v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1953 SC 404 : 1953 CrLJ 1621 : 1953 SCA 835 : 1953 SCJ 580 : 1954 SCR 30.

[9386] ● Article 20(2)—Prosecuted—Meaning of.—Article 20(2) can have no application if there has been no punishment for an offence as a result of a prosecution, and further it can apply only when there has been a previous prosecution for the same offence.

An appeal against an acquittal is only a continuation of the same proceeding and therefore if in an appeal against an order of acquittal the High Court sets aside the acquittal and after convicting the accused passes a sentence upon him, the accused cannot invoke Article 20(2) against his conviction and sentence. Kalawati v. State of H.P., AIR 1953 SC 131 : 1953 CrLJ 668 : 1953 SCA 660 : 1953 SCJ 144 : 1953 SCR 546 : 1953 MWN 219 : 1953 AWR (Sup) 52.

[9387] ● Article 20(1) prohibits all convictions under ex post facto laws.—Article 20(1) provides that a person shall not be convicted for the commission of an act charged as an offence unless at the date of the commission of that act there is in force a law which makes such commission an offence. This Article has been enacted to prohibit convictions under ex post facto laws which create offences retrospectively and punish acts which were not unlawful when done. Such punishment is repugnant to civilised notions of criminal jurisprudence and is opposed to the principles of natural justice.

In Keshavan Madhava Menon's case, AIR 1951 SC 128, the Court held that Article 13(1) has no retrospective operation and what that decision did was only to declare that an existing law is void after 26th January, 1950, so far as it is inconsistent with a fundamental right. On the basis of this decision it was contended for the State that conviction under an ex post facto law for an act done before that law came into force was not affected by Article 20(1) if that law had come into force before 26th January, 1950. This contention cannot be accepted. What Article 20(1) prohibits is conviction under an ex post facto law. The prohibition under it is not concerned with the validity of the law but only with the conviction under it, and there is no question here of giving a retrospective effect to a fundamental right. In other words, Article 20(1) bars the operation of an ex post facto law after 26th January, 1950, even though such operation may relate to an act done before that date. Therefore, the principle in Menon's case that a fundamental right has no retrospective operation cannot come in the way of giving its full effect to Article 20(1).

Article 20(1) prohibits all convictions after 26th January, 1950, under ex post facto laws, and applies equally whether act which is sought to be punished was done before or after 26th January, 1950. Rao Shiv Bahadur Singh v. State of V.P., AIR 1953 SC 394 : 1953 CrLJ 1480 : 1953 SCA 803 : 1953 SCJ 563 : 1953 SCR 1188.

[9388] ● "Law in force"—Meaning of.—If an Act says that "this Act shall be deemed to have come into force" on a date before its passing and thus seeks to bring within its own ambit and penalise acts done before it came into existence, it could not be contended on the strength of such legal fiction that the Act was "in force" within the meaning of Article 20(1) on a date earlier to the date of its passing.

The words "a law in force" as used in Article 20(1) must be understood in their natural sense as meaning a law in fact in existence and operation at the date of the commission of the act in question, and not a law which was not in existence at that date, but which is "deemed" to have become operative at that date by virtue of the power of the legislature to pass retrospective laws. Otherwise, if the opposite construction were accepted, the whole purpose of Article 20(1) would be defeated in its application to ex post facto laws. Rao Shiv Bahadur Singh v. State of V.P., AIR 1953 SC 394 : 1953 CrLJ 1480 : 1953 SCA 803 : 1953 SCJ 563 : 1953 SCR 1188.

[9389] ● Article 20(1) condemns conviction under ex post facto law.—It must be remembered that what Article 20(1) condemns is only conviction under an ex post facto law which seeks to punish retrospectively what was not unlawful when done. That Article does not affect the powers of a State to pass a law under which a particular procedural statute which was not applicable to that State till then, is made applicable to the areas within that State as from a mentioned earlier date. In other words, the power of the State to make laws retrospectively applicable is not taken away or affected by Article 20(1) except in so far as convictions under that law are concerned.

An accused person has no fundamental right to be tried by a particular procedure or by a particular tribunal or Court, and even if under a law existing at the time when the offence was committed the trial had to be held under a particular procedure or by a certain Court, it is open to the State to pass subsequently a law having retrospective operation under which the trial for that offence could be held under a different procedure or by a different Court, provided such a law does not offend against any constitutional right of the accused under Part III of the Constitution, such as the right against discrimination. Rao Shiv Bahadur Singh v. State of V.P., AIR 1953 SC 394 : 1953 CrLJ 1480 : 1953 SCA 803 : 1953 SCJ 563 : 1953 SCR 1188.

[9390] ● Sections 3 and 4 of Penal Code and Section 188, CrPC—Enforcement of in Vindhya Pradesh.—The accused in the present case were charged under Sections 120-B, 161 and 466, Penal Code, as adapted by Vindhya Pradesh Ordinance No. 48 of 1949. This Ordinance was passed in September 1949 whereas the offences themselves were alleged to have been committed in February, March and April 1949. The appeal Court convicted the accused of these offences in March 1951 when Article 20(1) was in force. The contention was that this order of conviction was unconstitutional as being an infringement of Article 20(1), in that it was not for an offence under a law which was in force at the time of the commission of the act charged as an offence and was in respect of an act which was made an offence by an ex post facto law.

The question, therefore, was whether the acts for which the accused were convicted had become offences only by virtue of Ordinance 48 of 1949 or whether those acts had already been made offences at the time of their commission under the law then existing. If these acts had become offences only by virtue of Ordinance 48 of 1949, Article 20(1) would apply and the convictions would have to be set aside; if on the other hand there was a law in existence at the time when those acts were done which made those acts offences, Article 20(1) would not apply. This leads to an examination of the state of relevant prevailing law at the period February to April 1949.

The Ruler of Rewa had passed orders in the years 1921 and 1922 by virtue of which the Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code, with some adaptations, were in force in Rewa State since that time. After the lapse of British sovereignty, by virtue of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, all the pre-existing native states in the area now covered by the State of Vindhya Pradesh executed a Covenant for the establishment of a United State of Vindhya Pradesh and the Ruler of Rewa became the first Rajpramukh. At the relevant period in February to April 1949 it was the Government of Vindhya Pradesh which was functioning in the area under the authority of the Rajpramukh.

It is a well accepted principle of law that on a change of sovereignty over the component units of a newly created merged area, the pre-existing laws of the various units would continue to be in force until duly replaced.

On the application of this principle, the old Rewa Laws continued to be in force in Rewa even after the sovereignty over the area passed to the Dominion of India in 1948. In 1948 and 1949, the Rajpramukh issued Ordinances No. 4 of 1948 and No. 20 of 1949 whereunder all enactments in force in Rewa State were extended so as to become applicable to the whole of Vindhya Pradesh. These two Ordinances had the effect of extending to the entire State of Vindhya Pradesh the criminal law which was in force previously in Rewa State, which included the Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code with due adaptation to local conditions.

For the above reasons we hold that at the relevant period in February to April 1949 the criminal law in force in Vindhya Pradesh, and particularly in the Rewa State portion of it, was the Indian Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code with necessary local adaptations.

The question remains whether Sections 3 and 4 of the Penal Code and Section 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which are extra-territorial in operation, were also the Rewa State law during the relevant period. The point assumes importance because the charges against accused R, of which he was convicted, were in respect of acts done in Delhi. A study of the laws prevailing during the British rule shows that Rulers of Native States had the power prior to 1947, to pass extra-territorial laws relating to offences committed by their own subjects outside the territories of their own States and that the criminal Courts of these States had the power to try such offences, except when the contrary could be made out by positive evidence in the case of an individual State. No such evidence has been led in the case of Rewa State. Therefore, it must be held that Sections 3 and 4 of the Penal Code and Section 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code were validly in force in Vindhya Pradesh at the relevant period.

(i) The criminal law relating to the offences of which the accused was convicted was substantially the same as that which obtained at the time when the acts which were charged as offences were actually done. This was so both in respect of offences committed within the State of Vindhya Pradesh and of offences committed outside the State by subjects of the State.

(ii) The trial of the accused under Vindhya Pradesh Ordinance No. 5 of 1949 was not in violation of Article 14. (For this point, see this case under the Heading "Vindhya Pradesh Criminal Law Amendment (Special Courts) Ordinance No. V of 1949" under Local Acts in the concerned Volume.)

(iii) The conviction of the accused under the Penal Code sections as adapted in Vindhya Pradesh by Ordinance No. 48 of 1949 was not in violation of Article 20(1). Rao Shiv Bahadur Singh v. State of V.P., AIR 1953 SC 394 : 1953 CrLJ 1480 : 1953 SCA 803.

[9391] ● Article 20(3)—Applicability of.—Article 20(3) does not apply to a confession at all. It only says that no one shall be compelled to be a witness against himself. An accused person is not bound to make a confession, and a confession can be used as evidence only when it is voluntary and without any inducement, threat or promise. Therefore a "compelled" confession could never be used against the accused. That being the position, the question of the application of Article 20(3) to a confession can never arise.

As to a retracted confession, the principles remain the same. It is true that a retracted confession has little probative value, and none against a co-accused. But that is a matter of law, and has nothing to do with repugnancy to the Constitution. Kalawati v. State of H.P., AIR 1953 SC 131 : 1953 CrLJ 668 : 1953 SCA 660 : 1953 SCJ 144 : 1953 SCR 546 : 1953 SCWN 219 : 1953 AWR (Sup) 52.

[9392] ● Article 20(3)—Protection against compulsion to be a witness.—Article 20(3) and Sections 94 and 96 (now Sections 91 and 93) CrPC.

Article 20(3) gives protection to an accused person against being compelled to "be" a witness against himself, that is, against every form of "testimonial compulsion".

It follows that a notice or order issued on an accused person under Section 94, CrPC to produce any document or thing which is usable as evidence against him is bad in law as being in conflict with Article 20(3). Article 20(3) cannot, however, protect an accused against search and seizure of property under Section 96 of the Code, since a warrant for search is an order to the executive officers of the State, and not to an accused person. Sharma M.P. v. Satish Chandra, D.M., Delhi, AIR 1954 SC 300 : 1954 CrLJ 865 : 1954 SCA 449 : 1954 SCJ 428 : 1954 SCR 1077 : 1954 (1) MLJ 680 : 1954 MWN 566 : 56 PunLR 366.

[9393] ● Principle of "autre fois acquit" and "autre fois convict"—Meaning of.—The principle of "autre fois acquit" and "autre fois convict" of the English common law means that if a man is acquitted or convicted of an offence in a criminal proceeding, he can plead his previous acquittal or convictions as a complete defence in a subsequent trial for the same offence.

The same principle finds place also in the American Constitution, the fifth Amendment, where it is provided that "a man shall not be subjected for the same offence to be put twice in jeopardy of life or limb." This is called the doctrine of "double jeopardy".

This principle has been adopted in Indian law by Section 26 of the General Clauses Act and Section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Article 20(2) is narrower in scope and ambit and the contents of the guarantee contained in Article 20(2) are not as wide as those of the English common law rule or of the American doctrine of double jeopardy. Article 20(2) does not contain the principle of "autre fois acquit" at all, and has left it to be regulated by the general law of the land, under Section 403, CrPC. and Section 26, General Clauses Act. Venkataraman, S.A. v. Union of India, AIR 1954 SC 375 : 1954 CrLJ 993 : 1954 SCA 466 : 1954 SCJ 461 : 1954 SCR 1150 : (1954) 1 MLJ 702 : 1954 MWN 475 : 1954 AWR (Sup) 54.

[9394] ● Article 20(2)—Conditions for invocation of.—Article 20(2) can be invoked only when all the following conditions are satisfied namely,—

(a) that there was a previous proceeding before a Court of law or before a judicial tribunal,

(b) that the previous proceeding was a criminal proceeding,

(c) that it has resulted in conviction and sentence for an offence, and

(d) that the subsequent proceeding is in respect of the same offence, or on the same facts though for some other offence.

A tribunal which is only a departmental or administrative tribunal has no authority to give a judicial decision which is enforceable against a person, and a proceeding before such a tribunal cannot attract the application of Article 20(2). The fact that such a tribunal is one which has been set up by statute is entirely immaterial for this purpose. The two essential tests of a judicial decision are finality and authoritativeness.

The words used in Article 20(2) are "prosecuted and punished". These words are not to be taken distributively so as to mean prosecuted or punished. Before the application of Article 20(2) can be invoked it must be shown that there was a previous prosecution which has resulted in conviction and sentence.

The word "offence" in Article 20(2) has to be taken in the sense in which it is defined in Section 3(38) of the General Clauses Act as meaning any act or omission made punishable by any law. It follows that in order to attract the operation of Article 20(2) the previous proceeding must be in reference to a law which creates an offence and provides the punishment for that offence. If the previous proceeding was under a law which does not create any offence, and if the penalties imposed by that law are not in respect of an offence, then, such proceeding and penalty cannot be a ground for invoking Article 20(2) against a subsequent proceeding under another law for the punishment of an offence. Venkataraman, S.A. v. Union of India, AIR 1954 SC 375 : 1954 CrLJ 993 : 1954 SCA 466 : 1954 SCJ 461 : 1954 SCR 1150.

[9395] ● Section 7—Influx from Pakistan (Control) Act if conflicts with Article 20(2).—The impugned Act made an unlawful entry into India from Pakistan without a valid permit an offence punishable under the Act, and also authorised the Executive authorities to order the expulsion from India of any person found in Indian territory without a valid permit.

The impugned provisions of the Act cannot be challenged as constituting an infringement of Article 20(2) because in such a provision there is no question of prosecution and punishment for the same offence more than once, and therefore the question of "double jeopardy" does not at all arise. Ebrahim Vazir Mavat v. State of Bombay, AIR 1954 SC 229 : 1954 CrLJ 712 : 1955 SCA 563 : 1954 SCR 933 : 56 BomLR 768.

[9396] ● Conduct of public servant—Fact finding inquiry.—The purpose of an inquiry under Act 37 of 1850 is to enable the Government to come to a conclusion regarding the conduct of a public servant. The inquiry is only a fact-finding inquiry. The Commissioner who makes the inquiry does not arrive at any judicial decision and has merely to make a report to the Government. It follows that such an inquiry and report are not "prosecution" and "punishment" within the meaning of Article 20(2), and if the public servant concerned is subsequently prosecuted, he cannot claim the protection of Article 20(2). Ebrahim Vazir Mavat v. State of Bombay, AIR 1954 SC 229 : 1954 CrLJ 712 : 1954 SCR 933.

[9397] ● Transportation of rationed goods without permit.—In the present case the facts were that certain persons were caught by a police constable in the act of transporting rationed goods without permit across a river and the goods were seized. Thereafter when the party was proceeding through a jungle, those persons beat the constable and ran away with the seized goods. They were first prosecuted for an offence under Section 7 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act and were convicted but the conviction was set aside on appeal. Thereafter, they were again prosecuted for offences under Sections 332 and 392, Penal Code, and were convicted. The conviction is perfectly legal, and the case falls under Section 403(2) and not under Section 403 (1) of the Code, as the offences of causing hurt to a public servant and robbery are distinct and separate offences committed in course of the same transaction, and though a separate charge could have been framed for these offences at the previous trial under Section 235(1) of the Code, the State was not bound to do so in every case. Kunjilal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1955 SC 280 : 1955 CrLJ 730 : 1955 SCJ 592 : 1955 SCR 872.

[9398] ● Two Sections to be treated as distinct when.—When the Legislature provides that on the same facts proceedings can be taken under two different sections and the penalties provided in those sections are not the same, it is obviously intended to treat the two sections as distinct. There is no question in such a case of the application of Section 403 of the Criminal Code, and previous conviction under one section cannot operate as a bar to a subsequent prosecution under the other section.

When a previous conviction is on a charge for erecting a building without permission and the subsequent prosecution is on a charge relating to breach of Building Rules, it cannot be said that the accused is prosecuted twice over for the same default. Corporation of Calcutta v. Mulchand Agarwalla, AIR 1956 SC 110 : 1956 CrLJ 285 : 1956 SCA 96 : 1956 SCJ 128 : 1955 (2) SCR 995.

[9399] ● Acquittal of accused on certain charge—Verdict binding in all subsequent proceedings.—The effect of an order of acquittal pronounced by a competent Court after a lawful trial is not completely stated merely by saying that the acquitted person cannot be tried again for the same charge of which he was so acquitted. The order of acquittal has a further effect, namely, that it is binding and conclusive in all subsequent proceedings in which the same question is in issue.

Thus if an accused is charged at a trial under Section 19(f) of the Arms Act for possessing a revolver without a licence, and he is acquitted on the ground that the prosecution has failed to establish his possession of the weapon, the fact of such possession cannot be proved against the accused in a subsequent trial for murder, and evidence against the accused on the charge of murder would have to be considered regardless of the evidence of a witness that the weapon was recovered from his possession. Pritam Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 415 : 1956 CrLJ 805.

[9400] ● Appeal continuation of proceedings in trial Court.—An appeal is only a continuation of the proceeding in the trial Court and not a subsequent proceeding and Article 20(2) and Section 403, CrPC (now Section 300) cannot apply to appeals.

The provisions of Article 20(2) and Section 403(1), CrPC. are attracted only when the previous acquittal or conviction has been for the same offence, or on the same facts for some other offence to which Sections 236 and 237 of the Code apply. Further, these provisions apply only when the acquittal or conviction was in a previous proceeding, and they cannot apply only when it was only at a previous stage of the same proceeding. The proceedings in the High Court in appeal are only a continuation of the proceedings in the trial Court. Once a proceeding has commenced in a trial Court, it is the same proceeding which continues until it is finally disposed of in appeal, and it could not be said for the purposes of Article 20(2) or Section 403(1) that the proceeding in appeal is a subsequent and different proceeding from that in the trial Court.

It follows that even though the trial Court has acquitted an accused of an offence, the High Court has the power in appeal to convict him of the same offence, or on the same facts of some other offence to which the provisions of Sections 236 and 237 of the Code apply. Article 20(2) and Section 403(1) of the Code cannot be invoked as a bar against such conviction.

Further, under Section 26 of the General Clauses Act, if an accused is charged on the same facts of two different offences falling under two different enactments, he may be convicted under either of them. Therefore, when an accused is charged alternatively under two different Acts and the trial Court convicts him under one of them and acquits him under the other, it is open to the High Court to convict him on the charge of which he was acquitted in the trial Court. State of M.P. v. Veereshwar Rao Agnihotri, AIR 1957 SC 592 : 1957 CrLJ 892 : 1958 SCA 249 : 1957 SCJ 519 : 1957 MPC 388 : 1957 BLJR 376 : (1957) 1 MLJ Cri) 482 : 1957 ALJ 567 : 1957 AWR (HC) 488 : 1957 MPLJ 649 : 1957 NagLJ 503.

[9401] ● Previous conviction or acquittal when for distinct and separate offence.—Section 403(1) of the old Code and Article 20(2) do not apply when a previous conviction or acquittal has been for a distinct and separate offence, though one or more ingredients may be common. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Veereshwar Rao Agnihotri, AIR 1957 SC 592 : 1957 CrLJ 892 : 1958 SCA 249 : 1957 SCJ 519.

[9402] ● To bar second trial first trial be by Court of competent jurisdiction.—The whole basis of Section 403(1) of the Code is that the first trial was held by a Court competent to hear and determine the case and to record an order of conviction or acquittal therein. If the Court before which the accused was previously tried was not so competent, by reason of the fact that sanction for the prosecution of the accused required under Section 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act was not obtained, the whole trial is null and void. In such a case, it was entirely irrelevant whether the proceedings were quashed for want of such sanction by the trial Court itself, or whether the trial Court having convicted or acquitted the accused the order was set aside for the same reason by the Court of appeal. In either case, the order of conviction or acquittal having been made by a Court which had no jurisdiction to take cognisance of the case because of want of the requisite sanction, Section 403(1) of the Code would not apply, because in such a case it could not be said that there was any "conviction or acquittal in force" within the meaning of that section.

Further, Article 20(2) applies only when a person has been prosecuted and punished for the same offence at a previous trial. If the earlier proceeding is null and void by reason of want of competence, Article 20(2) cannot apply.

If a Court is not competent to take cognizance of an offence without a legal sanction, it is obvious that such Court cannot be said to be a Court of competent jurisdiction to try that offence in the absence of such sanction. Therefore, the absence of the requisite sanction makes the trial null and void.

Article 20(1) and Section 403(1) of the Code (old Code) have no application to a case in which Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence under Section 161, Penal Code or Section 5, Prevention of Corruption Act, without the legal sanction required by Section 6 of the Act, and a conviction or acquittal in such a trial is no bar to a subsequent trial for the same offence after obtaining the required sanction. Baij Nath Prasad Tripathi v. State of Bhopal, AIR 1957 SC 494 : 1957 CrLJ 597 : 1957 SCA 459 : 1957 SCJ 405 : 1957 SCR 650 : 1957 MPC 390 : 1957 BLJR 479 : 1957 ALJ 569.

[9403] ● Order of confiscation and penalties by Custom Authority under Section 167(8) of Sea Customs Act judicial.—An order of confiscation and penalties made by a Customs Authority under Section 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act is a judicial and not an executive or administrative order, but the proceedings before the Customs Officer are not in the nature of a "prosecution" for a criminal offence and the order made under Section 167(8) of the Act is not in the nature of a "punishment" within the meaning of Article 20(2).

Therefore, a previous order of confiscation and penalty made by a Customs Officer in the exercise of his powers under Section 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act does not operate as a bar to a subsequent prosecution under Section 120-B, Penal Code, read with Section 23 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947. Section 403 of the Code and Article 20(2) do not apply because such an order is not conviction or punishment "for the same offence" within the meaning of those provisions. Leo Roy Frey v. Supdt, District Jail, Amritsar, AIR 1958 SC 119 : 1958 CrLJ 260 : 1958 SCA 240 : 1958 SCR 822 : 1958 SCJ 301 : 1958 MLJ (Cri) 289.

[9404] ● Article 20(2) protects man from "double jeopardy" for same offence.—Article 20(2) protects a man from "double jeopardy" for the same offence by declaring that "no person shall be prosecuted and punished for the same offence more than once". In order to bring a case within the prohibition of Article 20(2) three essential conditions must be fulfilled, namely:

(a) that there must be a previous "prosecution" for an "offence";

(b) that such prosecution must result in "punishment"; and

(c) that the prosecution and punishment must be for the "same" offence for which the accused is subsequently tried.

If any of these three essential conditions is not fulfilled, that is, if it is not established that the petitioner had been prosecuted for an offence, or that the prosecution resulted in conviction and sentence, or that such conviction was for the same offence, the case fails to fall within the purview of Article 20(2). The prohibition against double jeopardy becomes operative only when all these three elements are shown to exist, and not till then.

The language employed in various provisions of the Sea Customs Act makes it clear that the Act does not envisage the Customs Authorities to function as a Court. Expressions like "offences" and "penalties" have been used in the Act in their generic sense, and not in their specific sense as acts punishable under any penal law, and the power vested in Customs Authorities to order confiscation or to impose penalty in respect of an offending article, is distinct from a sentence of imprisonment or fine imposed by a Criminal Court. Whenever criminal prosecution and punishment of the offender in the sense of the penal law is contemplated in the Act, it makes a specific reference to a trial by a Magistrate, to a conviction by such a Magistrate, and to imprisonment or fine upon such conviction.

Thus, though in Section 167 the generic expression "offences" is used at the head of column 1 and the expression "penalties" is used at the head of column 3, that does not make all the acts mentioned in Section 167 penal offences. Whenever in that section a criminal prosecution is intended under any Item, trial by a Magistrate is specifically mentioned in the third column (see Item 72, 74, 75, 76, 76A, 76B, 77, 78 and 81) and such reference does not find place in the other Items, where obviously no criminal prosecution is contemplated.

Reference to Items 76-A and 76-C places the intention of the Legislature beyond any doubt. Both Items were introduced in Section 167 by amending Acts which were enacted after the Constitution came into force. While Item 76-A specifically mentions conviction and sentence by a Magistrate, such a mention is absent in Item 76-C. The Legislature must, therefore, be presumed to have been aware of the distinction it was making between a proceeding by a revenue authority and a criminal trial before a Magistrate with a view to the punishment of the offender for an offence.

In view, therefore, of the language employed in the Act, it cannot be contended that the imposition of a penalty by a revenue officer in the exercise of his powers under the Act is the same thing as a punishment imposed by a Criminal Court for an offence under the Act.

Merely because an administrative tribunal has to act under a statute under a judicial procedure in the sense of taking and considering evidence and hearing arguments, that does not make it a Court or a judicial tribunal. The fact that this distinction was clearly in the mind of the Court is shown by the fact that in that very case the Court pointed out the distinction between the nature of the proceedings against offending articles and of proceedings against offending persons, holding the former to be proceedings in rem and the latter to be proceedings in personem. (See this case under Article 32.)

The Act, no doubt, draws a distinction between confiscation of goods and imposition of penalties on the person committing an infringement of the law in respect of those goods, but having made that distinction the Act goes further and makes another distinction between penalties which can be imposed by the revenue officers themselves and those for which a prosecution in a Criminal Court is essential for the punishment of the offender. In determining the question whether a particular statutory provision contemplates "prosecution" and "punishment" within the meaning of Article 20(2), the nomenclature used in that statute is not of much matter, and what really matters is the substance of the provision under examination. Thomas Dona v. State of Punjab, AIR 1959 SC 375 : 1959 CrLJ 392 : 1959 SCJ 699 : 1959 MLJ (Cri) 474.

[9405] ● Proceedings before Customs Officer under Section 167(8) of Sea Customs Act not prosecution.—Two foreigners D and F arrived in India from France bringing with them a car having a secret chamber above the petrol tank. From Delhi they arrived at the frontier outpost of Attari Road on the highway going into Pakistan, and were given Declaration Forms. They filled them in without disclosing that they were carrying any currency which required permission for export from India. The Customs Officers at the outpost searched the car and from the secret chamber recovered Indian currency notes of the value of rupees three and a half lakhs. Thereafter, after giving show cause notices to both of them, the Collector of Customs held an inquiry under the Sea Customs Act and then made an order of confiscation of the currency seized and of personal penalty against each of rupees two and a half lakhs, in the exercise of his powers under Section 167(8) of the Act. Thereafter, he filed a complaint before a District Magistrate against both under Section 23 read with Section 8 of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947, and under Section 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act. Both the accused were convicted as charged. They appealed to the High Court and when that appeal failed, to the Supreme Court, under Article 136. They also moved the Supreme Court under Article 32 praying for Writs of Habeas Corpus against their detention. These Writ Petitions also invoked Article 20(2) but were dismissed. In the present appeal also the same question was raised and the main point for determination was whether on the above facts there had occurred any infringement of the constitutional protection guaranteed under Article 20(2).

Following the decision of the Court in Maqbool Hussein v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 325, and for the reasons set out above it must be held that the proceedings before the Customs Officer under Section 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act were not "prosecution" and the order of the Collector directing confiscation of the currency seized and a penalty on the offenders was not a punishment within the meaning of Article 20(2) and the protection of that Article could not be available to them. It followed that their prosecution and punishment by a Criminal Court for the aforesaid offences did not suffer from any constitutional invalidity. Thomas Dona v. State of Punjab, AIR 1959 SC 375 : 1959 CrLJ 392 : 1959 SCJ 699 : 1959 MLJ (Cri) 474.

[9406] ● Accused if once tried and acquitted of offence by Court of competent jurisdiction order of acquittal remains binding and operative unless set aside by superior Court in appeal.—If an accused person has once been tried and acquitted of an offence by a Court of competent jurisdiction, the order of acquittal remains binding and operative unless it has been set aside by a superior Court in appeal or revision. In such a case, if that person is prosecuted again for the same offence or for another offence constituted by the same facts, he has the right to plead the bar of Section 403 against such prosecution. An acquittal has the effect only of an order of discharge in one circumstance alone, namely, when the Court which made the order is found to have acted without jurisdiction.

(i) Except when a procedural statute expressly so requires, it is not imperative upon a party to a proceeding to appeal against every order made against him, under the penalty that if he does not do so he will forfeit for ever the benefit of consideration by the Supreme Court. Nothing would be more detrimental to the expeditious administration of justice than the establishment of a rule imposing upon a party the necessity of appealing against every order which aggrieves him. For the application of this principle it can make no difference whether the intermediate order complained of is passed by the trial Court and has not been taken to the High Court in revision, or whether it is the order of the High Court made in revision or appeal whereunder the order of the trial Court is confirmed. This principle was accepted by the Privy Council in civil cases, and there is no reason why it should not apply equally to matters of a criminal nature.

(ii) It cannot be contended that if an order of the High Court has not been appealed against, the order becomes final, whether it is right or wrong, and has the effect of debarring the person aggrieved thereby from the benefit of obtaining a review by the Supreme Court even though it is found to be erroneous.

(iii) In a proper case, the Supreme Court has the power, when deciding an appeal to review an order made by the High Court at an intermediate stage of the same proceeding and to set it aside if it finds it erroneous, even though it has not been appealed against.

(iv) As held in Kedar Nath Bajoria's case, Act 21 of 1949 was not ultra vires and hence the order of acquittal made by the Special Judge at Alipore in favour of accused G was an order made by a Court of competent jurisdiction the benefit of which under Section 403 could not be denied to him. The order was binding and conclusive unless set aside in appeal, and since it was never set aside, it operated as a bar against a second trial of the accused for the same offence or for any other offence constituted by the same facts.

(v) If an order of acquittal is passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction, it is binding and conclusive in all subsequent proceedings against the same accused, unless when it is lawfully set aside in appeal, whether the order is right or wrong. The acquittal has the effect of a discharge only when the order is not of a Court of competent jurisdiction.

(vi) The order of CHUNDER, J. made at an intermediate stage of the subsequent proceeding against the same accused for the same offence having been found to be erroneous, it could not operate as a bar or impediment against the accused in pleading the benefit of Section 403, and the High Court had erred in its view that since that order had not been appealed against it held ground whether it was right or wrong and precluded the accused from contending that his acquittal was by a competent Court notwithstanding the subsequent decision of the Supreme Court in Bajoria's case which showed that the view expressed by CHUNDER, J. was clearly erroneous.

(vii) The result was that the Supreme Court was not precluded from rectifying the error or defect in the two orders of the High Court and from giving effect to the plea under Section 403, CrPC which had been rightly set up by the accused, namely, that another trial for the same offence would deny him the protection against double jeopardy given under Section 403, CrPC. Ghose, N.R. v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1960 SC 239 : 1960 CrLJ 289 : 1960 SCJ 532 : (1960) 2 SCR 58 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 428 : 1960 AWR (HC) 265 : 1960 ACrR 185.

[9407] ● Section 420, IPC providing for unlimited fine—Section 10 of ordinance fixing minimum fine—Ordinance not in contravention of Article 20(1).—What the second part of Article 20(1) prohibits is the imposition upon conviction of an offence of a penalty which is greater than that which could be inflicted under the law which is in force at the time when such offence was committed. Thus when a trial is held under a law which has come into force after the date when an offence was committed, what the Court has to consider under Article 20(1) is whether the penalty imposed under that law is heavier than the penalty which could have been imposed under the old law. There is no infringement of Article 20(1) if the penalty imposed is not greater than the one which was permissible under the old law.

If the old law which was in force at the time when the offence was committed does not place any limit on the extent of fine which could be awarded upon conviction, a provision in a new subsequent law relating to the same offence which lays down that upon conviction of that offence a specified minimum sentence of fine shall be awarded does not contravene Article 20(1). Such minimum sentence cannot be said to be a "greater penalty" within the meaning of Article 20(1) because the old law is silent as to the extent of the penalty which could be awarded upon conviction.

Reference to Section 63 of the Penal Code can be of no avail to the accused in this connection. That section only says that even when a law does not mention the limit to which fine for an offence may extend, such fine shall not be excessive. Whether a fine imposed in a particular case is excessive is a question of fact to be determined in each case and that question depends upon various considerations such as the gravity of the offence, extenuating circumstances, the means of the accused, etc. But that question is quite apart from the question whether there has occurred a contravention of Article 20(1) and is entirely irrelevant in considering the application of that Article.

In the present case the accused was convicted under Section 420 of the Penal Code. The trial was held by a Special Tribunal established under Ordinance No. 29 of 1943 as amended by Ordinance No. 12 of 1945, promulgated for the trial of offences of bribery, cheating and criminal breach of trust by public servants, a large number of which had come to the notice of the Government at that period.

Section 10 of the Ordinance provided that upon conviction the Tribunal shall impose a fine which shall not be less in amount than the amount of money which the accused had obtained by means of the offence of which he was convicted. In compliance with that provision, the Tribunal awarded in addition to the sentence of imprisonment a sentence of fine to the extent of the amount which the accused was proved to have obtained by means of the offences he had committed. The question was whether there had occurred a contravention of Article 20(1).

Section 420 of the Penal Code has not placed any limit on the amount of fine which could be awarded for an offence under that section and hence the minimum sentence of fine awarded under the Ordinance could not be said to be greater than the sentence of fine which could have been awarded under the Penal Code. It could not be said that Section 10 of the Ordinance was in contravention of Article 20(1). Satwant Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 266 : 1960 CrLJ 410 : 1960 SCJ 863 : (1960) 2 SCR 89 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 603 : ILR (1960) Punj 504.

[9408] ● Guarantee in Article 20(3) against "testimonial compulsion".—The scope and effect of Article 20(3) was considered by a Full Court in the case of Sharma, M.P. v. Satish Chandra, AIR 1954 SC 300, and the Court laid down the following propositions :

(1) The guarantee in Article 20(3) is against "testimonial compulsion". There is no reason to confine the context of this guarantee only to the oral evidence as a witness of a person standing his trial for an offence. The phrase used in Article 20(3) is "to be a witness", and not "to appear as a witness", and a person can "be" a witness not merely by giving oral evidence, but also by producing documents or things.

(2) "To be a witness" is nothing more or less than "to furnish evidence", whether such evidence is oral or documentary, and the protection of Article 20(3) extends against compulsion to give any form of evidence against himself.

(3) The protection of Article 20(3) to an accused person is not confined only to compelled testimony in the Court room itself, but is also available to the person accused of an offence at any earlier stage during the investigation preceding the trial.

These propositions correctly explain the meaning and scope of Article 20(3) and we do not find any good reason for departing from the view expressed in this decision.

The question which had arisen in the present case was whether calling upon a person accused of an offence to give his thumb impression or the impression of his palm and fingers, or to give a sample of his handwriting or signature amounts to compelling him "to be a witness" within the meaning of Article 20(3). This question was not before the Court in Sharma's case, but conflicting views on this question have been expressed by different High Courts, some being of the view that the decision in Sharma's case covers this question, and some being of the view that it does not.

"To be a witness" may be equated to 'to furnish evidence' in the sense of making oral or written statements, but not in the wider sense of giving impressions of thumb or fingers or palm or foot, or of giving specimens of writing or signature, or of exposing parts of the body for the purpose of identification. The intention behind Article 20(3) clearly is, to protect an accused person from the hazards of self-incrimination, and not to put obstacles in the way of effective investigation into crime or of bringing criminals to justice, and the aforesaid processes are clearly meant only for the purposes of effective investigation into crime.

It must be assumed that the makers of the Constitution were aware of the existing law on this subject, such as, Section 73 of the Evidence Act which empowers a Court to direct any person to write any words or to give finger impressions for the purpose of enabling the Court to make comparisons with his proved writing or finger impression, or Sections 5 and 6 of the Identification of Prisoners Act, 1920, which authorise a Magistrate to use all necessary means to secure impressions of fingers and foot prints or take photographs of any person for the purposes of investigation or any other proceeding under the Code of Criminal Procedure.

"Testimonial compulsion" means compelling a person to yield testimony against himself, either orally or in writing, by making statements about his personal knowledge in respect of relevant facts, either to a Court or to a person holding an enquiry or investigation. Such compulsion is forbidden under Article 20(3). In other words, Article 20(3) is directed against every form of self-incrimination by an accused person by conveying information based upon his personal knowledge, and the scope of the Article cannot be widened beyond that, and the giving of finger impressions or of specimens of writing or signature by an accused person, though it may amount to furnishing evidence in the larger sense, is not included within the expression 'to be witness'.

In one of the cases in the present appeals, a further question was raised, namely, whether Section 27 of the Evidence Act, which provides that any information given by an accused person in police custody is admissible evidence even though it may tend to incriminate himself, if it leads to the discovery of a relevant fact, contravenes the provisions of Article 20(3). In order to bring a statement within the inhibition of Article 20(3) it must be shown, not only that the person making the statement was an accused person at the time when he made it and that the statement was self-incriminatory, but also the statement was made under compulsion or duress. The mere asking by a police officer to an accused to do a certain thing is not compulsion within the meaning of Article 20(3), and the mere fact that the accused person was in police custody at the time when he made the statement in question, would not by itself mean that he was compelled to make the statement. It is only when it can be shown that at the relevant time the accused who was in police custody was subjected to treatment which could be considered to amount to compulsion that the statement made by him would fall within the ambit of Article 20(3). Therefore, whenever such compulsion is pleaded by the accused person against whom a statement made by him is sought to be proved under Section 27 of the Evidence Act, it will be a question of fact in each case to be determined by the Court on weighing all the facts and circumstances described in the evidence before it. State of Bombay v. Kathi Kalu Oghad, AIR 1961 SC 1808 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 856 : 1961 (2) KerLR 378 (PER SINHA, C.J., AND IMAM, GAJENDRAGADKAR, SUBBA RAO, WANCHOO, RAGHUBIR DAYAL, RAJAGOPALA, AYYANGAR AND MUDHOLKAR, JJ.)

[9409] ● Double jeopardy—Rule as to.—Article 20(2), Section 403 old CrPC. (now Section 300) and Section 26 of the General Clauses Act operate as a bar against prosecution and punishment twice for the same offence. The ban under these provisions against "double jeopardy" is confined only to cases where the accused is sought to be punished twice for the same offence. Where the offences are distinct and separate and their ingredients are different, the above provisions cannot be invoked and there is no bar against prosecution for one of such offence even after the accused has been tried and convicted of the other offence. State of Bombay v. S.L. Apte, AIR 1961 SC 578 : 1961 (1) CrLJ 725 : (1961) 2 SCA 446 : (1961) 1 SCJ 685 : 63 BomLR 491 : (1961) 1 KerLR 452 : (1961) 1 AnWR (SC) 210 : (1961) 31 Com Cas (Ins) 39 : (1961) 1MLJ (SC) 210 : 1961 MLJ (Cri) 331 : 1961 MPLJ 1108 : 1961 NagLJ 524.

[9410] ● Offence under Section 409, IPC and that under Section 105—Insurance Act not same.—It will be seen that though some of the ingredients are common, Section 105 differs from Section 405, Penal Code, in two respects :

(1) entrustment of property or dominion over property which is an ingredient of Section 405 Penal Code, is not an ingredient of Section 105 of the Act and all that is required is that the director etc. "obtains possession" of the property;

(2) dishonest intention is essential to the commission of an offence under Section 405, and the act of appropriation or conversion or disposition of the property entrusted is not an offence unless it is done with a dishonest intention; but Section 105 of the Act postulates no intention and punishes as an offence the mere withholding of the property or its application to an unauthorised purpose, whatever be the intention with which the act is done.

(i) It must, therefore, be held that the offence of criminal breach of trust under Section 409 of the Penal Code and the offence under Section 105 of the Insurance Act are not the "same offence" within the meaning of Article 20(2), but are distinct offences. That being so, the rule of double jeopardy embodied in Article 20(2) of the Constitution is not applicable to a case in which a director of an insurance company having been previously convicted of the offence under Section 409, Penal Code, is again prosecuted on a charge under Section 105 of the Indian Insurance Act, while he is undergoing the sentence of imprisonment for the offence under Section 409 Penal Code. State of Bombay v. S.L. Apte, AIR 1961 SC 578 : 1961 (1) CrLJ 725 : (1961) 2 SCA 446 : (1961) 1 SCJ 685 : 63 BomLR 491 : 1961 MLJ (Cri) 331.

[9411] ● Compulsion—Meaning of.—A confessional statement made by Dalmia before Shri Anandhanam, an investigator under Section 33(3) of the Insurance Act, is not inadmissible in view of clause (3) of Article 20 of the Constitution. It was not made by Dalmia at a time when he was accused of an offence, as is necessary for the application of that clause, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in State of Bombay v. Kathi Kalu Oghad, AIR 1961 SC 1808, where the contention that the statement need not be made by the accused person at a time when he fulfilled that character was not accepted. Dalmia was not in duress at the time he made that statement and therefore was not compelled to make it. It was said in the aforesaid case at p. 1816:

"Compulsion", in the context, must mean what in law is called 'duress'.........The compulsion in this sense is a physical objective act and not the state of mind of the person making the statement, except where the mind has been so conditioned by some extraneous process as to render the making of the statement involuntary and, therefore, extorted.

The various circumstances preceding the making of the statement by Dalmia have all been considered and they fall far short of proving that Dalmia's mind had been so conditioned by some extraneous process as to render the making of that statement involuntary and therefore extorted. R.K. Dalmia v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1962 SC 1821 : 1962 (2) CrLJ 805 : (1962) 32 Com Cas 699.

[9412] ● Forfeiture of money or proceed by means of offence.—Forfeiture of money or property procured by means of an offence is not penalty or punishment within the meaning of Article 20(1). Article 20(1) cannot be invoked against an order of forfeiture under Section 13(3) of the Criminal Law Amendment Ordinance 38 of 1944, which provides for forfeiture of money or property procured by means of an offence upon conviction, though the acts which resulted in conviction were done before the Ordinance came into force. State of West Bengal v. S.K. Ghosh, AIR 1963 SC 255 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 252 : 1963 SCD 236 : (1963) 2 SCR 111.

[9413] ● Test to ascertain whether two offences same not identity of allegations but identity of ingredient of offence.—Two decisions of this Court have construed the provisions of Article 20(2) of the Constitution in the context of the expression "same offence". In Leo Roy Frey v. Supdt., District Jail, Amritsar, AIR 1958 SC 119, proceedings were taken against certain persons in the first instance before the Customs Authorities under Section 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act and heavy personal penalties were imposed on them. Thereafter, they were charged for an offence under Section 120B of the Indian Penal Code. This Court held that an offence under Section 120B is not the same offence as that under the Sea Customs Act. This Court again considered the scope of the words "same offence" in State of Bombay v. S.L. Apte, AIR 1961 SC 578. There the respondents were both convicted and sentenced by the Magistrate under Section 409 of the Indian Penal Code and Section 105 of the Insurance Act. Dealing with the argument that the allegations of fact were the same, RAJAGOPALA AYYANGAR, J., rejecting the contention, observed on behalf of the Court :

"To operate as a bar the second prosecution and the consequential punishment thereunder, must be for 'the same offence'. The crucial requirement therefore for attracting the Article is that the offences are the same, i.e. they should be identical. If, however, the two offences are distinct, then notwithstanding that the allegations of fact in the two complaints might be substantially similar, the benefit of the ban cannot be invoked. It is, therefore, necessary to analyse and compare not the allegations in the two complaints but the ingredients of the two offences and see whether their identity is made out".

This decision lays down that the test to ascertain whether the two offences are the same is not the identity of the allegations but the identity of the ingredients of the offences. Bhagwan Swarup v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1965 SC 682 : 1965(1) CrLJ 608 : (1964) 2 SCJ 771 : (1964) 2 SCR 378.

[9414] ● Motive not ingredient of offences.—In the instant case, applying the test laid down by this Court, the two conspiracies are not the same offence; the Jupiter conspiracy came to an end when the funds were misappropriated. The Empire conspiracy was hatched subsequently, though its object had an intimate connection with the Jupiter, in that the fraud of the Empire was conceived and executed to cover up the fraud of the Jupiter. The two conspiracies are distinct offences. It cannot even be said that some of the ingredients of both the conspiracies are the same. The facts constituting the Jupiter conspiracy are not the ingredients of the offence of the Empire conspiracy, but only afford a motive for the latter offence. Motive is not an ingredient of an offence. The proof of motive helps a Court in coming to a correct conclusion when there is no direct evidence. Where there is a direct evidence for implicating an accused in an offence, the absence of proof of motive is not material. The ingredients of both the offences are totally different and they do not form the same offence within the meaning of Article 20(2) of the Constitution and, therefore, that Article has no relevance to the present case. Bhagwan Swarup v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1965 SC 682 : 1965(1) CrLJ 608 : (1964) 2 SCJ 771 : (1964) 2 SCR 378.

[9415] ● Provisions of Section 403, CrPC based upon general principles of autre fois acquit.— Provisions of Section 403 Criminal Procedure Code (now Section 300) are based upon general principles of autre fois acquit recognised by the English Courts. The principle on which the right to plead autre fois acquit depends, is that a man may not be put twice in jeopardy for the same offence. This principle has now been incorporated in Article 20 of the Constitution. The defence of autre fois acquit, however, has no application where the accused person is not liable lawfully to be convicted at the first trial because the Court had no jurisdiction. From the language used in Section 403(1) of the Code it is clear that what can be successfully pleaded as a bar to a subsequent trial for the same offence or for an offence based on the same facts is that the accused had been (a) tried by a Court (b) of competent jurisdiction and (c) acquitted of the offence alleged to have been committed by him or an offence with which he might have been charged under Section 236 or for which he might have been convicted under Section 237 of the Code. The competence of a Court, however, depends not merely on the circumstance that under some law it is entitled to try a case falling in the particular category in which the offence alleged against the accused falls. In addition to this, taking cognisance of the offence is also material in this regard. Under the Code of Criminal Procedure a Court can take cognizance of an offence only if the conditions requisite for initiation of proceedings before it as set out in Part B of Chapter XV are fulfilled. If they are not fulfilled, the Court does not obtain jurisdiction to try the offence.

Where a Court comes to such a conclusion, albeit erroneously, it is difficult to appreciate how that Court can absolve the person arraigned before it completely of the offence alleged against him. Where a person has done something which is made punishable by law he is liable to face a trial and this liability cannot come to an end merely because the Court before which he was placed for trial forms an opinion that it has no jurisdiction to try him and that it has no jurisdiction to take cognisance of the offence alleged against him. Where, therefore, a Court says, though erroneously, that it was not competent to take cognisance of the offence it has no power to acquit that person of the offence. An order of acquittal made by it is in fact a nullity.

As regards the second contention it is necessary to point out that a Criminal Court is precluded from determining the case before it in which a charge has been framed otherwise than by making an order of acquittal or conviction only where the charge was framed by a Court competent to frame it and by a Court competent to try the case and make a valid order of acquittal or conviction. No doubt, here the charge was framed by Mr. Ganguly but on his own view he was not competent to take cognisance of an offence and therefore incompetent to frame a charge. For this reason the mere fact that the charge had been framed in this case does not help the appellant. Similarly, the provisions of Section 494 of the Code cannot be attracted to a case of this kind because that provision itself assumes the withdrawal by a Public Prosecutor of a charge competently made and before a Court competent to entertain the application for withdrawal.

In addition to the competence of the Court, Section 403 of the Code speaks of there having been a trial and the trial having ended in an acquittal. From what we have said above, it will be clear that the fact that all the witnesses for the prosecution as well as for the defence had been examined before Mr. Ganguly and the further fact that the appellant was also examined under Section 342 cannot in law be deemed to be a trial at all. For proceedings to amount to a trial they must be held before the Court which is in fact competent to hold them and which is not of opinion that it has no jurisdiction to hold them. It would also follow that the ultimate order made by it by whatever name it is characterised cannot in law operate as an acquittal order. In the result, the conviction of the appellant was held to be valid in law and the appeal was dismissed. Mohd. Safi v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1966 SC 69 : 1966 CrLJ 75 : (1965) 3 SCR 467.

[9416] ● No compulsion for person accused of offence to enter witness box.— A person accused of an offence may, if he chooses, not to appear as a witness in the proceedings under Sections 111 & 112 of the Sea Customs Act. But there is no compulsion on him to enter the witness-box. The necessity to enter the witness-box for substantiating his defence is not such compulsion as would attract the protection of Article 20(3). Even in a criminal trial, any person accused of an offence is a competent witness for the defence under Section 342-A, CrPC. (now Section 315), and may give evidence on oath in disproof of the charges made against him. It may be very necessary for the accused person to enter the witness-box for substantiating his defence but that is no reason for saying that the criminal trial compels him to be a witness against himself and is in violation of Article 20(3). Compulsion in the context of Article 20(3) must proceed from another person or authority. The accused is not compelled to be a witness if he voluntarily gives evidence in his defence. Different considerations may arise if he is summoned by the Customs Authorities under Section 108 to give evidence in the proceedings under Sections 111 & 112. T.G. Gaokar v. R. N. Shukla, AIR 1968 SC 1050 : 1968 CrLJ 1234 : (1968) 2 SCJ 727 : 1968 MPLJ 719 : 1968 MahLJ 703 : 70 BomLR 718.

[9417] ● "Compelled testimony"—Meaning.— Both the provisions cover the same area. The prohibitive speech of Article 20(3) goes back to the stage of police interrogation, not commencing in Court only. The ban on self-accusation and the right to silence, while one investigation or trial is under way, goes beyond that case and protects the accused in regard to other offences pending or imminent, which may deter him from voluntary disclosure of criminatory matter. 'Compelled testimony' means evidence procured not merely by physical threats or violence but by psychic torture, atmospheric pressure, environmental coercion, tiring interrogative prolixity, over-bearing and intimidatory methods and the like not legal penalty for violation. So, the legal perils following upon refusal to answer, or answer truthfully, cannot be regarded as compulsion within the meaning of Article 20(3). The prospect of prosecution may lead to legal tension in the exercise of a constitutional right, but then, a stance of silence is running a calculated risk. On the other hand, if there is any mode of pressure, subtle or crude, mental or physical, direct or indirect, but sufficiently substantial, applied by the policeman for obtaining information from an accused strongly suggestive of guilt, it becomes 'compelled testimony', violative of Article 20(3).

Where a person, who acted as a carrier in a conspiracy to smuggle gold in India, admitted her role in the statements made to the Customs Officials investigating the case under the Sea Customs Act but, instead of being included in the array of accused and sent up for trial, was examined as a witness against her former associates, there could be no doubt that she is a competent witness. Being self-confessed criminal her evidence was accomplice evidence and, if subjected to scrutiny and usual checks for corroboration, must be held to be received with due caution. L. Choraria v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 938 : 1968 CrLJ 1124 : (1968) 1 SCA 682 : 1968 SCD 743 : (1968) 2 SCJ 589 : (1968) 2 SCR 624 : 70 BomLR 595 : 1968 MLJ (Cri) 614 : 16 Law Rep 473.

[9418] ● Recording of conversation in bribery case by—Tape recorder.—In a case of bribery, where the conversation was recorded by a tape recorder, the accused cannot claim the protection of Article 20(3). The fact that the tape recording was done without his knowledge is not by itself an objection to its admissibility in evidence. There was no element of duress, coercion or compulsion. His statements were not extracted from him in an oppressive manner or by force or against his wishes. However, the police practice of tapping telephone wires and setting up hidden microphones for the purpose of tape recording cannot be approved. Yusuffalli v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 147 : 1968 CrLJ 103 : (1968) 2 SCWR 934 : (1968) 3 SCR 720 : (1968) 1 SCJ 511 : 1968 SCD 347 : 1968 MahLJ 179 : 70 BomLR 76 : 1968 MPLJ 114 : 1968 ACrR 174 : 1968 AWR (HC) 268 : 1968 MLJ (Cri) 247 : 1968 MLW (Cri) 12 : 15 Law Rep 468.

[9419] ● Guarantee against testimonial compulsion not restricted to statements made in witness box.—The guarantee against testimonial compulsion under Article 20(3) is not restricted to statements made in the witness box. But in order to claim that guarantee by a person it has to be established that when he made the statement sought to be tendered in evidence against him, he was a person accused of an offence. Normally a person stands in the character of an accused when an FIR is lodged against him in respect of an offence before an officer competent to investigate it, or when a complaint is made relating to commission of an offence before a Magistrate competent to try or send to another Magistrate for trying the offence. Where a Customs Officer arrests a person and informs that person of the grounds of his arrest, which he is bound to do under Article 22(1) of the Constitution, for the purpose of holding an enquiry into the infringement of the provisions of the Sea Customs Act which he has reason to believe has taken place, there is no formal accusation of an offence. In the case of an offence by infringement of the Sea Customs Act and punishable at the trial before a Magistrate there is an accusation when a complaint is lodged by an officer competent in that behalf before the Magistrate. Hence, a person against whom an enquiry is made by the Customs Officer under the Sea Customs Act is not a person accused of any offence and the evidence, if any, collected by examining him under Section 171-A is not inadmissible.

Section 104(1) of the Customs Act, 1962 only prescribes the conditions in which the power of arrest may be exercised. The officer must have reason to believe that a person has been guilty of an offence punishable under Section 135; otherwise he cannot arrest such person. But by informing such person of the grounds of his arrest the Customs Officer does not formally accuse him with the commission of an offence. Even under the Act of 1962 a formal accusation can only be deemed to be made when a complaint is made before a Magistrate competent to try the person guilty of the infraction under Sections 132, 133, 134 and 135 of the Act. Any statement made under Sections 107 and 108 of the Customs Act by a person against whom the enquiry is made by a Customs Officer is not a statement made by a person accused of an offence. Ramesh Chandra v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1970 SC 940 : 1970 CrLJ 863 : (1969) 2 SCR 461 : (1970) 2 SCA 174 : 72 BomLR 787.

[9420] ● Sea Customs Authorities not Judicial Tribunal.—As the Sea Customs Authorities are not a judicial tribunal and the adjudging of confiscation, increased rate of duty or penalty under the provisions of the Sea Customs Act do not constitute a judgment or order of a Court or a judicial tribunal, it cannot support a plea of double jeopardy. H.H. Adwani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1971 SC 44 : 1971 CrLJ 5 : (1969) 2 SCC 662 : (1970) 2 SCA 10 : (1970) 1 SCR 821 : (1970) 2 SCJ 192 : 1970 MLJ (Cri) 490 : 1971 MahLJ 359 : 73 BomLR 112.

[9421] ● Petitioner not to be compelled to be witness against himself.—Where the petitioner was the General Manager of the United Commercial Bank and it was alleged that the petitioner was in charge of, or was responsible to, the United Commercial Bank Ltd. for the conduct of the business of that Bank and that he failed to prove in the course of his statement made under Section 19-F of the Exchange Act before the Deputy Director of Enforcement, that the contravention of booking a forward exchange contract took place without his knowledge or that he exercised all due diligence to prevent the aforesaid contravention, and an FIR was also registered in respect of the said subject-matter, the petitioner is a person accused of an offence within the meaning of Article 20(3). The only protection that Article gives to him is that he cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself. But it does not mean that he need not give information regarding matters which do not tend to incriminate him. The petitioner was, therefore, bound to appear before the Deputy Director, Enforcement Directorate. R.B. Shah v. B. K. Gupta, AIR 1973 SC 1196 : (1973) 1 SCC 696 : 1973 CrLJ 921.

[9422] ● Guarantee against testimonial compulsion.—In order to claim the benefit of the guarantee against testimonial compulsion embodied in Article 20(3), it should be shown, firstly, that the person who made the statement was "accused of any offence" and secondly, that he made that statement under compulsion. It was well-settled that only a person against whom a formal accusation relating to the commission of an offence had been levelled which in the normal course might result in his prosecution, would fall within its ambit. In the instant case, the appellant was not a person "accused of any offence" under the Customs Act when his statement was recorded by the Customs Officer under Section 108. An accusation which would stamp him with the character of such a person was levelled only when the complaint was filed against him by the Assistant Collector of Customs complaining of the commission of offences under Sections 135 (a) and (b) of the Act. The ingredients of the offence under Section 124 of the Bombay Police Act were materially different from those of an offence under the Customs Act. Even in respect of that offence, the police did not register any case or enter any FIR which normally furnished a foundation for commencing a police investigation. They did not take any steps for prosecuting him under that Act but they informed the Customs Authority, who opened the packages, inspected the goods and on finding them contraband goods, seized them under a panchnama. The Customs Authorities called the appellant and his companion to the Customs House, took them into custody and after due compliance with the requirements of law, the Inspector of Customs questioned the appellant and recorded his statement under Section 108 of the Act. Hence it was manifest that at the time when the Customs Officer recorded it, the appellant was not formally "accused of any offence". The High Court was, therefore, right in holding that the appellant's statement in question was not hit by Article 20(3). Veera Ibrahim v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1976

SC 1167 : (1976) 3 SCC 302 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 278 : 1976 CrLJ 860 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 165.

[9423] ● Compelled testimony—Meaning of.—Compelled testimony in Article 20(3) means any statement even during police investigation and not merely in a Court. Nandini Satpathy v. P. L. Dani, AIR 1978 SC 1025 : (1978) 2 SCC 424 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 236 : 1978 CrLJ 968 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 195 : 1978 CrAppR (SC) 273.

[9424] ● Accused right to silence.—Answers that in themselves support a conviction are confessions but answers which had a reasonable tendency strongly to point out to the guilt of the accused are incriminatory. Relevant replies which furnish a real and clear link in the chain of evidence indeed to bind down the accused with the crime become incriminatory and offend Article 20(3) if elicited by pressure from the mouth of the accused. An answer acquires confessional status only if, in terms or substantially, all the facts which constitute the offence are admitted by the offender. If his statement also contains self-exculpatory matter, it ceases to be a confession. Article 20(3) strikes at confessions and self-incriminations but leaves untouched other relevant facts. Merely because he fancied that by such answer he would incriminate himself he could not claim the privilege of silence. It must appeal to the Court that the implications of the question, in the setting in which it is asked, make it evident that a responsive answer or an explanation of why it cannot be answered might be dangerous because injurious disclosure could result. The apprehension of incrimination from the answer sought must be substantial and real as distinguished from danger of remote possibilities or fanciful flow of inference. Two things need emphasis. The setting of the particular case, the context and the environment, that is, the totality of circumstances, must inform the perspective of the Court adjudging the incriminatory injury, and where reasonable doubt exists, the benefit must go in favour of the right to silence by a liberal construction of the Article. Nandini Satpathy v. P. L. Dani, AIR 1978 SC 1025 : (1978) 2 SCC 424 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 236 : 1978 CrLJ 968 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 195 : 1978 CrAppR (SC) 273.

[9425] ● Article 20(1)—Ex-post facto legislation.—Article 20(1) deals with ex post facto laws though that expression has not been used in the Article. Though a sovereign legislature has power to legislate retrospectively, creation of an offence for an act which at the time of its commission was not an offence or imposition of a penalty greater than that which was under the law provided violates Article 20(1). All that Article 20(1) prohibits is ex post facto laws and is designed to prevent a person being punished for an act or omission which was considered innocent when done. It only prohibits the conviction of a person or his being subjected to a penalty under ex post facto laws. G. P. Nayyar v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1979 SC 602 : (1979) 2 SCC 593 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 549 : 1979 CrLJ 587 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 74 : 1979 SCCrR 218 : (1979) 2 SCR 816 : 1978 SCWR 413 : 1979 LS (SC) 41 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 88 : (1979) 1 ServLR 281 : 1978 ServLC 154.

[9426] ● Person "accused of an offence".—Only a person against whom a formal accusation of the commission of an offence has been made can be a person "accused of an offence" within the meaning of Article 20(3). Such formal accusation might be specifically made against him in an FIR or a formal complaint or any other formal document or notice served on that person, which ordinarily resulted in his prosecution in Court. In the instant case no such formal accusation had been made against the appellant when his statements in question were recorded by the RPF Officer. Balkishan v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 379 : (1980) 4 SCC 600 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 62 : 1980 CrLJ 1424 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 588 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 279 : 1980 SCCrR 421 : 1980 ACrC 300 : 1981 MahLR (SC) 22 : (1981) 1 APLJ (SC) 17 : 1980 BLT (Rep) 67 (SC) : 1980 BBCJ (SC) 131 : (1981) 1 SCR 175.

[9427] ● Confinement of death sentence prisoner in Jail.—Confinement of death sentence-prisoner for sometimes in jail is no fresh punishment. Its object is to secure his availability for execution of sentence. No double jeopardy is involved in the process. Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1989 SC 335 : (1989) 1 SCC 678 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 248 : 1990 CrLJ 1810 : (1989) 2 Crimes 391 : (1989) 1 Cr SC 604.

[9428] ● Police officials assaulting arresting and wrongly detaining CJM.—Police officials assaulted, arrested and then wrongly detained Chief Judicial Magistrate and roped him by some criminal association. Supreme Court issued on them notice to show cause as to why contempt proceeding should not be drawn against them. Merely because of such notice they do not become accused of any offence. They cannot invoke Article 20(3), Constitution. Delhi Judicial Service Association v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1991 SC 2176 : (1991) 4 SCC 406 : 1991 CrLJ 3086 (SC) : (1991) 3 Crimes 232.

[9429] ● Guarantee against testimonial compulsion.—Articles 20(3) declares that no person accused of any offence shall be compelled to be a witness against himself. It does not refer to the hypothetical person who may in the future be discovered to have been guilty of some offence. In order that the guarantee against testimonial compulsion incorporated in Article 20(3) may be claimed by a person, it has be established that when he made the statement in question, he was a person accused of an offence. Phoolpandi v. Supdt. Central Excise, AIR 1992 SC 1795 : (1992) 3 SCC 259 : 1992 CrLJ 2761 (SC).

[9430] ● Electricity—Disconnection—Prior hearing as to.—Section 24 of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910 contemplates seven days' notice before disconnection. Section 24 does not apply to demand on detection of pilferage. It would apply to a case of regular supply made and prior demand for payment of electricity charges with a notice of seven days to be made and for failure to pay within the given time, after expiry of seven days, the appellant as a licensee would get the right to disconnect the supply of electrical energy. It would thus be seen that disconnection will be in the course of regular supply of electricity for non-payment of the usual bills but not to any case of demand after detection of pilferage.

The only question is whether the consumer is entitled to hearing before disconnection? In view of the conditions to which the respondents had agreed at the time of installation and also the prima facie conclusion reached by the authorities, it was not necessary to give further hearing to the respondents. The action taken by the appellant is not violative of Articles 20(1) and 14 of the Constitution and principles of natural justice. Madhya Pradesh Electricity Board, Jabalpur v. Harsh Wood Products, AIR 1996 SC 2258 (2260) : (1996) 4 SCC 522 : JT 1996 (5) SC 434.

[9431] ● Arrest.—A person cannot be said to be under arrest merely because he is questioned by the police on suspicion, when there is nothing on record to suggest that he was compelled to make a confession the submission that compelling a person to be searched amounts to confession must be rejected. State of Rajasthan v. Daulat Ram, (2005) 7 SCC 36 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1594 (1597) : 2005 CrLJ 4117.

[9432] ● Right against self-incrimination.—See Selvi v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2010 SC 1974 : (2010) 7 SCC 261 (263).

[9433] ● Protection against deprivation of right to liberty.—(Note:—Article 21 confers upon every person, be he a citizen of India or a non-citizen, protection against deprivation of his right to liberty of person by any action taken by the State which is not in accordance with procedure established by law. This means that the detention of a person into custody by any Government or by any executive officer or authority must always be in accordance with and under the provisions of some law in force, and that if any detention is in contravention or non-observance of the provisions of any law relating to arrest and detention into custody, such detention will be held to be in violation of the right to personal liberty guaranteed under Article 21.

If a person is deprived of his personal liberty by the State, and if according to him such deprivation is unlawful, then whatever be the shape or form of such deprivation and whatever be the Government or authority under whose orders it is effected, the remedy against such deprivation lies in every case in an application for a Writ of Habeas Corpus.

The application can be made not only by the person detained but also by any person interested in him. The provisions of Indian law which relate to this right are Articles 32 and 226 of the Constitution and Section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and under these provisions the application may be made either to the Supreme Court, or to the High Court within whose territorial jurisdiction a person is unlawfully detained.

Whenever Article 21 is invoked, the question always is whether the detention in question is in contravention of any constitutional or statutory provision relating to arrest and detention. As a result, though in the cases which follow the provision of law which was set up as having been contravened was different in different cases, the ultimate test applied by the Court in determining whether the challenged detention was supportable or not was throughout the same, namely, whether the detention was according to "procedure established by law" within the meaning of Article 21. In the course of these decisions the Court has laid down the general principles relating to this subject which will be applicable in every case in which Article 21 is invoked.)

The question whether a deprivation of personal liberty in any case was lawful or unlawful is a matter which is to be considered in the light of Articles 21 and 22, and not under Article 19. If a person is detained in custody under a law which does not fall foul of Articles 21 and 22, he cannot challenge the legality of his detention on the ground of infringement of any right guaranteed under Article 19.

The words “procedure established by law” in Article 21 mean “procedure enacted by a valid law”. A law which does not violate or transgress any provision in the Constitution relating to fundamental rights is valid and constitutional. Therefore, if a person is detained in custody in accordance with the provisions of law which is valid by the above test, the order of detention is according to “procedure established by law” within the meaning of Article 21, and its validity cannot be challenged. Gopalan A. K. v. State of Madras, AIR 1950 SC 27 : 51 CrLJ 1383 : 1950 SCJ 174 : 1950 SCR 88 : (1950) 2 MLJ 42 : 63 MLW 638 : 1950 MWN 495.

[9434] ● Person when convicted and sentenced to imprisonment.—Once a person is convicted of an offence and is sentenced to imprisonment by a trial Court, his only remedy against such imprisonment is to prefer an appeal to the appellate Court to which under the law an appeal from such conviction and sentence will ordinarily lie. The appeal will lie to the same Court of appeal whatever be the ground which the accused desires to urge against his conviction or sentence whether it is want of jurisdiction, or an illegality arising from contravention of some mandatory rule of procedure, or absence of some pre-requisite of cognisance. In other words, an order of conviction and sentence made by a trial Court will stand good in the eyes of law until it is set aside in appeal or revision, and whatever be the defect or illegality from which it might be suffering, it cannot be contended that detention in custody in execution of that order is not detention “according to procedure established by law” within the meaning of Article 21. It follows that it is not open to a person who is detained in prison in execution of a sentence of a trial Court to apply for a Writ of Habeas Corpus for obtaining his release from such imprisonment, and if he does so apply, such imprisonment being under the order of a criminal Court is a complete answer to such an application.

On the same principle, when an accused is convicted and sentenced to imprisonment under an order made by the High Court in appeal from a judgment or order of a trial Court, and for whatever reason he feels aggrieved by that order, his only remedy against it is an appeal to the Supreme Court to have it set aside, and the order stands good if it is not so set aside, whatever be its defect or illegality. It is not open to a person detained in prison under an order of the High Court to challenge the validity or legality of that order by an application under Article 32 for a Writ of Habeas Corpus. Janardhan Reddy v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1951 SC 217 : 52 CrLJ 736 : 1951 SCJ 320 : 1951 SCR 344 : 1951 MWN (Cri) 189 (2) : 64 MLW 406 : 1951 ALJ (SC) 94 : 1951 MWN 613 (2).

[9435] ● Remand of accused into custody.—Sections 167 and 344 of the Code of Criminal Procedure require that when an accused person is produced before a Magistrate for remand into custody, if the Magistrate considers it proper to adjourn the proceeding and remand the accused into custody until the next date of hearing, he shall make a written order of remand. If no such written order is made and there is nothing on the record to show that an order remanding the accused to custody was in fact made, the continued detention of the accused in custody after the date when the accused was produced before the Magistrate is illegal and otherwise than in accordance with ‘procedure established by law’ within the meaning of Article 21. The forms and rules of procedure relating to matters which concern the deprivation of a man’s personal liberty have to be strictly and scrupulously observed by those who are vested by law with the power in that behalf in the discharge of their official duties. If the detention of an accused person in custody is illegal by reason of the non-observance of a mandatory statutory provision, the detention is not according to ‘procedure established by law’ within the meaning of Article 21, and the accused concerned has the right to move the Supreme Court under Article 32, or to move the High Court under Article 226 or Section 491 of the Code, for a Writ in the nature of Habeas Corpus. Ram Narayan Singh v. State of Delhi, AIR 1953 SC 277 : 1953 CrLJ 1113 : 1953 SCA 399 : 1953 SCJ 326 : 1953 SCR 652 : 1953 AWR (Sup) 68 : 1953 MWN 647.

[9436] ● Crucial date of detention.—In a Habeas Corpus proceeding the only question before the Court is whether at the date of the Return the detention was legal. If the detention is found to be suffering from any illegality on that date, the accused has the right to demand his release, it being immaterial that the detention was lawful at the time when the proceeding was instituted or at any other stage previous to the date of the Return. In other words, in Habeas Corpus proceedings the material date is the date of the Return, and no other. Ram Narayan Singh v. State of Delhi, AIR 1953 SC 277 : 1953 CrLJ 1113 : 1953 SCA 399 : 1953 SCJ 326 : 1953 SCR 652.

[9437] ● Principles relating to application of Articles 20, 22(1) and 22(2) of Constitution.—As a result of the decisions of the Court in the below-mentioned cases, the following principles relating to the application of Articles 21, 22(1) and 22(2) are now well settled, namely:

(a) that Articles 22(1) and 22(2) apply only when the detention is in respect of an offence or an act of a criminal or a quasi-criminal nature, and not when it is in connection with a civil default, and

(b) that if an arrest or detention for a civil debt is in accordance with the procedure prescribed under the statute for the recovery of such debt, it is according to 'procedure established by law' within the meaning of Article 21, and its legality cannot be questioned on the ground of non-compliance with the requirements of Articles 22(1) and 22(2) as to production before and authority from a Magistrate.

If a statutory provision under which an arrest or detention is made in respect of any civil debt or revenue requires that there must be material before the detaining authority to show that the sale-proceeds of the property of the defaulting assessee were insufficient to satisfy the amount due from him, the case papers must disclose that such material was present, and if the Court before which the legality of such arrest or detention is challenged is satisfied that there was no such material, the action taken must be held to be otherwise than in accordance with 'procedure established by law' and the person concerned must be ordered to be released. Collector of Malabar v. Erimmal Ibrahim Hajee, AIR 1957 SC 688 : 1957 CrLJ 1030 : 1957 SCJ 640 : (1957) 32 ITR 124 : (1957) 2 MLJ (SC) 115 : (1957) 1 MLJ (Cri) 586 : 1957 KLT 1010 : (1957) 2 AWR (SC) 87.

[9438] ● Habeas Corpus—Object of.—The whole object of a proceeding for a Writ of Habeas Corpus is to enable the Court to determine as expeditiously as is possible whether the fundamental right of a detained person to liberty of his person has been infringed by his detention by the State, and that very object would be defeated if the proceeding took long in its disposal. For this reason, it is essential that the proceeding be kept as simple and free of technicalities as is reasonably possible. Ranjit Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1959 SC 843 : 1959 CrLJ 1124 : (1959) 2 SCA 552 : 1959 SCJ 905 : (1959) 2 AnWR (SC) 121 : 1959 ACrR 298 : (1959) 2 MLJ (SC) 121 : 1959 AWR (HC) 371 : 1959 MLJ (Cri) 618.

[9439] ● Return to writ of Habeas Corpus—Affidavit by detaining authority.—The question whether in a Habeas Corpus proceeding an affidavit of the detaining authority is or is not required to be sent with the Return, depends on the facts and circumstances of each case, and there cannot be any hard and fast rule regarding this matter.

If the circumstances of the case are such that they do not require the determination of any question of fact, as when the detention is under the orders of an authority having plenary powers, or when it is under the orders of a Court, such affidavit is not necessary.

On the other hand, such an affidavit is called for, when the application for the Writ mentions facts, an inquiry into which is necessary for the purpose of determining whether the detention was justified, for example, (a) when the person detained says that he has done no wrong and he does not know why he has been detained, or (b) when he raises issues of fact which expressly challenge the legality of the action taken by the executive officers, or (c) when the facts stated in the petition are such that if they remain unrebutted or unexplained they would be sufficient for the issue of the Writ asked for. Ranjit Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1959 SC 843 : 1959 CrLJ 1124 : (1959) 2 SCA 552 : 1959 SCJ 905 : 1959 MLJ (Cri) 618.

[9440] ● Expression "procedure established by law".—The expression "procedure established by law" in Article 21 means procedure established by State enacted statute law. The validity of any enactment cannot be questioned on the ground of violation of principles of natural justice. Ram Chandra Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 1961 SC 1629 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 811 : 1961 AWR (HC) 721 : 1961 ACrR 409.

[9441] ● Convicts not denuded of all fundamental rights.—Convicts are not, by mere reason of the conviction, denuded of all the fundamental rights which they otherwise possessed. The presence of the Special Police Force in the immediate vicinity of the jail can cause no interference with the personal liberty or the lawful pre-occupations of the petitioners. As regards the livewire mechanism fixed atop the jail walls, it is not a secret trap as all the prisoners are warned of its existence and a non-electrical barbed wire fenced the jail walls. Whatever be the nature and extent of the petitioners' fundamental rights to life and personal liberty, they have no fundamental freedom to escape from lawful custody. Therefore they cannot complain of the installation of the livewire mechanism with which they are likely to come into contact only if they attempt to escape from the prison. D.B.N. Patnaik v. State of A.P., AIR 1974 SC 2092 : (1975) 3 SCC 185 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 803 : 1975 CrLJ 556 : 1974 SCD 931.

[9442] ● Court not competent to go into question of mala fide of detention order.—It is not competent for any Court to go into question of mala fides of the order of detention or ultra vires character of the order of detention or that the order was not passed on the satisfaction of the detaining authority. A.D.M., Jabalpur v. S. Shukla, AIR 1976 SC 1207 : (1976) 2 SCC 521 : 1976 CrLJ 945 : 1976 CrLJ (SC) 303 : 1976 UJ (SC) 610.

[9443] ● Convicts not denuded of their fundamental rights.—Convicts are not wholly denuded of their fundamental rights. The imposition of any major punishment within the prison system is conditional upon the observance of procedural safeguards. Sunil Batra v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1978 SC 1675 : (1978) 4 SCC 494 : 1978 CrLJ 1741.

[9444] ● Reasonableness postulates intelligent care.—Personal liberty, deprived when bail is refused, is too precious a value of our constitutional system recognised under Article 21 that the crucial power to negate it is a great trust exercisable, not casually but judicially, with lively concern for the cost to the individual and the community. To glamorise impressionistic orders as discretionary may, on occasions, make a litigative gamble decisive of a fundamental right. After all, personal liberty of an accused or convict is fundamental, suffering lawful eclipse only in terms of procedure established by 'law'. The last four words of Article 21 are the life of that human right. Reasonableness postulates intelligent care and predicates that deprivation of freedom by refusal of bail is not for punitive purpose but for the bifocal interests of justice to the individual involved and society affected. Babu Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1978 SC 527 : (1978) 1 SCC 579 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 133 : 1978 CrLJ 651 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 86 : 1978 SCCrR 278 : 1978 CrAppR (SC) 90 : 1978 MLJ (Cri) 465 : 1978 MLW (Cri) 85 : 1978 ACrR 243.

[9445] ● Soft sentencing justice gross injustice.—Soft sentencing justice was gross injustice where many innocents are the potential victims. While iatrogenic prison terms are bad because they dehumanize, it is functional failure and judicial pathology to hold out a benignly self-defeating non-sentence to deviants who endanger the moral and morale, the health and wealth of society. If a prisoner sentenced to imprisonment is virtually unable to exercise his constitutional and statutory right of appeal, inclusive of special leave to appeal, for want of legal assistance, there is implicit in the Court under Article 142 r/w. Articles 21 and 39-A of the Constitution, power to assign counsel for such imprisoned individual 'for doing complete justice'. Court should forthwith furnish a free transcript of the judgment. In the event of any such copy being sent to the jail authorities for delivery to the prisoner, the official concerned should, with quick despatch, get it delivered to the prisoner and obtain written acknowledgment thereof from him. Where the prisoner seeks to file an appeal or revision, every facility for exercise of that right should be made available by the Jail Administration. Where the prisoner is unable to engage a lawyer the Court should assign a competent counsel for his defence, provided the party does not object to that lawyer. The State should pay to the assigned counsel such sum as the Court might equitably fix. Those benign prescriptions operated by force of Article 21 (strengthened by Article 19(1)(b) r/w. sub-article (5)) from the lowest to the highest Court where deprivation of life and personal liberty is in substantial peril. Madhav v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1978 SC 1548 : (1978) 3 SCC 544 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 468 : 1978 CrLJ 1678 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 362 : 1978 UJ (SC) 847.

[9446] ● Speedy trial part of fundamental right to life and liberty.—Speedy trial is part of fundamental right to life and liberty.

Procedure prescribed by law for depriving a person of his liberty cannot be 'reasonable, fair or just' unless that procedure ensures a speedy trial for determination of the guilt of such person. No procedure which does not ensure a reasonably quick trial can be regarded as 'reasonable, fair or just' and it would fall foul of Article 21. There can, therefore, be no doubt that speedy trial, and by speedy trial is meant reasonably expeditious trial, is an integral and essential part of the fundamental right to life and liberty enshrined in Article 21. Hussainara Khatoon v. State of Bihar, AIR 1979 SC 1360 : (1980) 1 SCC 81 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 23 : 1979 CrLJ 1036 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 197 : (1979) 2 APLJ (SC) 40 : 1979 Pat LJR 419.

[9447] ● Continued detention of under trials not justified.—Continued detention of under-trial prisoners cannot be justified when they have been in jail for a period longer than what they would have been sentenced to suffer if convicted. This discloses a shocking state of affairs and betrays complete lack of concern for human values and exposes the callousness of our legal and judicial system which can remain unmoved by such enormous misery and suffering resulting from totally unjustified deprivation of personal liberty. They were directed to be released forthwith as continuance of their detention is clearly illegal and in violation of their fundamental rights under Article 21. Hussainara Khatoon v. State of Bihar, AIR 1979 SC 1377 : (1980) 1 SCC 108 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 50 : 1979 CrLJ 1052 : (1979) 3 SCR 760 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 234.

[9448] ● Free legal service.—Article 39-A also emphasises that free legal service is an inalienable element of 'reasonable, fair and just' procedure, for without it a person suffering from economic or other disabilities would be deprived of the opportunity for securing justice. The said right is, therefore, clearly an essential ingredient of 'reasonable, fair and just' procedure for a person accused of an offence and it must be held implicity in the guarantee of Article 21. This is a constitutional right of every accused person who is unable to engage a lawyer and secure legal services on account of reasons such as poverty, indigence or incommunicado situation and the State is under a mandate to provide a lawyer to an accused person in the circumstances of the case and the needs of the justice so required, provided, of course the accused person does not object to the provision of such lawyer. Hussainara Khatoon v. State of Bihar, AIR 1979 SC 1369 : (1980) 1 SCC 98 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 40 : 1979 CrLJ 1045 : (1979) 3 SCR 532 : 1979 PatLJR 410.

[9449] ● Detention of under trial prisoner for more than sentence period—Illegal.—Where the prisoners have already suffered incarceration for the maximum period for which they could have been sent to jail on conviction, there is absolutely no reason why they should be allowed to continue to remain in jail for a moment longer, since such continuance of detention would be clearly violative not only of human dignity but also of their fundamental right under Article 21 of the Constitution. They were directed to be released forthwith. Hussainara Khatoon v. State of Bihar, AIR 1979 SC 1819 : (1980) 1 SCC 115 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 57 : 1979 CrLJ 1134 : 1979 UJ (SC) 728.

[9450] ● Prison reform constitutional compulsion.—Prison reform is now a constitutional compulsion and its neglect may lead to drastic Court action. Protection of the prisoner within his rights is part of the office of Article 21. Technicalities and legal niceties are more an impediment to the Court entertaining even an informal communication as a proceeding for habeas corpus if the basic facts are found. Rights of prisoners and remedies for denial of these rights are indicated. Sunil Batra v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1980 SC 1579 : (1980) 3 SCC 488 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 777 : 1980 CrLJ 1099 : (1980) 2 SCR 557.

[9451] ● Under trial prisoners not to be kept in leg irons.—Under-trial prisoners should not be kept in leg irons contrary to all prison regulations and in gross violation of the decisions of the Supreme Court. They should not be asked to work outside the jail walls as it would be in flagrant violation of prison regulations and contrary to the I.L.O. Conventions against forced labour. Kadra Pahadiya v. State of Bihar, AIR 1981 SC 939 : (1981) 3 SCC 671 : 1981 CrLJ 481 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 109 : 1981 BLJ 190 : 1981 BLJR 300.

[9452] ● Delayed trial not necessarily unfair trial.—A delayed trial is not necessarily an unfair trial. If nothing is shown regarding circumstances entitling the Court to raise a presumption that accused had been prejudiced, there will be no justification for the appellate Court to quash the conviction on the ground of delayed trial only. Court is entitled to take into consideration whether the defendant was himself responsible for a part of the delay and whether he was prejudiced in the preparation of his defence by reason of the delay. State of Maharashtra v. Champalal, AIR 1981 SC 1675 : (1981) 3 SCC 610 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 762 : 1981 CrLJ 1273 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 496.

[9453] ● Right to free legal services.—Right to free legal services is an essential ingredient of reasonable, fair and just procedure for a person accused of an offence and it is implicit in the guarantee of Article 21 and the State is under a constitutional mandate to provide a lawyer to an accused person if the circumstances of the case and the needs of justice so require, provided of course the accused person does not object to the provision of such lawyer. This constitutional obligation to provide free legal services to an indigent accused does not arise only when the trial commences but also attaches when the accused is for the first time produced before the Magistrate, for it is at that stage that he gets the first opportunity to apply for bail and obtain his release as also to resist remand to police or jail custody. State Government cannot avoid this constitutional mandate by pleading financial or administrative inability. The Magistrate or Sessions Judge before whom the accused appears must be held to be under an obligation to inform the accused that if he is unable to engage the services of a lawyer on account of poverty or indigence, he is entitled to obtain free legal services at the cost of the State. Khatri v. State of Bihar, AIR 1981 SC 928 : (1981) 1 SCC 627 &

635 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 228 & 235 : 1981 CrLJ 470 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 66 : 1981 UJ (SC) 72 : 1981 BLJ 180 : (1981) 2 SCR 408 : (1981) 2 SCJ 185 : 1981 MLJ (Cri) 519 : 1981 Sri LJ (SC) 13.

[9454] ● Writ petition under Article 32 of Constitution by under trials for enforcement of fundamental right on allegation that they were blinded by police officer.—Writ petition was filed under Article 32 by certain under-trials for enforcement of their fundamental right under Article 21 on the allegation that they were blinded by the police officer either at the time of their arrest or subsequently, while in police custody. C.I.D. reports, files containing all correspondence and notings exchanged between Police Officials regarding the C.I.D. inquiry into the blindings and certain letters were called for by the Court. Production of the same is not barred either by Section 162 or Section 172, as the writ proceedings are neither an 'inquiry' nor a 'trial' for an offence nor the Supreme Court hearing the writ petitions a Criminal Court, nor are the petitioners or their agents accused persons. Khatri v. State of Bihar, AIR 1981 SC 1068 : (1981) 2 SCC 493 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 503 : 1981 CrLJ 597 : 1981 BBCJ (SC) 124 : 1981 BLJR 425 : (1981) 2 SCJ 12 : 1981 MLJ (Cri) 456.

[9455] ● Detaining authority bound to give opportunity to detenu to make representation.—It is settled law that detaining authority is bound to give opportunity to the detenue to make representation against his detention and also to consider the same as early as possible and that any unreasonable delay in furnishing to the detenu copies of documents which form the basis of the grounds of detention amounted to denial to him of such opportunity. Such denial made the detention itself illegal. Documents were supplied to detenu 32 days after they were demanded in the instant case. Petitioner was ordered to be released forthwith. Pritam Nath v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 92 : (1980) 4 SCC 525 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 19 : 1980 CrLJ 1340 : 1980 CrApprR (SC) 415 : (1981) 1 SCJ 275 : (1981) 1 SCR 682 : 1981 NLJ (Cri) 211.

[9456] ● Section 14 of Official Secrets Act not deprive right of accused under CrPC to get copies of statements of witnesses, documents etc.—Prosecution filed a petition before the Magistrate praying to hold the hearings in camera and also requesting the Magistrate not to allow accused to have access to, or be given copies of, statements of witnesses recorded by the Magistrate or those recorded earlier during police investigation. Magistrate ordered the defence lawyer to take copious notes of the said statements to enable him to cross-examine witnesses and directed the lawyer to produce his note book so that the Magistrate might examine if only summary of the evidence had been taken by the lawyer or the statements had been taken in extenso in which case it would amount to publication and therefore would be barred by Section 14 of the Act. Though the lawyer agreed to show his note book in the first instance, later claimed privilege under Section 126 of the Evidence Act. The Magistrate found himself helpless and proceeded with the inquiry. The prosecution filed a revision for quashing the order of the Magistrate in allowing the lawyer to cross-examine witnesses without impounding the notes taken by him. The High Court quashed the order holding that the statements of witnesses recorded by the Court or other documents could not be made available to the accused or his counsel nor could copies of the same be given to the accused.

A close and careful scrutiny of Section 14 of the Official Secrets Act would itself clearly show that the section does not contemplate the type of exclusion that the High Court thought. Though the offences in question are very serious offences, yet that by itself would not justify the legislature to pass an Act so as to deprive an accused of the valuable right to defend or, for that matter, to stifle the defence itself. The opening words of the section clearly reveal that the intention of the legislature is to give only an enabling additional power to the Court regarding holding the proceedings in camera. The words 'publication of any evidence' does not indicate that the accused should not be allowed access to the evidence recorded by the Court but they are merely made to highlight the ground for holding the proceedings in camera because if public were allowed to be present during the hearing the evidence recorded in their presence would amount to publication and it is in that sense alone that the word 'publication' had been used in Section 14. If the interpretation put by the High Court or by the appellant's counsel is accepted, then the provisions of Section 14 would have to be struck down as being violative of Articles 14 and 21 of the Constitution of India. Section 14, apart from providing that proceedings of the Court may be held in camera, does not in any way affect or override the provisions of the CrPC relating to enquiries or trials held thereunder. Section 14 does not in any way deprive the valuable rights of the accused to get copies of the statements recorded by the Magistrate or those recorded by the police or the documents obtained by the police during investigation as envisaged by the Criminal Rules 308 and 310 framed by the Calcutta High Court under the Code of Criminal Procedure and by various High Courts nor does Section 14 in any way affect the right of the accused to get copies under Section 548, CrPC. There is absolutely no impropriety on the part of the Magistrate in not taking action against the defence lawyer for his refusal to show his register claiming privilege under Section 126 of the Evidence Act (that was the view of the High Court) and also no impropriety on the conduct of the lawyer in refusing to show the statement of witnesses recorded by the Court in extenso in order to prepare himself for an effective cross-examination of the witnesses. Hence the strictures passed by the High Court on the Magistrate as also on the defence lawyer are totally unwarranted. Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal v. S. Bhowmack, AIR 1981 SC 917 : (1981) 2 SCC 109 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 342 : 1981 CrLJ 341 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 136 : (1981) 2 SCR 661.

[9457] ● Speedy trial fundamental right.—Speedy trial is a fundamental right implicit in the guarantee of life and personal liberty enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution. Any accused denied this right is entitled to approach the Supreme Court for the enforcement of such right and the Court in the discharge of its constitutional obligation has the power to give necessary directions to the State Governments and other appropriate authorities for securing this right to the accused. Kadra Pahadiya v. State of Bihar, AIR 1982 SC 1167 : (1983) 2 SCC 104 : (1982) 1 SCJ 320 : 1982 (2) APLJ (SC) 22.

[9458] ● Detention of prisoner.—Detention of a prisoner was as a criminal lunatic. He became perfectly sane and fit for discharge about 16 years back. Superintendent of the jail sent the medical report to the State Government that the petitioner was fit for discharge. There was no warrant or justification in law to detain him any further. Government insisting on a surety before release, is not warranted. Petitioner was ordered to be released. Sant Bir v. State of Bihar, AIR 1982 SC 1470 : (1982) 3 SCC 131 : 1982 CrLJ 1933.

[9460] ● Composition of Court-Martial.—Army Rules, R. 40 & 187.—Composition of Court-Martial. Word 'corps' does not mean 'army corps'. Restricted meaning as in Rule 187(3) has to be given.

Army Act (46 of 1950), Section 130, Army Rules, 1954, R. 44.—Constitution of Court-Martial. Requirement of asking the accused whether he objects to any officers of the Court is mandatory.

Army Rules, 1954, RR. 22 to 25 and 37.—Trial of Officer by Court-Martial. Compliance with Rr. 22 to 24 is not necessary unless there is request from the Officer. Rules are not violative of Article 21 of the Constitution.

Army Rules, 1954, R. 22 to 25 and 37.—Trial by Court-Martial. Prior inquiry by Court of Inquiry is not obligatory. Army Act (46 of 1950), Section 153. Punishment under the Act. No appeal or review is provided under the Act. It is a serious lacuna. Confirmation proceeding under Section 153 are not sufficient. Prithi Pal Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 1413 : (1982) 3 SCC 140 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 642 : 1983 CrLJ 647 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 523 : 1982 UJ (SC) 695 : (1983) 1 SCR 393 : (1982) 2 Serv LJ 582 : (1983) 1 LabLN 9 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 137 : (1983) 2 Chand LR (Cri) 287 : (1983) 1 SC 10 : (1983) 1 Serv LR 365.

[9461] ● Word "life" in Article 21 Constitution—Meaning.—The word "life" in Article 21, Constitution means right to live with human dignity and the same does not merely connote continued drudgery. It takes within its fold "some of the finer graces of human civilization, which makes life worth living" and that the expanded concept of life would mean the "tradition, culture and heritage" of the concerned person. Board of Trustees, Port of Bombay v. Dilip Kumar, AIR 1983 SC 109 : (1983) 1 SCC 124. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Vikram Deb Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1988 SC 1782 : 1988 Supp SCC 734; (2) Ram Saran v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 549 : 1989 Supp (1) SCC 251; (3) *P. [9462] ● Prolonged delay in execution of death sentence.—(Per CHANDRACHUD, C.J. on behalf of the Bench of 3 Judges). A prisoner who had experienced living death for years on end is entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court for examining the question whether, after all the agony and torment he had been subjected to, it is just and fair to allow the sentence of death to be executed. That is the true implication of Article 21 of the Constitution and to that extent the Supreme Court is in broad and respectful agreement with the learned brethren in Vatheeswaran's case in their visualisation of the meaning of that Article. The horizons of Article 21 are ever widening and the final word on its conspectus should never have been said. So long as life lasts, so long shall it be the duty and the endeavour of the Supreme Court to give to the provisions of the Constitution a meaning which would prevent human suffering and degradation. Therefore, Article 21 is as much relevant at the stage of execution of the death sentence as it is in the interregnum between the imposition of that sentence and its execution. The essence of the matter is that all procedure, no matter what the stage, should be fair, just and reasonable. It is well-established that a prisoner cannot be tortured or subjected to unfair or inhuman treatment. It is a logical extension of the self-same principle that the death sentence, even if justifiably imposed, cannot be executed if supervening events made its execution harsh, unjust or unfair. Article 21 stood like a sentinel over human misery, degradation and oppression. Its voice is the voice of justice and fairplay. That voice can never be challenged on the ground that the time to heed to its imperatives is long since past in the story of a trial. It reverberated through all stages—the trial, the sentence, the incarceration and finally, the execution of the sentence. What is stated above delineated the broad area of agreement between the Bench of three Judges in this case and the two Judge Bench that decided Vatheeswaran's case. The narrow area wherein the present Bench felt constrained to differ from them and the reasons why would now be indicated with precision.

Prolonged delay in the execution of a death sentence is unquestionably an important consideration for determining whether the sentence should be allowed to be executed. But no hard and fast rule could be laid down as was done by the Bench in Vatheeswaran's case that "delay exceeding two years in the execution of a sentence of death should be considered sufficient to entitle the person under sentence of death to invoke Article 21 and demand the quashing of the sentence of death". That period of two years purports to have been fixed in that case after making "all reasonable allowance for the time necessary for appeal and consideration of reprieve". It is impossible to agree with that part of the judgment. One has only to turn to the statistics of the disposal of cases in the High Court and the Supreme Court to appreciate that a period far exceeding two years is generally taken by those Courts together for the disposal of matters involving even the death sentence. Very often, four or five years elapsed between the imposition of death sentence by the Sessions Court and the disposal of the Special Leave Petition or an Appeal by the Supreme Court in that matter. That was apart from the time which the President or the Governor, as the case might be, took to consider petitions filed under Article 72 or Article 161 of the Constitution or the time which the Government took to dispose of application filed under Sections 432 and 433, CrPC. Therefore, the fixation of the time limit of two years does not seem to the Court to accord with the common experience of the time normally consumed by the litigative process and the proceedings before the executive.

Apart from the fact that the rule of two years runs in the teeth of common experience as regards the time generally occupied by proceedings in the High Court, the Supreme Court and before the executive authorities, no absolute or unqualified rule could be laid down that in every case in which there was a long delay in the execution of death sentence, the sentence should be substituted by the sentence of life imprisonment. There are several other factors which should be taken into account while considering the question as to whether the death sentence should be vacated. A convict is undoubtedly entitled to pursue all remedies lawfully open to him to get rid of the sentence of death imposed upon him and indeed, there is no one, be he blind, lame, starving or suffering from a terminal illness, who does not want to live. The Vinoba Bhaves, who undertook the "Prayopaveshana" do not belong to the world of ordinary mortals. Therefore, it is understandable that a convict sentenced to death would take recourse to every remedy which is available to him under the law to ask for the commutation of his sentence, even after the death sentence was finally confirmed by the Supreme Court by dismissing his Special Leave Petition or Appeal. But, it is, at least, relevant to consider whether the delay in the execution of the death sentence is attributable to the fact that he had resorted to a series of untenable proceedings which had the effect of defeating the ends of justice. It is not uncommon that a series of review petitions and writ petitions are filed in the Supreme Court to challenge judgments and orders which had assumed finality, without any seeming justification. Stay orders obtained in those proceedings and then, at the end of it all, came the argument that there had been prolonged delay in implementing the judgment or order. The Court called upon to vacate a death sentence on the ground of delay caused in executing that sentence should find why the delay was caused and who was responsible for it. If that is not done, the law laid down by the Supreme Court would become an object of ridicule by permitting a person to defeat it by resorting to frivolous proceedings in order to delay its implementation. And then, the rule of two years would become a handy tool for defeating justice. The death sentence should not, as far as possible, be imposed. But, in that rare and exceptional class of cases wherein that sentence is upheld by the Supreme Court, the judgment or order of the Supreme Court ought not to be allowed by applying any rule of thumb.

Finally, and that is no less important, the nature of the offence, the diverse circumstances attendant upon it, its impact upon the contemporary society and the question whether the motivation and pattern of the crime are such as are likely to lead to its repetition, if the death sentence was vacated, are matters which should enter into the verdict as to whether the sentence should be vacated for the reason that its execution was delayed. The substitution of the death sentence by a sentence of life imprisonment cannot follow by the application of the two years' formula, as a matter of "quod errat demonstrandum". Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 SC 465 : (1983) 2 SCC 344 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 461 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 213 : 1983 CrLJ 803 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 247 : (1983) 1 Crimes 1017 : (1983) 1 SCJ 318 : (1983) 2 MLJ (SC) 46 : 1983 MLJ (Cri) 545 : 1983 (2) Chand LR (Cri) 491 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 430.

[9463] ● Illegal detention after acquittal—Compensation.—In a petition for Habeas Corpus for illegal detention of the petitioner after acquittal in a trial more than 14 years ago the Supreme Court can pass order for compensation even though he was released soon after filing of the writ. Rudul Sah v. State of Bihar, AIR 1983 SC 1086 : (1983) 4 SCC 141 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 798 : 1983 CrLJ 1644 : 1983 UJ (SC) 759 : 1983 Chand CrC (SC) 131 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 373 : 1983 BLJ 684.

[9464] ● Insane prisoners declared sane.—Insane prisoners were declared sane. Due to inaction of authorities to take steps to release them, the prisoners remained in jail for 20 to 37 years. They were directed to be released forthwith. Veena Sethi v. State of Bihar, AIR 1983 SC 339 : (1982) 2 SCC 583 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 511 : 1983 CrLJ 675 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 303 : 1982 UJ (SC) 543 : 1982 BLJ 616 : 1983 Pat LJR (SC) 1.

[9465] ● Substitution of death sentence to imprisonment for life.—In this case the accused-petitioner who was a young man of 22 years of age was convicted for murder and sentenced to death. His conduct and behaviour in the jail which was evident from the report of the jail authorities was to the effect that there was nothing adverse against him during the period of his incarceration. He appeared to be genuinely repentant and he desired to atone for the grievous wrong that had been done by him. The repentence and desire appeared to be sincere. The sentence of death was hanging over his head for 2 years and 9 months.

An over-all view of all the circumstances of the present case appears to the Supreme Court to entitle the petitioner to invoke the protection of Article 21 of the Constitution and accordingly the sentence of death is quashed and in its place the sentence of imprisonment for life is substituted. Javed Ahmed v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1985 SC 231 : (1985) 1 SCC 275 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 653 : 1984 CrLJ 1909.

[9466] ● Petitioner MLA prevented from attending Assembly Session—Compensation—Awarded of.—The petitioner was an MLA of Jammu and Kashmir who incurred the wrath of the Government. They were bent upon preventing him from attending the Assembly Session which was to meet on 11-9-1985. On the opening day of the Budget Session which was 17-8-1985, he was suspended from the Assembly. The order of suspension was stayed by the High Court on 9-9-1985. On the intervening night of 9th, 10th, September, 1985, he was proceeding from Jammu to Srinagar, en route at 3-00 A.M. on the 10th, he was arrested and taken away by the Police. Efforts to trace him proved futile and hence his wife filed the present writ against the respondents to produce her husband before the Court, to declare his detention illegal and to set him at liberty. On 16-9-1985, the M.L.A. was released on bail by the Additional Sessions Judge. The petitioner then filed a supplementary affidavit that he was kept in Police lock up from 10th to 14th and that he was produced before a Magistrate for the first time only on the 14th.

The petitioner was detained from 3-00 A.M. on 10-9-1985 till he was produced before the Executive Magistrate on the 11th before the Sub-judge on the 14th. The two remand orders did not contain any statement that the petitioner was produced before either of them. The applications for remand also did not contain any statement that he was being produced before either of them. No affidavits of the Officer-in-charge of the police station or of the officer who arrested him was filed in the Supreme Court. At the hearing it was represented that their affidavits had been got ready but mislaid and the prayer for adjournment for filing them was refused. Non-production of the prisoner before the Magistrate on the 11th or before the Sub-judge on the 13th was certainly a gross violation of the petitioner's constitutional rights under Articles 21 & 22(2). If the personal liberty of an M.L.A. was to be played with in that fashion, one could only wonder what might happen to lesser mortals. Police officers who were the custodians of the law and order should have shown greatest respect for the personal liberty of citizens and should not flout the laws by stooping to such bizarre acts of lawlessness. Custodians of law and order should not become depredators of civil liberties. Their duty was to protect and not to abduct. The two police officers, the one who arrested him and the one who obtained the orders of remand, were but minions in the lower rungs of the ladder. But the responsibility lay elsewhere and with the higher echelons of the Government of J. & K. There was no doubt that the constitutional rights of the petitioner were violated with impunity since he was not in detention. There was no need to make any order to set him at liberty, but suitably and adequately he should be compensated. The Supreme Court has a right to award monetary compensation by way of exemplary costs or otherwise. When a person came to the Supreme Court with the complaint that he had been arrested and imprisoned with mischievous or malicious intent and that his constitutional and legal rights were invaded, the mischief or malice and the invasion might not be washed away or wished away by his being set free. In appropriate cases like the present one this Court has jurisdiction to compensate the victim by awarding suitable monetary compensation. The State of J&K is directed to pay a sum of Rs. 50, 000/-. Bhim Singh v. State of J&K, AIR 1986 SC 494 : (1985) 4 SCC 677 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 47 : 1986 CrLJ 192 : 1986 SCCrR 20 : 1985 Cur CrJ (SC) 516.

[9467] ● Personal liberty—Violation of.—Where an M.L.A. was arrested and remand order of the arrested person was obtained but he was not produced before the Judicial Courts within the time allowed under law, there is gross violation of the constitutional rights of the person under Articles 21 and 22(2). Police Officers who are the custodians of law and order should have the greatest respect for the personal liberty of citizens and should not flout the laws by stooping to such bizarre acts of lawlessness. Custodians of law and order should not become depredators of civil liberties. Their duty is to protect and not to abduct. Bhim Singh v. State of J&K., AIR 1986 SC 494 : (1985) 4 SCC 677 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 47 : 1986 CrLJ 192 : 1986 SCCrR 20 : 1985 Cur CrJ (SC) 516.

[9468] ● Legal aid—No application to be made.—For the legal aid no application or choice is to be made or exercised by the accused. Shri Sukh Das v. Union Territory of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1986 SC 991 : 1986 CrLJ 1084 : (1986) 2 Crimes 40 (SC).

[9469] ● Right to speedy trial.—The constitutional position is now well settled that the right to speedy trial is one of the dimensions of the fundamental right to life and liberty guaranteed by Article 21 of the Constitution. Several questions would arise for consideration like was there delay? How long was the delay? Was the delay inevitable having regard to the nature of the case? Was any part of the delay caused by the wilfulness or the negligence of the prosecuting agency? Was there a likelihood of the accused being prejudiced in his defence? Irrespective of any likelihood of prejudice in the conduct of his defence, was the very length of the delay sufficiently prejudicial to the accused? The question whether the right to a speedy trial which formed part of the fundamental right to life and liberty guaranteed by Article 21 had been infringed was ultimately a question of fairness in the administration of criminal justice even as 'acting fairly' was of the essence of the principles of natural justice and a 'fair and reasonable procedure' was what was contemplated by the expression 'procedure established by law' in Article 21. In this case if the police officers had some justification for suspecting a conspiracy between the various accused, they would be well justified in suspecting ramifications of the conspiracy elsewhere in the country necessitating investigation into various parts of the country. If the investigating agency suspected a conspiracy to wage war, it was its bounden duty to search for evidence wherever it could be found and not content itself by reading the letters and examining the recipients of the letters. The letters were only items of evidence and not the totality of the evidence. The investigating agency could not, therefore, be blamed for the slow progress that they made in investigating a case of this nature where five persons were seen going towards the Indo-Nepal border in a jeep in an attempt to cross the border and when questioned by the border patrol their answers were not satisfactory, one of them was identified as a dismissed police officer wanted in connection with an order of detention under the National Security Act and incriminating documents were recovered from them with huge cash and they offered a bribe to be allowed to cross the border. Further, the accused did not make any serious protest about any delay until the filing of the present writ petitions. After the charge-sheet was filed, at least on two occasions the prosecuting agency expressed an anxiety to have the case disposed of as expeditiously as possible. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the delay in the investigation and in the trial of the case was held to be not so unfair as to warrant quashing of the proceedings on the ground of infringement of the right of the accused to a speedy trial, a part of their fundamental right under Article 21 of the Constitution. A direction that the trial should start soon and proceed from day to day was all that was called for in the present case. Raghubir Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 149 : (1986) 4 SCC 481 : 1987 CrLJ 157.

[9470] ● Procedure established by law not unconstitutional.—The procedure established by law in Article 21 is the procedure as on the day on which the Constitution was adopted and therefore it cannot be contended that by amending the CrPC the effect of the procedure established by law indicated in Article 21 could be taken away. The procedure must be fair and just as indicated clearly by the trend of decisions of this Court. Even expeditious trial has been considered to be a part of the guarantee under Article 21. At present the procedure established by law as indicated in Article 21 is as provided in Section 327 and unless on facts it is established that that procedure was prevented or was not permitted, it could not be said that merely because trial was held at a particular place it could be said to be a trial which was not open to public. Section 4 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 lays down a procedure established by law and hence it is not unconstitutional. Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), AIR 1988 SC 1883 : (1988) 3 SCC 609 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 711 : 1989 CrLJ 1 : (1988) 3 Crimes 209 : (1988) 15 DRJ 114 : (1988) CalCrLR (SC) 146 : (1988) 2 ACrLR 575 : 1988 BLJR 630.

[9471] ● Curtailment of personal liberty of anti-social and antinational elements.—The law permits the personal liberty of antisocial and antinational elements being curtailed by procedure established by law. And Criminal Procedure Code is one of such law.

Successive bail applications rejected by High Court—if there is no change of circumstances, allowing bail on next bail application is illegal. Criminal Appl. No. 995 of 1989, dated 8-6-1989 (Bombay) Reversed. State of Maharashtra v. Buddhikota Subba Rao, AIR 1989 SC 2292 : 1989 Supp (2) SCC 605 : 1989 CrLJ 2317.

[9472] ● Article 21 of Constitution not attracted in case of trade or business.—Article 21 of the Constitution is not attracted in case of trade or business either big or small. The right to carry on any trade or business and the concept of life and personal liberty within Article 21 are too remote to be connected together. Sadan Singh v. New Delhi Municipal Committee, AIR 1989 SC 1988 (1996, 1997) : (1989) 4 SCC 155 : JT 1989 SC 553 : 1990 UJ SC 187.

[9473] ● Death sentence exception rather than rule.—As this Court is bound by the law laid down by this Court in the case of Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 898, it is not possible to reconsider the constitutional validity of the statutory provisions in the I.P.C. providing for the sentence of death. Only six sections of the I.P.C., namely, Sections 120-B, 121, 132, 302, 307 and 396, enable the imposition of the sentence of death. The doctrine that the benefit of reasonable doubt should be given to the accused holds the field. Under the present criminal law the imposition of a death sentence is an exception (for which special reasons must be given) rather than the rule and statistics disclose that mere 29 persons were hanged when 85, 000 murders were committed during the period 1974 to 1978. Besides, Articles 21 and 134 of the Constitution specifically contemplate the existence of a death penalty. In the circumstances, the matter may lie where it does. Kehar Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 653 : (1989) 1 SCC 204 : 1989 CrLJ 941 : (1989) 1 Crimes 238 : (1989) 37 DLT 171.

[9474] ● Appeal disposed of without hearing counsel.—Where the Court appointed counsel but he did not appear during appeal hearing and appeal was disposed of without hearing him appeal is liable to be remanded to be heard in presence of both sides. Jayendra Kumar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1990 SC 1224 : 1990 CrLJ 1326 : 1990 Supp SCC 777.

[9475] ● Custodial death.—A few suspects were arrested and brought to the police station and were subjected to torture in third degree method which entailed death of a suspect in police custody. Resort to third degree method by police officers resulting in death of the person in police custody, is an offence of a serious nature aggravated by the fact that it is committed by a person who is supposed to protect the citizens and not misuse his uniform and authority to brutally assault them while in his custody. Death in police custody must be seriously viewed for otherwise it will be taking a stride in the direction of police raj. It must be curbed with a heavy hand. The punishment should be such as would deter others from indulging in such behaviour. There can be no room for leniency. The Supreme Court further held that custodial death calls for deterrent sentence. Gauri Shankar Sharma v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 709 : 1990 Supp SCC 656.

[9476] ● Inordinate delay in investigation.—A lethargic and lackadaisical manner of investigation over a prolonged period makes an accused in a criminal proceedings to live every moment under extreme emotional and mental stress and strain and to remain always under a fear psychosis. Therefore, it is imperative that if investigation of a criminal proceeding staggers on with tardy pace due to the indolence or inefficiency of the investigating agency causing unreasonable and substantial delay resulting in grave prejudice or disadvantage to the accused, the Court as the protector of the right and personal liberty of the citizen will step in and resort to the drastic remedy of quashing further proceedings in such investigation. While so, there are offences of grave magnitude such as diabolical crimes of conspiracy or clandestine crimes committed by members of the underworld with their tentacles spread over various parts of the country or even abroad. The very nature of such offences would necessarily involve considerable time for unearthing the crimes and bringing the culprits to book. Therefore, it is not possible to formulate inflexible guidelines or rigid principles or uniform application for speedy investigation or to stipulate any arbitrary period of limitation within which investigation in a criminal case should be completed. State of Andhra Pradesh v. P.V. Pavithran, AIR 1990 SC 1266 : (1990) 2 SCC 340 : 1990 CrLJ 1306 : (1990) 2 Crimes 40 (SC).

[9477] ● Free legal aid.—Though Article 39A of the Constitution provides fundamental rights to equal just and free legal aid and though the State provides amicus curiae to defend the indigent accused, he would be meted out with unequal defence if, as is common knowledge the youngster from the Bar who has either a little experience or no experience is assigned to defend him. It is high time that senior counsel practising in the Court concerned, volunteer to defend such indigent accused as a part of their professional duty. If these remedial steps are taken and an honest and objective investigation is done, it will enhance a sense of confidence of the public in the investigating agency. Kishore Chand v. State of H.P., AIR 1990 SC 2140 : (1991) 1 SCC 286 : 1990 CrLJ 2289.

[9478] ● Duty of police to take proper care of person taken in custody.—In this case the victim for a very brief time was in custody of a Hawaldar. There was a looting of Railway passengers by a crowd who beat up several persons including the one deceased, Mahesh Mahto who received serious injuries. The deceased had to be taken to the hospital for treatment. As no transport was available, the Hawaldar hired a rickshaw and tied the deceased in unconscious state with a rope by the footboard for being taken to hospital. There was negligence in timely providing proper medical treatment to the deceased due to which he could not be saved. The case was brought by the Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee under Article 32 of the Constitution on the basis of an information published in the Illustrated Weekly of India. After going through the affidavit and counter-affidavit, the Supreme Court observed it is the duty of the police to take proper care of a person taken into custody including providing of medical treatment in case of its need. The Court directed the compensation of Rs. 20,000/- to be paid by the State of Bihar to the legal representatives of the deceased. Legal Aid Committee v. State of Bihar, (1991) 3 SCC 482 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 639.

[9479] ● Custodial death.—Suman Behera aged 26 was arrested by an Asstt. Sub-Inspector of Police at 8.00 a.m. on an allegation of theft on 01.12.1987. Next day his dead body with multiple injuries were found on a railway track. This obviously was a custodial death. The matter came on the anvil of the Apex Court on a letter by Nilabati, the mother of Suman which letter their Lordships treated as a petition under Article 32, Constitution. The State of Orissa and its police officers, including Sarat Chandra Barik, Asstt. Sub-Inspector of Police and Constable No. 127, Chhabil Kujur of Police Outpost Jaraikela, Police Station Bisra were impleaded as respondents in this petition. The defence of the respondents was that Suman Behara managed to escape from police custody at about 3.00 a.m. on the night between the 1st and 2nd December, 1987 from the Police Outpost Jeraikela, where he was detained and guarded by Police Constable Chhabil Kujur; he could not be apprehended thereafter in spite of a search; and the dead body of Suman Behra was found on the railway track the next day with multiple injuries which indicated that he was run over by a passing train after he had escaped from police custody. In short, on the basis the allegation of custodial death was denied and consequently the respondents' responsibility for the unnatural death of Suman. The admitted facts are that Suman Behara was taken in police custody on 01.12.1987 at 8.00. a.m. and he was found dead the next day on the railway track near the Police Outpost Jeraikela, without being released from custody, and his death was unnatural caused by multiple injuries sustained by him. The burden is, therefore, clearly on the respondents to explain how Suman Behara sustained those injuries which caused his death. Unless a plausible explanation is given by the respondents, consistent with their innocence, the obvious inference will be that the fatal injuries were inflicted by the police officials. Nilabati Behara v. State of Orissa, AIR 1993 SC 1960 : (1993) 2 SCC 746 : 1993 CrLJ 2899 : (1993) 2 SCJ 487.

[9480] ● Custodial death—Compensation—Quantum.—The injuries on the person of Suman were examined by a medical expert who opined that the injuries were caused by hard and blunt substance; the injuries on the face and left temporal region were post-mortem while the rest were ante-mortem. The doctor excluded the possibility of the injuries resulting from dragging of the body by a running train and stated that all the ante-mortem injuries could be caused by lathi blows. It was further stated by the doctor that while all the injuries could not be caused in a train accident, it was possible to cause all the injuries by lathi blows. Thus, the medical evidence comprising the testimony of the doctor, who conducted the post-mortem, excludes the possibility of all the injuries to Suman Behara being caused in a train accident while indicating that all of them could result from the merciless beating given to him. This Court holds that it is a custodial death caused by the Respondent Police Officer.

Reimposes a compensation to the tune of Rs. 1,50,000/- to be paid by the Orissa Govt. to the mother of the victim. Nilabati Behara v. State of Orissa, AIR 1993 SC 1960 : (1993) 2 SCC 746 : 1993 CrLJ 2899 : (1993) 2 SCJ 487.

[9481] ● Misappropriation of Public Fund—Extraordinary delay in filing charge-sheet.—In a case delinquent was the Manager under the Bihar State Co-operative Marketing Union. On verification, it was found that fertilizer worth Rs. 1,15,000/- was short. The delinquent was suspended pending enquiry into the allegations on 2.7.1977. In the year 1978, he was dismissed from service and the provident fund and gratuity due to him was also forfeited. The delinquent crossed the age of superannuation even by 1989. The FIR in that behalf was issued on 10.12.1977. It is stated that he surrendered in Court in January, 1978 and was enlarged on bail. Be that as it may, the charge-sheet was filed on February 9, 1983 – after a lapse of more than five years. Thereafter, the prosecution evidence was adduced and charges framed by the Court on 25th April, 1989 – another six years. The charges were framed under Sections 408 and 428, IPC and Section 7 of the Essential Commodities Act. In view of this inordinate delay the Supreme Court quashed the proceeding. The Court observed : "It is true that the charges against the appellant relate to misappropriation of public funds. In such a case, we should take a more strict view as indicated in the Constitution Bench decision in Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, AIR 1992 SC 1701. But there are certain circumstances in this case which induce us to interfere in the matter. The most glaring one is that even though the FIR was issued on 10th December, 1977, the charge-sheet was filed only on 9th February, 1983, i.e. after a lapse of 5 years. No explanation is forthcoming for this extraordinary delay. May be, this being a case of misappropriation of public funds, the investigation may have taken a longer time but it cannot certainly take more than five years, having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case. Added to the said circumstances is the fact that even though there was no stay in this Special Leave Petition/ Criminal Appeal, the case has not progressed much as stated above. Moreover, the appellant has been dismissed from service on these very allegations. His provident fund and gratuity amounts have been forfeited and he has crossed the age of superannuation. Calling upon defence, after 16 years, in all the facts and circumstances of the case, is bound to cause prejudice to him. Biswanath Prosad v. State of Bihar, AIR 1993 SCW 3631 : 1994 Supp (3) SCC 97 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1663 : 1994 CrLJ 242 (SC).

[9482] ● Bribery case—Delayed proceedings.—In a case involving offence of bribery no action was taken by prosecution for long six years after the raid being conducted. The public prosecutor consistently opined that there is no case against the delinquent. Sanctioning authority on his independent assessment refused to accord sanction. Later on he changed his view on asking by D.I.G., Police. Prosecution was pending for long 13 years. It was held to be a fit case for quashing the prosecution. Ramananda Choudhury v. State of Bihar, AIR 1994 SC 948 : 1994 CrLJ 1221 (SC).

[9483] ● Delayed trial—Quashing of proceedings.—In a case no charge was framed even ten years after filing of police report and eighteen years after the occurrence, the accused being in no way responsible for the delay. Quashing the proceeding, Supreme Court held that even apart from Article 21, Constitution of India, Courts have been cognizant of undue delays in criminal matters and wherever there was inordinate delay or where the proceedings were pending for too long and any further proceedings were deemed to be oppressive and unwarranted, they were put to an end by making appropriate orders. Whether the delay would result in infringement of right to fair trial would depend on the facts and circumstances of each case and no outer limit beyond which prosecution should be halted can be fixed. Ganga Ram v. State of Rajasthan, 1994 CrLJ 2125 (SC) : (1994) 2 Raj LW 367.

[9484] ● Speedy trial essential part of fundamental right to life and liberty.—The concept of speedy trial is read into Article 21 as an essential part of the fundamental right of life and liberty guaranteed and preserved under our Constitution. The right to speedy trial begins with the actual restraint imposed by arrest and consequent incarceration and continues at all stages, namely, the state of investigation, inquiry, trial, appeal and revision so that any possible prejudice that may result from impermissible and avoidable delay from the time of the commission of the offences till it consummates into a finality, can be averted. In this context, it may be noted that the constitutional guarantee of speedy trial is properly reflected in Section 309, CrPC. Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569 : 1994 CrLJ 3139 (SC) : JT 1994 (2) SC 423 : 1994 Supp (1) Scale 1 : 1994 (1) CCR 162 (SC).

[9485] ● Inhuman torture of innocent lady by police officers.—One innocent lady after being taken into custody inhumanely tortured by police officers and these police officers stood trial for this torture. Delay in trial was occasioned mainly by delaying tactics of the delinquent police officers – held on the ground of inordinate delay such a trial cannot be quashed. [It is a case where Runu Guha Neogy, Inspector of Police was tried for torture on Archana Guha who was rendered crippled and handicapped]. The Supreme Court observed : "The facts of this case impel us to say how easy it has become today to delay the trial of criminal cases. An accused can stall the proceedings for decades together, if he has the means to do so. This Court expect the superior Courts to resist all such attempts. Unless a grave illegality is committed, the superior Courts should not interfere. They should allow the Court which is seized of the matter to go on with it. There is always an appellate Court to correct the errors. One should keep in mind the principle behind Section 465, CrPC. Any and every irregularity or infraction of a procedural provision cannot constitute a ground for interference by a superior Court unless such irregularity or infraction has caused irreparable prejudice to the party and requires to be corrected at the trial stage itself, because such frequent interference by superior Courts at the interlocutory stages tends to defeat the ends of Justice instead of serving those ends. It should not be that a man with enough means is able to keep the law at bay. That would mean the failure of the very system. Santosh De v. Archana Guha, (1994) 2 SCC 420 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 546 : 1995 CrLJ 2640 (SC) : JT 1994 (1) SC 413 : 1994 (1) Crimes 548.

[9486] ● Custodial death—Police atrocities.—Haiklkandi (Assam) Bar Association brought to the attention of the Supreme Court about torture in Police Custody and consequential death of one Nurul Haq, the police attempt to bury the dead body of whom after a post-mortem examination without informing his family had been repeatedly foiled by the public. This Court treating it as writ petition under Article 32, Constitution directed the Director General of Police to investigate and report. The Director General caused an investigation by Superintendent of Police. The statement in the report was that Nurul Haq was a notorious docoit who was manhandled by the members of the public. The further police report that post-morterm report did not indicate any external injury over the dead body was factually incorrect. This Court called an explanation of the Superintendent of Police and he by an affidavit stated that the word "no" had been inadvertently added. Even the police have registered an offence under Section 302, I.P.C. against unknown persons. The story that the members of the public beat him raised doubts because in that case the wrath of the public would not have been towards the police and the Bar Association would not have taken up the cause. The medical examination report of 12.3.1993 was not forthcoming nor was the laboratory report on the viscera available. The fact that the deceased was beaten up is not in doubt. He had fractured a bone. In the circumstances if it is believed that he died of cardiac failure there can be no doubt that those who caused the injuries have committed grievous hurt. The possibility of the police having caused injuries cannot be ruled out altogether. Since the local police at the highest level has taken a stand that the assault on the deceased was by members of the public and not the police after the apprehension of the deceased it is futile to expect an independent and wholly objective investigation by the State police. Even otherwise, the people will have little confidence in the investigation no matter how honest and objective the investigation be. In this backdrop C.B.I. enquiry is directed. Secretary, Hailakandi Bar, Association v. State of Assam, 1995 Supp (3) SCC 736 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 90 : 1994 CrLJ 2197 (SC).

[9487] ● Handcuffing of under-trials.—"We are satisfied that the petitioners are educated persons and selflessly devoting their service to the public cause. They are not the persons who have got tendency to escape from the jail custody. In fact, petitioners 1 and 2 even refused to come out on bail, but chose to continue in prison for a public cause. The offence for which they were tried and convicted under Section 186 of Indian Penal Code is only a bailable offence. Even assuming that they obstructed public servants in discharge of their public functions during the 'dharna' or raised any slogan inside or outside the Court, that would not be sufficient cause to handcuff them. Further, there was no reason for handcuffing them while taking them to Court from jail. On judicial order by a competent Court, that person comes within the judicial custody of the Court. Therefore, the taking of a person from a prison to the Court or back from Court to the prison by the escort party is only under the judicial orders of the Court. Therefore, even if extreme circumstances necessitate the escort party to bind the persons in fetters, the escort party should record the reasons for doing so in writing and the Court is to approve or disapprove the action of the escort party and issue necessary directions. It is most painful to note that the petitioners 1 and 2 who staged a 'dharna' for public cause and voluntarily submitted themselves for arrest and who had no tendency to escape had been subjected to humiliation by being handcuffed which act of the escort party is against all norms of decency and which is in utter violation of the principle underlying Article 21 of the Constitution of India. This Court in Khedat Mazdoor Chetna v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1995 SC 31 : 1994 (6) SCC 260 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1643 : 1995 CrLJ 508 : JT 1994 (6) SC 60, has severely condemned the attitude of judicial Magistrate in not taking any action against handcuffing of undertrial prisoners who were fighting for unliftment of Adivasis. During the transit between prison house and Court house no undertrial prisoners can be put under handcuffs. It is directed that the judicial officers before whom the prisoner is produced to interrogate the prisoner, as a rule, whether he has been subjected to handcuffs or other 'irons' treatment and if he has been, the official concerned shall be asked to explain the action forthwith in the light of this judgment. Citizens for Democracy v. State of Assam, AIR 1996 SC 2193 : (1995) 3 SCC 743 : 1996 CrLJ 3247.

[9488] ● Speedy trial—Release of under trials languishing in Jail—Guidelines as to.—The enforcement of the guidelines by the subordinate Courts functioning in different States should be the responsibility of the different High Courts to which they are subordinate. General orders for release of under-trials without reference to specific fact-situations in different cases may prove to be hazardous. While there can be no doubt under-trial prisoners should not languish in jails on account of refusal to enlarge them on bail for want of their capacity to furnish bail with monetary obligations, these are matters which have to be dealt with on case to case basis keeping in mind the guidelines laid down by this Court. Sympathy for the under-trials who are in jail for long terms on account of the pendency of cases has to be balanced having regard to the impact of crime, more particularly, serious crime, on society and these considerations have to be weighed having regard to the fact-situations in pending cases. While there can be no doubt that trials of those accused of crimes should be disposed of as early as possible, general orders in regard to judge-strength of subordinate judiciary in each State must be attended to, and its functioning overseen, by the High Court of the concerned State. Hussainara Khatoon v. Home Secretary, State of Bihar, (1995) 5 SCC 326 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 913 : 1995 CrLJ 4020 (SC) : 1995 (3) Crimes 501 : 1995 (3) CCR 105 (SC).

[9489] ● Convict killed by co-accused in Jail.—A convict in jail was killed by a co-convict in jail. It amounted to violation of Article 21, Constitution and the State Government was directed to pay compensation to the tune of Rs. 1,00, 000/- to the wife and children of the deceased. Kewal Pati v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (1995) 3 SCC 600 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 556 : 1995 CrLJ 2920 : 1995 (2) Crimes 304 : 1995 (3) CCR 1 (SC).

[9490] ● Abduction and elimination of seven prisoners by police party—Compensation.—Police force abducted some persons and possibly assassinated them. The complaint about the assassination was not being conducted for a long time. The Supreme Court directed the State to which the police party belonged to pay Rs. 1,50,000/- to the legal representative of each person abducted. Inder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1995 SC 1949 : (1995) 3 SCC 702 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 586 : 1995 CrLJ 3235 (SC) : JT 1995 (9) SC 627 : 1995 (3) CCR 30 (SC).

[9491] ● Speedy trial.—Respondent when he himself contributes to the delay in disposal of trial, he cannot be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong and take shelter under "Speedy trial" plea to escape from prosecution. Union of India v. Ashok Kumar Mitra, AIR 1995 SC 1976 : (1995) 2 SCC 768 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 425 : 1995 CrLJ 3633 (SC) : (1995) 1 Crimes 852 (SC) : 1995 (2) CCR 2 (SC).

[9492] ● Delay in disposal of complaint—Quashing of complaint.—There was delay in disposal of complaint case for 12 years–complainant not being responsible for delay and the question of delay was not agitated before the High Court. The Apex Court refused to quash the complaint. G.N. Hedge v. S. Bangarappa, (1995) 4 SCC 41 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 634 : 1995 CrLJ 2935 (SC) : JT 1995 (4) SC 124 : 1995 (2) Crimes 306 : 1995 (4) CCR 20 (SC).

[9493] ● Accused not permitted to take advantage of his own wrong.—If the accused contributes to delay in disposal of trial, he cannot be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong and take shelter under "Speedy Trial" to escape from prosecution. Union of India v. Ashok Kumar Mitra, AIR 1995 SC 1976 : (1995) 2 SCC 768 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 425 : 1995 CrLJ 3633 (SC) : (1995) 1 Crimes 852 (SC) : 1995 (2) CCR 2 (SC).

[9494] ● Habeas corpus petition—Death of accused for non-production before Magistrate.—The two sons and the husband of a lady who filed a habeas corpus petition to Court, were taken to police custody. Telegrams and letters were sent to various authorities complaining about illegal detention of them. The police who took them into custody on 27.4.1994 did not produce them before any Magistrate. It was only after the writ of habeas corpus was issued the husband was reported dead and the two sons were produced before a Magistrate. The Apex Court after expressing great concern for non-production of the accused earlier before a Magistrate directed enquiry about the death of the husband by Director General of Police, Punjab. Haribans Kaur v. Union of India, (1995) 1 SCC 623 : (1995) 1 Crimes 204 (SC).

[9495] ● Criminal appeal—Delay in disposal of.—Although crime never dies nor there should be any sympathy for the criminal, yet human factors play an important role and reflect advertently or inadvertently in the decision making process. In this appeal there is a time lag of more than eighteen years from the date of incident and nearly fifteen years from the date of acquittal and its hearing. By any standard it is shocking. And this has been aggravated by still more shocking behaviour of the Government which shall be adverted to later. Speedy trial, early hearing and quick disposal are sine qua non of criminal jurisprudence. In some countries like England days are fixed statutorily for trial of cases. Keeping an accused in custody for a day more than it is necessary, is constitutionally impermissible and violative of human dignity, freedom of life and liberty. The overcrowded Court dockets, the phenomenal rise of public interest litigation, duty to ensure enforcement of fundamental rights undoubtedly keeps this Court under stress and strain. But that cannot be an excuse for keeping the sword of Damocles hanging on the accused for an indefinite period of time, it does not do any credit rather makes one sad. If the accused is not granted bail and serves out the sentence then the appeal is rendered academic for all practical purposes. And the right to establish innocence fades away in lack of enthusiasm and interest. If he is granted bail then long delay may give rise to humane considerations. Time heals the gravest scar and mitigates deepest injury suffered physically, mentally and emotionally. Therefore, if the Courts have been rendered helpless and the exasperating delay is threatening to eat away the system the Government may consider either to increase the strength to clear the backlog or devise some mechanism by which criminal appeals pending for more than reasonable time in higher Courts should stand disposed of. State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, (1995) 2 SCC 486 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 418 : 1995 CrLJ 1456 (SC) : JT 1995 (1) SC 433 : 1995 (1) CCR 83 (SC) : 1995 (2) Crimes 142 : 1995 (71) FLR 150.

[9496] ● Anticipatory bail—Not granted as of right.—Anticipatory bail cannot be granted as a matter of right. It is essentially a statutory right conferred long after the coming into force of the Constitution. It cannot be considered as an essential ingredient of Article 21 of the Constitution. And its non-application to a certain special category of offences cannot be considered as violative of Article 21. State of M.P. v. Ram Kishna Balothia, AIR 1995 SC 1198 (1201) : (1995) 3 SCC 221 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 439 : 1995 CrLJ 2076.

[9497] ● Right to life.—Right to life includes livelihood. Consumer Education Society v. Union of India, AIR 1995 SC 922.

[9498] ● Handcuffing of prisoners.—As to handcuffing a prisoner the Supreme Court : "We declare, direct and lay down as a rule that handcuffs or other fetters shall not be forced on a prisoner—convicted or undertrial—while lodged in a jail anywhere in the country or while transporting or in transit from one jail to another or from jail to Court and back. The police and the jail authorities, on their own, shall have no authority to direct the handcuffing of any inmate of a jail in the country or during transport from one jail to another or from jail to Court and back. Where the police or the jail authorities have well-grounded basis for drawing a strong inference that a particular prisoner is likely to jump jail or break out of the custody then the said prisoner be produced before the Magistrate concerned and a prayer for permission to handcuff the prisoner be made before the said Magistrate. Save in rare cases of concrete proof regarding proneness of the prisoner to violence, his tendency to escape, he being so dangerous/desperate and the finding that no other practical way of forbidding escape is available, the Magistrate may grant permission to handcuff the prisoner. In all the cases where a person arrested by police is produced before the Magistrate and remand—judicial or non-judicial custody—is given by the Magistrate the person concerned shall not be handcuffed unless special orders in that respect are obtained from the Magistrate at the time of the grant of the remand. When the police arrests a person in execution of a warrant of arrest obtained from a Magistrate, the person so arrested shall not be handcuffed unless the police has also obtained orders from the Magistrate for the handcuffing of the person to be so arrested. Where a person is arrested by the police without warrant the police officer concerned may if he is satisfied, on the basis of the guidelines given by us in para above, that it is necessary to handcuff such a person, he may do so till the time he is taken to the police station and thereafter his production before the Magistrate. Further use of fetters thereafter can only be under the orders of the Magistrate as already indicated. This Court direct all ranks of police and the prison authorities to meticulously obey the above mentioned directions. Any violation of any of the directions issued by us by any rank of police in the country or member of the jail establishment shall be summarily punishable under the Contempt of Courts Act apart from other penal consequences under law." Citizens of Democracy v. State of Assam, AIR 1996 SC 2193 : (1995) 3 SCC 743 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 600 : JT 1995 (4) SC 475.

[9499] ● Rape case—Compensation—Award of.—In a case a male lecturer of a college and a lady student fell in love with each other. The accused having induced the victim to believe by false assurance that he would marry the victim developed sex relationship resulting in the victim being pregnant. On the plea that the parents of the accused would object and the marriage should be deferred till the accused gets a government job the marriage stood deferred. Eventually the accused entered in a fake marriage secretly before the God he worshipped and put vermilion on the parting of hair and on the forehead of the victim. The pregnancy was aborted. Again she conceived through the accused and in a Nursing home the pregnancy was terminated. In the Nursing home the accused named Bodhisatta Gautam in the consent letter for M.T.P. signed his name as Bikash Gautam. The victim complained alleging offences under Sections 312, 420, 493, 496 and 498-A, I.P.C. The accused failed to have the complaint quashed before High Court. The accused approached the Apex Court and the Court suo motu granted interim compensation to the victim under Article 21, Constitution in exercise of power under Article 32 as also under Article 142, Constitution of India. The jurisdiction enjoyed under Article 32, Constitution by the Supreme Court is very wide as the Court while considering a petition for enforcement of any of the fundamental rights guaranteed in Part III of the Constitution, can declare an Act to be ultra vires or beyond the competence of the legislature and has also the power to award compensation for the violation of the Fundamental Rights. Bodhisatta Gautam v. Subhra Chakraborty, AIR 1996 SC 922 : (1996) 1 SCC 490 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 133 : (1995) 4 Crimes 722 (SC).

[9500] ● Misappropriation of money— Sanction for prosecution.—An Asstt. Godown Manager within a period of three months of his posting misappropriated a large sum of money in 1976 and earlier. A departmental enquiry commenced on December 12, 1979 and initially the prosecution was laid in 1985 without obtaining the sanction. The learned Magistrate discharged the respondent on the ground that the sanction as required under Section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 was not obtained. In 1991, the sanction was obtained and thereafter the prosecution was laid. The quashing of prosecution for delay is not interfered with. Bihar State Food & Civil Corpn. v. Narendra Kumar, (1996) 7 SCC 183 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 248 : JT 1995 (9) SC 293 : 1995 (6) Scale 733 : 1996 (1) CCR 63 (SC) : (1995) 4 Crimes 767 (SC).

[9501] ● Rape—Crime against woman.—Unfortunately, a woman, in our country, belongs to a class or group of society who are in a disadvantaged position on account of several social barriers and impediments and have, therefore, been the victim of tyranny at the hands of men with whom they, fortunately, under the Constitution enjoy equal status. Women also have the right to life and liberty; they also have the right to be respected and treated as equal citizens. Their honour and dignity cannot be touched or violated. They also have the right to lead an honourable and peaceful life. Women, in them, have many personalities combined. They are mother, daughter, sister and wife and not playthings for centrespreads in various magazines, periodicals or newspapers nor can they be exploited for obscene purposes. They must have the liberty, the freedom and, of course, independence to live the roles assigned to them by nature so that the society may flourish as they alone have the talents and capacity to shape the destiny and character of men anywhere and in every part of the world. Rape is thus not only a crime against the person of a woman (victim), it is a crime against the entire society. It destroys the entire psychology of a woman and pushes her into deep emotional crisis. It is only by her sheer will power that she rehabilitates herself in the society which, on coming to know of the rape, looks down upon her in derision and contempt. Rape is, therefore, the most hated crime. It is a crime against basic human rights and is also violative of the victim's most cherished of the fundamental rights, namely, the Right to Life contained in Article 21. To many feminists and psychiatrists, rape is less a sexual offence than act of aggression aimed at degrading and humiliating women. The rape laws do not, unfortunately, take care of the social aspect of the matter and are inept in many respects. It is said that present days' law relating to rape have their origin in 1736 in Britain, when Sir Mathew Hale in his Historia Placitorum Coronae or, in other words, "History of the Pleas of the Crown" presented common-law rape doctrines which were immediately noticed to be hostile to the interests of women as one of the requirements was to inform the jury during trial that rape charges were easy to bring but difficult to defend. Consequently, in a tide of law reforms, this requirement was removed. The rule of corroboration which was much stricter in a trial for the offence of rape than for other offences was also largely removed from law. Bodhisatta Gautam v. Subhra Chakraborty, AIR 1996 SC 922 : (1996) 1 SCC 490 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 133 : JT 1995 (9) SC 509 : (1995) 4 Crimes 722 (727) (SC) : 1996 (1) CCR 81 (SC).

[9502] ● Right to live includes right to livelihood.—It is no doubt true that right to live includes right to livelihood. However, the appellant is not denied his right to livelihood. He is already a professional carrying on the profession of a medical practitioner. He wants to have a second string to his bow. He wants simultaneously to be permitted to practice law with a view to earn additional or more livelihood. So far as his aforesaid demand is concerned the impugned rule requires that unless he gives up that other practice and joins wholeheartedly the legal profession he cannot be permitted to enter the legal profession. That rule cannot be said to be laying down a procedure not established by law. On the contrary that procedure has been found to be well sustained under Article 19(1)(g) of the Constitution read with Article 19(6). Once that conclusion is reached the absolute requirement of Article 21 would be out of the way. Appellant cannot be said to have been deprived of his right to livelihood by pursuing two professions, contrary to any established procedure of law. Consequently the impugned rule cannot be faulted on the touchstone of Article 21. Haniraj L. Chulani (Dr.) v. Bar Council of Maharashtra & Goa, AIR 1996 SC 1708 (1719) : (1996) 3 SCC 342 : JT 1996 (4) SC 162.

[9503] ● Right to life and equality clause—Applicable to every person.—We are a country governed by the Rule of Law. Our Constitution confers certain rights on every human-being and certain other rights on citizens. Every person is entitled to equality before the law and equal protection of the laws. So also, no person can be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law. Thus, the State is bound to protect the life and liberty of every human-being, be he a citizen or otherwise, and it cannot permit anybody or group of persons, e.g., the AAPSU, to threaten the chakmas to leave the State, failing which they would be forced to do so. No State Government worth the name can tolerate such threats by one group of persons to another group of persons; it is duty bound to protect the threatened group from such assaults and if it fails to do so, it will fail to perform its constitutional as well as statutory obligations. Those given such threats would be liable to be dealt with in accordance with law. The State Government must act impartially and carry out its legal obligations to safeguard the life, health and well-being of chakmas residing in the State without being inhibited by local politics. Besides, by refusing to forward their applications, the chakmas are denied rights, constitutional and statutory, to be considered for being registered as citizens of India. In view of the above, we allow this petition and direct the first and second respondents, by way of a writ of mandamus, as under: (1) the first respondent, the State of Arunachal Pradesh, shall ensure that the life and personal liberty of each and every chakma residing within the State shall be protected and any attempt to forcibly evict or drive them out of the State by organised groups, such as the AAPSU, shall be repelled, if necessary, by requisitioning the service of Paramilitary or Police force, and if additional forces are considered necessary to carry out this direction, the first respondent will request the second respondent, the Union of India, to provide such additional force and the second respondent shall provide such additional force as is necessary to protect the lives and liberty of the chakmas; (2) except in accordance with law, the chakmas shall not be evicted from their homes and shall not be denied domestic life and comfort therein; (3) the quit notices and ultimatums issued by the AAPSU and any other group which tantamount to threats to the life and liberty of each and every chakma should be dealt with by the first respondent in accordance with law; (4) the application made for registration as citizen of India by the chakma or chakmas under Section 5 of the Citizenship Act, 1955, shall be entered in the register maintained for the purpose and shall be forwarded by the Collector or the DC who receives them under the relevant rule, with or without enquiry, as the case may be, to the Central Government for its consideration in accordance with law; even returned applications shall be called back or fresh ones shall be obtained from the concerned persons and shall be processed and forwarded to the Central Government for consideration; (5) while the application of any individual chakma is pending consideration, the first respondent shall not evict or remove the concerned person from his occupation on the ground that he is not a citizen of India until the competent authority has taken a decision in that behalf. National Human Rights Commission v. State of Arunachal Pradesh, AIR 1996 SC 1234 (1239) : (1996) 1 SCC 742 : JT 1996 (1) SC 163.

[9504] ● Directions by Supreme Court in respect of prosecution in criminal Courts for long time.—It appears essential to issue appropriate directions to protect and effectuate the right to life and liberty of the citizens guaranteed by Article 21 of the Constitution. It is also necessary to ensure that these criminal prosecutions do not operate as engines of oppression. Accordingly, the following directions are made which shall be valid not only for the States Uttar Pradesh, Bihar and Delhi but for all the States and the Union Territories :

1. (a) Where the offences under IPC or any other law for the time being in force for which the accused are changed before any Criminal Court are punishable with imprisonment not exceeding three years with or without fine and if trials for such offences are pending for one year or more and the concerned accused have not been released on bail but are in Jail for a period of six months or more, the concerned Criminal Court shall release the accused on bail or on personal bond to be executed by the accused and subject to such conditions, if any, as may be found necessary, in the light of Section 437 of the CrPC.

(b) Where the offences under IPC or any other law for the time being in force for which the accused are charged before any Criminal Court are punishable with imprisonment not exceeding five years with or without fine, and if the trials for such offences are pending for two years or more and the concerned accused have not been released on bail but are in Jail for a period of six months or more, the concerned Criminal Court shall release the accused on bail or on personal bond to be executed by the accused and subject to the imposing of suitable conditions, if any, in the light of Section 437, CrPC.

(c) Where the offences under IPC or any other law for the time being in force for which the accused are charged before any Criminal Court are punishable with seven years or less, with or without fine, and if the trials for such offences are pending for two years or more and the concerned accused have not been released on bail but are in jail for a period of one year or more, the concerned Criminal Court shall release the accused on bail or on personal bond to be executed by the accused and subject to imposing of suitable conditions, if any, in the light of Section 437, CrPC.

2. (a) Where criminal proceedings are pending regarding traffic offences in any Criminal Court for more than two years on account of non-serving of summons to the accused or for any other reason whatsoever, the Court may discharge the accused and close the cases.

(b) Where the cases pending in Criminal Courts for more than two years under IPC or any other law for the time being in force are compoundable with permission of the Court and if in such case trial have still not commenced, the Criminal Court shall, after hearing the Public Prosecutor and other parties represented before it or their Advocates, discharge or acquit the accused, as the case may be, and close such cases.

(c) Where the cases pending in Criminal Courts under IPC or any other law for the time being in force pertain to offences which are non-cognizable and bailable and if such pendency is for more than two years and if in such cases trials have still not commenced, the Criminal Court shall discharge or acquit the accused, as the case may be, and close such cases.

(d) Where the cases pending in Criminal Courts under IPC or any other law for the time being in force are pending in connection with offences which are punishable with fine only and are not of recurring nature, and if such pendency is for more than one year and if in such cases trial have still not commenced, the Criminal Court shall discharge or acquit the accused, as the case may be, and close such cases.

(e) Where the cases pending in Criminal Courts under IPC or any other law for the time being in force are punishable with imprisonment up to one year, with or without fine, and if such pendency is for more than one year and if in such cases trials have still not commenced, the Criminal Courts shall discharge or acquit the accused, as the case may be, and close such cases.

(f) Where the cases pending in Criminal Courts under IPC or any other law for the time being in force are punishable with imprisonment up to three years, with or without fine, and if such pendency is for more than two years and if in such cases trials have still not commenced, the Criminal Court shall discharge or acquit the accused, as the case may be, and close such cases.

3. For the purpose of directions contained in clauses (1) and (2) above, the period of pendency of criminal cases shall be calculated from the date the accused are summoned to appear in the Court.

4. Directions (1) and (2) made hereinabove shall not apply to cases of offences involving (a) corruption, misappropriation of public funds, cheating, whether under the Indian Penal Code, Prevention of Corruption Act or any other statute; (b) smuggling, foreign exchange violation and offences under the Narcotics Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act; (c) Essential Commodities Act, Food Adulteration Act, Acts dealing with environment or any other economic offences; (d) offences under Arms Act, Explosive Substances Act, Terrorists and Disruptive Activities Act; (e) offences relating to the Army, Navy and Air Force; (f) offences against public tranquillity; (g) offences relating to public servants; (h) offences relating to coins and Government stamp; (i) offences relating to election; (j) offences relating to giving false evidence and offences against public justice; (k) any other type of offences against the State; (l) offences under the Taxing enactments and (m) offences of defamation as defined in Section 499, IPC. "Common Cause" a registered Society through its Director v. Union of India, AIR 1996 SC 1619 (1620) : (1996) 4 SCC 33 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 589 : 1996 CrLJ 2380.

[9505] ● Right to free legal aid and speedy trial.—The right of free legal aid and speedy trial are guaranteed fundamental rights under Article 21 of the Constitution........ Article 39-A mandates that the State shall provide free legal aid by suitable legislation or scheme or in any other way to ensure that opportunities for securing justice are not denied to any citizen by reason of economic or other disabilities. The principles contained in Article 39-A are fundamental and cast a duty on the State to secure that the operation of the legal system promote justice, on the basis of equal opportunities and further mandates to provide free legal aid in any way by legislation or otherwise, so that justice is not denied to any citizen by reason of economic or other disabilities. The crucial words are (the obligation of the State) to provide free legal aid by suitable legislation or by schemes or in any other way, so that opportunities for securing justice are not denied to any citizen by reason of economic or other disabilities. State of Maharashtra v. Manubhai Pragaji Vashi, AIR 1996 SC 1 (9) : (1995) 5 SCC 730 : JT 1995 (6) SC 119.

[9506] ● Right to speedy trial.—Right to Speedy Trial is guaranteed as a fundamental right under Article 21 of the Constitution. To give meaning to the right remedial measures such as : nominating Special Judges to exclusively try and decide within six months long pending cases of murder; immediate bail by the Court for accused charged with attempt to murder if case pending for more than two years and for accused charged with minor offences if in detention for more than one year may be ordered. R.D. Upadhyay v. State of A. P., (1996) 3 SCC 422 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 519 : (1996) 1 Crimes 189 (SC) : 1996 (3) CCR 96 (SC).

[9507] ● Right to life does not include right to die.—It is a matter of common experience that in many cases where the persons are accused of minor offences punishable not more than three years-or even less - with or without fine, the proceedings are kept pending for years together, if they are poor and helpless, they languish in jails for long periods either because there is no one to think of them. The very pendency of criminal proceedings for long period by itself operates an engine of oppression. Quite often, the private complainants institute these proceedings out of oblique motives. Even in case of offences punishable for seven years or less - with or without fine – the prosecutions are kept pending for years and years together in criminal Courts. In a majority of these cases, whether instituted by police or private complainants, the accused belong to poorer sections of the society, who are unable to afford competent legal advice. Instance have also come before Courts where the accused, who are in jail, are not brought to the Court on every date of hearing and for that reason also the cases undergo several adjournments. It appears essential to issue appropriate directions to protect and effectuate the right to life and liberty of the citizens guaranteed by Article 21 of the Constitution. Directions (1) and (2) made herein above shall not apply to cases of offences involving (a) corruption, misappropriation of public funds, cheating, whether under the Indian Penal Code, Prevention of Corruption Act or any other statute, (b) smuggling foreign exchange violation and offences under the Narcotics Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, (c) Essential Commodities Act, Food Adulteration Act, Acts dealing with Environment or any other economic offences, (d) offences under Arms Act, Explosive Substances Act, Terrorists and Disruptive Activities Act, (e) offences relating to the Army, Navy and Air Force, (f) offences against public tranquillity; (g) offences relating to public servants, (h) offences relating to coins and Government stamp, (i) offences relating to elections, (j) offences relating to giving false evidence and offences against public justice, (k) any other type of offences against the State (l) offences under the Taxing enactment and (m) offences of defamation as defined in Section 499, IPC. The criminal Courts shall try the offences mentioned in preceeding para on a priority basis—Common Cause, a registered society through its Director v. Union of India, AIR 1996 SC 1619 : (1996) 4 SCC 33 : 1996 CrLJ 2380 : (1996) 2 Crimes 114 (SC).

[9508] ● Right to life.—When a man commits suicide he has to undertake certain positive overt act and the genesis of those acts cannot be traced to, or be included within the protection of the 'right of life' under Article 21. The significant aspect of 'sanctity of life' is also not to be overlooked. Article 21 is a provision guaranteeing protection of life and personal liberty and by no stretch of imagination can extinction of life be read to be included in 'protection of life'. Whatever may be the philosophy of permitting a person to extinguish his life by committing suicide, we find it difficult to construe Article 21 to include within it the 'right to die' as a part of the fundamental right guaranteed therein. 'Right to life' is a natural right embodied in Article 21 but suicide is an unnatural termination or extinction of life and, therefore, incompatible and inconsistent with the concept of 'right of life'. With respect and in all humility, we find no similarly in the nature of the other rights, such as the right to 'freedom of speech' etc. to provide a comparable basis to hold that the 'right to life' also includes the 'right to die'. To give meaning and content to the word 'life' in Article 21, it has been construed as life with human dignity. Any aspect of life which makes it dignified may be read into it but not that which extinguishes it and is, therefore, inconsistent with the continued existence of life resulting in effacing the right itself. The 'right to die', if any, is inherently inconsistent with the 'right to life' as is 'death' with 'life'. Section 306, IPC and Section 309, IPC are intra vires the Constitution. Gian Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1996 SC 946 : (1996) 2 SCC 698 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 374 : 1996 CrLJ 1660 (SC) : JT 1996 (3) SC 339 : (1996) 1 Crimes 197 : 1996 (2) CCR 126 (SC) 8.

[9509] ● Custodial death one of worst crimes.—Custodial death is perhaps one of the worst crimes in a civilised society governed by the Rule of Law. The rights inherent in Articles 21 and 22(1) of the Constitution require to be jealously and scruplously protected. We cannot whisk away the problem of any form of torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment would fall within`the inhibition of Article 21 of the constitution, whether it occurs during investigation, interrogation or otherwise. If the functionaries of the government become law breakers, it is bound to breed contempt for law and would encourage law lessness and every man would have the tendency to become law into himself thereby leading to an archanism. No civilized nation can permit that to happen. Does a citizen shed off his fundamental right to life. The moment a policeman arrests him? Can the right to life of a citizen be put in abeyance on his arrest? These questions touch the spinal cord of human rights jurisprudence. The answer, indeed, has to be an emphatic. No the precious right guaranteed by Article 21 of the Constitution of India cannot be denied to convicts, undertrials, detenus and other prisoners in custody, except according to the procedure established by law by placing such reasonable restrictions as are permitted by laws. The Supreme Court, therefore, considered it appropriate is to issue the requirements to be followed in all cases of arrest of detention till legal provisions are made in that behalf as preventive measures. Ashok K Johri v. State of H.P., AIR 1997 SC 610 : (1997) 1 SCC 416 : 1997 CrLJ 743 (SC).

[9510] ● Protection of fundamental rights—Human rights of criminal vis-a-vis duties of Police.—The police in India have to perform a difficult and delicate task, particularly in view of the deteriorating law and order situation communal riots, political turmoil, student unrest, terrorist activities, and among others the increasing number of underworld and armed gangs and criminals. Many hard core criminals like extremists, the terrorists, drug peddlers smugglers who have organised, gangs, have taken strong roots in the society. It is being said in certain quarters that with more and more liberalisation and enforcement of fundamental rights, it would lead to difficulties in the detection of crimes committed by such categories of hardened criminals by soft peddling interrogation. It is felt in those quarters that if we lay too much of emphasis on protection of their fundamental rights and human rights, such criminals may go scot-free without exposing any element or iota of criminality with the result, the crime would go unpunished and in the ultimate analysis the society would suffer. The concern is genuine and the problem is real. To deal with such a situation a balanced approach is needed to meet the ends of justice. This is all the more so, in view of the expectation of the society that police must deal with the criminals in an efficient and effective manner and bring to book those who are involved in the crime. The cure cannot however, be worst than the disease itself. The freedom of an individual must yield to the security of the State. The right of preventive detention of individuals in the interest of security of the State in various situations prescribed under different statutes has been upheld by the Courts. The right to interrogate the detenus, culprits or arrestees in the interest of the nation, must take precedence over an individual's right to personal liberty. The latin maxim Salus populiest suprema lex (the safety of the people is the supreme law) and salus republicae est suprema lex (safety of the state is the supreme law) co exist and are not only important and relevant but lie at the heart of the doctrine that the welfare of an individual must yield to that of the community. The action of the State, however, must be right just and fair. Using any form of torture for extracting any kind of information would neither be right nor just nor fair and, therefore, would be impermissible being offensive of Article 21. Such a crime suspect must be interrogate indeed subjected to sustained and scientific interrogation determined in accordance with the provisions of law. He cannot however, be tortured or subject to third degree methods or eliminated with a view to elicit information, extract confession or drive knowledge about his accomplices, weapons etc. His Constitutional right cannot be abridged except in the manner permitted by law though in the very nature of things there would be qualitative difference in the method of interrogation of such a person as compared to an ordinary criminal. Challenge of terrorism must be met with innovative ideas and approach State terrorism is no answer to combat terrorism. State terrorism would only provide legitimacy to terrorism. That would be bad for the State, the community and above all for the Rule of Law. The State must, therefore, ensure that various agencies deployed by it for combating terrorism act within the bounds of law and not become law unto themselves. That the terrorist has violated human rights of innocent citizens may render him liable for punishment but it cannot justify the violation of his human rights except in the manner permitted by law. Need, therefore, is to develop scientific methods of investigation and train the investigators properly to interrogate to meet the challenge. Ashok K. Johari v. State of U.P., AIR 1997 SC 610 : (1997) 1 SCC 416 : 1997 CrLJ 743.

[9511] ● Death sentence—Mass murders.—Sentence of life imprisonment to these six accused persons would be totally inadequate in the facts and circumstances of this case. The proved facts and this case unmistakably indicate that the present case squarely falls within the ambit of "rarest of rare" case. Five murders were committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting or dastardly manner which would arouse intense and extreme indignation of the community. Award of lesser punishment to these six accused persons would disintegrate the rule of law upon which the edifice of Indian civilized society stands. Shiv Ram v. State of U.P., AIR 1998 SC 49 : (1998) 1 SCC 149 : 1998 CrLJ 76 (88,89) (SC).

[9512] ● Fair trial—Public hearing in Court.—It is settled that the requirement of a public hearing in a Court of law for a fair trial is subject to the need of proceeding being held in camera to the extent necessary in public interest and to avoid prejudice to the accused. The Apex Court consider it appropriate to mention these facts in view of the nature of these proceedings wherein innovations in procedure were required to be made from time to time to sub-serve the public interest, avoid any prejudice to the accused and to advance the cause of justice. The medium of "continuing mandamus", was a new tool forged because of the peculiar needs to this matter. Vineet Narain v. Union of India, AIR 1998 SC 889 : (1998) 1 SCC 226 : 1998 CrLJ 1208 (SC) : JT 1997 (10) SC 247 : 1997 (7) Scale 656 : 1997 (10) Supreme 476 : 1998 (1) Crimes 518 : 1998 (1) CCR 190.

[9513] ● Speedy justice—Fundamental right.—To have speedy justice is a fundamental right which flows from Article 21 of the Constitution. Prolonged delay in disposal of the trials and thereafter appeals in criminal cases, for no fault of the accused, confers a right upon him to apply for bail. Akhtari Bi v. State of M.P., AIR 2001 SC 1528 (1530) : (2001) 4 SCC 355 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 714 : 2001 CrLJ 1727 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 357 : 2001 CrAppR (SC) 213 : (2001) 2 Crimes 65.

[9514] ● Compensation—Killing of Sikhs in riots.—It is the duty of the state to create a climate where members of the society belonging to different faiths, caste and creed live together and, therefore, the State has a duty to protect their life, liberty, dignity and worth of an individual which should not be jeopardised or endangered. If, in any circumstance the state is not able to do so, then it cannot escape the liability to pay compensation to the family of the person killed during riots as his or her life has been extinguished in clear violation of Article 21. S.S. Ahluwalia v. Union of India, AIR 2001 SC 1309 (1310) : (2001) 4 SCC 452.

[9515] ● Compensation to family during riots.—The State is liable to pay compensation to the family of the Sikhs killed during riots in the wake of assassination of Smt. Indira Gandhi on October 3, 1984 as his or her life has been extinguished in clear violation of Article 21 of the Constitution. S.S. Ahluwalia v. Union of India, AIR 2001 SC 1309 : (2001) 4 SCC 452.

[9516] ● Rape case.—The definition of rape in Section 375 cannot be enlarged so as to induce all forms of penetration such as penile/vaginal penetration, penile/oral penetration, penile/anal penetration finger/vaginal and finger/anal penetration and object/vaginal penetration, as it may violate the guarantee enshrined in Article 20(1) of the Constitution which says that no person shall be convicted of any offence except for violation of a law in force at the time of the commission of the act charged as an offence, nor be subjected to a penalty greater than that which might have been inflicted under the law in force at the time of the commission of the offence. Sakshi v. Union of India, AIR 2004 SC 3566 : (2004) 5 SCC 518 : 2004 CrLJ 2881 (2892) : (2004) 3 Crimes 177.

[9517] ● Expression "personal liberty".—The expression "personal liberty" in Article 21 is of the widest amplitude and it covers a variety of rights which go to constitute the personal liberty of man and some of them have been raised to the status of distinct fundamental rights and given additional protection under Article 19. District Registrar and Collector v. Canara Bank, AIR 2005 SC 186 : (2005) 1 SCC 496 (524) : 2005 CrLJ 143 : (2005) 1 Crimes 12.

[9519] ● Provision when cannot be held arbitrary.—A provision cannot be held to be unreasonable or arbitrary and therefore, unconstitutional, merely because the authority vested with the power may abuse his authority. Ahmad Noormohamed Bharti v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2005 SC 2115 : (2005) 3 SCC 667 : 2005 CrLJ 2157 (2160) : 2005 (2) Crimes 26.

[9520] ● Compensation against the State.—It is thus now settled that award of compensation against the State is an appropriate and effective remedy for redress of an established infringement of a fundamental right under Article 21 by a public servant. The quantum of compensation will, however, depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Award of such compensation (by way of public law remedy) will not come in the way of the aggrieved person claiming additional compensation in a civil Court. In enforcement of the private law remedy in tort, nor come in the way of the criminal Court ordering compensation under Section 357 of Code of Civil Procedure. Sube Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2006 SC 1288 : (2006) 3 SCC 658 : 2006 CrLJ 1242 (1254).

[9521] ● Fair trial—Meaning.—The principles of rule of law and due process are closely linked with human rights protection. Such rights can be protected effectively when a citizen has recourse to the Courts of law. It has to be unmistakably understood that a trial which is primarily aimed at ascertaining the truth has to be fair to all concerned. There can be no analytical, all comprehensive or exhaustive definition of the concept of a fair trial, and it may have to be determined in seemingly infinite variety of actual situations with the ultimate object in mind viz. whether something that was done or said either before or at the trial deprived the quality of fairness to a degree where a miscarriage of justice has resulted. It will not be correct to say that it is only the accused who must be fairly dealt with. That would be turning a Nelson's eye to the needs of the society at large and the victims or their family members and relatives. Each one has an inbuilt right to be dealt with fairly in a criminal trial. Denial of a fair trial is as much injustice to the accused as is to the victim and the society. Fair trial obviously would mean a trial before an impartial Judge, a fair prosecutor and atmosphere of judicial calm. Fair trial means a trial in which bias or prejudice for or against the accused, the witnesses, or the cause which is being tried is eliminated. If the witnesses get threatened or are forced to give false evidence that also would not result in a fair trial. The failure to hear material witnesses is certainly denial of fair trial. Zahira Habibullah Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2006 SC 1367 : (2006) 3 SCC 374 : 2006 CrLJ 1694 (1707, 1708).

[9523] ● Statutory provision otherwise intra vires—Mere possibility of abuse of power could not make it objectionable.—It's statutory provision is otherwise intra vires, constitutional and valid, mere possibility of abuse of power in a given case would not make it objectionable, ultra vires or unconstitutional. In such cases "action" and not the "section" may be valuable. If it is so, the Court upholding the provision of law, may still set aside the action, order or decision and grant appropriate relief to the person aggrieved. Satish Kumar Batra v. State of Haryana, AIR 2009 SC 2180 : (2009) 12 SCC 491 : 2009 CrLJ 2447.

[9524] ● Custodial death due to police torture.—Rarely in cases of police torture or custodial death, there is any direct ocular evidence of the complicity of the police personnel alone who can only explain the circumstances in which a person in their custody had died. Bound as they are by the ties of brotherhood, it is not unknown that the police personnel prefer to remain silent and more often than not even pervert the truth to save the colleagues. Dalbir Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 1674 : 2009 (11) SCC 376 : 2009 (1) SCR 824 : 2009 (2) Scale 188 : 2009 (1) Supreme 739.

[9525] ● Custodial death.—There is an inbuilt guarantee against torture of assault by the State or its functionaries. Chapter V of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (for short the 'Code' deals with the powers of arrest of persons and the safeguards required to be followed by the police to protect the interest of the arrested person. Articles 20(3) and 22 of the Constitution further manifest the constitutional protection extended to every citizen and the guarantees held out for making life meaningful and not a mere animal existence. It is therefore difficult to comprehend how torture and custodial violence can be permitted to defy the rights flowing from the Constitution. Dalbir Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 1674 : 2009 (11) SCC 376 : 2009 CrLJ 1543 : 2009 (1) SCR 824 : 2009 (2) Scale 188 : 2009 (1) Supreme 739.

[9526] ● Personal liberty—Meaning.—Right of personal liberty being sacred and cherished right has an important role to play in life of every citizen. Life or personal liberty includes a right to live with human dignity. Dalbir Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 1674 : (2009) 11 SCC 376 : 2009 CrLJ 1543.

[9527] ● Personal liberty of accused and right of police to investigate.—Personal liberty is fundamental and can be circumscribed only by some process sanctioned by law. Liberty of a citizen is undoubtedly important but this is to balance with the security of the community. A balance is required to be maintained between the personal liberty of the accused and the investigational right of the police. It must result in minimum interference with the personal liberty of the accused and the right of the police to investigate the case. It has to dovetail two conflicting demands, namely, on one hand, the requirements of the society for being shielded from the hazards of being exposed to the misadventures of a person alleged to have committed a crime; and on the other, the fundamental cannon of criminal jurisprudence, viz, the presumption of innocence of an accused till he is found guilty. Liberty exists in proportion to wholesome restrain, the more restraint on others to keep off from us, the more liberty we have. Vaman Narain Ghiya v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2009 SC 1362 : 2009 (2) SCC 281 : 2009 CrLJ 1311 : 2008 (17) SCR 369 : 2008 (16) Scale 346 : 2009 (1) Supreme 478.

[9528] ● Investigation conducted by an officer who had no jurisdiction to do—Accused challenged illegal investigation.—Where the investigation was conducted by an officer who had no jurisdiction to do so, the delay in trial could not be attributed to the accused merely because he successfully exercised his right to challenge an illegal investigation. Vakil Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2009 SC 1822 : (2009) 3 SCC 355 : 2009 CrLJ 1731.

[9529] ● Speedy trial.—Article 21 confers a fundamental right on every person not to be deprived of his life or liberty except according to procedure established by law; that such procedure is not some semblance of a procedure but the procedure should be 'reasonable, fair and just'; and therefrom flows, without doubt, the right to speedy trial. It was also observed that no procedure which does not ensure a reasonably quick trial can be regarded as 'reasonable, fair or just' and it would fall foul of Article 21. The Court clarified the speedy trial means reasonably expeditious trial which is an integral and essential part of the fundamental right to life and liberty enshrined in Article 21. Vakil Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2009 SC 1822 : (2009) 3 SCC 355 : 2009 CrLJ 1731 : 2009 (2) Scale 22 : 2009 (1) Supreme 514 : 2009 (1) SCR 517.

[9530] ● Propositions as guidelines.—Referring to a number of decisions of this Court and the American precedents on the Sixth Amendment of their Constitution, making the right to a speedy and public trial a constitutional guarantee, the Court formulated as many as eleven propositions with a note of caution that these were not exhaustive and were meant only to serve as guidelines. For the sake of brevity, we do not propose to reproduce all the said propositions and it would suffice to note the gist thereof. These are: (i) fair, just and reasonable procedure implicit in Article 21 of the Constitution creates a right in the accused to be tried speedily; (ii) right to speedy trial flowing from Article 21 encompasses all the stages, namely the stage of investigation, inquiry, trial appeal, revision and retrial; (iii) in every case where the speedy trial is alleged to have been infringed, the first question to be put and answered is—who is responsible for the delay; (iv) while determining whether undue delay has occurred (resulting in violation of right to speedy trial) one must have regard to all the attendant circumstances, including nature of offence, number of accused and witnesses, the work-load of the Court concerned, prevailing local conditions and so on—what is called, the systemic delays; (v) each and every delay does not necessarily prejudice the accused. Some delays may indeed work to his advantage. However, inordinately long delay may be taken as presumptive proof of prejudice. In this context, the fact of incarceration of accused will also be a relevant fact. The prosecution should not be allowed to become a persecution. But when does the prosecution become persecution, again depends upon the facts of a given case; (vi) ultimately, the Court has to balance and weigh several relevant factors—'balancing test' or balancing process'—and determine in each case whether the right to speedy trial has been denied; (vii) Ordinarily speaking, where the Court comes to a conclusion that right to speedy trial of an accused has been infringed the charges or the conviction, as the case may be, shall be quashed. But this is not the only course open and having regard to the nature of offence and other circumstances when the Court feels that quashing of proceedings cannot be in the interest of justice, it is open to the Court to make appropriate orders, including fixing the period for completion of trial; (viii) it is neither advisable nor feasible to prescribe any outer time-limit for conclusion of all criminal proceedings. In every case of complaint of denial of right to speedy trial, it is primarily for the prosecution to justify and explain the delay. At the same time, it is the duty of the Court to weigh all the circumstances of a given case before pronouncing upon the complaint; (ix) an objection based on denial of right to speedy trial and for relief on that account, should first be addressed to the High Court. Even if the High Court entertains such a plea, ordinarily it should not stay the proceedings, except in a case of grave and exceptional nature. Such proceedings in the High Court must, however, be disposed of on a priority basis. Vakil Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2009 SC 1822 : (2009) 3 SCC 355 : 2009 CrLJ 1731.

[9531] ● Right to fair investigation and fair trial.—Fair investigation and fair trial are concomitant to preservation of fundamental right of an accused under Article 21 of the Constitution of India. But the State has a larger obligation i.e. to maintain law and order, public order and preservation of peace and harmony in the society. A victim of a crime, thus, is equally entitled to a fair investigation. Nirmal Singh Kahlon v. State of Punjab, AIR 2009 (SC) 984 : 2009 (1) SCC 441 : 2009 CrLJ 958 : 2008 (14) SCR 1049.

[9532] ● Custodial death.—The accused was arrested by Delhi Police from Gurgaon. When the van carrying the accused crossed Haryana—Delhi Border, the accused felt uneasiness and he was rushed to the nearest hospital where he was declared "brought dead". Held, the distance between the place of arrest and the hospital was 96 kms for which one and a half hour driving time was normal. It was alleged that the delay of one and half hour that the deceased was first taken to some place where he was tortured due to which he died. The allegation was not only false but preposterous. Mohd. Yasin v. State (NCT) of Delhi, (2009) 14 SCC 644 : 2009 CrLJ 4405.

[9533] ● No torture even criminal's bad character.—Criminal, despite his bad character, cannot be tortured. Mohd. Yasin v. State (NCT) of Delhi, (2009) 14 SCC 644 : 2009 CrLJ 4405.

[9534] ● Speedy trial in riot cases.—It is essential that in riot cases and cases involving communal factors the trials should be held expeditiously. Therefore, we request the Hon'ble Chief Justice of Gujarat High Court to designate Court(s) in each district where the trial of the concerned cases are to be held. The Designated Courts shall take up the cases in question. Taking into account the number of witnesses and the accused persons and the volumes of evidence, it is open to the High Court to designate more than one Court in a particular district. Needless to say that these cases shall be taken up by the Designated Court on a day-to day basis and efforts shall be made to complete the trial with utmost expedition. The SIT shall furnish periodic reports if there is any further inquiry/investigation. The State of Gujarat shall also file a status report regarding the constitution of the Courts in terms of the directions to be given by the Hon'ble Chief Justice of the High Court within three months. The matter shall be listed further as and when directed by this Court. National Human Rights Commission v. State of Gujarat, 2009 (6) SCC 767 : 2009 (2) Crimes 308 (SC).

[9535] ● No explanation for delaying the investigation.—At least for the period from 7th December, 1990 till 28th February, 2007 there is no explanation whatsoever for the delay in investigation. Even the direction issued by the High Court seems to have had no effect on the prosecution and they slept over the matter for almost seventeen years. Nothing could be pointed out by the State, far from being established to show that the delay in investigation or trial was in any way attributable to the appellant. The prosecution has failed to show any exceptional circumstance which could possible be taken into consideration for condoning a callous and inordinate delay of more than two decades in investigations and the trial. The trial delay cannot, in any way, be said to be arising from any default on the part of the appellant. Thus, on facts in hand, in our opinion, the stated delay clearly violates the constitutional guarantee of a speedy investigation and trial under Article 21 of the Constitution. Vakil Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2009 SC 1822 : (2009) 3 SCC 355 : 2009 CrLJ 1731.

[9536] ● Speedy trial.—Where the right to speedy trial is alleged to have been infringed, the Court has to perform the balancing act upon taking into consideration all the attendant circumstances and determine in each case whether the right to speedy trial has been denied in a given case. Vakil Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2009 SC 1822 : (2009) 3 SCC 355 : 2009 CrLJ 1731.

[9537] ● Speedy trial.—Right of speedy trial includes—within to sweep preceding police investigation. Vakil Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2009 SC 1822 : (2009) 3 SCC 355 : 2009 CrLJ 1731.

[9538] ● Women Protection Home—lack of care.—If the inmates of the protection home could flee away, as alleged, from the control of authority managing the home or if persons could enter the said home at the dead of night without detection or permission and could take away girls under the nose of the people protecting the home, lot of explanation would have to be given by the appropriate Government and the competent authority regarding their capabilities of offering proper care and protection to such girls and women. Probably it is for such reasons that today these care and protection homes are becoming homes for trafficking of girls and women. It appears that the State Government is totally oblivious of its responsibilities regarding implementation of social welfare programmes of providing secured homes to destitute women and also children in conflict with law.

Considering the gravity of the situation and the problem, we direct for conducting a proper and detailed inquiry into the whole episode and affair for we will like to be enlightened not only about the functioning, management and the security of Nari Suraksha Griha but also regarding where-abouts of the concerned girl and how she could go missing from the State home and as to who is responsible in helping the girl to flee away, if it is so and consequential actions taken by the police. We request the Hon'ble Chairman, Bihar Human Rights Commission to cause such an inquiry and then submit a report to us preferably within six weeks from the date of communication of the order. In addition the Chief Secretary, Government of Bihar is also directed to submit a report within the said period with respect to the maintenance and governance of the said protection home specifically indicating the security measures and the steps being taken up in that regard. The report should also indicate the reasons behind the inability of the police to trace out the missing girl and also the status of the investigation. He shall also inform through the report if any action is taken or contemplated against any of the erring officer or employee. Chandrika Prasad Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 2009 SC 1719 : 2009 (4) SCC 415 : 2009 (2) Supreme 113 : (2009) 1 Crimes 392.

[9539] ● Arrest and detention in custody.—It cannot be contended that the words "arrest" and "detention in custody" in Articles 22(1) and 22(2) have a meaning wide enough to include every kind of detention, irrespective of the nature or the purpose of the restraint. That such a wide construction cannot be accepted will be clear from the following considerations :

(a) The language of these Articles is borrowed from Sections 60 and 61 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which lay down the procedure which a police officer has to follow when he makes an arrest without a warrant, and not when he makes it under a warrant.

(b) The requirement in Article 22(2) that the arrested person must be produced before a Magistrate within 24 hours of his arrest necessarily means that the Article refers to arrest without a warrant and not under it.

(c) The requirement in Article 22(1) that the arrested persons shall be informed as soon as may be of the grounds of his arrest cannot possibly refer to an arrest under a warrant, because when a person is arrested under a warrant he is given a copy of the warrant and the warrant itself states the reasons for the arrest on its face.

For all these reasons it must be held that Articles 22(1) and 22(2) apply only to arrest and detention by a police officer or by some other executive officer which is without a warrant, and that the protection of these Articles does not extend against arrest and detention under a warrant issued by a Court or a Magistrate. State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, AIR 1953 SC 10 : 1953 CrLJ 180 : 1952 SCJ 664 : 1952 SCA 791 : 1953 SCR 254 : 1953 MWN 355 : ILR (1953) Punj 121.

[9540] ● Language of Articles 22(1) and 22(2) of Constitution extends only to detention in custody.—The language of Articles 22(1) and 22(2) makes it clear that their operation extends only to detentions in custody which are for the commission of offences or acts or a criminal or quasi-criminal nature, or for the prevention of the likely commission of those offences or acts. These Articles do not include within their ambit each and every form of detention in custody, and do not apply when the detention is only for the purpose of putting into effect the provisions of a statute which is only of a civil nature. To hold otherwise would make a dead-letter of the provisions of a number of established civil statutes.

It follows that when any detention is only for the purpose of putting into effect the provisions of a civil statute, Articles 22(1) and 22(2) cannot come into play and it cannot be claimed that such detention is illegal or otherwise than in accordance with "procedure established by law" merely because the person detained was not produced before a Magistrate within 24 hours of his being taken into custody or because the authority of Magistrate was not obtained for continuing him in such detention beyond that period. If a detention purporting to be under the provisions of a civil statute is fully in accordance with the provisions of that statute as regards the manner of taking a person into custody and keeping him in detention, such detention is perfectly legal and in accordance with law, and it is not open to anyone to invoke the application of Articles 21, 22(1) and 22(2) for the purpose of challenging its validity. State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, AIR 1953 SC 10 : 1953 CrLJ 180 : 1953 SCR 254 : 1952 SCA 791 : 1952 SCJ 664.

[9541] ● Detention effected under Abducted Persons (Recovery and Restoration) Act.—The Act under which detention was effected in the present case was the Abducted Persons (Recovery and Restoration) Act, 1949. It authorised police officers in certain States to take into custody any abducted person found in any place and hand him over to the officer-in-charge of the nearest refugee camp, and further it authorised the camp officer to detain the person so handed over to him in that camp until arrangements for the restoration of that person to his or her family were completed. In the exercise of the powers under this Act, a Muslim girl was taken into custody and was detained in a refugee camp. The legality of the detention was challenged under a petition for a Writ of Habeas Corpus on the ground that the detained person had not been produced before a Magistrate and his authority for such detention had not been obtained as required by Article 22(2), and that for this reason the detention was not in accordance with procedure established by law within the meaning of Article 21.

Applying the principles set out above the taking into custody and detention in the present case being for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of a statute of a civil nature, Articles 22(1) and 22(2) did not apply and it was not obligatory for the legality of such detention that the provisions of those Articles be complied with. The detention being in accordance with the provisions of the Act in question, it was in accordance with 'procedure established by law' within the meaning of Article 21 and was, therefore, not in violation of the right of personal liberty protected by that Article. Application for the Writ of Habeas Corpus was disallowed. State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, AIR 1953 SC 10 : 1953 CrLJ 180 : 1953 SCR 254 : 1952 SCA 791 : 1952 SCJ 791.

[9542] ● Detention in custody of Speaker of an Assembly without warrant of Magistrate.—Detention in the custody of a Speaker of an Assembly without a warrant of a Magistrate is in contravention of the provisions of Articles 21 and 22(2).

The provisions of Article 22(2) of the Constitution are peremptory, and no person can be detained in custody beyond 24 hours of his arrest without the authority of a Magistrate. Gunupati K. Reddy v. Nafisul Hasan, AIR 1954 SC 636 : 1954 CrLJ 1704.

[9543] ● Articles 22(1) and 22(2) of Constitution not apply to person arrested under Preventive Detention Act.—As provided in Article 22(3), the provisions of Articles 22(1) and 22(2) do not apply to any person who is arrested or detained under any law providing for preventive detention. Section 3(1)(b) of the Preventive Detention Act provides that with a view to making arrangement under the Foreigners Act, 1946, for the expulsion of any foreigner from India, he may be ordered to be detained in custody. Section 3(1)(b) being obviously a law providing for 'preventive detention', the provisions of Articles 22(1) and 22(2) will not, as laid down in Article 22(3), apply to it. It follows that if a detention of a foreigner is in accordance with the provisions of Articles 22(4) to 22(7) and the provisions of the Preventive Detention Act, it is detention according to 'procedure established by law' within the meaning of Article 21, and Article 21 cannot give any protection against such detention or against the ultimate expulsion of that foreigner under Section 3(2)(c) of the Foreigners Act. Hans Muller of Nurenburg v. Supdt., Pres. Jail, Calcutta., AIR 1955 SC 367 : 1955 CrLJ 876 : 1955 SCA 487 : 1955 SCJ 324 : 1955 SCR 1284 : 1955 MWN 478 : 1955-1 MLJ (SC) 188.

[9544] ● Assessee when failing to pay arrears of—Income-Tax.—Section 46(2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, provides that when an assessee fails to pay arrears of income-tax falling due from him, his case papers may be forwarded to the Collector of Land Revenue who shall then proceed against the assessee for its recovery as if it were arrears of land revenue. Under the Bombay Land Revenue Code, the Collector has the powers to arrest and confine the assesse in civil jail, if the sale-proceeds of his property are insufficient to satisfy the amount which is to be recovered from him.

On the principles laid down by the Court in State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, AIR 1953 SC 10 : 1953 CrLJ 180, Articles 22(1) and 22(2) do not apply to such arrest and detention, and it cannot be contended that such arrest and detention are bad because the person so arrested and detained has not been produced before a Magistrate or because the authority has not been produced before a Magistrate or because the authority of a Magistrate has not been obtained for continuing him in such detention. In such a case the only question is whether the arrest and detention were in compliance with the provisions of the Land Revenue Code relating to arrest and confinement of defaulting persons. Purshottam Govindji Halai v. B.M. Desai, AIR 1956 SC 20 : 1956 CrLJ 129 : 1956 SCA 465 : 1956 SCJ 75 : 1955 (2) SCR 887 : 1955 (28) ITR 891 : 58 Bom LR 498 : 1956 ALT 1 : 1956 (1) MLJ (SC) 51.

[9545] ● No request made by accused to be defended by lawyer.—In a case in which the accused contends that there had been a violation of the provisions of Article 22(1) because he was denied the opportunity to defend himself at the trial by a legal practitioner of his choice, the onus is on him to establish that he had actually asked for the permission of the Court in that behalf and that his request had been refused. In the absence of anything on the record to show that such request for representation by a legal practitioner of his choice had been made by the accused and had been rejected, the contention must be negatived. Ram Sarup v. Union of India, AIR 1965 SC 247 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 236 : 1964 SCD 661 : (1964) 2 SCJ 619 : (1965) 5 SCR 931 : 1964 Cur LJ (SC) 169 : 1964 MLJ (Cri) 626.

[9546] ● Person detained in jail in violation of Article 22(1) entitled to writ of habeas corpus.—A person detained in jail in violation of Article 22(1) would be entitled to a writ of habeas corpus directing his release. The CrPC. contains analogous provisions in Sections 60 and 340 (Sections 56 and 303 and 315 of the new Code) which safeguards are made an integral part of fundamental rights under Article 22(2). Those who feel called upon to deprive other persons of liberty in the discharge of what they conceive to be their duty must, strictly and scrupulously, observe the forms and rules of law. Whenever that is not done the petitioner would be entitled to a writ of habeas corpus directing his release. Normally the question of mala fide will not be looked into in writ proceedings. Where the return filed after the rule nisi has been issued did not contain as to when and by whom the arrested person was informed of the grounds for his arrest, and it is not shown that he must have known the general nature of the offences for which he had been arrested, the constitutional requirement is not satisfied and is entitled to be released on that ground alone. In re, Madhu Limaye, AIR 1969 SC 1014 : (1969) 1 SCC 292 : 969 CrLJ 1440 : (1969) 2 SCA 326 : (1969) 2 SCJ 306 : (1969) 1 SCWR 470 : 1969 MLJ (Cri) 636 : 1969 PatLJR (SC) 40 A.

[9547] ● Representation made by counsel on instructions from detenu not considered by Govt..—Representation made by the counsel on instructions from his client, namely, the detenu, was not considered by the Government at all. The High Court was in error in construing the representation made by the petitioner as being made not by him but by his counsel. It is manifest that the counsel had no personal matter and he was only advocating the cause of his client. In matters where the liberty of the subject is concerned and a highly cherished right is involved, the representations made by the detenu should be construed liberally and not technically so as to frustrate or defeat the concept of liberty engrained in Article 21. As the representation has not been considered at all by the Government which it was duty bound to consider, that by itself vitiates the order of detention. Balchand Chorasia v. Union of India, AIR 1978 SC 297 : (1978) 1 SCC 161 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 77 : 1978 CrLJ 159 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 11 (1) : (1978) SCCrR 77 (1) : 1978 UJ (SC) 118 : (1978) 1 SCJ 377 (1) : (1978) 2 SCR 401 : 1978 CrAppR (SC) 43 : 1978 ACrC 30 : (1978) Sim LC 213 : 1978 MLJ (Cri) 254 : 1978 Chand LR (Cri) (SC) 231.

[9548] ● Right of accused to consult lawyer.—Accused has a right to consult his lawyer. As per Article 22(1) the right to consult an advocate of his choice shall not be denied to any person who is arrested. This does not mean that persons who are not under arrest or custody can be denied that right. The spirit and sense of Article 22(1) is that it is fundamental to the rule of law that the service of a lawyer shall be available for consultation to any accused person under circumstances of mere-custodial interrogations. Moreover, the observance of the right against self-incrimination is best promoted by conceding to the accused the right to consult a legal practitioner of his choice. Lawyer's presence is a constitutional claim in some circumstances in our country also, and, in the context of Article 20(3), is an assurance of awareness and observance of the right to silence. Article 20(3) and Article 22(1) may, in a way, be telescoped by making it prudent for the police to permit the advocate of the accused, if there be one, to be present at the time he is examined. Over-reaching Article 20(3) and Section 161(2), CrPC, will be obviated by this requirement. If an accused person expresses the wish to have his lawyer by his side when his examination goes on, this facility shall not be denied, without being exposed to the serious reproof that involuntary self-incrimination secured in secrecy and by coercing the will, was the project. Nandini Satpathy v. P.L. Dani, AIR 1978 SC 1025 : (1978) 2 SCC 424 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 236 : 1978 CrLJ 968 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 195 : 1978 CrAppR (SC) 273.

[9549] ● Free legal service—Not provided.—If free legal services are not provided to an accused who is in peril of losing his liberty and who is unable to defend himself through a lawyer by reason of his poverty or indigence in cases where the needs of justice so require, the trial itself may run the risk of being vitiated as contravening Article 21 and the Supreme Court has no doubt that every State Government would try to avoid such a possible eventuality. Hussainara Khatoon v. State of Bihar, AIR 1979 SC 1377 : (1980) 1 SCC 108 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 50 : 1979 CrLJ 1052 : (1979) 3 SCR 760 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 234.

[9550] ● Delay in considering representation of detenu.—Delay of ten days in considering the representation of the detenue was wholly unexplained. Hence continued detention of the petitioner is violative of Article 22(5) and he is entitled to be released forthwith. Narinder Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1980 SC 945 : (1980) 2 SCC 357 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 455 : 1980 CrLJ 683 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 357 : 1980 UJ (SC) 505 : 1980 ACrC 250.

[9551] ● Supply of grounds to detenu without documents and materials.—Grounds supplied to the detenu when he was arrested but without the documents and materials which were supplied four days later—Order is rendered void. Representation of the detenu was disposed of more than a month after it was sent. When no reasonable explanation for the delay is given it makes the continued detention void. Virendra Singh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 1909 : (1981) 4 SCC 562 : 1981 CrLJ 1283 (4).

[9552] ● Non-supply of copies of material documents.—By non-supply of copies of material documents referred to in the grounds of detention, the detenu was prevented from making an effective representation. Contention on behalf of the State was that copies were not supplied as the detenu was already aware of the contents of the documents. Detenu is entitled to be supplied with copies of all material documents instead of having to rely upon his memory. Detention is vitiated. Mehrunissa v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 1861 : (1981) 2 SCC 709 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 592 : 1981 CrLJ 1283 (1) : 1981 CrLR (SC) 528.

[9553] ● Non-supply of document and material pari passu grounds of detention.—Documents and material were not supplied pari passu grounds of detention. Delay of more than a month in disposing of the representation is itself fatal to the order of detention. Mehdi Mohamed Joudi v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 1752 : (1981) 2 SCC 358 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 534 : 1981 CrLJ 1282 (2) : 1981 CrLR (SC) 519 (1).

[9554] ● Documents upon which detention based not supplied.—Documents upon which grounds of detention were based were not supplied to the detenus along with the grounds of detention. Detenus were released. Ana Carelina D'souza v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 1620 : (1981) 3 SCC 493 : 1981 CrLJ 1277.

[9555] ● Right of accused to be supplied with lawyer by State : Mandamus—Issue of.—The accused/petitioner who was being tried for murder before the Sessions Court sought the issuance of a writ in the nature of Mandamus and other appropriate writ or orders to ordain the Union of India to give financial assistance to him to engage a Counsel of his choice on a scale equivalent to, or commensurate with, the fees that were being paid to the Counsel appearing for the State.

The petition is virtually for the enforcement of the Directive Principle of State Policy enshrined in Article 39-A of the Constitution. There can be no doubt that the petitioner is not entitled to the grant of a writ of Mandamus for the enforcement of the said Directive Principle. As is clear from the terms of Article 39-A, the social objective of equal justice and free legal aid has to be implemented by suitable legislation or by formulating schemes for free legal aid. The remedy of the petitioner, if any, lay by way of making an application before the concerned Judge under Section 304(1), CrPC, and not by a petition under Article 32.

Although in the earlier decisions the Supreme Court paid scant regard to the Directives on the ground that the Courts had little to do with them since they were not justiciable or enforceable, like the Fundamental Rights, the duty of the Court in relation to the Directives came to be emphasised in the later decisions which reached its culmination in Kesavanand Bharathi v. Union of India, AIR 1973 SC 1461 : (1973) 4 SCC 225, laying down certain broad propositions. One of those is that there is no disharmony between the Directives and the Fundamental Rights because they supplemented each other in aiming at the same goal of bringing about a social revolution and the establishment of welfare State, which is envisaged in the Preamble. The Courts, therefore, have a responsibility in so interpreting the Constitution as to ensure implementation of the Directives and to harmonize the social objective underlying the Directives with the individual rights. Primarily, the mandate in Article 39-A is addressed to the Legislature and the Executive but in so far as the Courts of Justice could indulge in some judicial law-making within the interstices of the Constitution or any Statute before them for construction, the Courts too are bound by that mandate. Ranjan Dwivedi v. Union of India, AIR 1983 SC 624 : (1983) 3 SCC 307 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 581 : 1983 CrLJ 1052 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 474 : (1983) 1 Crimes 1170 : 1983 PatLJR (SC) 101 : (1983) 2 SCWR 130 : 1983 IJR (Cri) 149.

[9556] ● Preventive detention—Grounds, if baseless.—Where the allegation in the subsequent grounds for detention are factual inferences from the allegation in the earlier grounds, they cannot be said to be baseless grounds. Though speeches referred to in a ground for detention were made about one year prior to the order of the detention, as they have been mentioned as part of a continuous course of conduct of the detenu, brought out by the remaining grounds, they could not be considered to be so remote in point of time as to make it irrelevant. Sonam Yongda v. State of Sikkim, AIR 1986 SC 1736 : (1986) 3 SCC 594 : 1986 SCC(Cri) 341 : 1986 CrLJ 1606 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 344.

[9557] ● Solitary act of omission or commission be taken into consideration for passing order of detention.—A solitary act of omission or commission can be taken into consideration for being subjectively satisfied, by the detaining authority to pass an order of detention if the reach, effect and potentiality of the act is such that is disturbs public tranquillity by creating terror and panic in the society or a considerable number of the people in a specified Locality where the act is alleged to have been committed. Thus it is the degree and extent of the reach of the act upon the society which is vital for considering the question whether a man has committed only a breach of law and order or has acted in a manner likely to cause disturbance to public order. Subhash Bhandari v. District Magistrate, Lucknow, AIR 1988 SC 74 : (1987) 4 SCC 685 : 1988 CrLJ 190.

[9558] ● Non-application of mind-Detenu already in Jail.—The principle that emerges is that there must be awareness in the mind of the detaining authority that the detenu is in custody at the time of service of the order of detention on him and cogent relevant materials and fresh facts have been disclosed which necessitate the making of an order of detention. Abdul Razak v. S. N. Sinha, Police Commissioner, Ahmedabad, (1989) 2 SCC 222 : 1989 CrLJ 2303.

[9559] ● Preventive detention—Order while in Jail custody.—Where the detention order read with its annexure indicated the detaining authority's awareness of the fact of detenu's jail custody at the time of the making of the detention order, however, there was no indication therein that the detaining authority considered it likely that the detenu could be released on bail and in fact, the contents of the order showed the satisfaction of the detaining in the bank dacoity including sharing of the booty by the detenu, the order of detention was clearly invalid since the same was made when the detenu was already in jail custody for the offence of bank dacoity with no prospect of his release. N. Meera Rani v. Govt. of T. N., AIR 1989 SC 2027 : (1989) 4 SCC 418 : 1989 CrLJ 2190.

[9560] ● Detention order can be validly passed against person in custody.—An order for detention can be validly passed against a person in custody and for that purpose it is necessary that the grounds of detention must show that (i) the detaining authority was aware of the fact that the detenu is already in detention; and (ii) there were compelling reasons justifying such detention despite the fact that the detenu is already in detention. The expression "compelling reasons" in the context of making an order for detention of a person already in custody implies that there must be cogent material before the detaining authority on the basis of which it may be satisfied that (a) the detenu is likely to be released from custody in the near future and (b) taking into account the nature of the antecedent activities of the detenu, it is likely that after his release from custody he would indulge in prejudicial activities and it is necessary to detain him in order to prevent him from engaging in such activities. Dharmendra Sugan Chand v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 1196 : (1990)1 SCC 746 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 24 : 1990 CrLJ 1232 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 214 : 1990 (1) Crimes 634 : 1990 (1) Scale 146 : 1990 (1) SCR 303.

[9561] ● Supervisory and appellate jurisdiction of Supreme Court.—There is no room for the doubt that apex Court has wide power to interfere and correct the judgment and orders passed by any Court or tribunal in the country. In addition to the appellate power, the Court has special residuary power to entertain appeal against any order of any Court in the country. The plenary jurisdiction of this Court to grant leave and hear appeals against any order of a Court or tribunal, confers power of judicial superintendence over all the Courts and tribunals in the territory of India including subordinate Courts of Magistrate and District Judge. This Court has, therefore, supervisory jurisdiction over all Courts in India. Delhi Judicial Service Association v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1991 SC 2176 : (1991) 4 SCC 406 : 1991 CrLJ 3086.

[9562] ● Right to make representation against detention order flows from constitutional guarantee.—The right to make a representation against the detention order thus flows from the constitutional guarantee enshrined in Article 22(5) which casts an obligation on the authority to ensure that the detenu is afforded an earliest opportunity to exercise that right, if he so desires. The necessity of casting a dual obligation on the authority making the detention order is obviously to acquaint the detenu of what had weighed with the Detaining Authority for exercising the extraordinary powers of detention without trial conferred by Section 3(1) of the Act and to give the detenu an opportunity to point out any error in the exercise of that power so that the said authority gets an opportunity to undo the harm done by it, if at all, by correcting the error at the earliest point of time. Once it is realised that Article 22(5) confers a right of representation, the next question is to whom must the representation be made. The grounds of detention clearly inform the detenu that he can make a representation to the State Government, the Central Government as well as the Advisory Board. There can be no doubt that the representation must be made to the authority which has the power to rescind or revoke the decision, if need be. Amir Sad Khan v. L. Hmingliana, AIR 1991 SC 1983 : (1991) 4 SCC 39 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 946 : JT 1991 (3) SC 367 : 1991 (3) SCR 443 : 1992 (1) CCR 233 : 1991 (3) Crimes 275.

[9563] ● Activities of detenu not merely prejudicial to maintenance of law and order but prejudicial to public order.—It is the degree and extent of the reach of the objectionable activity upon the society which is vital for considering the question whether a man has committed only a breach of 'law and order' or has acted in a manner likely to cause disturbance to 'public order'. It is the potentiality of the act to disturb the even tempo of life of the community which makes it prejudicial to the maintenance of 'public order.' Whenever an order of detention is questioned, the Courts apply these tests to find out whether the objectionable activities upon which the order of detention is grounded fall under the classification of being prejudicial to 'public order' or belong to the category or being prejudicial only to 'law and order'. An order of detention under the Act would be valid if the activities of a detenu after 'public order' but would not be so where the same affect only the maintenance of 'law and order'. Facts of each case have, therefore, to be carefully scrutinised to test the validity of an order of detention. Harpeet Kaur v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1992 SC 979 : (1992) 2 SCC 177 : 1992 CrLJ 769.

[9564] ● Detenu already in Jail.—Even in the case of a person in custody, a detention order can validly be passed if the authority passing the order is aware of the fact that he is actually is custody; if he has reason to believe on the basis of the reliable material that there is a possibility of his being released on bail and that on being so released, the detenu would in all probabilities indulge in prejudicial activities and if the authority passes an order after recording his satisfaction the same cannot be struck down. Veeramani v. State of T.N., (1994) 2 SCC 337 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 482 : 1995 CrLJ 2644 : JT 1994 (1) SC 350 : (1994) 1 Crimes 617 (SC) : 1994 (1) Scale 363 : 1994 (2) CCR 286 (SC).

[9565] ● Representation of detenu—Consideration of.—A person detained under the Act made a representation against his detention which representation was forwarded to Advisory Board. State Government kept the representation pending awaiting decision of the Advisory Board. But after receipt of report of Advisory Board rejected it, held it is illegal. Naval Shankar Ishwarlal Dave v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1994 SC 1496 : 1993 Supp (3) SCC 754 : 1994 CrLJ 2170 (SC).

[9566] ● Incidents directed against single individual not affecting public order.—A case under Gujarat Prevention of Anti-social Activities Act.—The detenue was habitually indulging in criminal and anti social activities namely keeping fire arms, beating and assaulting innocent citizens in public. Different offences under different provisions of law were alleged to be committed. But all the incidents were connected or related against one individual only. These incidents cannot be said to be incidents affecting public order. These cannot have no adverse effect prejudicial to maintenance of public order disturbing even the temp of life or the peace and tranquillity of the locality. Mustakmiya Jabbarmiya Shaikh v. M.M. Mehta, Commissioner of Police, (1995) 3 SCC 237 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 454 : JT 1995 (4) SC 215 : (1995) 3 Crimes 18 (SC) : 1995 (2) Scale 376 : 1995 (4) CCR 89 (SC).

[9567] ● Person detained be informed of his right to make representation.—Where a detention order has been made under Section 3 of the COFEPOSA Act and the PIT NDPS Act by an officer specially empowered for that purpose either by the Central Government or the State Government the person detained has a right to make a representation to the said officer and the said officer is obliged to consider the said representation and the failure on his part to do so result in denial of the right conferred on the person detained to make a representation against the order of detention. This right of the detenu is in addition to his right to make the representation to the State Government and the Central Government where the detention order has been made by an officer specially authorised by a State Government and to the Central Government where the detention order has been made by an officer specially empowered by the Central Government and to have the same duly considered. This right to make a representation necessarily implies that the person detained must be informed of his right to make a representation to the authority that has made the order of detention at the time when he is served with the grounds of detention so as to enable him to make such a representation and the failure to do so results in denial of the right of the person detained to make a representation. Kamlesh Kumar Ishwardas Patel v. Union of India, (1995) 4 SCC 51 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 643 : JT 1995 (3) SC 639 : (1995) 4 Crimes 484 (495) (SC) : 1995 (2) Scale 681.

[9568] ● Article 22 prescribes certain safeguards for protection of persons detained.—The Constitution while permitting Parliament and the State Legislature to enact a law providing for preventive detention, prescribes certain safeguards in Article 22 for the protection of the persons so detained. One such protection is contained in sub-clause (a) of clause (4) of Article 22 which requires that no law providing for preventive detention shall authorise the detention of a person for a period longer than three months unless an Advisory Board consisting of persons who are, or have been, or are qualified to be appointed as Judges of a High Court has reported before the expiration of the said period of three months that there is in its opinion sufficient cause for detention. The other safeguard is contained in clause (5) of Article 22. Article 22(5) imposes a dual obligation on the authority making the order of preventive detention: (i) to communicate to the person detained as soon as may be the grounds on which the order of detention has been made and; (ii) to afford the person detained the earlier opportunity of making a representation against the order of detention. Article 22(5) thus proceeds on the basis that the person detained has a right to make a representation against the order of detention and the aforementioned two obligations are imposed on the authority making the order of detention with a view to ensure that right of the person detained to make a representation is a real right and he is able to take steps for redress of a wrong which he thinks has been committed. Article 22(5) does not, however, indicate the authority to whom the representation is to be made. Since the object and purpose of the representation that is to be made by the person detained is to enable him to obtain relief at the earliest opportunity, the said representation has to be made to the authority which can grant such relief, i.e., the authority which can revoke the order of detention and set him at liberty. The authority that has made the order of detention can also revoke it. This right is inherent in the power to make the order. It is recognised by Section 21 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 though it does not flow from it. It can, therefore, be said that Article 22(5) postulates that the person detained has a right to make a representation against the order of detention to the authority making the order. In addition, such a representation can be made to any other authority who is empowered by law to revoke the order of detention. Kamlesh Kumar Ishwardas Patel v. Union of India, (1995) 4 SCC 51 : (1995)3 Crimes 26 (SC) : (1995) 4 Crimes 484 on reference in TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Hansaben Jayantlal Shah v. Union of India, 1994 (4) SCC 148 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 836 : 1994 (2) Scale 917 (2) : (1994) 2 Crimes 996 (SC).

[9569] ● Right of person detained to make representation.—Article 22(5) must be construed to mean that the person detained has a right to make a representation against the order detention which can be made not only to the Advisory Board but also to the detaining authority, i.e., the authority that has made the order of detention or the order for continuance of such detention, who is competent to give immediate relief by revoking the said order as well as to any other authority which is competent under law to revoke the order for detention and thereby give relief to the person detained. The right to make a representation carries with it a corresponding obligation on the authority making the order of detention to inform the person detained of his right to make a representation against the order of detention to the authorities who are required to consider such a representation. Kamlesh Kumar Ishwardas Patel v. Union of India, (1995) 4 SCC 51 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 643 : JT 1995 (3) SC 639 : (1995) 4 Crimes 484 (495) (SC).

[9570] ● Detenu when not informed his right to make representation.—When detenue was not informed of his constitutional right to make a representation to specified officer for reconsideration of his detention, the detention order is invalid. Nutan J. Patel v. S.V. Prasad, (1996) 2 SCC 315 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 269 : JT 1995 (8) SC 496 : 1995 (6) Scale 700 : 1996 (1) CCR 76 (SC) : (1995) 4 Crimes 767.

[9571] ● Supply of report of sponsoring authority to detenu not mandatory.—Detention order under COFEPOSA was set aside by High Court on twin grounds namely (1) delays of 23 days in consideration of representation of detenu and (2) non-supply of the report of the sponsoring authority to detenu. Under Article 22(5), Constitution of India it is not mandatory that the report of the sponsoring authority should be supplied to the detenu. Delay was not fatal. This Court refuses to disturb the order since the period had already expired. State of U.P. v. Shakeel Ahmed, (1996) 1 SCC 337 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 108 : JT 1995 (8) SC 561 : 1995 (6) Scale 732 : (1995) 4 Crimes 782 (SC) : 1996 (1) CCR 55 (SC).

[9572] ● Right to make representation against preventive detention not constitutional right on ground of non-specification of authorities in Article 22(5) not correct.—It is not correct to say that because of non-specification of authorities in Article 22(5) to whom representation is to be made that right to make representation against preventive detention is not Constitutional right. It will be seen that right to represent had been given not only by Article 22(5) of the Constitution but also by Section 8, Prevention of Black Marketing and Maintenance of Supplies of Essential Commodities Act, 1980. The right provided in the said Act has therefore, to be treated as an extension of the constitutional right already available to a detenu under Article 22(5). The legislature has, in fact, given effect to the constitutional right by providing in Section 8 of the Act that the detenu shall have the right of making a representation to the appropriate Government. Kundan Bhai, Dula Bhai Shaikh v. D.M., Ahemedabad, AIR 1996 SC 2998 : (1996) 3 SCC 194 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 470 : 1996 CrLJ 1981 (SC) : JT 1996 (2) SC 532 : 1996 (1) CCR 199 (SC).

[9573] ● Fresh detention order punitive.—In a case first detention order was passed on September, 1992 requiring the petitioner to be detained for a period of one year. He was detained on 18.1.1994 but after the said detention order was quashed, he was released on 23.11.1994. The petitioner had, by then, been in detention for a period of more than 10 months. The passing of the new detention order on 25.4.1995 only for a period of one month and twenty five days clearly shows that the intention was to see that the petitioner remained under preventive detention for a total period of one year. Which was a period in respect of which the first detention order had been passed. Fresh order of detention appears to be punitive in nature and has not been passed in order to prevent the petitioner from indulging in prejudicial activities in future. Where the detention takes the character of punitive rather than preventive action, the said order can be quashed. Kimtilal Sethi v. Lt. Governor of N.C.T. of Delhi, AIR 1996 SC 3341 : (1996) 4 SCC 464 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 680 : 1996 CrLJ 3195 : JT 1996 (5) SC 98 : (1996) 2 Crimes 225 (SC).

[9574] ● Directions on Jail reforms by Supreme Court.—The Supreme Court gave the following directions on Jail reforms to the various authorities :—

(1) To take appropriate decision on the recommendations of the Law Commission of India made in its 78th Report on the subject 'Congestion of undertrial prisoners in jail' as contained in chapter 9 (Para 20-A).

(2) To apply mind to the suggestions of the Mulla Committee as contained in Chapter 20 of volume 1 of its Report relating to streamlining the remission system and premature release (parole), and then to do the needful (para 23).

(3) To consider the question of entrusting the duty of producing UTP's on remand dates to the prison staff (Para 27).

(4) To deliberate about enacting of new Prison Act to replace century old Indian Prison Act, 1894 (Para 31). We understand that the National Human Rights Commissions has prepared an outline of an All India statute, which may replace the old act; and some discussions at a national level conference also took place in 1995. We are of the view that all the States must try to amend their own enactments, if any, in harmony with the all India thinking in this regard.

(5) To examine the question of framing of a model new All India Jail Manual as indicated in Para 31.

(6) To reflect on the recommendations of Mulla Committee made in chapter 29 on the subject of giving proper medical facilities and maintaining appropriate hygienic conditions and to take needed steps (Para 35 and 36).

(7) To ponder about the need of complaint box in all the jails (Para 37).

(8) To think about introduction of liberalisation of communication facilities (Para 40).

(9) To take needful steps for streamlining of jail visits as indicated in Para 42.

(10) To initiate on the question of introduction of open air prisons at least in the District Headquarters of the country. Rama Murthy

v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1997 SC 1739 : 1997 (2) SCC 642 : 1997 CrLJ 1508.

[9575] ● Writ of Habeas Corpus for challenging legality constitutionality of preventive detention.—True, it is not enough that there is a mere challenge and that challenge has to be upheld or negatived by the Court. When there is challenge to the legality of detention in writ of habeas corpus the challenge is in effect to the legality and validity of the grounds on which the order of detention is made. It is not that to challenge the legality and validity of the grounds on which order of detention is passed the detenu has to file a separate writ petition seeking a writ of certiorari. Once the detenu is released during pendency of his writ of habeas corpus by the detaining authority it cannot always be said that writ petition had become infructuous and that the grounds on which the order of detention becomes invalid. But then if the Court refuses or itself does not go into the merit of controversy in writ of habeas corpus when detenu is released the detenu on that account cannot be made to suffer holding that he did not successfully challenge his order of detention. Competent Authority, Ahmedabad v. Amritlal Chandmal Jain, AIR 1998 SC 2083 : (1998) 5 SCC 615 : 1998 CrLJ 2920 at 2923, 2924 (SC) : JT 1998 (3) SC 544 : 1998 (3) Scale 333 : 1998 (2) Crimes 316 : 1998 (5) SLT 19 : 1998 (2) CCR 276 (SC) : 1998 (2) JCC (SC) 30 : 1998 (4) Supreme 389.

[9576] ● Power under section 15 of A.P. Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Bootleggers Dacoits Drug Offenders, Goondas, Immoral Traffic Offenders and Land Grabbers Act is power to release detenu for any specific period.—The power under Section 15 of Andhra Pradesh Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Bootleggers, Dacoits, Drug Offenders, Goondas, Immoral Traffic Offenders and Land Grabbers Act, 1986 is the power of the Government to release a detenue for any specified period and such a prayer cannot held to be representation against the order of detention within the meaning of Art. 22 (5) of the Constitution. This being the legal position question of infraction of Article 22 (5) of the Constitution does not arise if the prayer of the detenu for being temporarily released, is not disposed of immediately and there is some delay in the disposal of the said prayer. Of course, such a prayer for being temporarily released, should be disposed of within a reasonable time but delay on the part of the authority in considering the prayer for temporary release under Section 15 of the Andhra Pradesh Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Bootleggers, Dacoits, Drug Offenders, Goondas, Immoral Traffic Offenders and Land Grabbers Act, 1986 cannot be held to be an infraction of the constitutional right guaranteed to a detenu under Article 22 (5). District Collector v. Shaik Hasmath Beebi, AIR 2001 SC 1681 (1684) : (2001) 5 SCC 401 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 903 : 2001 CrLJ 2193 : JT 2001 (5) SC 67.

[9577] ● Detention order—Facts placed before detaining authority.—If the facts placed before the detaining authority are proximate to each other and the last of the fact mentioned is proximate to the order of detention then the earlier incident cannot be treated as stale and the order cannot be set aside. District Collector, Ananthapur v. Laxmanna, AIR 2005 SC 2802 : (2005) 3 SCC 663 : 2005 CrLJ 2150 (2151) (SC) : (2005) 2 Crimes 31. TO THE SAME EFFECT : *The Collector and District Magistrate, W.G. [9578] ● Writ petition by parents for modification of death sentence.—Writ petition was filed by the parents of the convict for modification of the death sentence awarded to the convict. Review petition for the same relief had already been dismissed. It was held that the remedy lay in filing curative petition as laid down in. Rupa A Hura v. Ashok Hura, AIR 2002 SC 1771. TO THE SAME EFFECT : Zakarus Lakra v. Union of India, AIR 2005 SC 1560 : (2005) 3 SCC 161 : 2005 CrLJ 1716.

12. ARTICLE 25

[9580] ● Conversion from one religion to another.—Legislation prohibiting conversion by force or inducement to one's own religion falls within the purview of Entry 1 of List II of the 7th Schedule as they are meant to avoid disturbances to the public order by prohibiting conversion from one religion to another in a manner reprehensible to the conscience of the community. Rev. Stainislaes v. State of M.P., AIR 1977 SC 908 : (1977) 1 SCC 677 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 147 : 1977 CrLJ 551 : (1977) 1 SCJ 478 : (1977) 2 SCR 611 : ILR (1977) Cut 431 : 1977 UJ (SC) 156 : 1977 BBCJ (SC) 136 : 1977 MLJ (Cri) 320 : 43 CutLT 382.

13. ARTICLE 25 AND 26

14. ARTICLE 31-B

[9582] ● Detenu's right to have constitutionality and validity of detention examined by Court.—A law which provides for the exclusion from the Court's consideration of relevant documents and evidence relating to the detention of a person, and thus denies to the detenu his right to have the constitutionality and validity of the order of detention examined by the Court, is an infringement of the detenu's right under Articles 32 and 22(5). Gopalan, A.K. v. State of Madras, AIR 1950 SC 27 : 51 CrLJ 1383 : 1950 SCJ 174 : 1954 SCR 88 : (1950) 2 MLJ 42 : 63 MLW 638 : 1950 MWN 495.

[9583] ● Article 32 confers remedial fundamental right.—Article 32 confers a remedial fundamental right. It is a guaranteed constitutional remedy for enforcement of the fundamental rights conferred by the Constitution, and its inclusion in Part III means that this remedial right is itself a fundamental right.

Under the Constitution a duty has been cast upon the Supreme Court to be the protector of the rights of the subject guaranteed in Part III, and consistently with its responsibility, it has no power to refuse to entertain an application seeking its protection against an alleged infringement by the State of any fundamental right of the petitioner.

The fact that the petitioner has an alternative remedy elsewhere under any law is no ground for refusing to entertain an application under Article 32, because that Article brooks no such option. The general rule of practice that when concurrent jurisdiction is vested in two Courts, the aggrieved party should first move the lower Court for the relief which he seeks, has no application to Article 32. Romesh Thappar v. State of Madras, AIR 1950 SC 124 : 1951 CrLJ 1514 : 1950 SCJ 418 : 1950 SCR 594 : 1950 ALJ 485 : (1950) 2 MLJ 390 : 63 MLW 929 : 1950 MWN 435.

[9584] ● Fundamental right when infringed by State.—Whenever a person's fundamental right under any Article in Part III of the Constitution has been infringed by the State, he has the right to invoke the protection of Article 32 and seek the appropriate remedy given under it. His right to have his grievance redressed by the Supreme Court by the issue of an appropriate writ against the State cannot be denied to him, and the State cannot be allowed to plead in defence the existence of an alternative legal remedy elsewhere. Rashid Ahmad v. Municipal Board, Kairana, AIR 1950 SC 163 : 1950 SCJ 124 : 1950 SCR 566 : 63 MLW 867 (2).

[9585] ● Writ of certiorari—When lie.—A Writ of Certiorari can lie for the purpose of quashing a judicial order only and not an executive order. There are two conditions to the issue of this writ, namely (a) that the order must be judicial in character, and (b) it must be in excess of the statutory authority of the tribunal which made it.

The test for determining the character of an order is whether the authority or body which passed the order was or was not under a statutory obligation to act under a judicial procedure.

The essential elements of a judicial procedure are,

(a) an opportunity to the party concerned to show cause against the order and give evidence, and

(b) a decision on merits only after an inquiry in which the party concerned is given opportunity to lead his evidence.

If there is a statutory duty to arrive at a decision only after such inquiry under a judicial procedure, the order made is a judicial decision. On the other hand, if the decision is left by law to the subjective satisfaction of the executive authority without any such inquiry, the decision is only an executive decision.

Thus the question whether a decision is a judicial or an executive decision has to be determined from the manner in which that decision is required by statute to be made.

A Writ of Certiorari can lie only when the decision is statutorily required to be a judicial decision, and it is in excess of legal authority. If the decision is not required by statute to be a judicial decision, the question of excess of authority does not at all arise and the writ cannot lie. Province of Bombay v. K.S. Advani, AIR 1950 SC 222 : 1950 SCR 621 : 1950 SCJ 451 : 86 CLJ 330 : (1950) 2 MLJ 703 : 1950 MWN 802.

[9586] ● Writ of Mandamus—Issue of against Govt. when.—On an application made under Article 32, if the Supreme Court finds that any law under which an executive authority has threatened to take action against the petitioner, is unconstitutional and void as being in contravention of a fundamental right vested in the petitioner, the Court can issue a Writ of Mandamus against the Government or the executive authority concerned prohibiting it from carrying out the proposed action against the petitioner. Chintaman Rao v. State of M.P., AIR 1951 SC 118 : 1950 SCJ 571 : 1950 SCR 759 : 64 MLW 370 : 1951 ALJ (SC) 82 : ILR (1951) Hyd 221.

15. ARTICLES 32, 226

[9587] ● Article 32 guarantee remedial fundamental right.—Article 32 guarantees a remedial fundamental right and confers the right to move the Supreme Court for the enforcement and protection of fundamental rights by the issue of appropriate writs or orders or directions.

Article 32 cannot be invoked for the sole purpose of deciding the competence of the Legislature under Article 246 and the Legislative Lists in Schedule 7 of the Constitution. That issue can be gone into by the Court only when the petitioner claims the violation of a fundamental right vested in himself by a particular piece of legislation.

Proceedings under Article 32 are not in the nature of a suit for declaration and cannot lie solely for the purpose of deciding the constitutionality of a law, when no infringement of a fundamental right vested in the petitioner is involved. In other words, the constitutional validity of law cannot be examined under a petition under Article 32 unless the law complained of, infringes directly some fundamental right of the petitioner. The reason for so holding is that Article 32 is meant only for granting a relief against an infringement by the State of a right of the subject, and if the petition does not ask for any such relief there is no occasion to examine the constitutionality of the law.

The right to move the Supreme Court under Article 32 is available not only to individuals but also to corporate bodies.

Articles 32 provides only a remedy against a violation of the rights vested in the petitioner himself. He cannot seek a remedy against a violation of the rights vested in another. The constitutionality of a law can be challenged only by the person directly hit by that law and a challenger cannot succeed merely because some one else has been hurt. Direct invasion by the State of the petitioner's own personal interest is the only justifiable basis for the invocation of Article 32. Chiranjitlal Chowdhuri v. Union of India, AIR 1951 SC 41 : 1951 SCJ 29 : 1950 SCR 869 : 64 MLW 47 : 1951 MWN 111 : 53 BomLR 499 : ILR (1951) Hyd 461.

[9588] ● Writ of Habeas Corpus not available against deprivation of personal liberty.—A Writ of Habeas Corpus under Article 32 or Article 226 is not available against deprivation of personal liberty by reason of imprisonment under the sentence of a criminal Court. The proper remedy against an order of conviction and sentence is an appeal to an appellate Court of competent jurisdiction, and not an application for a Writ of Habeas Corpus. Janardhan Reddy v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1951 SC 217 : 52 CrLJ 736 : 1951 SCJ 320 : 1951 SCR 344 : 1951 MWN (Cri) 189 (2) : 64 MLW 406 : 1951 ALJ (SC) 94 : 1951 MWN 613 (2).

[9589] ● Violation of rights of property by private individual—Remedy under ordinary law.—The language structure and setting of the Articles relating to fundamental rights show that these Articles are intended as a protection against action taken by the State only. On a true construction of these Articles, the protection conferred by them is not available against wrongful actions of private individuals or even of corporate bodies. A person whose right to person or property is infringed by a private individual must seek his remedy under the ordinary law, and not by way of an application under Article 32. Shamdasani, P.D. v. Central Bank of India Ltd., AIR 1952 SC 59 : 1952 SCA 36 : 1952 SCJ 29 : 1952 MWN 102 : 1952 (1) MLJ 423 : 65 MLW 357 : 1952 SCR 391 : 54 Pun LR 190 : 54 Bom LR 403.

[9590] ● Order when challenged as being unconstitutional.—When an order is challenged as being unconstitutional, the relevant date in examining its validity is the date on which the petition under Article 32 or 226 is made. An earlier invalidity which has already been cured at that date is immaterial to the issue. Naranjan Singh Nathawan v. State of Punjab, AIR 1952 SC 106 : 1952 CrLJ 656 : 1952 SCJ 111 : 1952 SCR 395 : 1952 SCA 230 : 1952-1 MLJ 733.

[9591] ● Writ under Article 226 when lies.—A writ under Article 226 can lie only in those grave cases in which any Government or executive authority has acted without or in excess of jurisdiction, or has refused to exercise jurisdiction, or has acted irregularly in violation of a basic principle of natural justice, and such action has resulted in manifest injustice. But a writ cannot lie merely for the purpose of correcting a decision which is only erroneous on merits. Veerappa Pillai v. Raman & Raman Ltd., AIR 1952 SC 192 : 1952 SCA 287 : 1952 SCJ 261 : 1952 SCR 583 : 54 Pun LR 210 : 1952 MWN 431 : 1952 (1) MLJ 806 : 65 MLW 620 : 90 CalLJ 194.

[9592] ● Citizen not possessed of fundamental right.—A citizen must be possessed of a fundamental right at the time when he makes an application under Article 32 before he can ask the Court to declare a law which is inconsistent with his alleged right to be void. If the right itself has been extinguished before that date, there is no relief to be claimed under Article 32.

Thus, Articles 19(1)(f) and 31(2) can be invoked, and relief under Article 32 can be claimed only by a person whose right to property is in existence, and if the right to property has been extinguished by virtue of a valid order made before 26th January, 1950, the petitioner can have no grievance against the State merely because the State takes possession of that property from him at a later date.

An order of allotment of a house by the Rent Controller which was made on a date previous to 26th January, 1950, cannot be impugned on the ground that it contravened Article 19(1)(f) or 31(2), if the order was perfectly valid on the date when it was made. Nabhirajiah, D.K. v. State of Mysore, AIR 1952 SC 339 : 1952 SCJ 490 : 1952 SCR 744 : 1952 SCA 598 : ILR (1953) Mys 142.

[9593] ● Writ—Issue of under Article 32.—A writ under Article 32 can be issued by the Supreme Court only for the enforcement of a fundamental right. On the other hand, a writ under Article 226 can be issued by a High Court not only for the enforcement of a fundamental right but also 'for any other purpose'. However, the concluding words of Article 226 have to be read in the context of what precedes them, and the existence of a right vested in the petitioner under any law is a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction under that Article, and before a writ is issued, the Court must be satisfied that a legal right vested in the petitioner is affected by an order made or threatened to be made against him by the State. State of Orissa v. Madan Gopal Rungta, AIR 1952 SC 12 : 1951 SCJ 764 : 1952 SCR 28 : 1951 (2) MLJ 645 : 1952 MWN 13 : 18 Cut LT 45 : ILR (1951) Cut 637.

[9594] ● Every order of administrative body not subject of writ of Certiorari or Mandamus.—Every order of an administrative body cannot be the subject of a Writ of Certiorari or Mandamus. Proceedings under Article 226 are not in the nature of an appeal, and every erroneous decision cannot be sought to be rectified by a petition under that Article. There are limits on the power to issue a writ, and the power can be exercised only when the impugned order is (a) without jurisdiction or (b) in excess of jurisdiction or (c) is vitiated by an error or irregularity which is manifestly opposed to a basic principle of natural justice. In other words, a writ cannot lie if an order is within jurisdiction, even though it may be erroneous on merits. Parry & Co. Ltd. v. Commercial Employees' Association, AIR 1952 SC 179 : 1952 SCA 299 : 1952 SCJ 275 : 1952 SCR 519 : 65 MLW 491 : 1952 MWN 429 : 1952-1 MLJ 813 : 90 CalLJ 7.

[9595] ● Material date in Habeas Corpus proceeding date of return.—In a Habeas Corpus proceeding the material date is the date of the Return and the only question before the Court is whether on that date the detention was legal or illegal. If on the date of the Return the detention suffers from any illegality, the writ must be issued. The State cannot be allowed to contend that a Writ cannot lie merely because at the date when the proceedings were first instituted or at some later stage earlier to the date of the return, the detention was lawful as being under a legal order. Ram Narayan Singh v. State of Delhi, AIR 1953 SC 277 : 1953 CrLJ 1113 : 1953 SCA 399 : 1953 SCJ 326 : 1953 SCR 652 : 1953 AWR (Sup) 68 : 1953 MWN 647.

[9596] ● Direct petition to Supreme Court without appeal from decision and Article 226.—The Supreme Court will discourage the practice of direct approach to the Supreme Court by a petition under Article 32 in a matter which has been taken to the High Court under Article 226 and has been decided against the petitioner. The proper approach to the Supreme Court in such a case is by way of an appeal under Article 136 from the order of the High Court which has aggrieved the petitioner. Gopalan, M.K. v. State of M.P., AIR 1954 SC 362 : 1954 CrLJ 1012 : 1954 SCA 557 : 1954 SCJ 534 : 1955 SCR 168 : (1954) 2 MLJ 76 : 1954 MWN 564 : 1954 AWR (HC) 392.

[9597] ● Illegal seizure of goods by police authorities.—Illegal seizure of goods by the Police otherwise than under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code constitutes an infringement of the fundamental right to property guaranteed under Articles 19(1)(f) and 31, and the proper remedy against such seizure lies in an application for a Writ of Mandamus under Article 32 or Article 226. Wazir Chand v. State of H.P., AIR 1954 SC 415 : 1954 CrLJ 1029 : 1954 SCJ 600 : 1954 SCA 1257 : 1955 SCR 408.

[9598] ● Power of High Court to interfere when.—Normally, when the High Court is moved under Article 226, it will not disturb a finding of a Tribunal on any matter left to it by law. The High Court has the power to interfere only on the following grounds, namely,

(a) if a finding of fact is not based upon, or is contrary to, the evidence on record, or

(b) if the finding is arrived at under an error as to the meaning and scope of the law applicable to the case, or

(c) if the tribunal's conclusion is contrary to its own findings. Liquidators of Pursa Ltd. v. Commissioner of I.T., Bihar, AIR 1954 SC 253 : 1954 SCA 1242 : 1954 SCJ 294 : 1954 SCD 23 : 1954 SCR 767 : (1954) 25 ITR 265 : 33 Pat 237 : Madh BLJ 1954 (SCD) 23.

[9599] ● Difference between powers of Supreme Court under Article 32 and powers of High Court under Article 226.—There is a difference in two important respects between the powers of the Supreme Court under Article 32 and the powers of the High Court under Article 226, namely,

(a) the scope of the remedy under Article 32 is narrower than that provided in Article 226, because Article 32 is confined to enforcement of fundamental rights only, while Article 226 embraces the power to issue an appropriate Writ 'for any other purpose' also.

(b) the right to get a relief under Article 32 is guaranteed under Article 32(1), whereas Article 226 does not carry a similar provision.

The result is that when the Writ prayed for under Article 226 is for the enforcement of a right other than a fundamental right, the High Court has the discretion to refuse to grant the Writ, if satisfied that the petitioner has an adequate and suitable remedy, under the Act itself. Rashid, K.S. & Son v. I.T. Investigation Commission, AIR 1954 SC 207 : 1954 SCA 264 : 1954 SCJ 264 : 1954 SCR 738 : (1954) 25 ITR 167.

[9600] ● Fundamental right when infringed.—When a fundamental right is alleged to have been infringed, the existence of an alternative remedy under the impugned Act itself is no ground for refusing the protection afforded by Article 32. The petitioner has a right to demand of the Supreme Court the remedy which the Constitution gives him under that Article.

If a particular law requires a person to do a particular thing on pain of penal action for non-compliance with the requirements of that law, that person can straight way seek the remedy given by Article 32 and apply for a declaration that the law is bad as conflicting with his fundamental right, and obtain a Writ of Mandamus against the State prohibiting it from enforcing that law against him. He does not have to wait until the State has actually issued a notice against him threatening to enforce such penal provision. Himmatlal H. Mehta v. State of M.P., AIR 1954 SC 403 : 1954 SCA 654 : 1954 SCJ 445 : 1954 SCR 1122 : 1954 (1) MLJ 690 : 67 MLW 629 : 1954 MWN 802.

[9601] ● Wide powers under Articles 32 and 226 on Supreme Court and High Courts to issue orders directors and writs.—By Articles 32 and 226 wide powers are conferred on the Supreme Court as well as all the High Courts to issue orders, directions and writs for the enforcement of fundamental rights, and in the case of the High Courts, for other purposes as well.

The language of these Articles is very wide, and in view of their express provisions it is not necessary to look back into the early history or procedural technicalities relating to these writs in English law. The Court can issue appropriate orders in any matter, so long as it keeps to the board and fundamental principles in English law which regulate the exercise of this jurisdiction. Basappa, T.C. v. T. Nagappa, AIR 1954 SC 440 : 1954 SCA 620 : 1954 SCJ 695 : 1955 SCR 250 : 67 MLW 613 : ILR (1954) Mys 235.

[9602] ● Writ of Certiorari object of.—The object of a Writ of Certiorari is to secure that an inferior Tribunal acts properly and within its jurisdiction. It gives to the person aggrieved a cheap, quick and effective remedy for the enforcement of his fundamental rights, and in the case of the High Courts, for any other purpose as well. Basappa, T.C. v. T. Nagappa, AIR 1954 SC 440 : 1954 SCA 620 : 1954 SCJ 695 : 1955 SCR 250.

[9603] ● Writ availability of only against judicial acts.—The writ is available only against "judicial acts", which expression includes quasi-judicial functions exercised by executive or administrative bodies, and not against purely ministerial acts. Thus the writ can be issued when a body has the duty to act judicially, and yet it has acted in excess of its legal authority.

The control exercised through a Writ of Certiorari is exercised in a supervisory capacity, and not in an appellate capacity. Thus the Court cannot re-weigh the evidence on which the order of the inferior tribunal or body is based, and cannot interfere with its order, even though in the opinion of the Court it has failed in the correct appreciation of that evidence.

The supervisory control by a Writ of Certiorari can be exercised only under the following conditions, namely,

(i) that the tribunal has acted without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction, or has refused to exercise the jurisdiction which it has, or

(ii) when the tribunal, though competent to hold an inquiry, has acted in manifest disregard of an essential rule of procedure or of a basic principle of natural justice.

Want of jurisdiction may arise in any of the following ways—

(i) from the nature of the subject-matter, or

(ii) from the absence of any preliminary set of circumstances which by law are made a condition precedent to assumption to jurisdiction, or

(iii) from some basic defect or disability to competency. Basappa, T.C. v. T. Nagappa, AIR 1954 SC 440 : 1954 SCA 620 : 1954 SCJ 695 : 1955 SCR 250.

[9604] ● Writ of Certiorari does not lie for correcting error of law.—A Writ of Certiorari will not lie for correcting every error of law. It can lie only for correcting an error which is manifest on the face of the record, that is, a patent error which is self-evident and about which there need be no argument and there cannot be two opinions. However, there is no precise rule for determining the nature of the error which can give rise to the writ, and there is an element of indefiniteness inherent in this question, so that it has to be left to the determination of the Court in each case as it arises. Hari Vishnu Kamath v. Syed Ahmad Ishaque, AIR 1955 SC 233 : 1955 SCA 105 : 1955 SCJ 267 : 1955 SCR 1104.

[9605] ● Power to issue appropriate writs and orders.—The power to issue appropriate writs and orders is conferred under Articles 32 and 226 in terms which are absolute and unqualified, and can be exercised against any tribunal or body within the Court's jurisdiction. Hari Vishnu Kamath v. Syed Ahmad Ishaque, AIR 1955 SC 233 : 1955 SCA 105 : 1955 SCJ 267 : 1955 SCR 1104 : 1955 NagLJ 1 : 1955 (1) MLJ (SC) 157 : 1955 MWN 449 : 1955 AWR 339 : 1955 AnLT (Civil) 350.

[9606] ● Writ of Certiorari directed against record of decision.—A Writ of Certiorari is an order directed against the record of a decision, and not against the tribunal itself, and the fact that the tribunal has become functus officio after the decision can have no effect on the jurisdiction of the Court to remove or quash the offending decision. The writ can be directed against the person who is legally in custody of the record at the time when the writ is issued. Hari Vishnu Kamath v. Syed Ahmad Ishaque, AIR 1955 SC 233 : 1955 SCA 105 : 1955 SCJ 267 : 1955 SCR 1104 : 1955 (1) MLJ (SC) 157 : 1955 MWN 449.

[9607] ● Determination of question by State Govt.—Jurisdiction of High Court under Article 226 or of Supreme Court under Article 32 not impaired.—When any Act expressly leaves a matter to the subjective satisfaction of the executive authority by using words such as "if the Government is satisfied" or "if the.......authority is satisfied" or "if the .... officer is satisfied", or by providing that the determination of the executive authority shall be "conclusive evidence" as to any matter, the effect of such a provision is that it is not open to the Court to subject the decision of the executive authority to objective tests, and the satisfaction is non-justiciable, with the result that the finding of the executive authority cannot be questioned in a Court of Law.

But even in such a case the jurisdiction of the Court under Article 32 or Article 226 is not altogether taken away, and the power remains in the Court to examine the question whether the provisions of the statute under which the action in question purports to be taken have been duly complied with, and whether the executive authority has duly discharged the obligations imposed upon it by that statute. Lila Vati Bai v. State of Bombay, AIR 1957 SC 521 : 1957 SCA 465 : 1957 SCJ 557 : 59 BomLR 934.

[9608] ● Writ of Certiorari—Essential features of.—The essential feature of a Writ of Certiorari is that the control which is exercised by the Court through such a writ over judicial and quasi-judicial tribunals or bodies in its supervisory capacity, and not as a Court of Appeal.

In granting the writ the High Court or the Supreme Court does not exercise the powers of an appellate Tribunal and does not review or reweigh the evidence, and does not substitute its own judgment for that of the inferior body. It is only when the impugned order is without jurisdiction of palpably erroneous that it can be demolished and put out of the way. Sewpujanrai Indrasanrai Ltd. v. Collector of Customs, AIR 1958 SC 845 : 1958 CrLJ 1355 : 1958 SCJ 1199 : 1958 MLJ (Cri) 929.

[9609] ● Chief Minister made party to petition—Serious allegations made against him.—In the present case, a police officer of high rank, who was serving as a Commissioner of Police and was under suspension, while investigations and enquiries into several charges against him of grave offences were going on, made a petition to the Supreme Court under Article 32 wherein serious allegations were made against the Chief Minister of the State. Their Lordships held that the petition could not succeed as the procedure followed in these investigations was according to procedure established by law and was not violative of Article 14 or Article 31 as contended by the petitioner. For that part of the judgment, see this case.

In this case, serious allegations have been made against the Chief Minister. He was made a party respondent to the petition and had notice of the allegations made. The Chief Minister had himself made no affidavit in respect of the allegations made against him and affidavits in reply had been made only by the Chief Secretary and the Home Secretary to the Punjab Government.

One of the allegations in the petition was that in one of the criminal cases against the petitioner by one Sethi, the complainant had sent the complaint direct to the Chief Minister and that the Chief Minister had passed certain orders thereon. The original complaint was not produced before the Court on the ground that it could not be traced and only a carbon copy was produced. The petitioner alleged that the Chief Minister had passed certain orders thereon and that the original was not produced in order to conceal from the Court the orders which the Chief Minister had passed thereon. In the affidavit filed by the Home Secretary he was not in a position to say anything about the allegations made against the Chief Minister.

The facts as regards the other case in which one Dhingra was the complainant were as under. Admittedly a complaint was sent to the Chief Minister with a covering letter in which it was stated that the petitioner had already started tampering with the evidence. The Chief Minister wrote on this complaint—"Will Additional Inspector General please take immediate action in taking over papers from Government departments concerned. Please give a prima facie report". It was not clear why he ordered the seizure of papers even before a prima facie report was given in respect of an offence said to have been committed five years before the date of the complaint. Further, the order itself was not clear as it could either mean that he ordered the submission of a prima facie report, or that he merely directed that a report should be made if a prima facie case was made out.

These were all matters in which the Chief Minister alone was in a position to enlighten the Court. In view of the allegations made against him, he owed a duty to the Court to file an affidavit stating what the correct position was. It must be recognised that in such a case it may not be possible for a Chief Minister to remember the circumstances in which a document passed through his hands, but if that was so, it was easy for him to say so in the affidavit. On the other hand, if he remembered the circumstances, he could have refuted the allegations with equal ease.

This was a case in which the petitioner was obviously suffering from a sense of grievance that he had not had a fair deal, and it was not a case where the refutation of the allegations made by him could be left to the Secretaries and other officers, because they could only speak from the record and were not in a position to say why the Chief Minister had passed certain orders. Therefore, this was clearly a case which required an affidavit by the Chief Minister.

In executive as well as judicial administration, justice must not only be done, but it must appear that justice is being done. Kapur, R.P. v. Sardar Pratap Singh Kairon, AIR 1961 SC 1117 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 161 : 1961 (2) SCR 143.

[9610] ● Act of State executive when infringes liberty guaranteed under Constitution.—When an act by the State executive infringes a liberty guaranteed under the Constitution, the remedy of the person injured lies under Article 32 of the Constitution. In such a case, it is entirely immaterial and irrelevant to consider whether or not the action taken, gives rise to an action under the civil law against the State. It is erroneous to assume that before the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 32 could be invoked, the applicant must either establish that he has no other remedy, adequate or otherwise, or that he must exhaust such remedies as the law affords, and can approach the Supreme Court only when he has not obtained proper redress. Once it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that by any action taken by a State executive the fundamental right of the petitioner has been infringed, under Article 32 it is not only the right of Supreme Court, but it is its duty, to give to the petitioner the required relief by passing appropriate orders in that behalf. Kharak Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1963 SC 1295 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 329 : 1963 ALJ 711.

[9611] ● High Court when dealing with writ petition under Article 226 against order of customs authorities.—When the High Court is dealing with a writ petition under Article 226 against the order of a Customs Authority, it is not sitting in appeal over the decision of that authority, and the correctness of the conclusion reached by that authority as regards the appreciation of the Items in the Hand-book of Import Trade Control or in the Indian Tariff Act which is referred to in those Items is not a matter which falls within the writ jurisdiction of the High Court. Where there is no procedural irregularity of any kind which would invalidate the order, and the order of the Customs Collector passed in the exercise of his powers under the Sea Customs Act shows by its very contents that the requirements of the Act as regards investigation and hearing to the party have been duly fulfilled, it would not be open to the High Court in the exercise of its writ jurisdiction to interfere with the order made merely on its own appreciation of the facts on which the order has been made. Girdharilal Bansilal v. Union of India, AIR 1964 SC 1519 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 461 : 1964 CurLJ (SC) 194 : 66 PunLR 1091.

[9612] ● Writ petition—Competency of under Article 32.—Although the respondents did not urge that writ petition was not competent under Article 32, the Court observed as follows :

Before we part with this petition, we ought to add that respondents did not urge before us that the writ petition was not competent under Article 32 and that the proper remedy available to the petitioner was a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution to the Punjab High Court; that is presumably because the respondents were anxious to have a decision from this Court on the question about the validity of the impugned Article in the regulation in question. We would, therefore, make it clear that our decision in the present writ should not be taken to mean that we have held that a petition like the present one, is competent under Article 32 of the Constitution. Gurdev Singh Sidhu v. State of Punjab, (1964) 2 CrLJ 481.

[9613] ● No member of executive can interfere with liberty of subject.—No member of the executive can interfere with the liberty of the subject except on condition that he can support the legality of his action before the Court of justice. State of Bihar v. Kameshwar Prasad Verma, AIR 1965 SC 575 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 494 : 1962 SCD 851 : (1963) 2 SCJ 89 : (1963) 2 SCR 183 : (1962) 2 Ker LR 192 : 1962 BLJR 798 : 1963 MLJ (Cri) 315 : 1963 ACrR 262 : 1963 AWR (HC) 534.

[9614] ● Habeas Corpus petition—Legality of detention.—It is well settled that in dealing with a petition for habeas corpus the Court has to see whether the detention on the date on which the application is made to the Court is legal, if nothing more has intervened between the date of the application and the date of the hearing. In the instant case the applications were made to this Court after the orders dated March 4, 1965, had been passed. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the validity of the detention orders made on December 29, 1964, for those orders were no longer in force and the petitioners were detained by orders passed on March 4, 1965. We shall, therefore, consider only the grounds urged against the validity of the orders passed on March 4, 1965.

Before we leave these cases, we would like to refer to the inordinate delay that took place between the making of the petitions to jail authorities and their reaching this Court. The petitions were made on March 15, 1965, but they reached this Court on April 12, 1965, exactly four weeks later. We consider that ordinarily one week is enough for any such petition to reach this Court from any part of India. We also consider that it is the duty of the jail authorities to send such petitions directly and at once to this Court and indeed to the High Courts where they are addressed to them. We trust that there will be no such lapse again in the future. A.K. Gopalan v. Government of India, AIR 1966 SC 816 : (1966) 1 SCJ 440 : (1966) 2 SCR 579 : (1966) 59 ITR 711 : (1966) 1 ITJ 377.

[9615] ● Writ of Habeas—Issuance of.—The present petition was filed in this Court under Article 32 of the Constitution on May 12, 1966 for issue of a writ of Habeas Corpus against the respondents directing them to set him at liberty on the ground that the provisions of the Foreigners Act were invalid.

Unlike in England, in India the person detained can file original petition for enforcement of his fundamental right to liberty before the Court other than the High Court, namely this Court. The order of the High Court in the said writ is not res judicata as held by the English and American Courts, either because it is not a judgment or because the principle of res judicata is not applicable to a fundamentally lawless order. If the doctrine of res judicata is attracted to an application for a writ of habeas corpus, there is no reason why the principle of constructive res judicata cannot also govern the said application, for the rule of constructive res judicata is only a part of the general principles of the law of res judicata, and if that be applied the scope of the liberty of an individual will be considerably narrowed. The present case illustrates the position. Before the High Court the petitioner did not question the constitutional validity of the President's order made under Article 359 of the Constitution. If the doctrine of constructive res judicata be applied, this Court, though enjoined by the Constitution to protect the right of a person illegality detained, will become powerless to do so. That would be whittling down the wide sweep of the constitutional protection.

Order 35, Rule 3 of the Supreme Court Rules provides that a petition for a writ of habeas corpus under Article 32 shall state whether the petitioner has moved the High Court concerned for similar relief and if so, with what result. This rule is a statutory safeguard against an abusive use of a petition for the issue of the writ of habeas corpus under Article 32. The previous dismissal of a petition for a writ of habeas corpus by a High Court is one of the matters which this Court may take into consideration at the preliminary hearing of the writ petition under Article 32 in forming the opinion whether a prima facie case for granting the petition is made out, and if on a consideration of all the materials the Court comes to the conclusion that a prima facie case is not made out, the Court may refuse to issue a rule nisi under O.35, R. 4. Ghulam Sarnar v. Union of India, AIR 1967 SC 1335 : 1967 CrLJ 1204 : (1967) 1 SCA 246 : (1967) 2 SCR 271.

[9616] ● Writ of Certiorari—Invocation of.— Constitution of India, Article 226 and Assam Forest Regulation (7 of 1891), Sections 62 and 3(5).—One of the grounds on which the jurisdiction of the High Court on Certiorari may be invoked, is an error of law apparent on the face of the record and not every error either of law or fact, which can be corrected by a superior Court, in exercise of its statutory powers as a Court of appeal or revision. If the Revenue Board has not exceeded its jurisdiction under the law or committed an error apparent on the face of the record, the High Court is not justified in quashing the appellate order of the Board under Article 226 of the Constitution. Biswabahan Das v. Gopen Chandra Hazarika, AIR 1967 SC 895 : 1967 CrLJ 828 : (1967) 1 SCWR 198 : (1967) 1 SCR 447 : (1967) 2 SCJ 454 : (1967) MLJ (Cri) 754.

[9617] ● Supreme Court not to issue writ of—Mandamus to control exercise of discretion by Custom officer.—Where the Customs Officer has a discretion to stay the proceedings under Section 111 & 112 during the pendency of the trial in the Criminal Court and be refused to stay the proceedings in his discretion and his action is not shown to be mala fide or arbitrary, the Supreme Court will not issue a mandamus to control the exercise of his discretion. T.G. Gaokar v. R.N. Shukla, AIR 1968 SC 1050 : 1968 CrLJ 1234 : (1968) 2 SCJ 727 : 1968 MPLJ 719 : 1968 Mah LJ 703 : 70 Bom LR 718.

[9618] ● No period of limitation prescribed for filing complaint when.—Where no period of limitation is prescribed for filing a complaint, a Court cannot throw it out on the sole ground of delay. Asstt. Customs Collector, Bombay v. L.R. Melwani, AIR 1970 SC 962 : 1970 CrLJ 885 : (1969) 2 SCR 438 : 1969 SCD 274 : (1970) 2 SCJ 299 : 1970 MLJ (Cri) 599 : 72 Bom LR 782.

[9619] ● Foreigner entering India illegally—His detention for purpose of deportation not illegal.—Its scope has grown to achieve its purpose of protecting individuals against the erosion of the right to be free from wrongful restraint on their rightful liberty. But when the petitioner has no right to move about freely in the country without a proper legal sanction, the restraint exercised on him for expelling him from the country cannot be construed to amount to his custody being illegal so as to require that his immediate relief should be directed. The constitutional protection against the illegal deprivation of personal liberty construed in a practical way cannot entitle non-citizens to remain in India contrary to the provisions of the law governing foreigners. Anwar v. State of J. & K., AIR 1971 SC 337 : (1971) 3 SCC 104 : 1970 UJ (SC) 702 : (1971) 1 SCA 519 : (1971) 1 SCJ 502 : (1971) 1 SCR 637.

[9620] ● Preventive detention order where challenged as mala fide—Supreme Court not to go into merits.—Where in a petition under Article 32 of the Constitution the detention of the petitioner is challenged, the Supreme Court cannot go into the merits whether the facts stated in the affidavits filed on behalf of the State are correct or not but it can be seen whether on those facts no charge of mala fides can be made out. Mohd. Sabir v. State of J&K, AIR 1971 SC 1713 : (1972) 4 SCC 558 : 1971 CrLJ 1271 : 1971 SCD 843 : 1971 UJ (SC) 710 : (1971) 2 Civ ApJ (SC) 127 : 1971 LabIC 1108 : 1971 ServLR 888.

[9621] ● Habeas Corpus proceedings—For issue of writ Court to consider legality of detention.—In habeas corpus proceedings the Court has to consider the legality of the detention on the date of hearing. If on the date of hearing it cannot be said that the detention is contrary to law and the aggrieved party has been wrongfully deprived of his personal liberty, a writ of habeas corpus cannot issue. Talib Hussain v. State of J&K, AIR 1971 SC 62 : (1971) 3 SCC 118 : 1970 UJ (SC) 709.

[9622] ● CrPC not applicable to—Tribal areas in Assam and Manipur.—The CrPC does not apply to tribal areas in Assam and Manipur by reason of the VI Schedule to the Constitution. Only its spirit applies. Hence when an accused is arrested on a charge of two or more offences he need not be produced in connection with each offence on each occasion before a Magistrate for remand. Saptawna v. State of Assam, AIR 1971 SC 813 : 1971 CrLJ 679 : 1971 UJ (SC) 341.

[9623] ● In habeas corpus proceedings Court to have regard to legality or otherwise of detention.—In proceedings for a writ of habeas corpus, the Supreme Court does not as a general rule go into controversial matters. Such a writ is not granted where a person is committed to jail custody by a competent Court by an order which prima facie does not appear to be without jurisdiction or wholly illegal. Further the Court is to have regard to the legality or otherwise of the detention at the time of the return and not with reference to the institution of the proceedings. A fortiori the Court would not be concerned with a date prior to the intimation of the proceedings for a writ of habeas corpus. B.R. Rao v. State of Orissa, AIR 1971 SC 2197 : (1972) 3 SCC 495 : 1971 SCD 918 : 1971 UJ (SC) 767 : 1971 CivAppR (SC) 464 : 37 CutLT 1064.

[9624] ● Under-trial not produced before Magistrate within 24 hours of arrest.—In the case of an under-trial prisoner the question that he is entitled to be released as he was not produced before a Magistrate within 24 hours of his arrest does not arise.

Where an accused is illegally detained, the detention becomes lawful when subsequently he is arrested and produced before a Magistrate.

In the case of an under-trial prisoner, the fact that he was arrested in only one case does not make any difference. Saptawna v. State of Assam, AIR 1971 SC 813 : 1971 CrLJ 679 : 1971 UJ (SC) 341.

[9625] ● Detention under MISA—Habeas Corpus—Successive petitions.—Where in a case of detention under the MISA, in the counter affidavit filed by the Government it was averred that the detenu appeared also to have applied to the Calcutta High Court for a writ of habeas corpus which was still pending there but the detenu in his writ petition to the Supreme Court stated that he had not applied to the Calcutta High Court and both sides were unable to give any further details or information in that connection, the Supreme Court held that it would not advance the cause of justice to decline to dispose of the petition under Article 32 or to postpone the hearing and await the decision of the Calcutta High Court. Madan Mohan v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1972 SC 2400 : (1972) 2 SCC 534.

[9626] ● Habeas Corpus—New plea.—Where additional grounds were raised which were not in the writ petition, the Supreme Court allowed them to be raised since it was a habeas corpus petition, and was made by the petitioner from jail. Nagendra Nath v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1972 SC 665 : (1972) 1 SCC 498 : 1972 CrLJ 482 : (1972) 1 SCJ 464 : (1972) 1 SCJ 547.

[9627] ● Railway Board falls within definition of State.—The Railway Board falls within the definition of "State" as given in Article 12 of the Constitution. The administrative act or order of the Railway Board can be challenged under Article 14. Railway Board v. Observer Publications, AIR 1972 SC 1792 : (1972) 2 SCC 266 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 669 : 1973 CrLJ 458.

[9628] ● Habeas Corpus—Delay in completion of investigation.—No writ of habeas corpus or any other relief can be granted to a person who was arrested in 6 cases, 3 of which related to dacoity, one to dacoity with murder and two cases related to murder and rioting and his remedy is to apply for bail to the appropriate Court or the superior Court because of the delay in the completion of the investigation or delay in the trial of his case. B. Mondal v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1972 SC 1852 : (1972) 3 SCC 891 : 1972 CrLJ 1175.

[9629] ● Supreme Court on hearing of rule nisi can examine legality of detention.—The Supreme Court can examine the legality of the detention on the hearing of the rule nisi without requiring that the person detained be brought before the Court, and if the detention is found unlawful, order him to be released forthwith. Order 47, Rule 1, empowers the Court, for sufficient cause shown, to dispense with the requirement of Order 35, Rule 4, of producing the body of the person detained on the day fixed for the hearing of the rule nisi, and the Court may direct in an appropriate case that the body of the person detained need not be produced. The same is the effect of Order 47, Rule 6. Where such a direction is given, the Supreme Court would hear the rule nisi without the person detained being brought before it and, as provided in Order 35, Rule 5, pass an order that the person detained be set at liberty and if cause is shown and allowed, discharge the rule nisi.

Though the right to move the Supreme Court under Article 32(1) for the enforcement of fundamental rights under Part III is itself a fundamental right, there is no obligation on the Supreme Court to give any particular kind of remedy to the petitioner. K. Sanyal v. Distt. Magistrate, Darjeeling, AIR 1973 SC 2684 : (1973) 2 SCC 674 : 1973 CrLJ 1818.

[9630] ● Supreme Court cannot go into evidence in support of charge against Army Officer.—The Supreme Court cannot go into the evidence in support of the charges against an Army Officer in a petition filed under Article 32. It can only consider whether any fundamental rights of the petitioner have been violated and the only Article relevant is Article 21 of the Constitution. Harish Uppal v. Union of India, AIR 1973 SC 258 : 1973 CrLJ 274.

[9631] ● Writ of Habeas Corpus.—Where the petitioner has been released during the pendency of a writ of habeas corpus, the questions raised on his behalf become academic and the petition also becomes infructuous, resulting in the dismissal of the petition as infructuous. Mohit Chandra v. Distt. Magistrate, Calcutta, AIR 1974 SC 2287 : (1972) 3 SCC 773 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 841 : 1974 CrLJ 1315.

[9632] ● Proclamation of emergency valid political issue.—The question whether there was no real emergency and yet the proclamation remained unretracted with consequential peril to fundamental rights, is a political issue and not justiciable and the appeal should be to the polls and not to the Courts. Academic exercises in constitutional law are not for Courts but Jurists. Bhut Nath v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1974 SC 806 : (1974) 1 SCC 645 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 300 : 1974 CrLJ 690.

[9633] ● Habeas Corpus petition—Rule nisi issued.—In a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, the earliest date with reference to which the legality of the detention is to be considered is the date of filing of the application for such writ. Therefore any defect prior to that date in the legality of the detention cannot affect the subsequent detention if it is legally on the date of the petition.

It is competent to the Court to dispense with the production of the body of the person detained while issuing rule nisi, and the rule nisi could be had without requiring the body of the person detained to be brought before the Court.

Where a person is committed to jail custody by a competent Court by an order which prima facie does not appear to be without jurisdiction or wholly illegal, a writ of habeas corpus cannot be granted. Kanu Sanyal v. Dt. Magistrate, Darjeeling, AIR 1974 SC 510 : (1974) 4 SCC 141 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 280 : 1974 CrLJ 465.

[9634] ● Court cannot release detenu by taking into account period of remission.—A person sentenced to transportation for life may be detained in prison for life. The Supreme Court cannot interfere on the mere ground that if the period of remission claimed by him is taken into account, he is entitled to be released. It is for the Government to decide whether he should be given any remissions and whether he should be released earlier. Smbha Ji v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1974 SC 147 : (1974) 1 SCC 196 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 102 : 1974 CrLJ 302 : 1974 MLJ (Cri) 359 : (1974) 2 SCJ 1.

[9635] ● Subjective satisfaction of detaining authority.—The Supreme Court in Writ proceedings cannot go into the question whether or not the petitioner was concerned in the dacoities. The statute has left this matter to the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority. Ghetu Sheikh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1975 SC 982 : (1975) 1 SCC 334 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 170 : 1975 CrLJ 795.

[9636] ● Habeas Corpus petition—Maintainability.—In a case of detention, the petitioner has to show the violation of either Article 21 or 22 of the Constitution. Personal liberty of the citizen which the law so sedulously and carefully protects can also be taken away by the procedure established by law when it is used to jeopardise public good and not merely private interests. The Supreme Court cannot order a release from detention upon a Habeas Corpus petition, until it is satisfied that the petitioner's detention is really unwarranted by law. In such a petition, what has to be considered by the Court is whether the detention is prima facie legal or not, and not whether the detaining authorities have wrongly or rightly reached a satisfaction on every question of fact. Ram Bali v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1975 SC 623 : (1975) 4 SCC 47 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 321 : 1975 CrLJ 592.

[9637] ● Question of fact—Whether Master Plan specified particular use of building as distinguished from land.—In these appeals, the common question involved was whether the High Court was right in taking upon itself the task of holding on the interpretation of and on reading the Master Plan that it had not specified any use of the building as distinguished from land.

The said question is largely a question of fact in each case whether the Master Plan has specified a particular use of a particular building and whether a person prosecuted has incurred the penal liability under Section 29(2) of the Development Act for the alleged violation of Section 14 of the Act. It may be that the determination of the question as to whether the Master Plan has specified a particular use of a particular building would largely depend upon the interpretation and reading of the Master Plan. But to arrive at a correct conclusion various other facts and circumstances will have to be taken into consideration. It is neither expedient nor possible for the High Court or the Supreme Court to arrive at a definite conclusion one way or the other on the reading and interpretation of the Master Plan alone. It is primarily and essentially within the domain of the Criminal Court where the prosecutions are pending to arrive at its own conclusion on appreciation of the entire evidence placed before it. The persons prosecuted would undoubtedly have adequate opportunity of defending themselves and to show that the ingredients which are necessary to be proved and established by the prosecution have not been so proved or established. The appeals were allowed directing the prosecution against the accused respondents to be proceeded with. Delhi Development Authority v. Lila D. Bhagat, AIR 1975 SC 495 : (1975) 1 SCC 410 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 151 : 1975 CrLJ 435 : (1975) 1 SCWR 122.

[9638] ● Presidential order—No locus standi to mere writ petition—Challenging legality of detention under MISA.—In view of the Presidential Order dated 27-6-1975, no person has any locus standi to move any writ petition under Article 226 before a High Court for Habeas Corpus or any other writ or order or direction to challenge the legality of an order of detention on the ground that the order is not under or in compliance with the Maintenance of Internal Security Act or is illegal or is vitiated by mala fides factual or legal or is based on extraneous considerations. A.D.M., Jabalpur v. S. Shukla, AIR 1976 SC 1207 : (1976) 2 SCC 521 : 1976 CrLJ 945 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 303 : 1976 UJ (SC) 610.

[9639] ● Practice by higher officers of State Govt. to utilize lower ones to provide alibi for their own want.—The higher officers of the State Government should cease to utilise the lower ones to provide an alibi for their own want of care and the legal adviser for the Government will display greater competence and attention in drafting affidavits. Mohd. Ibrahim v. B.R. Rao, AIR 1976 SC 1822 : (1976) 2 SCC 33 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 233 : 1976 CrLJ 1385 : (1976) 2 SCJ 456 : 1976 CrAppR (SC) 91 : 1976 Chand LR (SC) Cr 58 : (1976) 2 APLJ (SC) 46.

[9640] ● Writ petition filed after delay of four year.—Where the writ petition was filed after a gross delay of four years for which there is no satisfactory explanation, the High Court was justified in dismissing it summarily. Lachhman Dass v. Union of India, AIR 1977 SC 1979 : (1977) 2 SCC 584 : 1977 CrLJ 1574 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 247 : 1977 SCC (Lab) 309 : 1977 SCCrR 218 : 1977 UJ (SC) 355.

[9641] ● Mustard Oil (Price Control) Order 1977—Validity.—In these writ petitions, a common question of the validity of an order, viz., the Mustard Oil (Price Control) Order, 1977, was raised.

On a plain reading of Article 3(b) the protective umbrella of the IX Schedule took in its ever-widening wings only the Acts and Regulations specified therein, but not Orders and Notifications issued under those Acts and Regulations. It is no answer to say that though the particular law, as for example a Control Order, is not specified in the IX Schedule, the parent Act under which the Order was issued was specified in that Schedule. The Essential Commodities Act is placed in the IX Schedule and its validity could not be attacked on the ground of its unconstitutionality. But there is no justification for extending the protection of that immunity to an Order passed under Section 3 of the Act like the Mustard Oil (Price Control) Order. It is therefore, open to the petitioners to invoke the writ jurisdiction of the Supreme Court for determination of the question whether the provisions of the Order violated Articles 14, 19(1)(f) and (g) of the Constitution. The said Order cannot be held to offend Article 14 on ground that the impugned Order treats the entire country as one unit regardless of regional variations relating to factors like the cost of procurement of raw material and freight. There is no reliable data to support the view that dealers in different regions could be said to be so differently situated in the context of and in relation to the purpose for which the Price Control Order is issued that one common price for dealers all over the country can reasonably be described as discriminatory as against some of them. Fixation of different prices for different regions would frustrate the very object of the exercise, that an essential commodity should be made available to the consumer at a fair price. In the ultimate analysis, the mechanics of price fixation has necessarily to be left to the judgment of the executive and unless it is patent that there is hostile discrimination against a class of operators, the processual basis of price fixation has to be accepted in the generality of cases as valid. The said Order is also not violative of rights of the parties under Article 19(1)(f) & (g) of the Constitution. In the first place, it is impossible to determine in the writ petitions the accuracy of the petitioners' case that they purchased Mustard seed from month to month and from week to week as the crushing of the seed progressed. The circumstance that the petitioners might have to suffer a loss over a short period immediately following upon the promulgation of the Price Control Order would not render the Order constitutionally invalid. The Parliament having entrusted the fixation of prices to the expert judgment of the Government, it would be wrong for the Supreme Court to examine each and every minute detail pertaining to the Governmental decisions. The impugned Order is therefore, valid. Prag Ice & Oil mills v. Union of India, AIR 1978 SC 1296 : (1978) 3 SCC 459 : 1978 CrLJ 1281 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 120 : (1978) 3 SCR 293.

[9642] ● Prison justice—Intervention by Supreme Court.—The Supreme Court is entitled to intervene when constitutional rights or statutory prescriptions are transgressed to the injury of the prisoner but would decline where lesser matters of institutional order and management, though irksome to some, are alone involved. Imprisonment does not spell farewell to fundamental rights although, by a realistic re-appraisal, Courts would refuse to recognise the full panoply of Part III of the Constitution enjoyed by a free citizen. Where a prison practice or internal instruction places harsh restrictions on jail life, breaching guaranteed rights, the Court directly comes in. Every prison sentence is a conditioned deprivation of life and liberty, with civilized norms built in and unlimited trauma interdicted. In that sense, judicial policing of prison practices is implied in the sentencing power. The criminal judiciary has thus a duty to guardian their sentences and visit prisons when necessary. Many of them do not know or exercise this obligation. The penological goals which may be regarded as reasonable justification for restricting the right to move freely within the confines of a pententiary are now well settled. If prisoners has title of Articles 19, 21 and 14, rights subject to the limitation indicate, there should be some correlation between deprivation of freedom and the legitimate functions of a correctional system. Compassion wherever possible and cruelty only where inevitable is the art of correctional confinement. When prison policy advanced such a valid goal, the Court would not intervene officiously. The Court was reluctant to intervene in the day-to-day operation of the State penal system; but undue harshness and avoidable tantrums, under the guise of discipline and security, gained no immunity from Court writs. The reason was, prisoners retained all rights enjoyed by free citizens except those lost necessarily as an incident of confinement. Moreover, the right enjoyed by prisoners under Articles 14, 19 and 21, though limited, were not static and would rise to human heights when challenging situations arose. Charles Sobraj v. Supdt., Central Jail, New Delhi, AIR 1978 SC 1514 : (1978) 4 SCC 104 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 5421 : 978 CrLJ 1534 : 1978 SCCrR 416.

[9643] ● Jurisdiction of High Court—Ambit of.—The High Court in exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction commits a grave error by making observations on seriously disputed questions of facts taking its cue from affidavits which in such a situation would hardly provide any reliable material. High Court was clearly in error in giving the direction virtually amounting to a mandamus to close the case before the investigation is complete.

Matter brought to the High Court did not call for investigation into the mala fides of the Superintendent, Railway Police, at the stage when investigation was to be taken over by another officer and the conclusion reached by the Superintendent, Railway Police, and his subordinate investigating officer to file the charge-sheet was not acted upon. Hence, aspersions cast on the character of the Superintendent and allegations of mala fides made against him virtually accepted by the High Court in entirety are utterly irrelevant and the same are expunged. Judgment of the Patna High Court was reversed. State of Bihar v. J.A.C. Saldanna, AIR 1980 SC 326 : (1980) 1 SCC 554 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 272 : 1980 CrLJ 98 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 17 : (1980) 1 SCJ 406 : (1980) 2 SCR 16 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 404 : 1980 BLJR 18 : 1980 BLJ 80 : 1980 MLJ (Cri) 382.

[9644] ● Habeas Corpus—Earlier petition dismissed.—In detention under COFEPOSA, Writ of habeas corpus to release the detenu was filed. Identical writ petition on almost same grounds was rejected earlier after a full-dressed debate. Present petition seeks for a virtual review of the earlier judgment. Instead of filing a petition for review, present independent writ petition has been filed. One ground is that some of the grounds, particularly the one relating to representation by a counsel before the Advisory Board, is awaiting decision by the Constitution Bench in other cases and therefore the present writ petition may also be heard by a Constitution Bench. It was open to the petitioner to seek review of judgment of this Court or file another writ petition as may be advised if the view of the Supreme Court is later found to be wrong in the light for the decision of the Constitution Bench. Another question raised is about the vires of the COFEPOSA, argument being that its inclusion in the Ninth Schedule of the Constitution offends the basic structure of the Constitution. The petitioner having deliberately not chosen to raise the question in the earlier petition, the Supreme Court will not be justified in admitting this writ petition. Kavita v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 2084 : (1981) 4 SCC 145 : 1981 CrLJ 1703.

[9645] ● Petition for habeas corpus—Subsequent petition to challenge preventive detention—Not barred by constructive res judicata.—Application of the doctrine of constructive res judicata is confined to civil actions and civil proceedings. This principle of public policy is entirely inapplicable to illegal detention and does not bar a subsequent petition for a writ of habeas corpus under Article 32 of the Constitution on fresh grounds, which were not taken in the earlier petition for the same relief. Lallubhai Jogibhai v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 728 : (1981) 2 SCC 427 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 463 : 1981 CrLJ 288 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 99 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 130 : 1981 Chand CrC (SC) 60 : (1981) 2 SCJ 37 : 1981 ACrC 162 : (1981) 2 SCR 352 : 1981 MLJ (Cri) 350.

[9646] ● Constructive res judicata—Doctrine—Applicability of to writ proceedings.—The High Court decides the petition of the detenu under Article 226 which is a discretionary jurisdiction whereas the jurisdiction to grant relief in a petition under Article 32 filed in the Supreme Court is guaranteed by the Constitution and once the Court finds that there has been a violation of Article 22(5) of the Constitution, then it has no discretion in the matter but is bound to grant the relief to the detenu by setting aside the order of detention. Doctrine of res judicata or principles of finality of judgment cannot be allowed to whittle down or override the express constitutional mandate to the Supreme Court enshrined in Article 32 of the Constitution. Kirit Kumar v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 1621 : (1981) 2 SCC 436 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 471 : 1981 CrLJ 1267 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 263 : (1981) 2 SCR 718 : (1981) 22 Guj LR 1067.

[9647] ● Prison torture not beyond reach of Supreme Court.—When police and prison torture is escalating in our human rights era, Courts owe a duty to society not to ignore such a dangerous reality. A Court sentence does not deprive the prisoner of his fundamental rights. A 'lifer' making a bitter complaint with facts and figures, of the terror and horror, physical and psychic, let loose on him and other jail-mates by a crypto-criminal combination of senior officials and superior prisoners, the Supreme Court instead of directly making a detailed investigation into the charges and the defences, directed a judicial enquiry by the District & Sessions Judge of Delhi who is a member of the Board of Visitors. Rakesh v. B.L. Vig. Supdt., Central Jail, New Delhi, AIR 1981 SC 1767 : 1980 Supp SCC 183 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 834 : 1981 CrLJ 1438 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 757 : (1980) 18 DLT 159 : (1980) 3 SCR 629.

[9648] ● Dismissal of earlier writ petition for habeas corpus.—Dismissal of earlier writ petition for habeas corpus will not operate as a bar to the maintainability of another for that purpose. Sunil Dutt v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 53 : (1982) 3 SCC 405 : 1982 CrLJ 193.

[9649] ● Nature and scope of proceedings under Article 226.—Nature and scope of proceeding under Article 226. FIR did not disclose commission of a cognizable offence. High Court was justified in quashing investigation. State of West Bengal v. Swapan Kumar, AIR 1982 SC 949 : (1982) 1 SCC 561 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 283 : 1982 CrLJ 819 : 1982 (1) ComLJ 217 : 1982 ACrLJ 108 : (1982) 1 SCJ 251 : 1982 MLJ (Cri) 359 : 1982 IJR 108.

[9650] ● Habeas corpus petition by blinded prisoners.—In a habeas corpus petition by blinded prisoners the Jail Superintendent was ordered by the Supreme Court to file affidavit in the case. On that very day the petitioner (Jail Superintendent) was suspended by the Government. Miscellaneous petition filed by him to quash the suspension order on the ground that it was passed mala fide to prevent him from filing affidavit is maintainable. Anil Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1982 SC 1008 : (1982) 2 SCC 195 : 1982 CrLJ 982 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 152 : 1982 SCC (Lab) 194 : 1982 SCCrR 285 : 1982 UJ (SC) 301 : 1982 BLJR 287 : 1982 BLJ 425.

[9651] ● Multiple murder case.—Articles 32 & 72, Penal Code, Sections 53 & 302 and Criminal Procedure Code, Sections 368, 434.—In a multiple murder case the accused was convicted and sentenced to death by common judgment. Death penalty was commuted to life imprisonment for one accused. Co-accused also is entitled to commutation. But as his mercy petition to the President was dismissed, the Supreme Court felt that petitioner's sentence also should be commuted to life imprisonment and as such recommended to the President to exercise his powers under Article 72. Duty of Prison Authorities prior to actual execution of death sentence of a prisoner is indicated. Harbans Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1982 SC 849 : (1982) 2 SCC 101 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 361 : 1982 CrLJ 795 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 71 : 1982 SCCrR 192, 198 : 1982 UJ (SC) 181 : 1982 CrAppR (SC) 88 : 1982 Chand LR (Cri) 719 : 1982 ACrLJ 157 : (1982) 1 SCJ 340 : 1982 MLJ (Cri) 409 : 1982 IJR 157.

[9652] ● Custody of minor child—Paramount consideration.—Where custody of a minor child was with the father, the mother's petition for custody of the child was dismissed by the High Court on the ground that the custody of the father is not illegal. Order was set aside as improper, holding paramount consideration in such cases is the welfare of the minor and not the legal rights of either party. Veena Kapoor v. Varinder Kumar, AIR 1982 SC 792 : (1981) 3 SCC 92 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 650 : 1982 CrLJ 580 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 11 (2) : (1982) 1 SCJ 202 : 1982 MLJ (Cri) 336 : 1982 Bihar CrC (SC) 114 : (1982) 1 APLJ (SC) 19 : 1982 (UP) CrC (SC) 114 : (1982) ACrC 205.

[9653] ● Permissible to protect person from illegal and vexatious prosecution by grant of appropriate writ.—In an appropriate case, it may be, rather is, permissible to protect a person from illegal and vexatious prosecution by grant of an appropriate writ or in exercise of inherent or revisional powers of the High Court. But where the matter was a question of fact and it was neither expedient nor possible for the High Court or the Supreme Court to arrive at a definite conclusion one way or the other, it was primarily and essentially within the domain of the Criminal Court where the prosecutions were pending to arrive at its own conclusion on appreciation of the entire evidence placed before it. Munna v. State of U.P., AIR 1982 SC 806 : (1982) 1 SCC 445 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 269 : 1982 CrLJ 620 : 1982 ACrC 157 : 1982 MLJ (Cri) 351 : 1982 UJ (SC) 143 : 1982 ACrLJ 59 : 1982 AWC 295 : 1982 ACrR 190 : (1982) 1 SCJ 225 : 1982 IJR (Cri) SC 59 : 1982 (2) Chand LR (Cri) SC 555.

[9654] ● Seizure of foodgrains.—In Writ Petitions against seizure of foodgrains, question whether seizure was for any contravention of any Order issued under Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act, is to be determined by the Additional District Magistrate. When facts are controverted, the petitioners have no right to relief under Article 32. Transaction has still to be proved. Supreme Court cannot act on documents. Bishamber Dayal Chandra Mohan v. State of U.P., AIR 1982 SC 33 : (1982) 1 SCC 39 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 53 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 99 : 1982 ACrLJ (SC) 67 : 1982 CrAppR (SC) 9 : 1982 EFR 183 : (1982) 1 SCR 1137 : 1982 IJR 67 : 1982 UJ (SC) 802.

[9655] ● Mandamus against Govt.—Each of the petitioners was aged below 20 years at the date of the commission of offence. Superintendent of Jail recommended their release on completion of 10 years imprisonment inclusive of remissions. There was no sufficient reason for not releasing them. Mandamus was issued for release forthwith.

Petitioner was over 20 years of age at the date of commission of offence and has undergone a total imprisonment of 19 years, 3 months and 16 days inclusive of remissions. Unexpired period of imprisonment was hardly 8 months and 14 days. Ground for non-release was that the report of Probation Officer was awaited. Petitioner was directed to be released on bail.

Premature release of two petitioners was deferred by the Sentence Revising Board as certain reports from the Police Department and from the Probation Officer had not been received. Since both of them underwent total imprisonment of over 17 years and 16 years inclusive of remissions respectively, respondents were directed to consider their cases and dispose of the same within one month.

Petitioner underwent a total imprisonment of 14 years, 3 months and 28 days inclusive of remissions. His case for premature release was deferred for want of requisite information without indicating what it was. Police report, Probation Officer's report as well as Jail Superintendent's report were favourable to him and his conduct in jail was certified to be good. His release forthwith was ordered. Shriniwas v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1982 SC 1391 : (1982) 3 SCC 209 : (1982) CrAppR (SC) 312.

[9656] ● Detention under preventive detention law—Duty of Court under Articles 32, 226 and 136.—The High Court under Article 226 and the Supreme Court under Article 32 or under Article 136 was not sit on appeal on the orders of preventive detention. The normal law is that when an isolated offence or offences was or were committed, the offender would be prosecuted. But, if there be a law of preventive detention empowering the authority to detain a particular offender in order to disable him to repeat his offences, it could do so, but it would be obligatory on the part of the detaining authority to formally comply with the provisions of Article 22(5) of the Constitution. The High Court and the Supreme Court have to see whether the formalities enjoined by the said Article had been complied with by the detaining authority, and if they were complied with, the Court could not examine the materials before it and find that the detaining authority should not have been satisfied on the materials before it and detained the detenu under the Preventive Detention Act, for, that is the function of an appellate Court. Hemlata v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1982 SC 8 : (1981) 4 SCC 647 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 16 : 1982 CrLJ 150 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 644 : 1982 SCCrR 256 : 1982 (2) Bom CR 218 : (1982) 1 SCR 1028.

[9657] ● Power of President to commute death sentence.—Power of the President to commute death sentence. Necessity of justification to exercise that power is to be judged from case to case. Kuljit Singh v. *Lt. [9662] ● Pronouncing final order without reasoned judgment.—Opportunity was taken to point out that serious difficulties would arise on account of the practice increasingly adopted by the High Court of pronouncing the final order without a reasoned judgment. It is desirable that the final order which the High Court intend to pass should not be announced until a reasoned judgment is ready for pronouncement. Suppose, for example, that a final order without a reasoned judgment is announced by the High Court that a house should be demolished, or that the custody of a child should be handed over to one parent as against the other, or that a person accused of a serious charge is acquitted, or that a statute is unconstitutional, or, as in the instant case, that a detenu be released from detention. If the object of passing such orders is to ensure speedy compliance with them, the object is more often defeated by the aggrieved party filing a special leave petition in the Supreme Court against the order passed by the High Court. That places the Supreme Court in a predicament because, without the benefit of the reasoning of the High Court, it is difficult for the Supreme Court to allow the bare order to be implemented. The result inevitably is that the operation of the order passed by the High Court has to be stayed pending delivery of the reasoned judgment. It may be thought that such orders are passed by the Supreme Court and therefore there was no reason why the High Courts should not do the same. It might be pointed out that the orders passed by the Supreme Court were final and no appeal lay against them. The Supreme Court was the final Court in the hierarchy of our Courts. Besides, orders without a reasoned judgment were passed by the Supreme Court very rarely, under exceptional circumstances. Orders passed by the High Court were subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 136 of the Constitution and other provisions of the concerned statutes. These observations were thought necessary to be made in order that a practice which was not very desirable and which achieved no useful purpose might not grow out of its present infancy. State of Punjab v. Jagdev Singh, AIR 1984 SC 444 : (1984) 1 SCC 596 : 1984 CrLJ 177 (SC).

[9663] ● Writ of habeas corpus—Investigation of facts before issue of writ.—In this petition filed for a writ of habeas corpus, it was established that C. Daniel and C. Paul were taken to Phungrei Camp by officers and jawans of 21st Sikh Regiment on 10-3-1982 and that they never left the army camp as canvassed on behalf of the respondents on 11-3-1982.

It was obligatory upon the respondents, therefore, to produce the said persons and to explain their whereabouts, more so because respondents claimed the power to arrest and question anyone under the provisions of the Armed Forces (Special Powers) Act, 1958. It was contended for the respondents that once the respondents had adopted a position that the two persons had come to the army camp at the request of the army authority, but left that place on their own in company of their friends, a writ of habeas corpus could not be issued, and the respondents could not be called upon to file a return to the writ. When the petition for a writ of habeas corpus under Article 32 of the Constitution was moved before the Court, ordinarily the Court would not issue ex parte a writ of habeas corpus unless the urgency of the situation so demanded or issuing of a notice of motion was likely to result in defeat of justice. Further, the Court would be reluctant to issue a writ of habeas corpus ex parte where the fact of detention might be controverted and it might become necessary to investigate the facts. The normal practice was that when a petition for a writ of habeas corpus was moved, the Court would direct a notice to be served upon the respondents with a view to affording the respondents to file evidence in reply. If the facts alleged in the petition were controverted by the respondents appearing in response to the notice by filing its evidence, the Court would proceed to investigate the facts to determine whether there was substance in the petition for a writ of habeas corpus. If on investigation of facts, the Court rejected the contention of the respondents and was satisfied that the respondents were responsible for unauthorised and illegal detention of the person or persons in respect of whom the writ was sought, the Court would issue a writ of habeas corpus which would make it obligatory for the respondents to file a return. Accordingly, the petition was allowed directing the issue of a writ of habeas corpus to respondents 1, 2 and 4 commanding them to produce the two persons before the Supreme Court on 12-12-1983 and file the return. *Sebastian M. [9665] ● Issue of general writ of mandamus—Desirability.—This writ petition was filed by two public-spirited organisations though their courageous convenor and secretary respectively. The question raised in this petition was whether the Government could ask the police not to enter a place of worship, even if criminals were reported to be hiding or harboured therein.

It is impossible and undesirable for any Court to issue a general writ of mandamus to the effect that whenever a criminal was suspected to have taken shelter in a place of worship, the police should enter that place, regardless of the overall situation of law and order. Speaking generally, Courts cannot enforce law and order by issuing general directions without reference to specific instances. The Government has to assess, in the context of the prevailing conditions, the impact of the steps taken to enforce law and order. And, it is the executive which has to take a policy decision as regards the steps to be taken in a given situation, after taking into account the demands of the prevailing situation. While enforcing law and order the executive cannot be oblivious of the possibility that while solving one problem of law and order, others more acute than the one sought to be solved might arise. That is always valid and relevant consideration. Hindustani Andolan v. State of Punjab, AIR 1984 SC 582 : (1984) 1 SCC 204 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 926 : 1984 CrLJ 299

[9669] ● Habeas Corpus—Minor child Custody of.—In this Writ Petition, the petitioner was citizen of the U.S.A. residing in the State of Michigan. The 1st respondent was her husband. He was an Indian citizen but settled down in the U.S. having secured employment there. A male child was born to the couple. As differences arose between the two spouses, the petitioner along with her son took up separate residence in a women's shelter. She filed a petition for divorce against the 1st respondent in the Circuit Court and the same was decreed. By the same decree, it was directed that the petitioner should have the care, custody and control of the minor child of the parties until he reached the age of 18 years on until further orders of that Court. The first respondent was given visitation rights by the decree. Taking advantage of the weekened visitation rights, the 1st respondent picked up the child from his school and secretly left for India, without intimating the Court or the petitioner. He sold away all his immovable properties immediately before leaving for India and posted a letter of resignation from his job at the Airport. After coming to know that the minor child was not returned to the day care centre by the 1st respondent, the petitioner moved the Court which issued a warrant and a Federal Warrant of arrest but they could not be executed in the U.S. as the 1st respondent had already come over to India. After frantic efforts, the petitioner filed this petition for issue of a writ of habeas corpus directing the respondents to produce in Court her minor child, whom she had brought up for more than 7 years. In response to the notice issued by the Supreme Court, the 1st respondent produced the child in Court and filed a counter-affidavit contending that he had not deliberately done anything wrong in bringing the child to India and that the minor child was well settled in India and that it would be in the interest of the child that he should be allowed to reside with him in India as per the child's desire. The conduct of the first respondent in taking the child from the custody of the person to whom it has been entrusted by the Court was undoubtedly most reprehensible.

Whenever a question arises before a Court pertaining to the custody of a minor child, the matter is to be decided not on considerations of the legal rights of parties but on the sole and predominant criterion of what would best serve the interest and welfare of the minor. The Court found the minor to be too tender in age and totally immature to be able to form any independent opinion of his own as to which parent he should stay with. The child is an American citizen. The petitioner who is the mother of the child is full for genuine love and affection for the child and she can be safely trusted to look after him, educate him and attend in every possible way to his proper up-bringing. The child has not taken root in this country and he is still accustomed and acclimatized to the conditions and environments obtaining in the place of origin in the U.S.A. The child's presence in India is the result of an illegal act of abduction and the father who is guilty of the said act cannot claim any advantage by stating that he has already put the child to some school in Pune. The conduct of the father is not such as to inspire confidence in the Court that he is a fit and suitable person to be entrusted with the custody and guardianship of the child for the present. The American Court is the proper Court to decide the issue of custody, and as it is the duty of Courts in all countries to see that a parent doing wrong by removing children out of their country does not gain any advantage by his or her wrong doing. Elizabeth Dinshaw v. *Arvand M. [9670] ● Habeas corpus petition—Against detention order—Duty of Court.—The High Court should realise that there is no particular virtue in quashing an order of detention, for, in a given case, a detention order may be fully justified and absolutely necessary for the protection of the society. The approach has to be an objective approach taking into account all the relevant circumstances and considerations in order to strike a balance between the need to protect the community on the one hand and the need to preserve the liberty of a citizen. Decision of the High Court reported in 1985 ALJ 1126 was reversed. State of U.P. v. Hari Singh, AIR 1987 SC 2080 : 1987 Supp SCC 190 : 1987 CrLJ 1923 : JT 1987 (2) SC 709.

[9672] ● Judgment result of bias or want of impartiality nullity.—It is the essence of the judgment that it is made after due observance of the judicial process; that the Court or Tribunal passing it observes, at least the minimal requirement of natural justice, is composed of impartial persons acting fairly and without bias and in good faith. A judgment which is the result of bias or want of impartiality is a nullity and the trial "coram non judice". As to the tests of the likelihood of bias, what is relevant is the reasonableness of the apprehension in that regard in the mind of the party. The proper approach for the Judge is not to look at his own mind and ask himself, however, honestly, "am I biased?"; but to look at the mind of the party before him. Ranjit Thakur v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 2386 : (1987) 4 SCC 611 : 1988 CrLJ 158 : JT 1987 (5) SC 93 : (1987) 3 IJRep 658 : 1987 PatLJR (SC) 79.

[9673] ● Accused detention in Jail continuing for 8 years.—Where the petitioner was remanded to custody in connection with the offences under Sections 147, 148, 323 and 324, IPC, but thereafter he was tried and acquitted in two sessions cases and was directed to be released, and the petitioner had been in jail for more than 8 years, he was directed to be released forthwith on the ground that even if he were to be convicted for the alleged offences, he would have in the meanwhile served out the sentence. Ram Dass Ram v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 1333 : 1987 Supp SCC 143 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 669 : 1987 CrLJ 1055 : JT 1987 (1) SC 303.

[9674] ● Hand cuffing of accused arrested in criminal case.—Where it was alleged that an Advocate practicing in Delhi was handcuffed contrary to law while being taken to the Court after he had been arrested on the charge of a criminal offence it was urged that the Union Government and the Delhi Administration had not issued necessary instructions to the police authorities in that behalf, in accordance with the judgment of this Court in Prem Shankar Shukla v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1980 SC 1535, the Supreme Court directed the Union of India to frame rules or guidelines as regards the circumstances in which handcuffing of the accused should be resorted to in conformity with that judgment and to circulate them among all the State Governments and the Governments of Union Territories. Aeltemesh Rein v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 1768 : (1988) 4 SCC 54 : 1988 CrLJ 1809 : JT 1988 (3) SC 275 : (1988) 3 SCJ 195 : (1988) 3 Crimes 513 : (1988) 17 Reports 460 : (1988) 2 CurCC 625.

[9675] ● Public interest litigation withdrawal of.—The miscellaneous petition for leave to withdraw the main public interest litigation is filed under circumstances which can only be characterised as somewhat unfortunate. The person who initiated public interest litigation claimed that she who brought that litigation was entitled, as of right, to withdraw the proceedings from the Court and also asserted that the Court could not refuse leave for withdrawal, and further claimed that not only that leave for withdrawal could not be refused but also that the main petition could not be continued by any other citizen or organisation on the ground that the proceedings were the result of a "voluntary action of a citizen" and that, as a corollary, the proceedings could be continued except with the applicants participation, she made unfounded allegations that the Court had become dysfunctional and that the finial disposal of the main petition was not expeditiously done.

Acknowledging any such status of a dominus litis to a person who brings a public interest litigation will render the proceedings in public interest litigations vulnerable to and susceptible of a new dimension which might, in conceivable cases, be used by persons for personal ends, resulting in prejudice to the public weal.

In a public interest litigation, unlike traditional dispute–resolution–mechanism, there is no determination or adjudication of individual rights. While in the ordinary conventional adjudications the party–structure is merely bi–polar and the controversy pertains to the determination of the legal consequences of past events and the remedy is essentially linked to and limited by the logic of the array of the parties, in a public interest action the proceedings cut across and transcend these traditional forms and inhibitions. The compulsions for the judicial innovation of the technique of a public interest action is the constitutional promise of a social and economic transformation to usher in an egalitarian social order and a welfare State. Effective solutions to the problems peculiar to this transformation are not available in the traditional judicial system. The proceedings in a public interest litigation are, therefore, intended to vindicate and effectuate the public interest by prevention of violation of the right, constitutional or statutory, of sizable segments of the society, which owing to poverty, ignorance, social and economic disadvantages cannot themselves assert and quite often not even aware of those rights. The technique of public interest litigation serves to provide an effective remedy to enforce these group rights and interests. In order that these public causes are brought before the Court, the procedural techniques judicially innovated specially for the public interest action recognises the concomitant need to lower the locus standi thresholds, so as to enable public-minded citizen or social-action-groups to act as conduits between these classes of persons and the forum for the assertion and enforcement of their rights. The dispute is not comparable to one between private parties with the result there is no recognition of the status of a dominus litis for any individual or group of individuals to determine the course or destination of the proceedings, except the extent recognised and permitted by the Court. The "rights" of those who bring the action on behalf of the others must necessarily be subordinate to the "interests" of those for whose benefit the action is brought. The grievance in a public interest action, generally speaking, is about the content and conduct of governmental action in relation to the constitutional or statutory rights of segments of society and in certain circumstances the conduct of Government policies. Necessarily, both the party structure and the matters in controversy are sprawling and amorphous, to be defined and adjusted or readjusted, as the case may be, ad hoc, according as the exigencies of the emerging situations. The proceedings do not partake of predetermined private law litigation models but are exogenously determined by variations of the theme.

Again, the relief to be granted looks to the future and is generally corrective rather than compensatory which, sometimes, it also is. The pattern of relief need not necessarily be derived logically from the rights asserted or found. More importantly, the Court is not merely a passive, disinterested umpire or onlooker, but has a more dynamic and positive role with the responsibility for the organisation of the proceedings, moulding of the relief and this is important also supervising the implementation thereof. The Court is entitled to, and often does seek, the assistance of expert-panels, Commissioners, Advisory-committees, Amici, etc. This wide range of the responsibilities necessarily implies correspondingly higher measure of control over the parties, the subject-matter and the procedure. Indeed as the relief is positive and implies affirmative action the decisions are not "one-shot" determinations but have on-going implications. Remedy is both imposed, negotiated or quasi-negotiated.

Therefore, what corresponds to the stage of final disposal in an ordinary litigation is only a stage in the proceedings. There is no formal, declared termination of the proceedings. The lowering of locus standi threshold does not involve the recognition or creation of any vested rights on the part of those who initiate, the proceedings analogous to dominus litis. Sheela Barse v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 2211 : (1988) 4 SCC 226 : JT 1988 (3) SC 765 : (1988) 18 Reports 1.

[9676] ● Public interest litigation—Permission for use information collected during visits to Jail.—In public interest litigation, permission cannot be granted to the applicant in the proceedings for using the information collected by her during her visits to jails and other custodial institutions pursuant to the Court's order during the pendency of the proceedings as the information was gathered for purposes of the case and pursuant to the directions of this Court. Sheela Barse v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 2211 : (1988) 4 SCC 226 : JT 1988 (3) SC 765 : (1988) 18 Reports 1.

[9677] ● Mandus—Enforcement of statute or provision therein.—It is not open to the Supreme Court to issue a writ in the nature of mandamus directing the Central Government to bring Section 30 of the Act into force. But a writ in the nature of mandamus to the Central Government can be issued to consider whether the time for bringing Section 30 of the Act into force has arrived or not. Every discretionary power vested in the Executive should be exercised in a just, reasonable and fair way. That is the essence of the rule of law. It cannot be allowed to leave the matter to lie over without applying its mind to the said question even though the power under Section 30 of the Act is discretionary, having regard to the fact that more than a quarter of a century has elapsed from the date on which the Act received the assent of the President of India. Aeltemesh Rein v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 1768 : (1988) 4 SCC 54 : 1988 CrLJ 1809 : JT 1988 (3) SC 275 : (1988) 3 SCJ 195 : (1988) 3 Crimes 513 : (1988) 17 Reports 460 : (1988) 2 CrCC 625.

[9678] ● Habeas Corpus—Petition registered on basis of letter written by girl.—In this case, the Court received a letter purporting to be from the petitioner containing certain statements and alleging that she was being detained against her will by her parents. It was registered as a writ petition and the Court directed the father of the girl to produce her before the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate, Jamshedpur and directed him to ascertain the true facts from her on the question whether she was being detained against her wishes (vide AIR 1987 SC 2021). When the case came before the Court thereafter, the petitioner's counsel stated that, that letter was a forgery and that none of the statements made therein had any foundation in truth. On enquiry, the Special Police Establishment reported that the letter in question was a forgery committed by the S.I. of Police and another person and recommended their prosecution under Sections 120-B, 465, 466 and 500, IPC. The Court thought it fit to close the proceedings on considering the facts and circumstances of the case and perusing the written submissions filed by both the parties, observing that it was an unfortunate case which brought unnecessary suffering and embarrassment but ordering the S.I. to pay Rs. 2,000/- as costs of this proceeding to the petitioner. Nilima v. State of Bihar, AIR 1989 SC 490 : 1989 Supp (1) SCC 336.

[9679] ● Writ petition for review of what are described as encounters by Police.—The facts mentioned in the three writ petitions call for a comprehensive review of what has been described as "encounters", and in conditions of disturbed law and order of the magnitude reflected in these writ petitions this Court cannot preclude the possibility of personal enmities being settled and other motives being satisfied by the recourse to the use of force under the guise of maintaining law and order. There is the imperative requirement of ensuring that the guardians of law and order do in fact observe the Code of discipline, expected of them and that they function strictly as the protectors of innocent citizens. As the matters properly fall within the domain of the State Governments, they should be petitioned in the first instance. The Supreme Court was, therefore, inclined to provide an opportunity to the petitioners to petition the State Governments concerned in the first instance for the relief sought in these writ petitions and they were given 4 weeks time to do so and the writ petitions were kept pending with liberty to the parties to file further affidavits setting forth the fact of the filing of representations and of the nature of the response of the State Governments concerned and includeing such other facts as may be considered necessary for the effective disposal of these writ petitions. Chaitanya Kalbagh v. State of U.P., AIR 1989 SC 1452 : (1989) 2 SCC 314 : 1989 CrLJ 1465.

[9680] ● Relief to delinquent children detained in Jail.—The Supreme Court directed that the District Judges of the entire country excepting the State of Jammu & Kashmir to furnish the particulars of under-trial and convicted children found in regular jails within their respective jurisdiction as the Juvenile Justice Act, 1986, has come into force from 2-10-1987, subsequent to several orders and directions made from time to time earlier by that Court, and while making reports shall also indicate whether rules have been framed and whether such rules are already in force for carrying out the purposes of the Act. It also directed that if such rules have not been framed in any State under Section 62 of the Act, such State or States should frame the same on or before 7-4-1989 and to bring them into force without any further delay thereafter. It also appointed a committee to make a draft scheme with a view to working out the modality and to make overseeing convenient the provisions of the Act. S.C. Legal Aid Committee v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 1278 : (1989) 2 SCC 325 : 1989 CrLJ 1126.

[9681] ● Habeas corpus—Custody of minor.—The appellant applied to the High Court of Punjab and Haryana for a writ of habeas corpus alleging that her minor son was being detained by respondents 1 to 3. The High Court summarily dismissed the petition by adding that R-1 shall be entitled to receive the interest accruing on the Fixed Deposit Receipts in the name of the minor child Vaibhav Datta as long as the minor child is in his legal custody. R-1 is the husband and R-2 is his wife, R-3 is their daughter. Poonam, the appellant and Amar Jyothi Datta (deceased son of R-1 and R-2) are the parents of Vaibhav (son). The appellant's allegation was that she was thrown out of the family house about 6 months after the death of her husband when disputes arose between the two parties over the entitlement to the money payable upon Amar Jyoti's death. Under the orders of this Court, respondents shifted over to Modi Nagar and are prepared to stay there. Vaibhav has been put into a local school at Modi Nagar where the appellant is a teacher. The Court directed that Vaibhav shall continue to study in the said school and neither party would be permitted to withdraw him without the permission of the Court. Vaibhav shall live with his mother but during every week-end (that is Saturday and Sunday) R-1 shall be entitled to take him from the appellant and keep him in the company of the respondents at his residence for the whole of Saturday until 6-00 P.M. on Sunday following and return the child to the mother by 6-00 P.M. on Sunday so that the mother takes over the child and makes him ready for going to school next morning. Parties are directed to consider the interest of the child as paramount and do nothing which would be adverse to its interest or affect it physically or mentally in any manner. R-1 has been receiving the interest and the money is already in deposit under orders of the High Court. The amount shall remain in deposit as at present and the interest shall be payable to the appellant and R-1 in equal shares till a competent Court varies the same. Poonam Datta v. Krishnalal Datta, AIR 1989 SC 401 : 1989 Supp (1) SCC 587.

[9682] ● Writ of Habeas Corpus not substitute for enforcement of right to liberty.—The right of an individual is either a mere reflex right—the reflex of a legal obligation existing towards this individual, or a private right in the technical sense - the legal power bestowed upon an individual to bring about by legal action the enforcement of the fulfillment of an obligation existing toward him, that is, the legal power. From the above analysis it is clear that in the instant case the appellant's fundamental right to liberty is the reflex of a legal obligation of the rest of the society, including the State, and it is the appellant's legal power bestowed upon him to bring about by a legal action the enforcement of the fulfillment of that obligation existing towards him. Denial of the legal action would, therefore, amount to denial of his right of enforcement of his right to liberty. A petition for a writ of habeas corpus would not be a substitute for this enforcement. Resort to Article 226, Constitution after the personal liberty is already violated is different from the pre-violation protection. Post-violation resort to Article 226 is for remedy against violation and for restoration of the right, while pre-violation protection is by compelling observance of the obligation or compulsion under law not to infringe the right by all those who are so obligated or compelled. To surrender and apply for a writ of habeas corpus is a post-violation remedy for restoration of the right which is not the same as restraining potential violators in case of threatened violation of the right. The question may arise what precisely may amount to threat or imminence of violation. Law surely cannot take action for internal thoughts but can act only after overt acts. If overt acts towards violation have already been done and the same has come to the knowledge of the person threatened with that violation and he approaches the Court under Article 226 giving sufficient particulars of proximate actions as would imminently lead to violation of right, should not the Court call upon those alleged to have taken those steps to appear and show cause why they should not be restrained from violating that right? Instead of doing so would it be the proper course to be adopted to tell the petitioner that the Court cannot take any action towards preventive justice until his right is actually violated whereafter alone he could petition for a writ of habeas corpus? In the instant case when the writ petition was pending in Court and the appellant's right to personal liberty happened to be violated by taking him into custody in preventive detention, though he was released after four days but could be taken into custody again, would it be proper for the Court to reject the earlier writ petition and tell him that his petition has become infructuous and he had no alternative but to surrender and then petition for a writ of habeas corpus? The difference of the two situations, as we have seen, have different legal significance. If a threatened invasion of a right is removed by restraining the potential violator from taking any steps towards violation, the rights remain protected and the compulsion against its violation is enforced. If the right has already been violated, what is left is the remedy against such violation and restoration of the right. S.M.D. Kiran Pasha v. Govt. of A.P., (1990) 1 SCC 328 : (1989) 3 Crimes 759 (SC).

[9683] ● Public interest litigation—Duty of High Court.—In the High Court of M.P., a petition styled as public interest litigation was filed. According to the petitioner, he and his wife were Sevadars in a Gurudwara situate at Ratangarh in the district of Mandsaur. His grievance was that there was an oil mill near the Gurudwara in which, for all outward purposes, edible oils were manufactured, but people there were engaged more in clandestine business of smuggling and selling opium, heroin, brown sugar, poppy hush and the like and the authorities were not taking any care to see that such activities were stopped. Rather they were said to be hands in glove with the oil mill owners. It was, therefore, prayed that a direction be issued to whomsoever it may concern, to stop this clandestine business and smuggling and instead, to direct the Union Government to make arrangements for export of these costly items in order to conserve foreign exchange so that the country's finances which were more or less in a shattered state, may, to a great extent, be revived. Howsoever absurd the prayer might be and whatever be the intention of the petitioner in filing this petition, one thing was quite clear that he was obsessed with great and lofty ideals. Therefore, for whatever worth it was, in order to satisfy his vanity, High Court directed to whomsoever it might concern, that smuggling and underground dealings in such dangerous articles as mentioned above, should be stopped and the sooner the better for the country. All those officers who were said or alleged to be (more imaginary than real) with those carrying on these nefarious activities be sacked and the entire administrative machinery of the country be overhauled by recruiting only conscientious and devoted people like the petitioner so that the already suffering masses of the nation are no longer made to so suffer. Such an order should not have been passed, for, it is not likely to be implemented. Giani Devender Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1995 SC 1847 : (1995) 1 SCC 391 : JT 1995 (1) SC 263 : (1995) 1 Crimes 298 (SC) : 1995 (1) UJ 425.

[9684] ● Premature release of convict.—A lady was convicted for an offence of murder and sentenced to undergo imprisonment for life. Admittedly, she was convicted on June 2, 1984 for an offence committed on September 24, 1983. She has been in custody from September 17, 1983. An application was filed in the High Court for her premature release. In the impugned order, the High Court was directed the release of the respondent on the ground that the State had not filed the counter-affidavit in spite of that fact that the case was adjourned on more than three occasions. The question was whether the High Court has jurisdiction under Article 226 or under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 (for short, the "Code") to release the prisoner. Setting aside the order of the High Court, apex Court held : "Section 433 of the Code empowers the Government, in an appropriate case, without the consent of the person sentenced, to commute the sentence and to prematurely release the convict. Clause (b) thereof provides for a sentence of imprisonment for life, for imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years or fine. Indisputably, she did not even complete 14 years which is a minimum mandatory sentence required to be served under the Code. At best the Court, in an appropriate case, where the prisoner has served the mandatory minimum sentence, may only direct the appropriate Government to consider the commutation of the sentence as prematurely release a particular convict. The Court can do no further. The Government would consider such direction based upon the conduct of the prisoner and other relevant circumstances and act upon it. High Court had committed grave error of law in directing release of the convict on the lapse on the part of the appellant-State in filing the counter-affidavit. Union Territory of Chandigarh v. Charanjit Kaur, (1996) 7 SCC 492 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 484 : JT 1996 (3) SC 30 : (1996) Crimes 173 (SC) : 1996 (1) CCR 170 (SC).

[9685] ● Application for extension of time to complete investigation—Jurisdiction of High Court.—It is not correct to suggest that the jurisdiction of the High Court while hearing the matter on the application for extension of time to complete the investigation is limited only to the question of time to be granted and does not extend also to examine the manner in which the investigation is being conducted, Similarly there is no merit in the contention that it is only the Chief Justice of the High Court and not also the Bench constituted by the Chief Justice to hear the matter which has the authority to go into these question. Union of India v. Sushil Kumar Modi, AIR 1997 SC 314 : (1996) 6 SCC 500 : 1997 CrLJ 358 : JT 1996 (10) SC 23.

[9686] ● Public hearing in Court.—The requirement of a public hearing in a Court of law for a fair trial is subject to the need of proceedings being held in camera to the extent necessary in public interest and to avoid prejudice to the accused. It became necessary to prevent reversion to inertia of the agencies in such matters. Vineet Narain v. Union of India, AIR 1998 SC 889 : (1998) 1 SCC 226 : 1998 CrLJ 1208 (SC) : 1998 (1) SLT 518.

[9687] ● Single directive—Applicability.—The single directive is applicable only to certain persons about the specified level who are described as decision making officers. In cases where accusation of such officers is of illegal gratification, obviously level or status of official would be irrelevant, such cases are outside of scope of single Directive. Vineet Narain v. Union of India, AIR 1998 SC 889 : (1998) 1 SCC 226 : 1998 CrLJ 1208 (SC) : 1998 (1) SLT 518.

[9688] ● Issuance of mandamus directing agencies to proper duties.—Merely issuing a mandamus directing the agencies to perform their duties would be futile, therefore it was decided to direct the CBI to complete for investigations expeditiously keeping the Court informed of progress. Vineet Narain v. Union of India, AIR 1998 SC 889 : (1998) 1 SCC 226 : 1998 CrLJ 1208 (SC) : 1998 (1) SLT 518

[9689] ● Power to issue directions—Guidelines to fill void in absence of suitable legislation.—There are ample powers conferred by Article 32 read with Article 142 of the Constitution to make orders which have the effect of law by virtue of Article 141 and there is mandate to all authorities to act in aid of the orders of this Court as provided in Article 144 of the Constitution. In a catena of decisions of this Court, this power has been recognised and exercised, if need be, by issuing necessary directions to fill the vacuum till such time the legislature steps into cover the gap or the executive discharges its role. It is in the discharge of this duty that the IRC was constituted by the Government of India with a view to obtain its recommendations after an indepth study of the problem in order to implement them by suitable executive directions till proper legislation is enacted. Vineet Narain v. Union of India, AIR 1998 SC 889 : (1998) 1 SCC 226 : 1998 CrLJ 1208 at 1233 (SC) : JT 1997 (10) SC 247 : 1997 (7) Scale 656 : (1998) 1 SLT 518 : 1997 (10) Supreme 476 : 1998 (1) Crimes 12.

[9690] ● Issuance of mandamus directing agencies to perform duties futile.—Merely issuing a mandamus directing the agencies to perform their task would be futile and, therefore, it was decided to issue directions from time to time and keep the matter pending requiring the agencies to report the progress of investigation so that monitoring by the Court could ensure continuance of the investigation. It was, therefore, decided to direct the CBI and other agencies to complete the investigation expeditiously, keeping the Court informed from time to time of the progress of the investigation so that the Court retained seisin of the matter till the investigation was completed and the charge-sheets were filed in the competent Court for being dealt with, thereafter, in accordance with law. Vineet Narian v. Union of India, AIR 1998 SC 889 : (1998) 1 SCC 226 : 1998 CrLJ 1208 (1215) (SC) : JT 1997 (10) SC 247 : 1997 (7) Scale 656 : (1998) 1 SLT 518 : 1997 (10) Supreme 476 : 1998 (1) Crimes 12 (SC) : 1998 (1) CCR 190 (SC).

[9691] ● Administrative Control of High Court vests in Chief Justice.—Rule 54 of the Rajasthan High Court Rules, 1952 shows that the administrative control of the High Court vests in the Chief Justice of the High Court alone and that it is his prerogative to distribute business of the High Court both judicial and administrative. He alone, has the right and power to decide how the Benches of the High Court are to be constituted; which Judge is to sit alone and which cases he can and is required to hear as also as to which Judges shall constitute a Division Bench and what work those Benches shall do. In other words the Judges of the High Court can sit alone or in Division Benches and do such work only as may be allotted to them by an order of or in accordance with the directions of the Chief Justice. That necessarily means that it is not within the competence or domain of any Single or Division Bench of the Court to give any direction to the Registry in that behalf which will run contrary to the directions of the Chief Justice. Therefore, in the scheme of things judicial discipline demands that in the event a single Judge or a Division Bench considers that a particular case requires to be listed before it for valid reasons, it should direct the Registry to obtain appropriate orders from the Chief Justice. The puisne Judges are not expected to entertain any request from the Advocates of the parties for listing of case which does not strictly fall within the determined roster. In such cases, it is appropriate to direct the counsel to make a mention before the Chief Justice and obtain appropriate order. This is essential for smooth functioning of the Court. Though, on the judicial side the Chief Justice is only the first amongst the equals, on the administrative aside in the matter of constitution of Benches and making of roster he alone is vested with the necessary powers. State of Rajasthan v. Prakash Chand, AIR 1998 SC 1344 : (1981) 1 SCC 1 : 1998 CrLJ 2012 at 2017 (SC).

[9692] ● Direction sought to seize records in criminal complaint pending in lower Court.—Where a complaint filed in the ex facie an act of fraud of a fictitious person, and an abuse of the process of Court, every and any action taken pursuant to the said complaint gets vitiated, all actions taken thereon including the issuance of bailable warrants is liable to be declared ab initio void and would be set aside. Vijay Shekhar v. Union of India, AIR 2004 SC 3976 : (2004) 4 SCC 666 : 2004 CrLJ 3857 (3859) : (2004) 3 Crimes 33.

[9694] ● Custodial death—Compensation.—Grant of compensation on account of custodial death, before deciding issue of custodial death was held not permissible. Dalbir Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 1674 : (2009) 11 SCC 376 : 2009 CrLJ 1543.

[9695] ● Power to grant pardon.—The power of the President and Governor to grant pardon under Article 72 and 161 of the Constitution though couched in imperative terms, has nevertheless to be exercised on the advice of executive authority. It is the Government, which in effect, that power. Jagdish v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2009) 9 SCC 495 : 2009 (4) Crimes 72 (SC).

[9696] ● Power of President and Governor to grant pardon.—The power of President and Governor under Article 72 and 161 is not immune from judicial review. Mohammed Ishaq v. S. Kazam Pasha, (2009) 12 SCC 748 : 2009 CrLJ 3063 : 2009 (3) Crimes 96 (SC).

16. ARTICLE 39

[9697] ● Juvenile Court setting up of.—The State Governments must set up Juvenile Courts in each district and they must appoint suitably trained special cadre of Magistrates for dealing with cases against children. Where a complaint is filed or FIR is lodged against a child below the age of 16 years for an offence punishable with imprisonment of not more than 7 years, the investigation shall be completed within a period of two months from the date of filing of the complaint or lodging of the FIR and if the investigation is not completed within that time, the case against the child must be treated as closed. If a charge-sheet is filed within 3 months in the case of such an offence, the case must be filed and disposed of within a further period of 6 months at the most inclusive of the time taken up in committal proceedings, if any. It is desirable to have a uniform Children Act throughout India instead of State Acts. Sheela Barse v. Union of India, AIR 1986 SC 1773 : (1986) 3 SCC 596 & 632 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 337 : 1986 CrLJ 1736 : JT 1986 SC 53 & 186.

17. ARTICLE 42

[9698] ● Jail reform—Improvement of living conditions in Jail.—Though the amenities like providing reading material, facilities for playing games, supply of musical instruments and a radio network, etc., ought to receive priority in our constitutional scheme, their denial may not necessarily constitute an encroachment on the right guaranteed by Article 21 of the Constitution. The Supreme Court can only say that the directive principle contained in Article 42 may benevolently be extended to living conditions in jails. There are subtle forms of punishments to which convicts and under-trial prisoners are sometimes subjected but it must be realised that these barbarous relics of a bygone era offend against the letter and spirit of the Constitution. D.B.M. Patnaiak v. State of A.P., AIR 1974 SC 2092 : (1975) 3 SCC 185 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 803 : 1975 CrLJ 556 : 1974 SCD 931.

18. ARTICLE 51

[9699] ● Information law reception and residence of alien.—This proposition is so well-grounded in International Law that every country has adopted the passport system, which document certifies nationality and entry into any State is only possible with the concurrence of that State. Again a State exercises territorial supremacy over persons in its territory, whether its own subjects or aliens, and can make laws for regulating the entry, residence and eviction of aliens. R. Monterio v. State of Goa, AIR 1970 SC 329 : 1970 CrLJ 499 : (1970) 1 SCA 75 : (1970) 1 SCR 87.

19. ARTICLE 72

[9700] ● Govt. whether formulated standard guidelines for exercise of Constitution power under Article 72.—The question raised "whether Government of India has formulated any uniform standard or guidelines by which the exercise of the constitutional power under Article 72 is intended to be or is in fact governed", is of far-reaching importance, particularly from the point of view of persons sentenced to death in respect of whom the President is specially empowered to exercise his power by clause (c) of Article 72 (1) and question must be examined with care. Death sentence imposed upon any person whatsoever whose petition under Article 72 or Article 161 has been rejected by the President or the Governor is stayed until the disposal of this Writ Petition. Kuljeet Singh v. Lt. Governor, Delhi, AIR 1981 SC 2239 : (1982) 1 SCC 11.

[9701] ● Petition for reprieve under Sections 432 and 433, CrPC—Disposal of.—The Government of India and the State Governments should dispose of petitions filed under Articles 72 and 161 of the Constitution or under Sections 432 and 433 of the CrPC expeditiously, A self-imposed rule should be followed by the executive authorities rigorously, that every such petition should be disposed of within a period of 3 months from the date on which it was received. Long and interminable delays in the disposal of those petitions were a serious hurdle in the dispensation of justice and indeed, such delays tended to shake the confidence of the people in the very system of justice. Undoubtedly, the executive had the power, in appropriate cases, to act under the aforesaid provisions but, all exercise of power was pre-conditioned by the duty to be fair and quick. Delay defeats justice. Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 SC 465 : (1983) 2 SCC 344 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 461 : 1983 CrLJ 803 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 247 : (1983) 1 Crimes 1017 : 1983 SCCrR 213 : (1983) 1 SCJ 318 : (1983) 2 MLJ (SC) 46 : 1983 MLJ (Cri) 545 : 1983 (2) ChandLR (Cri) 491 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 430.

[9702] ● President's power to grant pardon.—It is urged that in order to prevent an arbitrary exercise of power under Article 72 this Court should draw up a set of guidelines for regulating the exercise of the power. There is sufficient indication in the terms of Article 72 and in the history of the power enshrined in that provision as well as existing case-law, and specific guidelines need not be spelt out. Indeed, it may not be possible to lay down any precise clearly defined and sufficiently channalised guidelines, for we must remember that the power under Article 72 is of the widest amplitude, can contemplate a myriad kinds and categories of cases with facts and situations varying from case to case, in which the merits and reasons of State may be profoundly assisted by prevailing occasion and passing time. And it is of great significance that the function itself enjoys high status in the constitutional scheme. Kehar Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 653 : (1989) 1 SCC 204 : 1989 CrLJ 941 : (1989) 1 Crimes 238 : (1989) 37 DLT 171.

[9703] ● Convict seeking relief under Article 72—Has no right to insist on oral hearing before President.—A person condemned to death has no right to insist on an oral hearing from the President on his petition invoking the powers under Article 72. The proceeding before the President is of an executive character, and when the petitioner files his petition it is for him to submit with it all the requisite information necessary for the disposal of the petition. He has no right to insist on presenting an oral argument. The manner or consideration of the petition lies within the discretion of the President, and it is for him to decide how best he can acquaint himself with all the information that is necessary for its proper and effective disposal. The President may consider sufficient the information furnished before him in the first instance or he may send for further material relevant to the issues, which he considers pertinent, and he may, if he considers it will assist him in treating with the petition, give an oral hearing to the parties. The matter lies entirely within his discretion. Kehar Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 653 : (1989) 1 SCC 204 : 1989 CrLJ 941 : (1989) 1 Crimes 238 : (1989) 37 DLT 171.

[9704] ● Order of President under Article 72 not subjected to judicial review.—The order of the President under Article 72 cannot be subjected to judicial review on its merits except within the strict limitations defined in Maru Ram v. Union of India, AIR 1980 SC 2147. The function of determining whether the act of a constitutional or statutory functionary falls within the constitutional or legislative conferment of power, or is vitiated by self-denial on an erroneous appreciation of the full amplitude of the power is a matter for the Court. The power to pardon belongs exclusively to the President and the Governor under the Constitution. There is also no question involved in this case of asking for the reason for the President's order. The Courts are the constitutional instrumentalities to go into the scope of Article 72 and no attempt can be made to analyse the exercise of the power under Article 72 or the merits. The question as to the area of the President's power under Article 72 falls squarely within the judicial domain and can be examined by the Court by way of judicial review. Kehar Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 653 : (1989) 1 SCC 204 : 1989 CrLJ 941 : (1989) 1 Crimes 238 : (1989) 37 DLT 171.

[9705] ● President can while exercising power under Article 72 go into merits of case.—It is open to the President in the exercise of the power vested in him by Article 72 to scrutinise the evidence on the record of the criminal case and come to a different conclusion from that recorded by the Court in regard to the guilt of, and sentence imposed on, the accused. In doing so, the President does not amend or modify or supersede the judicial record. The judicial record remains intact, and undisturbed. The President acts in a wholly different plane from that in which the Court acted. He acts under a constitutional power, the nature of which it is entirely different from the judicial power and cannot be regarded as an extension of it. And this is so, notwithstanding that the practical effect of the Presidential act is to remove the stigma of guilt from the accused or to remit the sentence imposed on him. The legal effect of a pardon is wholly different from a judicial suppression of the original sentence. It is apparent that the power under Article 72 entitles the President to examine the record of evidence of the criminal case and to determine for himself whether the case is one deserving the grant of the relief falling within that power. The President is entitled to go into the merits of the case notwithstanding that it has been judicially concluded by the consideration given to it by the Supreme Court. Kehar Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 653 : (1989) 1 SCC 204 : 1989 CrLJ 941 : (1989) 1 Crimes 238 : (1989) 37 DLT 171.

[9706] ● Power to grant pardon part of constitutional scheme.—All power belongs to the people and it is entrusted by them to specified institutions and functionaries with the intention of working out, maintaining and operating a constitutional order under the Constitution of India. To any civilised society, there can be no attributes more important than the life and personal liberty of its members as seen from Article 21. These twin attributes enjoy a fundamental ascendancy over all other attributes of the political and social order and consequently, the Legislature, the Executive and the Judiciary are more sensitive to them than to the other attributes of daily existence. The deprivation of personal liberty and the threat of the deprivation of life by the action of the State is in most civilised societies regarded seriously and recourse, either under express constitutional provision or through Legislative enactment is provided to the judicial organ. But, the fallibility of human judgment being undeniable even in the most trained mind, it has been considered appropriate that in the matter of life and personal liberty, the protection should be extended by entrusting power further to some high authority to scrutinise the validity of the threatened denial of life or the threatened or continued denial of personal liberty. The power so entrusted is a power belonging to the people and reposed in the highest dignitary of the State. The power to pardon is a part of the constitutional scheme, and it should be so treated in the Indian Republic. It has been reposed by the people through the Constitution in the Head of the State, and enjoys high status. The power to pardon rests on the advice tendered by the Executive to the President, who subject to the provisions of Article 74(1), must act in accordance with such advice. Kehar Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 653 : (1989) 1 SCC 204 : 1989 CrLJ 941 : (1989) 1 Crimes 238 : (1989) 37 DLT 171.

20. ARTICLES 77, 166

[9707] ● Order made by Deputy Secretary on behalf of President—Cannot be questioned.—The interpretation of Articles 77 and 166 of the Constitution is no longer open to any argument in view of a series of decisions of the Supreme Court. The legal position shortly stated, is thus :

(1) Articles 77 and 166 are only directory and not mandatory. Strict compliance with the provision is not essential to the validity of the order issued. What has to be seen is whether the substance of the requirements of these Articles is there.

(2) Even when the order issued is not in strict compliance with the provisions, of Article 77 or 166, it can be established by evidence aliunde that the order was made by the appropriate authority applying his mind to the relevant facts of the case.

(3) If an order is issued in the name of the President or the Governor, and is duly authenticated in the manner prescribed in the Rules made under Article 77 or 166, as the case may be, there is an irrebuttable presumption that the order was made by the appropriate authority.

(4) Any non-compliance with the provisions of the rule as to authentication does not invalidate the order. The only effect is that the presumption as to the order being made by the appropriate authority cannot be drawn, but even in such a case, it can be proved by other evidence that as a matter of fact the order was made by the appropriate authority.

In the present case, it was established that under the rules made under Article 77(2) power had been conferred on the Deputy Secretary to accord sanction on behalf of the President, and that the order was made by him in the exercise of the power delegated to him under the rules. That being so, the validity of the sanction given could not be questioned. Barsay, Major E.G. v. State of Bombay, AIR 1961 SC 1762 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 828.

[9708] ● Parliament of India not Court of record.—Article 105(2) of the Constitution does not state that the member of Parliament who is not liable to civil or criminal proceedings in a Court of law is liable to the same civil or criminal proceedings in Parliament. Parliament in India is not a Court of Record. It may not exercise judicial powers or entertain judicial proceedings. The alleged bribe takers except 'A', who are entitled to the immunity conferred by Article 105(2) of the Constitution are not liable to be tried in the Lok Sabha for the offences set out in the charges against them or any other charges, but the Lok Sabha may proceed against them for breach of privileges or contempt. There is, therefore, no question of two for a coming to different conclusions in respect of the same charges. P.V. Narsimha Rao v. State, AIR 1998 SC 2120 : (1998) 4 SCC 626 : 1998 CrLJ 2930 at 2994, 2995 (SC).

[9709] ● Expression "in respect of" preceding words "anything said or any vote given in" Article 105(2)—Meaning of.—The expression "in respect of" precedes the words "anything said or any vote given" in Article 105(2) of the Constitution. The words "anything said or any vote given" can only mean speech that has already been made or a vote that has already been given. The immunity from liability, therefore, comes into play only if a speech has been made or vote has been given. When there is a prior agreement whereunder a Member of Parliament has received an illegal consideration in order to exercise his right to speak or to give his vote in a particular manner on a matter coming up for consideration before the House Tax there can be two possible situations. There may be an agreement whereunder a Member accepts illegal gratification and agrees not to speak in Parliament or not to give his vote in Parliament. P.V. Narsimha Rao v. State, AIR 1998 SC 2120 : (1998) 4 SCC 626 : 1998 CrLJ 2930 at 2956, 2957 (SC).

[9710] ● Judges committing errors in judgment.—Even if a judge is said to have committed errors, even gross error, in his judgment, that does not amount to 'misbehaviour' within the meaning of the article. *C.K. 23. ARTICLE 129

[9711] ● Advocates of Supreme Court including President of Supreme Court Bar Association entitled to notice of Supreme Court contempt of Court.—Even assuming that a judgment of the Supreme Court Judge contained numerous errors, there is no excuse whatsoever for imputing dishonesty to the Judge.

If a judgment is criticised as containing errors and coupled with it dishonesty is alleged, the Court hearing the contempt petition cannot act as an appellate Court. If evidence were to be allowed to justify allegations amounting to contempt of Court, it would tend to encourage disappointed litigants to avenge their defeat by abusing the Judge.

The Advocates of the Supreme Court, includeing the President of the Supreme Court Bar Association, are perfectly entitled to bring to the notice of the Supreme Court any contempt of that Court. C.K. Daphtary v. O.P. Gupta, AIR 1971 SC 1132 : (1971) 1 SCC 626 : 1971 CrLJ 844 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 483.

[9712] ● Charge against contemner when clear.—If on the facts alleged in the petition the charge against the contemner is clear and simple, a formal charge need not be drawn up by the petitioner or the Court. C.K. Daphtary v. O.P. Gupta, AIR 1971 SC 1132 : 1971 CrLJ 844 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 483.

[9713] ● Enhancing sentence at instance of private complainant.—Where a new point sought to attack the sanction granted for the prosecution the Supreme Court does not normally interfere with the discretion exercised by the High Court on the question of sentence even though the same has been enhanced but where the trial Court has exercised its discretion on proper consideration of the material on record and its order cannot be described to be either contrary to recognised principle or otherwise having caused failure of justice and further when the State does not consider that the ends of justice require enhancement of the sentence but the High Court interferes at the instance of a private complainant the Supreme Court would be fully justified in considering for itself the propriety of the sentence as enhanced by the High Court. Ram Narain v. State of U.P., AIR 1971 SC 757 : (1970) 3 SCC 439 : 1971 CrLJ 649 : 1971 UJ (SC) 117 : 1971 AWR (HC) 371.

[9714] ● Jurisdictional point can be raised for first time before Supreme Court.—Where a new point sought to attack the sanction granted for the prosecution, though it had not been raised in either of the two Courts below, since it went to the root of the case being a jurisdiction point, the Supreme Court considered it just and proper to allow it to be raised. R.J. Singh v. State of Delhi, AIR 1971 SC 1552 : (1970) 3 SCC 451 : (1971) SCCrR 310 : 1970 UJ (SC) 885.

[9715] ● Special leave to appeal—Grant of.— Article 136 and Supreme Court Rules (1966), O. 16, R. 3.—The Article and the Rule are wide enough in their language to empower the Supreme Court to grant special leave to the Deputy Chief Controller of Imports and Exports (the original complainant duly authorised by the statute) to appeal to the Supreme Court and prosecute the same, even though the Public Prosecutor and not the Deputy Chief Controller had applied to the High Court for the necessary certificate. Dy. Chief Controller v. K.T. Kosalram, AIR 1971 SC 1283 : (1970) 3 SCC 82 : 1971 CrLJ 1081 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 364 : 1971 SCD 99 : 1971 CrAppR (SC) 53.

[9716] ● Power of High Court to punish for contempt of itself.—Articles 129 and 215 preserve all the powers of the Supreme Court and the High Court, respectively, as a Court of record which includes the power to punish the contempt of itself. There are no curbs on the power of the High Court to punish for contempt of itself except those contained in the Contempt of Courts Act. Articles 129 and 215 do not define as to what constitutes contempt of Court. Parliament has, by virtue of the aforesaid entries in List I and List III of the Seventh Schedule, power to define and limit the powers of the Courts in punishing contempt of Court and to regulate their procedure in relation thereto. Indeed, that is what is stated in the Preamble of the Act of 1971. Board of Revenue, U.P. v. Vinay Chandra, AIR 1981 SC 723 : (1981) 1 SCC 436 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 175 : 1981 CrLJ 283 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 72 : 1981 CurLJ (Cri) 73 : 1981 ACrR 69 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 86 : 1981 ACrC 75 : (1981) 1 SCJ 415 : 1981 AWC 98 : (1981) 2 SCR 331 : 1981 MLJ (Cri) 281.

[9717] ● Supreme Court—Powers of case triable by Special Judge—Supreme Court not competent to issue direction transferring it to High Court Judge.—The question is whether the case of the appellant which is triable under 1952 Act only by a Special Judge appointed under Section 6 of the said Act could be transferred to the High Court for trial by itself or by this Court to the High Court for trial by it. Sections 406 and 407, CrPC deal with the powers of this Court and that of the High Court respectively to transfer cases and appeals. Section 7(1) of the Act creates a condition which is sine qua non for the trial of offences under Section 6(1) of the said Act. The said offences shall be triable by Special Judges only, notwithstanding anything contained in the CrPC or any other law. Indeed conferment of the exclusive jurisdiction of the Special Judge is recognised by the Judgment of this Court in A. R. Antulay v. R. S. Nayak, AIR 1984 SC 718 : (1984) 2 SCC 500 : 1984 CrLJ 647. In spite of this, while giving directions in the other matter, that is, R. S. Nayak v. A. R.. Antulay, AIR 1984 SC 684 : (1984) 2 SCC 183 : 1984 CrLJ 613, this Court directed transfer to the High Court of Bombay the cases pending before the Special Judge. But while dealing with the matter of directions and giving the impugned directions, this Court did not keep in mind the exclusiveness of the jurisdiction of the Special Courts to try the offences enumerated in Section 6. It is obvious that if a case could be transferred under Section 406 of the Code from a Special Judge it could only be transferred to another Special Judge or a Court of superior jurisdiction but subordinate to the High Court. No such Court exists. Under this section the power of transfer can only be from one Special Judge to another Special Judge. In AIR 1984 SC 684 this Court did not refer either to Section 406 or 407 of the Code. A defect of jurisdiction, whether it is pecuniary of territorial, or whether it is in respect of the subject-matter of the action, strikes at the very authority to pass any decree, and such a defect cannot be cured even by consent of parties. Applying the ratio to the facts of the present controversy, and bearing in mind Sections 6(1) and 7(1) of the Act, the order of this Court transferring the cases to the High Court on 16-2-1984 was not authorised by law. This Court by its directions could not confer jurisdiction on the High Court of Bombay to try any case when it did not possess such jurisdiction under the scheme of the 1952 Act. The superior Court can always correct its own error brought to its notice either by way of petition or ex debito justitiae. It is, therefore, manifest that the appellant has not been ordered to be tried by a procedure mandated by law, but by a procedure which was violative of Article 21 of the Constitution and also of Articles 14 and 19. This Court is not debarred from re-opening this question and giving proper directions and correcting the error in the present appeal, when the said directions dated 16-2-1984 were violative of the limits of jurisdiction and the directions have resulted in deprivation of the fundamental rights of the appellant guaranteed by Articles 14 and 21 of the Constitution. The directions were issued without observing the principle of audi alteram partem. This Court is not powerless to correct its error which has the effect of depriving a citizen of his fundamental rights and more so, the right to life and liberty. It can do so in exercise of its inherent jurisdiction in any proceeding pending before it without insisting on the formalities of a review application. Powers of review can be exercised in a petition filed under Article 136 or Article 32 or under any other provision of the Constitution, if the Court is satisfied that its directions have resulted in the deprivation of the fundamental rights of a citizen or any legal rights of the petitioner. The appropriate order would be to recall the directions contained in the order dated 16-2-1984. The appellant has also a right under Article 14 regarding equality before the law and equal protection of law which has been violated. He has also a right not to be singled out for special treatment by a Special Court created for him alone. This right is implicit in the right to equality.

Article 134(1)(b) cannot be construed to mean where power to withdraw is restricted, it can be widened by virtue of that Article. Where by a specific law of a specific statute the power is given for trial by the Special Judge only and transfer can be from one such Judge to another Special Judge there is no warrant to suggest that the High Court has power to transfer such a case from a Judge under Section 6 of the 1952 Act to itself. The trial even if a person holding public office though to be made speedily must be done in accordance with the procedure established thereon.

We proclaim and pronounce that no man is above the law, but at the same time reiterate and declare that no man can be denied his rights under the Constitution and the laws. He has a right to be dealt with in accordance with the law and not in derogation of it. The basic fundamentals of administration of justice are simple. No man should suffer because of the mistake of the Court. No man should suffer a wrong by technical procedure of irregularities. Rules or procedures are the handmaids of justice and not the mistress of the justice. If a man has been wronged, so long as it lies within the human machinery of administration of justice that wrong must be remedied. Purity of public life is one of the cardinal principles which must be upheld as a matter of public policy. Allegations of legal infractions and criminal infractions must be investigated in accordance with law and procedure established under the Constitution. Even if he has been wronged, if he is allowed to be left in doubt that could cause more serious damage to the appellant. Public confidence in public administration should not be eroded any further. One wrong cannot be remedied by another wrong.

In the aforesaid view of the matter the appeal is allowed; all proceedings in this matter subsequent to the directions of this Court on 16-2-1984 (reported in AIR 1984 SC 684) as indicated before are set aside and quashed. The trial shall proceed in accordance with law, that is to say, under the Act of 1952. A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, AIR 1988 SC 1531 : (1988) 2 SCC 602 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 372 : 1988 CrLJ 1661 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 366 : JT 1988 (2) SC 325.

[9718] ● Wide power of Supreme Court to correct judgment of any Court or tribunal.—There is no room for the doubt that apex Court has wide power to interfere and correct the judgment and orders passed by any Court or tribunal in the country. In addition to the appellate power, the Court has special residuary power to entertain appeal against any order of any Court in the country. The plenary jurisdiction of this Court to grant leave and hear appeals against any order of a Court or tribunal, confers power of judicial superintendence over all the Courts and tribunals in the territory of India including subordinate Courts of Magistrate and District Judge. This Court has, therefore, supervisory jurisdiction over all Courts in India. Delhi Judicial Service Association v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1991 SC 2176 : AIR SCW 2419 : (1991) 4 SCC 406 : 1991 CrLJ 3086.

[9719] ● Supreme Court a Court of record.—Article 129 provides that the Supreme Court shall be a Court of record and shall have all the powers of such a Court including the power to punish for contempt of itself. Article 215 contains similar provision in respect of High Court. Both the Supreme Court as well as High Courts are Courts of record having powers to punish for contempt including the power to punish for contempt of itself. All India Judicial Service Association v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1991 SC 2176 : (1991) 4 SCC 406 : 1991 CrLJ 3086. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) In re Vinay Chandra Mishra, AIR 1995 SC 2348 : (1995) 2 SCC 584 : 1995 CrLJ 3994 (SC) : (1995) 2 Crimes 381 (395) (SC).

[9720] ● Supreme Court not only highest Court of record but charged with duties and responsibilities of correcting lower Court and tribunals.—The Supreme Court is not only the highest Court of record, but under various provisions of the Constitution is also charged with the duties and responsibilities of correcting the lower Courts and tribunals and of protecting them from those whose misconduct tends to prevent the due performance of their duties. The latter functions and powers of this Court are independent of Article 129 of the Constitution. When therefore, Article 129 vests this Court with the powers of the Court of record including the power to punish for contempt of itself, it vests such powers in this Court in its capacity as the highest Court of record and also as a Court charged with the appellate and superintending powers over the lower Courts and tribunals as detailed in the Constitution. To discharge its obligations as the custodian of the administration of justice in the country and as the highest Court imbused with supervisory and appellate jurisdiction over all the lower Courts and tribunals, it is inherently deemed to have been entrusted with the power to see that the stream of justice in the country remains pure, that its course is not hindered or obstructed in any manner, that justice is delivered without fear or favour and for that purpose all the Courts and tribunals are protected while discharging their legitimate duties. To discharge this obligation, this Court to take cognisance of the deviation from the path of justice in the tribunals of the land, and also of attempts to cause such deviations and obstruct the course of justice. To hold otherwise would mean that although this Court is charged with the duties and responsibilities enumerated in the Constitution, it is not equipped with the power to discharge them. Re Vinay Chandra Mishra, AIR 1995 SC 2348 : (1995) 2 SCC 584 : 1995 CrLJ 3994 : (1995) 2 Crimes 381.

[9721] ● Inherent power of Supreme Court unaffected even after codification of contempt law.—The Supreme Court being a Court of Record under Article 129 and having wide power of judicial supervision over all the Courts in the country, must possess and exercise similar jurisdiction and power as the High Courts had prior to contempt Legislation in 1926. Inherent powers of a superior Court of Record have remained unaffected even after codification of Contempt Law. Re Vinay Chandra Mishra, AIR 1995 SC 2348 : (1995) 2 SCC 584 : 1995 CrLJ 3994 : (1995) 2 Crimes 381 (396).

[9722] ● Contempt Jurisdiction.—While dealing with an application for contempt, the Court is really concerned with the question whether the earlier decision, which has received its finality, had been complied with or not. It would not be permissible for a Court to examine the correctness of the earlier decision which had not been assailed and to take the different view than what was taken in the earlier decision. State of Bihar v. Rajendra Singh, AIR 2004 SC 4419 : (2007) 15 SCC 688 : 2004 CrLJ 4187 (4188).

[9723] ● Contempt—Rightness or wrongness of order cannot be urged in contempt proceedings.—If any party concerned is aggrieved by the order which in its opinion is wrong or against rules or its implementation is neither practicable nor feasible, it should always either approach to the Court that passed the order to invoke jurisdiction of the Appellate Court. Rightness or wrongness of the order cannot be urged in contempt proceedings. Right or wrong, the order has to be obeyed. Flouting an order of the Court would render the party liable for contempt. While dealing with an application for contempt the Court cannot traverse beyond the order, non-compliance of which is alleged. In other words, it cannot say what should not have done or what should have been done. It cannot test correctness or otherwise of the order or give additional direction or delete any direction. That would be exercising review jurisdiction while dealing with an application for initiation of contempt proceedings. The same would be impermissible and indefensible. State of Bihar v. Rajendra Singh, AIR 2004 SC 4419 : (2007) 15 SCC 688 : 2004 CrLJ 4187 (4188, 4189).

[9724] ● Contempt jurisdiction.—The Court exercising contempt jurisdiction cannot take upon itself power to decide the original proceedings in a manner not dealt with by the Court passing the judgment or order. State of Bihar v. Rajendra Singh, AIR 2004 SC 4419 : (2007) 15 SCC 688 : 2004 CrLJ 4187 (4188); Union of India v. Devassy P.V., AIR 2006 SC 613 : (2006) 1 SCC 613 : 2006 CrLJ 971 (972) (SC).

[9725] ● Right of freedom of media.—The right of freedom of media is exercised responsibly. It is for media itself and other concerned to consider as to how to achieve it. Rajendra Soil v. M.P. High Court, Bar Association, AIR 2005 SC 2473 : (2005) 6 SCC 109 : 2005 CrLJ 2585 (2594) : 2005 (2) Crimes 230.

[9726] ● Contempt of Supreme Court—Old and complicated matter.—It is clear that inspite of the fact that the petitioners' seniority was finally decided by the judgment in Parmanand Lal's case and the petitioners' claims were also accepted by the various Courts which verdicts had become final, yet the respondent has moved on the basis of later judgment of this Court dated 26.4.2000 interpreting it in its own manner. The interpretation which has been put forward by the Government is that the advantage of the judgment was available only to those employees who were parties to that particular petition.

It is nowhere asserted by the respondent that the rights of the petitioners were not finally crystallized by the orders of the Tribunal and/or Courts. Indeed that could not be the position as otherwise the petitioners could not have been put above S/Shri Belani, Biradar and Kulkarni. It may be that the seniority of the applicants was restored and was placed at the same place in the earlier seniority-list, however, that by itself cannot be a proper implementation since the seniority of S/Shri Belani, Biradar and Kulkarni was not only improved but they were rendered senior to all the applicants which was not the position earlier. It is, therefore, clear that the order of this Court dated 28.9.2006 has been clearly breached. The so-called interpretation put forth by the respondent is wholly incorrect. We would have ordinarily taken a very strict view of this obvious breach committed. However, considering that the matter is very old and is also a complicated one, there can be a scope for misunderstanding of the order of this Court. We, therefore leave it at that. We are not impressed at all by the contention of the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respondent that since the respondent has passed the orders disposing of the representations of the petitioners, the only way left or the petitioners was to challenge the same by way of an independent Original Application before the Tribunal. It is more than a decade that the petitioners are fighting for their rights. Their rights had already been crystallized by various orders passed by the Tribunals and the Courts which fact is not denied by the respondent. On the top of it, the petitioners were again required to come before this Court by way of an Interim Application being IA No. 16 and that has resulted in denial of the fruits of the orders which were passed in their favour by the Tribunals and the Courts. Under such circumstances, to push them again to file Original Application challenging the obviously erroneous orders passed by the respondent disposing of the representations of the petitioners would be a travesty of justice. We, therefore, direct that the respondents shall rearrange the seniority in terms of the principles laid down in Parmanand Lal's case restoring their earlier position and shall not put any employee over and above the present petitioners on the basis of the seniority in service in the entry year, more particularly S/Shri Belani, Biradar and Kulkarni shall not be put over and above the petitioners herein. This shall be done within 8 weeks from the date of this judgment. Promotee Telecom Engineers Forum v. D.S. Mathur, (2008) 11 SCC 579 : 2008 CrLJ 2999 : 2008 (5) SCR 442.

[9727] ● Power of Supreme Court to punish contempt of Court.—Apart from power of conferred on it under contempt of Court Act, the Supreme Court has inherent power under Article 129 of the Constitution for contempt of itself. Leila David v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 3272.

24. ARTICLES 132, 134, 135 AND 136

[9728] ● Special leave to appeal—Criminal appeal.—Under the Constitution, the Supreme Court has been made a final Court of criminal appeal only in a limited class of cases specified in clauses (a) and (b) of Article 134(1). This clearly means that except in these two classes of cases, an appeal to the Supreme Court will not lie as a matter of right, whatever be the nature of the judgment or final order of the High Court from which the appeal to the Supreme Court is sought. Pritam Singh v. State, AIR 1950 SC 169 : 1951 CrLJ 1270 : 1950 SCR 453 : 63 MLW 875 : 1950 MWN 605.

[9729] ● Retrial of case.—In this case, the accused was charged and convicted of the offence of murder. When the accused was examined under Section 342, CrPC (now Section 313, CrPC, 1973) in the trial Court, the Sessions Judge failed to put to him questions relating to material aspects of the prosecution case, and as a result, the accused was denied the opportunity of explaining the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. On appeal the High Court rejected the plea of prejudice and confirmed the conviction.

The case is a fit one of interference in the exercise of the powers under Article 136. The serious error in procedure has occasioned a grave prejudice to the accused by depriving him of the opportunity of meeting the case against him, and the High Court has erred in rejecting his plea of prejudice. Conviction is set aside and the case is sent back for a re-trial. Tara Singh v. State, AIR 1951 SC 441 : 52 CrLJ 1491 : 1951 SCJ 518 : 1951 SCR 729 : 1951 (2) MLJ 291 : 1951 MWN 757 : 1951 MWN (Cri) 225 : 1951 ALJ 640 : 64 MLW 996.

[9730] ● Interference with concurrent finding of fact.—Ordinarily, the Supreme Court will not interfere with a concurrent finding of fact. But when the finding omits to notice an important circumstance which clearly refutes the finding and which swings the balance the other way, it is the duty of the Court not to let that finding stand.

The accused in this case was charged with the offence of murder. The prosecution case was that at the time of the incident he was wearing a coat bearing minute stains of blood which had been recovered from his house. This coat had two buttons. One prosecution witness had clearly remembered that at the time when he had seen the accused shortly after the incident, he was wearing a coat having only one button, and another witness was definite that the accused was not wearing a coat at that time. Under these circumstances, the concurrent finding that the blood-stained coat recovered from the house of the accused was worn by him at the time of the offence was put aside in considering the facts proved against the accused. Kashmira Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1952 SC 159 : 1952 CrLJ 839 : 1952 SCA 474 : 1952 SCJ 201 : 1952 SCR 526 : 1952 MWN 402 : 1952 (1) MLJ 754 : 1952 MWN (Cri) 106 : 1952 AWR (Supp) 64.

[9731] ● New point of fact.—When a question of fact has not been raised before the lower Courts and it is set up for the first time in the appeal before the Supreme Court, the Court will not allow it to be raised if inquiry into that question requires the Court to go into evidence which is not on the record. Rameshwar Bhartia v. State of Assam, AIR 1952 SC 405 : 1953 CrLJ 163 : 1952 SCJ 559 : 1953 SCA 42 : 1953 SCR 126 : 1953 (1) MLJ 17 : 1953 AWR (Supp) 1 : ILR (1953) 5 Ass 1 : 1953 MWN 343.

[9732] ● Reasons for certificate of fitness.—If there is no High Court in any State and the Judicial Commissioner sitting alone exercises all the powers of the High Court under the Code as the ultimate appellate authority, the confirmation proceeding under Chapter 27 of the Code has to be heard and disposed of by him sitting alone. In such a case, if the Judicial Commissioner confirms the sentence of death, the mere fact that the decision is not a decision of a Bench of at least two Judges is not an adequate ground in itself for certifying the case as a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court, because such a certificate amounts to converting the Supreme Court into a final Court of appeal or confirmation. Kalawati v. State of H.P., AIR 1953 SC 131 : 1953 CrLJ 668 : 1953 SCA 660 : 1953 SCJ 144 : 1953 SCR 546 : 1953 MWN 219 : 1953 AWR (Supp) 52.

[9733] ● Appeal against single Judge of High Court.—The terms of Article 132 make it clear that an appeal to the Supreme Court is allowed from any judgment or final order of a High Court, and that such right of appeal exists irrespective of the number of judges by whom such judgment or final order was passed.

In S. Kuppuswami Rao v. King, 1947 FCR 180, it was held that an order rejecting an objection to the validity of a prosecution on the ground of want of sanction was not a 'final order'. The Explanation to Article 132 was expressly designed to supersede this decision, and to secure that issues going to the root of a case are speedily determined by obtaining thereon a decision of the Supreme Court. The whole scheme of the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court clearly indicates that a right of appeal of the widest amplitude is allowed in cases involving questions of law relating to the interpretation of the Constitution.

Provided that the requisite certificate of the High Court is given, an appeal to the Supreme Court under Article 132 will lie from any final order of the High Court, even if it be of a single Judge, and even when it decides a preliminary issue which, if decided in favour of the accused, would dispose of the case finally. Election Commission, India v. Saka Venkata Subba Rao, AIR 1953 SC 210 : 1953 SCA 203 : 1953 SCJ 293 : 1953 SCR 1144 : 1953 (1) MLJ 702 : 1954 MWN 427.

[9734] ● Grounds of appeal.—In an appeal to the Supreme Court on a certificate given by the High Court under Article 132(1), the appellant is permitted to challenge the legality or the propriety of the order appealed against only on the constitutional question as to which the certificate of the High Court has been given. He is not entitled in such an appeal to raise any question relating to the merits of the case or to urge any point which turns on the appreciation of the evidence in the case, unless the Supreme Court gives him leave to do so. No doubt, the Court has the power under Article 132(3) to grant leave to the appellant to urge 'any other ground' in such an appeal, but such leave will be given only in most exceptional circumstances in which the Court is satisfied that a grave injustice would otherwise occur.

In the present case, at the close of the arguments on the constitutional question on which the appeal had been allowed, which were rejected by the Court, counsel appearing on behalf of one of the accused who had appealed against their conviction craves leave to bring to the notice of the Court a matter which, according to him had resulted in a grave miscarriage of justice. The facts on which the prayer was based were as under. Several accused in the case were charged and convicted of offences under the Essential Supplies Act, 1946, for an attempt to export to Pakistan bags of Indian cloth without a permit, by smuggling them through a customs barrier in a truck. The question was whether the accused was present at the scene of occurrence at the time when the smuggling was attempted. When the accused was examined in the trial Court under Section 342, CrPC a specific question had been put to him on this point, and he had categorically stated that he was not present there at that time. There was thus nothing on the record to warrant the belief that the accused had admitted his presence at the customs barrier, and yet in arriving at the decision against the accused both the Courts had assumed in their judgments that he had made such an admission, and had commented on his inability to give any reasonable explanation of this alleged presence.

On these facts, the Court accepted the prayer made by the counsel, and after observing that the main function of the Supreme Court in an appeal before it is to see that the accused gets a fair trial on proper evidence, it allowed the appeal even though the constitutional issue on which it had been filed was decided against the appellants, and after setting aside the judgments of the High Court as well as the trial Court, it remitted the case to the Sessions Court with the direction that it may be heard afresh on the evidence on record after excluding from consideration the supposed admission of the accused which had only been imagined in those judgments. Darshan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1953 SC 83 : 1953 CrLJ 525 : 1953 SCA 856 : 1953 SCJ 48 : 1953 SCR 319 : 1953 (1) MLJ 220 : 19 CutLT 419 : ILR (1953) Punj 639.

[9735] ● Verdict of jury—Setting aside of.—In an appeal from an order of conviction, if the Supreme Court is satisfied that the verdict of the jury was erroneous as a result of grave misdirections, three alternative courses are open to the Court for the purpose of undoing the mischief that has happened :

(1) it may order a re-trial of the accused, which is the simplest course, or

(2) it may remit the case to the High Court with a direction that it should consider the merits of the case in the light of the Supreme Court's decision and say whether there has been a failure of justice as a result of those misdirections, or

(3) it may itself examine the merits of the case and decide for itself whether there has been a failure of justice in the case.

In such a situation, the question for consideration is which of these three courses would be best for undoing the mischief that has been done and which of them would be most conducive to the ends of justice. In the present case, the Court adopted the last course with a view to avoid undue harassment to the accused, and after examining the merits of the case, it came to the conclusion that a grave failure of justice had occurred in the case and an innocent man had been convicted of a serious offence on an erroneous verdict which was the consequence of grave misdirections given to the jury. The appeal was allowed, the conviction was set aside, and the accused was acquitted. Mushtak Hussein v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 282 : 1953 CrLJ 1127 : 1953 SCA 1014 : 1953 SCJ 338 : 1953 SCR 809 : 1953 AWR (Supp) 72 : 55 Bom LR 529 : 19 Cut LT 507 : 1954 MWN 247.

[9736] ● Retrial when to be ordered.—In an appeal against an order of conviction, if the Supreme Court is satisfied that in substance the trial has not been fair and proper, ordinarily the Court will remand the same case for a re-trial. However, it is not bound to do so in every such case.

In the instant case, the Court was of the view that the prosecution evidence did not reach the requisite standard of proof and suffered from serious infirmities, and that the accused had been under suspense over his sentence of death for over a year. Under these circumstances, the Court set aside the conviction, and instead of directing a retrial, it set the accused at liberty. Mohinder Singh v. State, AIR 1953 SC 415 : 1953 CrLJ 1761 : 1950 SCR 821.

[9737] ● Supreme Court when sets aside conviction in criminal appeal.—When in a criminal appeal the Supreme Court sets aside a conviction on the ground of gross irregularities at the trial, the question still remains what orders to pass, that is, whether to acquit the accused or to order a re-trial, and the Court has to select the alternative which will be more conducive to the ends of justice, looking to all the circumstances in the case.

In a case in which the order of re-trial would involve the taking of evidence as to events which occurred years ago, and the accused has been in prison for years after his conviction by the trial Court, an order of re-trial would be unfair to the accused and would not be conducive to the ends of justice. The only course open to the Court in such a situation is to acquit the accused and set him at liberty. Habeeb Mohammad v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1954 SC 51 : 1954 CrLJ 338 : 1953 SCJ 678 : 1954 SCA 514 : 1954 SCR 475 : 1954 MWN 233.

[9738] ● Special Leave to appeal—New point.—The normal rule of the Supreme Court is that it will not consider the merits of a new point which was neither raised before the High Court during the hearing of the appeal there, nor was raised even at the time when the appellant applied to the Supreme Court for leave to appeal under Article 136. Nawab Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 278 : 1954 CrLJ 738.

[9739] ● Interference by Supreme Court with administration order of High Court when.—The Supreme Court can interfere with an administrative order of the High Court only when the order is in conflict with a fundamental right vested in the petitioner, or with an obligation imposed under any statute, or if there has been a violation of a canon of natural justice. In the present case the Supreme Court refused to interfere with an order of the High Court, made in the exercise of its discretionary jurisdiction, refusing to the petitioner enrollment on the roll of advocates practising before the High Court. Babul Chandra Mitra v. The Hon'ble Chief Justice and other Judges of the Patna High Court, AIR 1954 SC 524 : 1954 SCA 395 : 33 Pat 553.

[9740] ● Power of Supreme Court to grant special leave to appeal.—Article 136 is worded in the widest possible terms. It vests in the Supreme Court a plenary jurisdiction in the matter of entertaining and hearing appeals against any kind of judgment or order made in any cause or matter. The powers given by this Article can be exercised irrespective of specific provisions for appeal contained in any law. However, these powers are in the nature of special and residuary powers, and being exercisable outside the purview of ordinary law, they must be exercised only in cases in which the requirements of justice demand interference by the Supreme Court.

The overriding powers vested in the Supreme Court under Article 136 cannot be cut down or abridged even by express legislation, and in this sense, these powers are even wider than the powers of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council which could be taken away or curtailed by a law made by Parliament. Durga Shankar Mehta v. Thakur Raghuraj Singh, AIR 1954 SC 520 : 1955 SCA 501 : 1954 SCJ 723 : 1955 SCR 267 : 1954 (2) MLJ 385.

[9741] ● Certificate of fitness for appeal—Exercise of discretion.—The Supreme Court has general powers of judicial superintendence over all the Courts in the country. It is the ultimate interpreter and guardian of the Constitution, and has the duty to see that its provisions are faithfully observed by every Court.

Under Article 134(1)(c), the only condition of the issue of a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court is the discretion of the High Court. But the discretion is a judicial discretion and it must be judicially exercised along the well established lines which govern the matter. Further, the certificate must show on the face of it that the discretion conferred was invoked and exercised.

If the discretion has been exercised on proper and well established lines, then, as in all questions where an exercise of discretion is involved, there can be no interference by the Supreme Court except on very strong grounds. But if, on the face of the order, it is apparent that the High Court has misdirected itself, (a) either by holding that its discretion is fettered, when it is not, or (b) by holding that in a particular circumstance it has none, then in such a case, the Supreme Court will not be bound by the certificate given by the High Court, and it will decide for itself whether to allow the appeal or not. Nar Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 457 : 1954 CrLJ 1167 : 1954 SCA 642 : 1954 SCJ 570 : 1955 SCR 238 : 1954 (2) MLJ 122.

[9742] ● "Case"—Meaning.—In the present case, out of 24 persons originally tried under Section 302/149 Penal Code, only three were ultimately convicted by the High Court. By a curious mistake, the name of one N who was intended to be acquitted was included among the three convicted accused instead of that of one B. When this mistake was later realised, the High Court communicated this fact to the State Government, and the Government remitted the sentence passed on N and directed his release. Thereafter, N and the two other accused who had been convicted applied to the High Court for a certificate under Article 134(1)(c). The High Court granted the certificates to all three of them. As regards N, it rightly considered that despite the remission of his sentence, if his conviction on a charge like that of murder stood undisturbed, the stigma might affect him adversely in the future. However, as regards the other two, there was nothing in their cases to warrant the issue of the certificates to them, but what the High Court thought was that by the word 'case' in clause (c) of Article 134(1) what was contemplated was the appeal as a whole, and that once a certificate was decided to be given, the High Court was bound to give it to all the accused whose conviction was confirmed in such appeal. The view of the High Court is clearly wrong. The word 'case' as used in Article 134(1)(c) means the case of each individual accused, and not the proceeding in appeal as a whole, and for the purpose of the certificate under that Article, the appeal of each accused to the High Court forms a separate 'case'. Therefore, even when a certificate under Article 134(1)(c) has been properly granted to any one or more of the several accused who have been convicted, the remaining accused do not acquire a right merely on that account to have their 'cases' also to be considered by the Supreme Court in appeal. In other words, the application for a certificate under this Article made by each accused has to be considered on its own merits, and the grant of a certificate to any accused would be proper only when the High Court is of opinion that his individual 'case' is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. In the present case, the High Court has misdirected itself about the law in this matter, and has not exercised the discretion vested in it under Article 134(1)(c) in respect of the two convicted accused other than N, therefore, it is a fit case for interference by the Supreme Court in the exercise of its general powers of judicial superintendence. Under the circumstances, their case has to be treated as one under Article 136 for special leave. Regarded from that angle, in view of the evidence on record, the case was not a proper one for special leave. Their appeal was, therefore, held to have failed and was accordingly dismissed. Nar Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 457 : 1954 CrLJ 1167 : 1954 SCA 642 : 1954 SCJ 570 : 1955 SCR 238 : (1954) ALJ 438 : 1954 (2) MLJ 122 : 1954 AWR 457 : 1954 MWN 741.

[9743-44] ● Acquittal by High Court.—Article 134 of the Constitution permits an appeal to the Supreme Court as of right only from any judgment or final order of a High Court in a criminal proceeding if the High Court has on appeal reversed an order of acquittal of an accused person and has sentenced him to death. It does not provide for an appeal as of right from a judgment or final order of a High Court in a criminal proceeding if the High Court has on appeal reversed an order of conviction of an accused person and has ordered his acquittal.

In other words, there is no provision in the Constitution corresponding to Section 417 (now Section 378), CrPC and an order of the High Court in appeal under which an accused person is acquitted is final and binding on the State, subject, however, to the overriding powers vested in the Supreme Court by Article 136 of the Constitution.

[Note:—This means that in the matter of an appeal to the Supreme Court from an order of the High Court made in a criminal proceeding, the law is the same whether the appeal sought is by the State or by the accused person and such appeal can lie only when the High Court certifies under Article 134(1)(c) that the case is a fit one for such appeal, or when the Supreme Court grants the special leave for such appeal under Article 136.] State Government of M.P. v. Ramkrishna G. Limsey, AIR 1954 SC 20 : 1954 CrLJ 244.

[9745] ● Application for leave to appeal—Delay in disposal of.—An application to the High Court for a certificate under Article 134(1)(c) that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court must be disposed of with despatch. The accused is entitled to know the fate of his application within a reasonable time, and must not be left under a state of suspense longer than is necessary. This is particularly so when the sentence which is hanging over the head of the accused is a sentence of death.

Whatever the state of arrears, there is absolutely no justification for an inordinate delay of nearly two years in the disposal of such an application.

But even under this view, such delay is not a proper consideration for interference with a sentence of death awarded by the High Court. It is only a good ground for an application to the President under Article 72 for commutation of the sentence. Bissu Mahgoo v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 714 : 1954 CrLJ 1796.

[9746] ● Circumstances under which Supreme Court not interfere.—In a criminal appeal under Article 136, the Supreme Court will not interfere with the decision appealed against merely on the ground (a) that there has occurred in the proceeding some error or irregularity which is only technical and has not occasioned any failure of justice, or (b) that it is possible to take a view of the evidence in the case which is different from that of the Courts below. An illegality or irregularity in procedure will be a good ground for interference with the decision appealed against only when it is of such a nature that a failure of justice or a denial to the accused of a fair trial may either be presumed to have been occasioned thereby, or such failure or denial is shown to have in fact been occasioned.

Applying this principle, it was held in the present case that a refusal to give to the accused an opportunity to produce and examine defence witnesses at his trial is an illegality which is fatal to the proceeding, and if on appeal the High Court has rejected his plea or prejudice and has confirmed his conviction, it is a fit case for interference. Habeeb Mohammad v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1954 SC 51 : 1954 CrLJ 338 : 1954 SCA 514 : 1953 SCJ 678 : 1954 SCR 475 : 1954 MWN 233.

[9747] ● Burden of proof.—If substantial and grave injustice has been done to an accused by reason of his conviction even though he has reasonably discharged a burden of proof regarding a particular fact which is laid upon him by particular statute, the case must be held to be a fit one for interference in an appeal by special leave.

In the present case, the accused was convicted under Section 7 of the Essential Supplies (TP) Act, even though he had discharged the burden of proof under Section 15 of the Act regarding the holding of an export permit, by producing the permit and showing by the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses that what he had exported were goods which fell within the description of the article mentioned in the permit. Conviction of the accused under these circumstances had caused grave and substantial injustice, and the case is a fit one for interference. The conviction was set aside and the accused was acquitted. Shrinivas Pannalal Chokhani v. State of M.P., AIR 1954 SC 23 : 1954 CrLJ 253.

[9748] ● Contempt proceedings against senior members of Bar—Refusal to accept apologies.— In the present case, the High Court had taken out contempt proceedings against two senior members of its Bar, and having refused to accept their apologies had passed sentences of fine against them. The contemners moved the Supreme Court by special leave under Article 136. The Court considered that it was a fit case for interference even though the matter related entirely to a discretionary power of the High Court. The unqualified apologies given were accepted, a warning was given, and the sentences of fine were set aside. Shareef, M.Y. v. Hon'ble Judges of High Court of Nagpur, AIR 1955 SC 19 : 1955 CrLJ 133 : 1955 SCJ 54 : 1955 SCA 205.

[9749] ● Remand of case back for retrial.— The Supreme Court will not remand a case back for re-trial merely because the trial Judge has omitted to do his duty and has failed in the observance of a mandatory rule or procedure. The Court will not keep a person charged with an offence punishable with death under indefinite suspense because a Judge has failed to do his duty. Justice is not one-sided, and while it is incumbent to see that the guilty do not escape, it is even more necessary to see that persons accused of crime are not kept under indefinite suspense. Just as an accused is not permitted to repair before the Supreme Court the gaps in his defence which he ought to have made good in the trial Court, the State cannot be permitted to repair the effects of its bungling. A broad rule must apply to all cases, and the scales of justice must be kept on an even balance between the State and the subject. The Supreme Court will ordinarily not order a re-trial except in clear cases where the error is purely technical. In the present case, the order of the High Court confirming a conviction is set aside, on the ground that the trial Judge had failed to put to the accused questions as to the most material part of the prosecution case relating to the confession of the accused and had thus denied to him an opportunity of explaining the circumstances appearing against him. The case cannot be remanded for a fresh trial and the accused is acquitted. Machander Pandurang v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1955 SC 792 : 1955 CrLJ 1644 : 1956 SCA 12 : 1955 (2) SCR 524 : ILR (1955) Hyd 807 : 1956 SCJ 34 : 1956 (1) MLJ (SC) 25 : 1956 AWR (Supp) 14 : 1956 ALJ 76 : 1956 MWN 190 : 58 Pun LR 163 : 1956 BLJR 93.

[9750] ● Supreme Court in appeal by special leave refusing to allow respondent to reopen finding of fact.— In an appeal by special leave under Article 136 the Supreme Court will refuse to allow the respondent to reopen a finding of fact decided against him by the High Court, in the same manner in which such permission is refused to the appellant. Bhikaji Keshao Joshi v. Brijlal N. Biyani, AIR 1955 SC 610 : 1955 SCA 999 : 1955 SCJ 658 : 1955 (2) SCR 428 : 1955 (2) MLJ (SC) 154 : 1955 MWN 991 : 10 EleLR 357.

[9751] ● Special leave not granted to advance criticism.— In an appeal by special leave under Article 136, the Supreme Court will not permit the appellant to advance criticisms of the judgment of the trial Court which were not advanced before the High Court in appeal, particularly, when these criticisms relate only to the question of appreciation of evidence. Gurbakhsh Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 320 : 1955 CrLJ 869.

[9752] ● Merely saying—Leave to appeal is, granted to words end of judgment not compliance.— The decision of the Supreme Court in Nar Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 457, lays down the following three propositions regarding the certificate for leave to appeal granted under Article 134;

(1) the mere grant of a certificate by the High Court does not prevent the Supreme Court from determining whether the certificate was rightly granted and whether the condition prerequisite to the grant is satisfied;

(2) the condition is that the High Court must exercise a judicial discretion along the well established lines governing the exercised of a judicial discretion; and

(3) where the discretion is properly exercised, the Supreme Court will not interfere except on very strong grounds.

Under Article 134(1)(c), an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court if the High Court "certifies" that the case is fit for such appeal. Now the word "certifies" is a strong word and indicates that the Court must bring its mind to bear on the question, and the reasons for the order must be apparent on the face of the order, showing exactly what are the questions of outstanding difficulty or importance which demand a decision from the Supreme Court.

It is not enough to say "leave to appeal is granted". Merely to say that is tantamount to saying that the High Court has the power to usurp the functions of the Supreme Court under Article 136 and to allow any case to be opened up in appeal, even though Article 134(1)(c) is meant to provide only for extraordinary cases involving important questions of law.

In the absence of any indication as to the question proposed to be settled by the appeal under this certificate, it is impossible for the Supreme Court to gather what are the questions of outstanding importance which are required to be settled, and a certificate issued without any such indications in the order is an exercise of discretion which is mechanical and not judicial, and the appeal cannot be regarded as properly certified, and cannot be accepted as an appeal under Article 134(1)(c).

Further, a certificate cannot be granted under Article 134(1)(c) merely because the High Court is in doubt about the facts. If there is any doubt in the mind of the Court about facts, it is the Court's duty to give the advantage of that doubt to the accused and acquit him. The Court cannot convict the accused and then issue a certificate because it cannot make up its mind about the facts.

Even when the Supreme Court holds that a leave to appeal granted by the High Court under Article 134(1)(c) has not been properly granted and an appeal under that article does not lie, the Court has a discretion to decide whether it is a fit case for the exercise of the powers under Article 136 and to treat the appeal as allowed by special leave under that Article. Baladin v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 181 : 1956 CrLJ 345.

[9753] ● Certificate of fitness for appeal where granted.—The grant of a certificate under Article 134(1)(c) is not a matter of course, and the discretion vested in it must be exercised by the High Court judicially and along lines which have now been quite well established. There in no justification for certifying the case as being a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court, if the case does not involve any question or principle of law which needs to be resolved by a decision of the Supreme Court. The word 'certifies' in this Article has a clear meaning. It requires that when giving the leave to appeal to the Supreme Court, the High Court must first determine the issue of law which in its opinion is needed to be settled by the Supreme Court, and that such question must be clearly set out in its order. If in the opinion of the High Court the case does not involve any such question of law, then, however difficult the questions of fact in that case might be, such difficulty about facts alone cannot justify the grant of a leave. Sunder Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 411 : 1956 CrLJ 801.

[9754] ● Certificate for leave to appeal not granted when no question of law involved.—In a criminal appeal to the High Court, if it entertains any doubt about the guilt of the accused on the facts established in the case, it is bound in law to give the benefit of that doubt to the accused and acquit him. However, complicated the questions of fact in any case might be, if after considering those facts any doubt about the guilt of the accused lingers in the mind of the High Court, it would clearly be an error to convict the accused in spite of such doubt and then to certify the case as being a fit one for appeal. On the other hand, if the High Court finds that the guilt of the accused has been established beyond any reasonable doubt by evidence which is quite reliable and sufficient, and it convicts him on that evidence, then also an appeal to the Supreme Court on facts is not called for. Thus, in either case, when no question of law is involved in an appeal decided by the High Court, it is not open to it to give a certificate under Article 134(1)(c) merely on questions of fact. Sunder Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 411 : 1956 CrLJ 801.

[9755] ● Certificate under Article 134(1)(c) not justified—Duty of Supreme Court.—When an appeal to the Supreme Court is filed on a certificate given by a High Court under Article 134(1)(c), even when the Supreme Court comes to the conclusion that the certificate does not satisfy the requirements of that Article or that the discretion vested in the High Court under it has been wrongly exercised, that in itself does not necessarily mean the end of the appeal. In such a case, it is open to the appellant to request the Court to allow the appeal in the exercise of its powers under Article 136(1), and if the Court considers that the case is of such a nature that if the special leave to appeal under Article 136 had been applied for it would have granted such leave, it has the power to treat the appeal as being one under Article 136 and admit it for hearing. Sunder Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 411 : 1956 CrLJ 801.

[9756] ● More question of facts when involved.—When the question involved in a case in one purely of fact, the High Court has no jurisdiction to grant a certificate under Article 134(1)(c). The Supreme Court is not a final Court of criminal appeal on fact, and whatever reasons the High Court may have, it is not justified in passing on to the Supreme Court mere questions of fact for further consideration, thus converting the Supreme Court into a Court of Appeal on facts. No doubt the Supreme Court possesses the power to interfere even on a pure question of fact, and it would exercise that power in a proper case,

(a) if there has been a gross miscarriage of justice, or

(b) if there has been a departure from legal procedure which vitiates the whole trial, or

(c) if the findings of fact of the Courts below are such as to be shocking to judicial conscience.

But under the Constitution, the Supreme Court alone can so intervene in the exercise of its special and overriding powers under Article 136, and a High Court has no power to arrogate that function to itself when purporting to act under Article 134(1)(c), by passing on to the Supreme Court a matter which involves only questions of pure fact. Haripada Dey v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1956 SC 757 : 1956 SCA 1078 : 1956 SCJ 701 : 1956 SCR 639 : 1956 (2) MLJ (SC) 65.

[9757] ● Supreme Court—When rejects certificate given by High Court.—If at the hearing of the application for a certificate under Article 134(1)(c) the attention of the High Court is drawn to certain facts to which its attention was not drawn when the appeal was heard, and it considers that those facts would have affected its judgment if they had been noticed in time, but it finds itself helpless to redress the grievance, the proper course for the High Court to adopt in such a case is to refuse to grant the certificate under Article 134(1)(c) and to direct the aggrieved party to approach the Supreme Court to invoke its special jurisdiction under Article 136.

In such a case, if, instead of referring the aggrieved party to the Supreme Court, the High Court gives a certificate under Article 134(1)(c) on a question of pure fact, its direction under that Article must be held to have been wrongly exercised. Such a certificate has no force at all and it is of no avail to the party to which it has been given, and does not give him any right to insist upon his appeal being heard by the Supreme Court.

However, even when the Supreme Court rejects the certificate given by the High Court, it has the discretion to treat the appeal as being one by special leave under Article 136 though it may be purely on facts; but the Court will do so only in a case which is fit for the exercise of such discretion. Haripada Dey v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1956 SC 757 : 1956 SCA 1078 : 1956 SCJ 701 : 1956 SCR 639 : 1956 (2) MLJ (SC) 65.

[9758] ● Failure of accused to lead evidence.—In the present case, the prosecution had proved its case beyond any doubt by the evidence of witnesses who were quite reliable, and the accused had not led any defence evidence. The accused was convicted, and on appeal the High Court confirmed the conviction. Thereafter, when the petition for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court was filed in the High Court, the accused produced certain documents which pointed to his innocence. The High Court thereupon granted the certificate under Article 134(1)(c) although it itself said in its order that "the question involved was one of fact only'. The accused himself is to be blamed for the lacuna in the defence arising from his not having adduced the evidence which would have demolished the case against him. Under these circumstances the certificate has been wrongly given, and such certificate has no force at all. Further, the findings in the present case are perfectly justified by the evidence produced by the prosecution, and there has not occurred any miscarriage of justice or any departure from legal procedure. Therefore, this is not a fit case for interference under Article 136(1). The application for leave to treat the appeal as one under that Article is rejected, and the appeal is dismissed. Haripada Dey v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1956 SC 757 : 1956 SCA 1078 : 1956 SCJ 701 : 1956 SCR 639 : 1957 ALT 202 : 1956 (2) MLJ (SC) 65 : 1956 AWR (Supp) 141 : 1957 BLJR 23 : 1957 ALJ 70.

[9759] ● Appreciation of evidence.—When the Courts below have carefully examined the evidence of the eye-witnesses directly incriminating the accused and have accepted that evidence as being true and reliable, the Supreme Court will not, in an appeal by special leave against the judgment of the High Court confirming the conviction of the accused, allow the appellant to go behind the concurrent findings of the Courts below on questions of fact, unless there are some special circumstances which justify such a course. Chhutanni v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 407 : 1956 CrLJ 797.

[9760] ● Finding of fact interference by Supreme Court.—The Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere with the findings of fact of the Courts below. However, if a clear question of law arises on the findings arrived at by the High Court, and the appellant contends that the conclusion of the High Court was erroneous, the Supreme Court will exercise its power of interference. Ram Shankar Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 441 : 1956 CrLJ 822.

[9761] ● Interference by Supreme Court.—Ordinarily, if there are no special circumstances in the case, the Supreme Court will not interfere with the order of conviction which is founded on concurrent findings of the Courts below. However, in a fit case it will do so if there are some features in the case which make it unsafe to uphold the conclusion of guilt. Santa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 526 : 1956 CrLJ 930. To the same effect : (1) Gurbaksh Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 320 : 1955 CrLJ 869; (2) Ram Narain v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 322 : 1955 CrLJ 871; (3) Khacheru Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 546 : 1956 CrLJ 950; (4) Nathu v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 26 : 1956 CrLJ 152; (5) Niranjan Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1957 SC 142 : 1957 CrLJ 294 : 1957 SCA 75 : 1957 SCJ 69 : 1956 SCR 734 : 1957 ALJ 233 : ILR (1956) 2 All 745 : 1957 (1) MLJ (Cri) 1 : 1957 AWR (HC) 258; (6) Ram Chandra v. State of U.P., AIR 1957 SC 381 : 1957 CrLJ 559; (7) Mobarik Ali Ahmed v. State of Bombay, AIR 1957 SC 857 : 1957 CrLJ 1346 : 1958 SCJ 111 : 1958 MLJ (Cri) 42 : 1958 AWR (HC) 112; (8) Om Prakash v. State of U.P., AIR 1960 SC 409 : 1960 CrLJ 514; (9) *L. [9762] ● High Court not having jurisdiction to direct Registrar to file complaint.—In the present case, the High Court had, in an appeal under Section 476-B, CrPC, made the complaint applied for. On appeal against the order of the High Court, the Supreme Court came to the conclusion that the High Court was not the Court of Appeal contemplated under Section 476-B read with Section 195(3) of the Code, and that hence it did not have the jurisdiction to make the order directing its Registrar to file the complaint applied for. What the High Court should have done was to send the case back to the District Judge who alone had the jurisdiction to make the complaint applied for, for disposal of the matter according to law. Under these circumstances, the Supreme Court has the duty to interfere in the exercise of its overriding powers under Article 136 and set right the position by itself doing what the High Court should have done in revision. The application for the making of a complaint under Section 476-B is accordingly remitted to the District Judge for being dealt with according to law. Kuldip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 391 : 1956 CrLJ 781 : 1956 SCJ 387 : 1956 SCR 125 : 1956 SCA 809 : ILR (1956) Punj 1075 : 58 PunLR 595.

[9763] ● Appeal against order of conviction when dismissed by Supreme Court.—Even when an appeal against an order of conviction is dismissed by the Supreme Court, the Court may, in a fit case, allow the appeal to the limited extent of the sentence, and may direct that the sentences imposed by the High Court for different offences of which the accused has been convicted shall run concurrently, and not consecutively. Mathew, K. C. v. State of Trav. Cochin, AIR 1956 SC 241 : 1956 CrLJ 444 : 1956 SCJ 213 : 1956 SCA 175 : 1955 2 SCR 1057 : 1956 AWR (Supp) 34 : 1956 (1) MLJ (SC) 130 : 1956 KerLT 355 : 1956 ALT 506.

[9764] ● Leave to appeal—Condonation of delay in filing.—If a petition for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court is not made within the time limited by the rules of this Court, and if the only ground urged in support of the application for condonation of the delay is that the applicants were large in number and the collection of money from this large number occasioned the delay, the Court will not consider it a sufficient ground for condoning the delay. Banarasi Das v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 520 : 1956 SCA 702 : 1956 SCJ 529 : 1956 SCR 357 : 1956 ALJ 517 : 1956 BLJR 511 : 1956 AWR (SC) 421.

[9765] ● Appeal, interference in.—It must be emphasised that when, under the law, the decision as to whether or not a particular action should be taken is a matter which is primarily for the Court which hears the application, the discretion exercised by the Court in that matter is not to be lightly interfered with in appeal, even when it is competent to the appellate Court to do so.

This is even more so in a case in which the Legislature does not provide for an appeal. In such a case it is preposterous to invite the Supreme Court in an appeal by special leave under Article 136 to interfere with such a discretionary order. Virendra Kumar Satyawadi v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 153 : 1956 CrLJ 326 : 1956 SCA 410 : 1956 SCJ 138 : ILR (1956) Punj 163 : 1955 (2) SCR 1013 : 58 PunLR 583.

[9766] ● Death result of gun-shot wounds.—In an appeal to the Supreme Court, the appellant cannot be allowed for the first time a ground of fact which was not raised at the trial and as to which no questions were put to the prosecution witnesses in their cross-examination. The appellant in the present case was not allowed to urge that the injuries to the deceased were not gun-shot wounds but were incised wounds, since at the trial no such question had been put to the doctor in his cross-examination, though in his examination-in-chief he had said that in his opinion the death was the result of gun-shot wounds. Abdul Sattar v. State of Mysore, AIR 1956 SC 168 : 1956 CrLJ 334.

[9767] ● Omission to take objection in grounds of appeal.—If an objection to any illegality or irregularity in procedure which may have occurred in the course of the trial has not been taken in the appeal before the High Court, and the plea of prejudice on that score is sought to be raised for the first time before the Supreme Court, the Court, will ordinarily not allow the appellant to do so, because in such a case it would be legitimate to infer that in fact no prejudice has been occasioned by the defect in procedure and that the plea is only an after-thought. It is only in those rare cases in which the likelihood of prejudice is patent on the very face of the record that an objection against an irregularity could be allowed to be urged even though it has been raised for the first time before the Supreme Court. Mathew, K.G. v. State of Trav. Cochin, AIR 1956 SC 241 : 1956 CrLJ 444 : 1956 SCJ 213 : 1956 SCA 175 : 1955 (2) SCR 1057 : 1956 AWR (Supp) 34 : 1956 (1) MLJ (SC) 130 : 1956 KerLT 355 : 1956 ALT 506.

[9768] ● Objection as to prejudice.—Even when it is shown that an irregularity has occurred in the trial of a case, the Supreme Court will be slow to entertain the question of prejudice when details are not furnished. Further, the fact that objection has not been taken at an early stage of the case will be taken into account. If the plea of prejudice has not been taken either before the High Court or in the petition for leave filed in the Supreme Court, the Court will decline to allow the question to be raised at the hearing of the appeal. Sukha v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1956 SC 513 : 1956 CrLJ 923 : 1956 SCA 781 : 1956 SCJ 503 : 1956 SCR 288 : 1956 ALT 583 : 1956 AWR (Supp) 83.

[9769] ● Question of prejudice raised for first time.—No doubt a serious lacuna in procedure has occurred in the case as a result of inadequate compliance with the requirements of Section 342, but an argument of this kind, which would necessitate a re-trial if it were accepted, must be urged at the regular appeal in the High Court, and it had not been raised at all at that stage. In such circumstances, the question of prejudice cannot be entertained by the Supreme Court when raised for the first time in the appeal before it. Moseb Kaka Chowdhry v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1956 SC 536 : 1956 CrLJ 940 : 1956 SCA 754 : 1956 SCR 372 : 1956 SCJ 533 : 1956 ALJ 567 : 1956 BLJR 545 : 1956 (2) MLJ (SC) 33 : 1956 AWR (Supp) 102 : 69 MLW 997.

[9770] ● High Court when confirms order of conviction.—When the High Court confirms in appeal an order of conviction, it is only fair to the accused that its judgment should give clear reasons for its conclusion that the accused is guilty. If the judgment of the High Court does not give the reasons for its finding and thus shows that it has not applied its mind to the circumstances of the case, it is a fit case for interference by the Supreme Court. In such a case, it will ordinarily remand the case back to the High Court for disposal according to law. However, it is not bound to do so in every case, and if the Court is satisfied that the delay involved in such a course will entail suspense and hardship to the accused who are under the sentence of death, the Court may itself proceed to hear and dispose of the appeal on its merits on facts. Jumman v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 469 : 1957 CrLJ 586.

[9771] ● Special appeal—Exercise of power under Article 227.—If the High Court is moved for the exercise of its powers under Article 226 or 227, and refuses to do so, it is open to the applicant to move the Supreme Court, by way of an appeal under Article 136, and thereupon it is open to the Supreme Court to exercise in a fit case the power given to the High Court under Articles 226 and 227. Baldeo Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1957 SC 612 : 1957 CrLJ 998 : 1957 SCJ 535 : (1957) MLJ (Cri) 485 : ILR 36 Pat 746.

[9772] ● New plea.—When a question on a point of law or fact has not been raised before the High Court, or even in the petition for special leave to appeal under Article 136, the appellant cannot be permitted to raise it for the first time at the hearing of the appeal. Appellant in the present case was not permitted to urge that there had been a misjoinder of charges at the trial because the point was not urged in the High Court, and was not referred to in the petition for special leave. Mangal Singh v. State of M.B., AIR 1957 SC 199 : 1957 CrLJ 325.

[9773] ● New plea—Question of law.—Even when a fresh point is raised for the first time before the Supreme Court, the Court may allow it to be urged, if it is one purely of law.

Even the respondent may be allowed to urge a new point of law for the purpose of supporting the judgment of the High Court from which the appeal by special leave has been allowed. State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, AIR 1957 SC 389 : 1957 CrLJ 567 : 1957 SCA 350 : 1957 SCR 279 : 1957 SCJ 336 : ILR 36 Pat 513 : 1957 BLJR 406 : 1957 (1) MLJ (Cri) 247 : 1957 MPC 420 : 1957 AWR (HC) 430 : 1957 ALJ 609.

[9774] ● Appreciation of evidence.—Believing or disbelieving a witness is essentially a matter for the Courts of fact, and in an appeal by special leave the Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere with their discretion. Brij Bhukhan v. State of U.P., AIR 1957 SC 474 : 1957 CrLJ 591.

[9775] ● Certificate granted by High Court when defective.—Even when the certificate granted by the High Court is defective by reason of the grounds on which it is granted not having been properly stated, the Supreme Court may treat the appeal as being one by special leave under Article 136, if the circumstances of the case are of such a nature that such leave would have been granted by it if the appellant had applied for it. Pershadi v. State of U.P., AIR 1957 SC 199 : 1957 CrLJ 325.

[9776] ● Certificate of fitness—Duty of Supreme Court.—In the present case, when the petition for leave to appeal was filed in the High Court, it was brought to its notice that certain documents which were on the record had not been referred to at all by either side at the time of the hearing of the appeal, and as a result, though they were material, they had not been considered in the judgment. On this ground the High Court certified that the case was a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court, though no substantial question of law was involved in the case. Following the decision of the Court in Haripada Dey v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1956 SC 757, and the earlier decisions of the Court referred to in that judgment, it is held that the certificate given by the High Court does not satisfy the requirements of Article 134(1)(c). But even so, the Court has to consider whether the circumstances of the case are such a nature that a special leave to appeal under Article 136 would have been granted if the appellant has approached the Court by a petition in that behalf. After considering the facts in the case, the leave is granted, and the appeal has been heard on merits.

Article 136 of the Constitution does not confer on any party to a criminal proceeding a right of appeal from the decision of the High Court; it only confers a discretionary power on the Supreme Court to interfere in suitable cases. It is implicit in the very nature of such a discretionary power that it cannot be exhaustively defined, but Article 136 cannot be so construed as to confer a right on a party where he has none under the law.

The practice of the Privy Council and that followed by the Supreme Court is not to interfere on questions of fact except in exceptional cases, when the finding of the High Court is such, (a) that 'it shocks the conscience of the Court', or (b) that 'by disregard to the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, a substantial and grave injustice has been done'. Khushal Rao v. State of Bombay, AIR 1958 SC 22 : 1958 CrLJ 106 : 1958 SCJ 198 : 1958 SCR 552 : 1957 MPC 813 : 1958 AWR (HC) 38 : 1958 ALJ 91 : 1958 ACrR 43.

[9777] ● Question of sanction stage when it should be raised.—When the question as to the requirement of a sanction under Section 196-A or Section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code has not been urged before the trial Court, or even before the High Court in appeal, it is not open to the appellant to raise it for the first time in an appeal to the Supreme Court, because the omission as to a requisite sanction is a question of fact like any other question of fact and the Supreme Court will not allow the question of fact to be raised for the first time before itself. Kanta Prashad v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1958 SC 350 : 1958 CrLJ 698 : 1958 SCR 1218 : 1958 SCJ 668 : 1958 MLJ (Cri) 508 : (1958) 2 AnWR (SC) 113 : 1958 AWR (HC) 588 : 1958 MLJ (SC) 113 : 60 Pun LR 583 : 1958 ACrR 387.

[9778] ● Irregularity in investigation—Omission to raise objection at proper stage.—Even when an irregularity is shown to have occurred in the course of the investigation of the case or at the trial, if an objection on that ground has not been taken at a sufficiently early stage, the fact will be taken into account. In such a case, the effect of the omission to raise the objection at the proper stage is that it will be assumed that the irregularity has in fact not occasioned any prejudice to the accused and that the plea of prejudice is only an after-thought.

In the present case, the Supreme Court refused to allow the question of prejudice on the score of an investigation having been conducted by an incompetent police officer to be agitated in the appeal before it, for the reason that the point had not been raised either in the trial Court or in the appeal before the High Court. Din Dayal Sharma v. State of U.P., AIR 1959 SC 831 : 1959 CrLJ 1120 : 1959 SCJ 922 : 1959 ALJ 470 : 1959 MLJ (Cri) 599 : 1959 ACrR 319 : 1959 AWR (HC) 403.

[9779] ● High Court disagreeing with trial Court's finding.—In a case in which the High Court disagrees with the findings of fact of the trial Judge, and, on its own estimate of the evidence in the case, reverses his order of acquittal, no doubt, the finding on which the conviction is based are not concurrent findings, but merely on that account it is not open to the appellant to urge in his appeal to the Supreme Court that he is entitled to question the findings of the High Court.

In such a case, the Supreme Court will examine the evidence only for the purpose of seeing whether the judgment of the High Court is in accordance with the principles laid down by the Court in the matter of dealing with appeals against acquittals. If the Supreme Court finds that the High Court has given very good reasons for accepting the evidence of the prosecution witnesses and rejecting the explanation of the accused, and that the view taken by the High Court is the only view which could be reasonably taken in the case, then, the Supreme Court will not ordinarily go behind the findings of the High Court. These findings are certainly not concurrent findings, none the less, they are findings on questions of fact. Narayandas Bhagwandas v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1959 SC 1118 : 1959 CrLJ 1368 : (1959) 2 SCA 268.

[9780] ● Supreme Court not to enter into elaborate examination of evidence.—Ordinarily, the Supreme Court is not required to enter into an elaborate examination of the evidence, and it is not its practice to re-examine the findings of fact reached by the High Courts, particularly in a case where there is concurrence of opinion between the two Courts below. The present case, however, was an unusual one. The accused was charged and convicted of the offence of murder by poisoning, and on appeal, the High Court had confirmed the conviction. There was no direct evidence that the accused had administered a poison, and in fact no poison had been detected in the system of the deceased in the medical or toxicological examination. The case against the accused was thus entirely based on circumstantial evidence, relating to various items of the conduct of the accused, in connection with the deceased while she was alive, the disposal of her body after her death, and the disposal of her property both before and after her death. The inference of his guilt had been drawn by both the Courts below on an examination of a mass of evidence as a result of which a number of subsidiary findings had been arrived at as regards the various items of the conduct of the accused. On behalf of the accused, a variety of arguments were addressed to the Supreme Court whereby the evidence against the accused was sought to be explained away on hypotheses suggesting his innocence, and these arguments covered both the factual as well as the medical aspects of the case. In view of all these circumstances of an extraordinary nature, the Supreme Court considered that in this case a close examination once again of the whole evidence on record was necessary, in order that it could satisfy itself whether each conclusion on the separate aspects of the case arrived at by the Courts below, was supported by evidence and was just and proper, and also in order that the Court may be in a position to say what were the facts found by the Court on which its own decision was rested. The Court, therefore, departed in this case from its normal practice of refusing to re-examine the findings of fact on which the conclusions of the High Court are based, and decided to re-examine the entire evidence in the case. Anant Chintaman Lagu v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 500 : 1960 CrLJ 682 : (1960) 2 SCA 62 : 1960 SCJ 779 : (1960) 2 SCR 460 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 493 : 62 Bom LR 371.

[9781] ● Supreme Court competent to pass same order which High Court competent to pass.—In the exercise of its powers under Article 136, the Supreme Court is competent to pass the same orders which the High Court is, by the Code of Criminal Procedure, competent to pass. The sentence of death passed by the Sessions Court cannot be executed, under the Code, unless it has been confirmed by the High Court. Since the sentence passed in the instant case had not been confirmed by the High Court, the Supreme Court can pass the same order of confirmation of sentence in the exercise of its powers under Article 136. Accordingly, the sentence of death was confirmed. State of U.P. v. Deoman Upadhyaya, AIR 1960 SC 1125 : 1960 CrLJ 1504.

[9782] ● New plea—Complaint filing revision against acquittal.—In an application in revision to the High Court against an order of acquittal made by a complainant, if the accused/respondent feels that the revision proceeding is illegal or irregular by reason of some contravention of a provision in the Criminal Procedure Code, a contention on that ground must be raised at the hearing of that proceeding before the High Court itself, so as to afford to the High Court the opportunity to consider such question of law on its merits and to rectify the defect in procedure, if necessary, in an appropriate manner. If the accused/respondent has failed to raise such objection at the proper stage which is before the High Court itself, and the High Court has made an order in the exercise of its powers of revision setting aside the acquittal and remanding the case back to the trial Court by special leave against that order, the accused cannot be allowed to raise for the first time the point as to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. Madanraj v. Jalamchand Lodha, AIR 1960 SC 744 : 1960 CrLJ 1151.

[9783] ● No proof as to controlled price.—The conviction of the accused in this case was for the sale of cement at a price higher than the price fixed under a Cement Control Order. It was contended that the conviction was bad because no legal proof had been produced to show what the controlled price fixed under the Order was, and on the facts on record the Supreme Court accepted this contention. It was, however, urged on behalf of the State that this point had not been taken up in any of the Courts below and hence according to the normal practice of the Court, it should not be allowed to be raised for the first time in the appeal before the Court. Salekh Chand v. State of U.P., AIR 1960 SC 283 : 1960 CrLJ 423.

[9784] ● New plea—Raising of for first time.—Even though the point has been raised for the first time before the Court, as it has to be established that the appellant had sold the cement over a controlled price, conviction cannot be upheld unless there is legal proof as to what the controlled price was. Hence, it would be the duty of the Court to allow the point to be taken even at the late stage. Salekh Chand v. State of U.P., AIR 1960 SC 283 : 1960 CrLJ 423.

[9785] ● New points raised when point of law.—Even when the new points raised in the appeal are points of law, the Supreme Court will be reluctant to permit them to be raised for the first time at the hearing of the appeal in the Supreme Court, if they have not been raised by the appellant in the High Court and have not been urged in the petition for leave to appeal. Rehman Shagoo v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1960 SC 1 : 1960 CrLJ 126 : 1960 SCJ 172 : (1960) 1 SCR 680.

[9786] ● Order of acquittal made by Magistrate when bad.—In an appeal under Article 136, if the Supreme Court is satisfied that an order of acquittal made by the trial Magistrate was wrong and that the correct order which should have been made was an order of discharge, and that on an application in revision made by the aggrieved complainant in the case, the High Court has failed to make the necessary order rectifying the error, it is a fit case for interference by the Supreme Court. In such a case, the Court will do what the High Court could and should have done, and will make the proper order rectifying the error committed by the trial Magistrate. Abdul Rehman Mohamed Yusuf v. Mahomed Haji Ahmad Agbotwala, AIR 1960 SC 82 : 1960 CrLJ 158 : 1960 SCJ 87 : (1960) 1 SCR 749 : 1960 NLJ 209 : 1960 MPLJ 513 : 1960 ACrR 76 : 26 Cut LT 181 : 62 Bom LR 143 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 32.

[9787] ● Death Sentence Confirmation—By Supreme Court.—In the exercise of its power under Article 136, the Supreme Court can confirm a sentence of death passed by the Sessions Court, when it sets aside the order of the High Court reversing the order of the Sessions Court and acquitting the accused, and witness the order of conviction passed by the Sessions Court. State of U.P. v. Deoman Upadhyaya, AIR 1960 SC 1125 : 1960 CrLJ 1504 : (1960) 2 SCA 371 : 1960 ALJ 733 : 1960 AWR (HC) 568 : (1960) ACrR 361.

[9788] ● Application for custody of minor daughter.—Even when the matter under consideration is one of discretion which, under the law has been vested in the High Court, the Supreme Court will interfere in the exercise of its powers under Article 136, if it is satisfied that such discretion has not been judicially exercised, that the judgment of the High Court does not disclose any acceptable reason for its view, and that its order is clearly wrong and unsustainable. In the present case, the High Court had been moved on an application made under Section 491, CrPC for a writ of Habeas Corpus and an order against the respondent directing her to hand over to the applicant the custody of her child. The High Court rejected the application, and the applicant appealed to the Supreme Court by special leave. The High Court has refused to exercise its jurisdiction under Section 491 without assigning any acceptable reasons for doing so. The order of the High Court is set aside, and the matter is sent back, with a direction to the respondent to produce the child before the High Court forthwith for being made over to the applicant. Gohar Begum v. Suggi, AIR 1960 SC 93 : 1960 CrLJ 164 : 1960 SCJ 31 : (1960) 1 SCR 597 : 1960 ACrR 69 : 1960 Nag LJ 10 : 1960 AWR (HC) 52 : 62 Bom LR 54 : 1969 MLJ (Cri) 1 : 1960 MPLJ 10.

[9789] ● Appeal by special leave against order of High Court.—In an appeal by special leave against an order of the High Court in a matter which is within the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court, the question is not whether the Supreme Court would have come to the same conclusion if it were itself dealing with the matter in the exercise of inherent powers. What the Supreme Court has to decide is only whether the judgment under appeal is erroneous in law, so as to call for the Court's interference under Article 136.

In the present case, the High Court had refused to exercise its inherent power under Section 561-A, CrPC to quash a criminal proceeding at an interlocutory stage. On appeal under Article 136, the Supreme Court held that the order of the High Court could not be said to be erroneous in law, and hence it was not a fit case for interference. The appeal was dismissed. Kapur R.P. v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866 : 1960 CrLJ 1239 : (1961) 1 SCJ 59 : (1960) 3 SCR 388 : 1961 MLJ (Cri) 21 : ILR (1960) 2 Punj 456 : 1961 AWR (HC) 49 : 1961 ACrR 12.

[9790] ● Supreme Court not interfere with interlocutory orders.—The practice of the Supreme Court generally is that it will not interfere with interlocutory orders in the exercise of its powers under Article 136. In its very nature, an order of the High Court remanding a case for retrial does not finally decide the points in the case and it is essentially of an interlocutory character. The Supreme Court will refuse to depart from its usual practice, and will not interfere with an order of remand made by the High Court except for strong reasons.

In the instant case, the accused was charged under Section 380, Penal Code. The charge was that he had a khata with the complainant, that he had taken a loan of about Rs. 15,000, that he had kept with the complainant his jewels as a security against the loan, and that when he visited the complainant's place of business he had taken away those jewels. After the removal was discovered, the accused executed a document in which he admitted that he had taken away the jewels without the complainant's knowledge. At his trial the accused contended that the document had been executed by him under coercion, but this contention was rejected and the Magistrate had found that he had in fact removed the jewels. He, however, held that it could not be said that the jewels were in the possession of the complainant within the meaning of Section 378 and so the offence of theft had not been proved. He acquitted the accused on this ground. The complainant moved the High Court in revision against the order of acquittal, and the High Court held that the view of the Magistrate was unsustainable having regard to the facts which he himself had found. In the interest of justice, it set aside the order of acquittal and remanded the case back for disposal in accordance with law. The accused appealed to the Supreme Court by special leave against this order. In these circumstances, there is no reason to depart from the normal practice of the Supreme Court not to interfere with interlocutory orders. The appeal is dismissed. Madanraj v. Jalamchand Lodha, AIR 1960 SC 744 : 1960 CrLJ 1151.

[9791] ● Power of Supreme Court to review correctness of order of lower Court.—When deciding an appeal under Article 136, the Supreme Court has the power to review the correctness of any order made by any lower Court at any intermediate stage of the proceeding, whether it be an order of the trial Court or an order made by the High Court in revision. There is no rule that the accused must appeal against every order made against him at an intermediate stage of the proceeding, on the penalty that if he does not do so he forfeits for ever the benefit of consideration by the Supreme Court of the question whether the order in question was legal and proper. If the Supreme Court finds that an order made by the High Court at an intermediate stage of the proceeding was erroneous, the Court has the power to review the matter before it and to give the appellant the benefit of its decision, even though he may not have appealed against the order made by the High Court at the intermediate stage. In such a case, the respondent State cannot be allowed to contend that the order of the High Court not having been appealed from had become final and binding, whether it was right or wrong, nor can it be accepted that the existence of the order, even when it is held to be erroneous, must impede the Supreme Court from giving to the appellant the benefit of its decision. Ghose N. R. v. State of W.B., AIR 1960 SC 239 : 1960 CrLJ 289 : 1960 SCJ 532 : (1960) 2 SCR 58 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 428 : 1960 AWR (HC) 265 : 1960 ACrR 185.

[9792] ● New point.—A suggestion was made on behalf of the accused Chokhani that he might have shown the same amount both in the cash statement and in the journal statement. No such case, however, was raised in the Courts below or made in the appellant's statement of case. Hence, new plea was not allowed. R.K. Dalmia v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1962 SC 1821 : 1962 (2) CrLJ 805 : (1962) 32 Com Cas 699.

[9793] ● New plea as to invalidity of sanction.—When a plea as to the invalidity of the sanction given under Section 197, CrPC, on a particular ground has not been raised at any stage before that trial Court when the sanction order was passed, or before the High Court, and the State has had no opportunity of leading evidence to meet the point raised, the plea cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time before the Supreme Court. Chari, R.R. v. State of U.P., AIR 1962 SC 1573 : 1962 (2) CrLJ 510 : 1962 ACrR 403 : 1962 AWR (HC) 732.

[9794] ● Supreme Court in appeals under Article 134(1)(a) to assess afresh whole evidence on record.—In appeals falling under Article 134(1)(a), the Supreme Court must assesses afresh the value of the whole evidence on record. In such appeals, the practice of the Court in appeals by special leave under Article 136 will not be followed. The principle of non-interference with the concurrent findings of fact of the Courts below save when special circumstances exist, which is applied to appeal under Article 136, cannot apply to appeals preferred under Article 134(1)(a). Tarachand Damu Sutar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1962 SC 130 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 196 : (1962) 2 SCR 775 : 63 Bom LR 74 : 1962 ACrR 103 : 1962 AWR (HC) 135. (per HIDAYATULLAH and RAGHUBAR DAYAL, JJ.)

[9795] ● (Note :—In effect, this means that in appeals falling under Article 134(1)(a), which are appeals as of right, and not with special leave, the Supreme Court will constitute itself as a second Court of appeal on facts, and will review the whole evidence on record for itself, whatever be the findings of fact of the Court below.) Tarachand Damu Sutar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1962 SC 130 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 196 : (1962) 2 SCR 775 : 63 Bom LR 74 : 1962 ACrR 103 : 1962 AWR (HC) 135. (per HIDAYATULLAH and RAGHUBAR DAYAL, JJ.)

[9796] ● Question whether respondent submitted to jurisdiction of Magistrate—Question mixed question of law and fact.—The question whether the respondent to an application under Section 488, CrPC had submitted to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate before whom the application was made is a mixed question of fact and law. If the question has not been raised in the Courts below, the Supreme Court will not ordinarily allow such question to be raised for the first time in the appeal before it unless there are any exceptional circumstances which justify a departure from the normal practice of the Court. Jagir Kaur v. Jaswant Singh, AIR 1963 SC 1521 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 413 : 1963 SCD 896 : (1963) 1 SCA 166.

[9797] ● New point—Question as prejudice due to non-compliance with Section 342, CrPC.—The question whether prejudice had been caused to the accused by reason of non-compliance with the requirements of Section 342, CrPC., is a question of fact and it cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time in the appeal under Article 136, if it has not been raised before the trial Court or the High Court. Radha Kishan v. State of U.P., AIR 1963 SC 822 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 809 : 1963 ALJ 397 : 1963 BLJR 353 : (1963) 2 Lab LJ 667 : 1963 AWR (HC) 304 : 1963 ACrR 156.

[9798] ● Certificate of fitness—Mere delay in pronouncing judgment.—Under Article 134(1)(c), the High Court should not grant the certificate for appeal on such slender grounds. If the accused against whom the order of conviction is passed by the High Court has any real grievance on the ground that some of the important questions of fact raised in the appeal had not at all been dealt with in the judgment of the High Court, it was open to him to apply to the Supreme Court under Article 136, but such a ground is not a fit one for the grant of a certificate under Article 134(1)(c). Further, a mere ground of delay in giving a judgment is not a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court even if it is felt by the High Court that the delay might have led to omission to consider some question of fact. It is not open to the High Court to give certificate of fitness under Article 134(1)(c) merely because in its opinion the judgment of the High Court delivered by another Bench suffers from an error in regard to certain facts. Achut Adhicary v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1963 SC 1039 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 59 : (1963) 2 SCJ 92 : (1963) 2 SCR 47 : (1963) 2 SCA 210 : 1962 BLJR 983 : 65 Pun LR 171 : 1963 MLJ (Cri) 317 : 1962 (2) Ker LR 188 : 1962 SCD 763 : 1962 AWR (HC) 714.

[9799] ● Circumstantial evidence—Appreciation of.—In an appeal under Article 136, ordinarily the Supreme Court does not re-assess the evidence and re-examine the findings of fact reached by the Courts below particularly where there are concurrent findings by both the Courts below.

But where the appeal is from an order of conviction based solely on circumstantial evidence, and the question is whether the circumstances which are established are sufficient to lead to the irresistible conclusion that the accused is guilty and whether the conviction of the accused which is based solely on those circumstances is justified, the Court may in a case consider it expedient to examine the whole evidence for itself in order to satisfy itself as to whether the conviction is rightly based. Raghav Prapanna Tripathi v. State of U.P., AIR 1963 SC 74 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 70.

[9800] ● New point.—When a point raised before the Supreme Court is not a pure question of law but requires for its decision investigation of facts, it will not be allowed to be raised for the first time before the Supreme Court, if it has not been raised in the trial Court or even in the appeal to the High Court. A plea that sanction for prosecution under Section 196A, CrPC was given by the authority concerned without considering all the relevant facts and without following the procedure prescribed by law is not a pure question of law because it involves investigation of facts leading up to the sanction. Tulsi Ram v. State of U.P., AIR 1963 SC 666 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 623 : (1963) 2 SCJ 274 : 1963 MLJ (Cri) 434 : ILR (1963) 1 All 840.

[9801] ● Custom Officer acting under Section 167 Sea Customs Act not Tribunal.—A Customs Officer exercising his powers under Section 167 of the Sea Customs Act is not a "Tribunal". But the Central Board of Revenue and the Central Government exercising their appellate and revisional powers under Sections 190 and 191 of the Act are "Tribunals" within the meaning of Article 136(1), and appeal under Article 136 lies for the orders made by these Authorities in the exercise of their powers under the said sections. Indo-China Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. v. Additional Collector of Customs, Calcutta, AIR 1964 SC 1140 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 234 : (1964) 34 Com Cas 435.

[9802] ● Jurisdiction of High Court in cases of professional misconduct.—The jurisdiction exercised by the High Court in cases of professional misconduct by legal practitioners is neither "civil" nor "criminal" as these expressions are used in Articles 133 and 134 of the Constitution. In one aspect it is a jurisdiction over an officer of the Court who owes a duty to the Court, apart from his duty to his client. In another aspect, it is a statutory power and duty vested in the High Court under Section 10 of the Bar Councils Act. The purpose of the Act is to ensure that the highest standards of professional rectitude are maintained, so that the Bar can render its expert service to the public in general and the litigants in particular and thus discharge its main function of co-operating with the judiciary in the administration of justice according to law.

This delicate and responsible task is vested by a statute in the High Court and therefore the primary responsibility of discharging it rests with the High Court. Consequently, the Supreme Court is most reluctant to interfere with the orders of the High Court in this field, and will interfere only in exceptional cases where some question of principle is involved or where it is satisfied that any violation of the principles of natural justice has been taken place or that there has been a miscarriage of justice. Where, however, none of these factors are present, it is not the practice of the Court to permit the canvassing of the evidence on the record either for re-appraising it or to determine whether it should be accepted or not. In appeals under Article 136 from the orders made by the High Court in the exercise of its powers under the Bar Councils Act, findings of the High Court on questions of fact are not open before the Supreme Court and the Court would only consider whether on the facts found, the charge of professional misconduct is established. Such is the limited nature of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in appeals under Article 136 challenging the correctness of the findings of the High Court in matters under the Bar Councils Act and the principles which it would observe in dealing with them. Ratnam, P.J. v. D. Kanikaram, AIR 1964 SC 244 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 146 : 1964 SCD 136 : (1964) 1 ALT 121.

[9803] ● Appeals from sentence of fine does not abate.—Appeals under Article 136 from sentences of fine must be permitted to be continued by the legal representatives of the deceased appellant. The same principles on which appeals under the Code of Criminal Procedure from sentences of fine are allowed to be continued under Section 431 of the Code, apply equally to appeals to the Supreme Court, and if they can be continued when arising under the Code, there is no reason why they should not be allowed to be continued when arising under the Constitution. In Pranab Kumar Mitra v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1959 SC 144, the Court has held that a revision petition from a sentence of fine can be continued after the death of the petitioner by his legal heirs. The principle on which this decision is based is that the sentence of fine affects the property of the deceased in the hands of his legal representatives. That being the principle, it is just and proper to allow also an appeal to continue but even there the sentence affects the property of the deceased in the hands of his heirs. However, the position is different where the sentence is of imprisonment, and not of fine, Such a sentence becomes infructuous on the death of the accused. The sentence does not affect the property of the deceased in the hands of his heirs. The sentence is entirely personal in its effect, and on the death of the person on whom the sentence was passed, there is nothing more left to be done about it. In such a case, the legal representatives of the deceased are not entitled to continue the appeal after his death. Bondada Gajapathi Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1964 SC 1645 : 1964 CrLJ 598.

[9804] ● Charge not invalid—No objection taken.—Where the accused has not raised any objection to the charge framed against him either before the trial Court or before the High Court on the ground that the charge was defective and that he was misled in his defence as a result of the error or irregularity in the charge, the Supreme Court will not allow the objection to be raised for the first time in the appeal under Article 136, even though there is substance in the contention that the charge as framed was lacking in the particulars required to be stated in the charge. Ram Sagar Pandit v. State of Bihar, 1964 (1) CrLJ 65 : (1963) 2 SCR 652 : (1963) 2 SCJ 565.

[9805] ● Plea of mala fide against Govt.—The plea of mala fides against the Government must always be made in the pleadings before the High Court or the trial Court. The plea cannot be heard if it has been raised for the first time in the application for special leave under Article 136. Makhan Singh Tarsikka v. State of Punjab, AIR 1964 SC 1120 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 217 : (1964) 2 SCA 739 : 1964 SCD 201 : 1964 Cur LJ (SC) 1.

[9806] ● Appeal in habeas corpus matter.—Generally speaking, where the detenu whose appeal before the Supreme Court in a habeas corpus matter has been admitted is released by the Government before the appeal comes up for hearing, no useful purpose would be served by the Court deciding the appeal. However, the position is different where the earlier order of detention which was the subject-matter of the appeal has been withdrawn by the Government on the ground of a technical defect and a fresh order of detention is passed at the same time, and the detenu is immediately re-arrested under the fresh order of detention after his release from detention under the withdrawn earlier order. In such a case, the interests of justice demand that the point at issue in the pending appeal should be decided because in substance the same detention continues and the points of law raised in the pending appeal against earlier order of detention will apply equally to the fresh order of detention. There is nothing to preclude the Supreme Court from deciding an appeal before it on the merits even though the order from which the appeal has arisen has been revoked by the Government, though ordinarily it would not do so, if it appears to it that it would be in the interests of justice to decide the points raised in the appeal, or that they are points of law of general importance and are likely to arise in many other similar cases. Godavari Sugar Mills Ltd. v. S.B. Kamble, AIR 1964 SC 1128 : (1964) 2 CrLJ 222.

[9807] ● High Court ordering complaint to be filed against appellants.—In an appeal against the order of the High Court directing its Registrar to make a complaint under Section 476, CrPC against a person for his prosecution for offences under Sections 193, 199 and 211 of the Penal Code, the Supreme Court will ordinarily do no more than examine whether the High Court has fairly considered the facts to reach the conclusion—

(a) that prima facie there is a good reason to launch the prosecution,

(b) that there is a reasonable prospect of conviction, and

(c) that it is expedient in the interest of justice to order a prosecution.

If the Supreme Court is satisfied that the High Court has fairly and correctly viewed the case from this angle, it would not ordinarily interfere with the order made by the High Court. Hari Das v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1964 SC 1773 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 737.

[9808] ● Presumption of regularity in respect of official and judicial acts.—A question whether there has or has not been compliance with the requirements of a statutory provision in the proceeding taken under any Act by the High Court is entirely a question of fact, and if the objection has not been raised at any stage of the proceeding before the High Court, the objection will not be allowed to be raised for the first time before the Supreme Court. Official and Judicial acts must be presumed to be regularly done, unless the question about their regularity has been raised at the proper stage. Ratnam P.J. v. D. Kanikaram, AIR 1964 SC 244 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 146 : 1964 SCD 136 : (1964) 1 ALT 121.

[9809] ● Interference in appeal—Ordinarily Supreme Court will not.—It cannot be overlooked that six of the accused are women. From the circumstances of the case, it appears that they had not taken any active part in the occurrence and that they had come to the field along with their men folk, partly to save their fields from being taken possession of and partly to save their men folk. The Courts below had not taken any notice of these circumstances. In the peculiar circumstances of the case interference with the sentence passed is called for, in the interests of justice.

The sentence is reduced to the period of 2 years and 9 months already under-gone, in respect of the six women, and two of the male accused who are 70 years of age in consideration of their old age. Matri v. State of Punjab, AIR 1964 SC 986 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 57 : 1964 SCD 557.

[9810] ● Conviction by High Court—Supreme Court jurisdiction to interfere.—Principles governing the scope of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in appeals under Article 136 against the order of the High Court setting aside the order of acquittal passed by the trial Court and convicting the accused. The Supreme Court will not interfere with the findings of fact reached by the High Court, if it has followed the principles governing the proper approach by the High Court in such appeals laid down by the Supreme Court and has carefully considered the entire evidence in arriving at its findings, and the case is not one of an exceptional nature which calls for interfere in the interest of justice. Nihal Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 26 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 105 : 1964 SCD 853 : (1965) 1 SCJ 160 : 1965 MLJ (Cri) 65.

[9811] ● Question of law or fact not raised before High Court.—It may be conceded that if a question of fact or a question of law which plainly arises on the record is relevant and material, and it can be argued without any further evidence being taken, then, if that point was urged before the trial Court and was rejected by it, it may, in a proper case, be permissible to the appellant before the Supreme Court to ask the Court to consider that point in the appeal under Article 136, even though it was not urged before the High Court and so there is no decision on that point in the judgment of the High Court. In a criminal proceeding of the character where sentences of death are imposed on the appellants, it would not be proper to refuse to consider a relevant and material plea of fact or law only on the ground that it was not urged before the High Court. Even where the appellant is not entitled as a matter of right, to obtain a decision on that point from the Supreme Court because it was not urged before the High Court, there is no hard and fast rule prohibiting the raising of such a plea in appeals under Article 136, and in view of the gravity of the sentence of death, the Court would, in a fit case, allow the appellant to raise such a plea. Masatti v. State of U.P., AIR 1965 SC 202 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 226 : 1964 SCD 980 : (1965) 1 SCJ 605 : (1964) 8 SCR 133 : 1965 MLJ (Cri) 312.

[9812] ● No proof that Govt. sanctioned lodging of complaint.—It was urged for the appellant that there was no proof that the Government had sanctioned the lodging of the complaint. We did not allow this point to be urged. The said point had not been taken in the Courts below and was not even taken in the petition for special leave. What was urged in the petition for special leave was that one of the questions of law which arose in the case for consideration was whether the charge framed was the one for which the sanction was granted or the requisite complaint was filed. That question was very much different from the question whether the Government did grant the sanction or whether the granting of the sanction by the Government had been duly proved in the case. Sahib Singh Mehra v. State of U.P., AIR 1965 SC 1451 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 434 : 1965 SCD 600 : (1965) 1 SCWR 571.

[9813] ● Certificate of fitness—Discretion of High Court when to be exercised.—There is no doubt whatever that sub-clause (c) of Article 134 does not confer an unlimited jurisdiction on the High Courts. The power gives a discretion, but discretion must always be exercised on some judicial principles. A similar clause in Article 133, which allows appeals in civil cases, has been consistently interpreted as including only those cases which involve a question of general public importance. That test need not necessarily be applied to a criminal case but it is clear that mere questions of fact should not be referred for decision. The Constitution does not contemplate a criminal jurisdiction for this Court except in those two cases covered by clauses (a) and (b) which provide for appeals as of right. The High Court, before it certifies the case, must be satisfied that it involves some substantial question of law or principle. In a criminal appeal, the High Court can consider the case on law and fact and if the High Court entertains doubt about the guilt of the accused or the sufficiency of the evidence, it can always give the benefit to the accused there and then. It is not necessary that the High Court should first convict him and then grant him a certificate so that this Court, if it thought fit, reverses the decision. It is thus obvious that only a case involving something more than mere appreciation of evidence is contemplated by the Constitution for the grant of a certificate. What that may be, will depend on the circumstances of the case but the High Court should be slow to certify cases. The High Court should not overlook that there is a further remedy by way of special leave which may be involved in cases where the certificate is refused. Babu v. State of U.P., AIR 1965 SC 1467 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 539 : (1965) 1 SCWR 936 : (1965) 2 SCA 296 : 1965 SCD 1075 : 1966 BLJR 61 : 1966 ALJ 44.

[9814] ● High Court setting aside conviction.—The true legal position is that if an accused person is convicted by the trial Court and on appeal to the High Court, his conviction is set aside, the State is entitled to apply to the High Court for a certificate under Article 134(1)(c). Such an application cannot be rejected in limine on the ground that it is incompetent; it has to be entertained and considered and decided on merits. State of U.P. v. R.B. Agarwal, AIR 1966 SC 1135 : 1966 CrLJ 815 : (1966) 2 SCA 202 : 1966 SCD 770 : (1966) 2 SCJ 673 : 1966 ALJ 628 : 1966 BLJR 656 : 1966 AWR (HC) 483 : 1966 ACrR 300 : 1966 MLJ (Cri) 695.

[9815] ● New plea that money to accused not entrusted in his capacity as clerk.—The new plea, that moneys were not entrusted to the accused in his capacity as a clerk or as part of his duties, not being raised in the High Court and being dependent on evidence, cannot be raised before the Supreme Court. Madan Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1967 SC 1590 : 1967 CrLJ 1401 : 1967 SCD 1036 : (1967) 2 SCWR 587 : 1967 AWR (HC) 817 : 1967 ACrR 523 : 69 Pun LR 846.

[9816] ● Finality of judgment or order—Test.—Where a Magistrate ordered the filing of the complaint against the appellant, the parties to that controversy were the State and the appellant and the controversy between them was whether the appellant had committed the offence charged against him in that complaint. The appeal filed by the appellant before the Sessions Judge was against that order, the controversy therein being whether the Magistrate was justified in filing it. Thus the two controversies were distinct though the parties were the same. When the Sessions Judge held that the complaint was justified in respect of the offence under Section 205, read with Section 114, IPC, and was not justified in respect of the other offences, his judgment in the absence of a revision by the State against it finally disposed of that part of the controversy, that is, that the complaint in respect of offences under Sections 467 and 468 r/w Section 114, was not justified. When the appellant filed a revision in respect of the complaint for the remaining offence under Section 205 r/w Section 114, the High Court dismissed that revision. That order of dismissal disposed of that controversy between the parties and the proceeding regarding that question as to whether the complaint in that regard was justified or not was finally decided. The order passed by the High Court was a final order within the meaning of Article 134(1)(c). As the question being one of fact only and there being no substantial question of law or principle, the High Court was not competent to certify the case under Article 134(1)(c) and the appeal was dismissed. Mohan Lal v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1968 SC 733 : 1968 CrLJ 876 : (1968) 1 SCWR 640 : (1968) 1 SCA 502 : 1968 SCD 699 : (1968) 2 SCR 685 : (1968) 2 SCJ 548 : 1968 MLJ (Cri) 583 : 1968 MLW (Cri) 102 : 17 Law Rep 47 : 9 Guj LR 536.

[9817] ● High Court accepting evidence of prosecution despite discrepancies.—Where the High Court accepted the prosecution evidence despite certain discrepancies, the Supreme Court declined to interfere. Karnesh Kumar v. State of U.P., AIR 1968 SC 1402 : 1968 CrLJ 1655 : 1968 SCD 1097 : (1968) 2 SCWR 817.

[9818] ● Plea that respondents not exhausted alternative remedies.—Article 136 and Bombay Police Act, 1951, Section 56.—Where the High Court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction under Articles 226 and 227, has not chosen to reject the applications filed by the respondents, on the ground that they had not exhausted their remedy of appeal under Section 60 of the Bombay Police Act, the Supreme Court does not interfere with the order of the High Court entertaining the writ petitions. State of Gujarat v. Mehbub Khan, AIR 1968 SC 1468 : 1969 CrLJ 26 : (1968) 2 SCA 541 : 1968-3 SCR 746 : 1969 SCD 134 : (1969) 1 SCJ 195 : 1969 MLJ (Cri) 130 : 10 Guj LR 188 : (1968) 2 UmNP 495.

[9819] ● New point—Point not taken either in Trial Court or High Court.—Where it was argued on behalf of the appellants that the rough notes of the statements given by one of them to the Customs Officers had been destroyed and that the defence was thereby prejudiced, the Supreme Court held that the Counsel ought not to be allowed to raise that new point for the first time in that Court, not having taken the same in the Courts below. Hussain Umar v. Dalipsinhji, AIR 1970 SC 45 : 1970 CrLJ 9 : (1970) 1 SCJ 149 : 1970 SCD 58 : 1970 SCCrR 76 : (1970) 1 SCR 130 : 1970 MLJ (Cri) 68 : 72 Bom LR 774.

[9820] ● Food Inspector's authority to file complaint.—The accused cannot be permitted to question the authority of the Food Inspector to file the complaint on behalf of the local authority for the first time in the Supreme Court. Official acts must be deemed to have been done according to law. If the accused had challenged the authority of the Food Inspector to file the complaint, the trial Court would have gone into that question. Bhian Singh v. Sahrampur Municipality, AIR 1970 SC 318 : 1970 CrLJ 492 : 1970 SCCrR 251 : (1970) 1 SCA 349 : (1970) 1 SCJ 238 : (1970) 1 SCR 736 : 1970 MLJ (Cri) 113 : 1970 MLW (Cri) 42.

[9821] ● Supreme Court declining to accept certificate under Article 134(1)(1) can apply appellant to apply under Article 136.—The right to appeal to the Supreme Court is regulated by Article 134. The power under Article 134(1)(c) conferred on the High Court discretion which is to be exercised on judicial principles. That jurisdiction is not that of an ordinary Court of criminal appeal. It is manifest that before granting a certificate under sub-clause (c) the High Court must be satisfied that it involves some substantial question of law or principle. The certificate itself should give an indication what substantial question of law or principle is involved in the appeal to bring it within the scope of Article 134(1)(c). Where the Court has found that the certificate is not in compliance with the requirement of Article 134 (1)(c), it has declined to accept the certificate. There are instances where, however, the Supreme Court after declining to accept the certificate has allowed the appellant to apply under Article 136 in proper cases. State of Assam v. Abdul Noor, AIR 1970 SC 1365 : 1970 CrLJ 1264 : 1970 SCD 358 : 1970 ACrR 353 : 72 Pun LR 585 : AssLR 1970 (SC) 47.

[9822] ● Word "certify" postulates exercise of judicial discretion by High Court.—The word "certify" in clause (c) of Article 134 (1) postulates exercise of judicial discretion by the High Court and the certificate should ordinarily show on the face of it that the direction was invoked and properly exercised. The Supreme Court should be in a position to know that the High Court has not acted mechanically but has applied its mind. A certificate under this clause is impermissible on questions of fact and when a case does not disclose a substantial question of law or principle, then the certificate granted by the High Court is liable to be revoked by the Supreme Court, though such prima facie non-disclosure would not by itself automatically invalidate the certificate. Where the certificate vaguely states that several questions of law are involved and no substantial question of law was made out at the bar, the certificate was clearly misconceived. Sushil Kumar v. Joy Shankar, AIR 1971 SC 1543 : 1970 SCCrR 328 : (1970) 2 SCJ 461 : (1970) 2 SCR 770 : 1970 MLJ (Cri) 723.

[9823] ● Supreme Court in criminal appeal not review evidence afresh.—The Supreme Court does not review the evidence afresh in a criminal case unless it is shown that the High Court had failed to take into consideration any material piece of evidence or had approached the case from a wholly wrong point of view. Bankey Lal v. State of U.P., AIR 1971 SC 2233 : (1970) 1 SCC 504 : 1971 CrLJ 1540 : 1971 SCD 400 : 1971 UJ (SC) 330 : 1971 CivAppR (SC) 239.

[9824] ● Findings of facts based on appreciation of evidence.—Findings of facts based on appreciation of evidence cannot be challenged before the Supreme Court. Babulal v. State of Bihar, AIR 1971 SC 1277 : (1971) 1 SCC 767 : 1971 CrLJ 1075 : 1971 UJ (SC) 500 : 1971 CrAppR (SC) 445 : 1971 ACrR 437 : 1971 AWR (HC) 575.

[9825] ● Interferes by Supreme Court with sentence when.—The Supreme Court interferes with sentence only when it is established that it is harsh or unjust in the facts and circumstances of the case. Sometimes consideration of age has also occasioned interference, and in sentences of fine in cases of violation of statutory offence. Surta v. State of Haryana, AIR 1971 SC 803 : (1971) 3 SCC 180 : 1971 CrLJ 668 : 1971 UJ (SC) 305.

[9826] ● Question of principle when settled by Supreme Court.—If the question of principle has been settled by the Supreme Court, the application of the principle to the facts of a particular case does not make the question a fit one for the Supreme Court within Article 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution. State of Kerala v. R.E. D'Souza, AIR 1971 SC 832 : (1971) 1 SCC 533 : 1971 CrLJ 689 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 257 : 1971 UJ (SC) 363 : 1971 KLT 262 : 22 Fac LR 178 : (1971) 1 Lab LJ 307 : 1971 Lab IC 719 : 39 FJR 65.

[9827] ● View of High Court found not to be sustainable.—Where the view of the High Court is not sustainable on the statutory language and on the Import Control Policy, the Supreme Court is entitled to convert an acquittal into conviction where the respondents were fully aware of the said policy and were guilty of malpractices and of abuse of the import licence with the object of making money. Dy. Chief Controller v. K.T. Kosalram, AIR 1971 SC 1283 : (1971) 1 SCC 767 : 1971 CrLJ 1081 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 364 : 1971 SCD 99 : 1971 CrAppR (SC) 53.

[9828] ● Habeas corpus—Non-production of Jail record.—Where in a writ of habeas corpus, the jail record regarding the dates on which the detenu was said to have been produced before the Magistrate for the purpose of the hearing of the remand applications was not produced despite the High Court calling for its production, no prejudice had been caused to the detenu since the jail record could not have proved anything more than what the jail Superintendent's report proved. Hence, the Supreme Court cannot interfere with the detention order. Gauri Shankar v. State of Bihar, AIR 1972 SC 711 : (1972) 1 SCC 564 : 1972 CrLJ 505 : 1972 SCD 240 : 1972 PatLJR 252.

[9829] ● Onus to establish alibi on accused.—Article 136 and Evidence Act, Section 103.—The onus to establish alibi is on the accused and if there is no cogent ground for disagreeing with the High Court that the said onus has not been discharged on the evidence on record, the Supreme Court will not interfere. Chandrika Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 1972 SC 109 : 1972 CrLJ 22 : (1972) 4 SCC 140 : (1972) 1 SCJ 492 : 1972 MLJ (Cri) 271.

[9830] ● Supreme Court not interfere with enhancement sentence by High Court.—Article 136 and CrPC, Section 386/Section 423(1-A) of the old Code.—Where the High Court enhanced the sentence under its powers under Section 423(1-A) with reference to the facts and circumstances of the case, it cannot be said to suffer from any infirmity or lack of appreciation of facts. It cannot also be said that the High Court was not justified in observing that the sentence passed by the trial Court was lenient in the circumstances of the case. It would be wrong to interfere with the sentence passed by the High Court unless supported by rules and principles in the administration of justice. The Supreme Court will interfere with sentence only when it is established that the sentence is harsh or unjust in the facts and circumstances of the case or in view of the age or in cases of violation of statutory offences. Nabi Bux v. State of M.P., AIR 1972 SC 495 : 1972 CrLJ 300 : (1972) 1 SCC 7 : 1972 JabLJ 152 : 1972 MPLJ 308 : 1972 MahLJ 233 : 1972 MPWR 513.

[9831] ● Question of sentence matter of discretion.—Though it is true that the question of sentence is a matter of discretion and when the discretion has been properly exercised along accepted judicial lines, an appellate Court should not interfere to the detriment of an accused person except for very strong reason which must be disclosed on the face of the judgment. If a substantial punishment has been given for the offence of which a person is found guilty, after taking due regard to all the relevant circumstances, normally there should be no interference by an appellate Court. On the other hand, interference will be justified when the sentence is manifestly inadequate or unduly lenient in the particular circumstances of a case. It will also be justified when the failure to impose a proper sentence may result in miscarriage of justice. K. Moideen v. State of Kerala, AIR 1973 SC 467 : (1973) 3 SCC 469 : 1973 CrLJ 671 : 1973 SCD 69.

[9832] ● Sentence—Interference by Supreme Court.—Ordinarily the Supreme Court does not interfere on a question of sentence but where the High Court and the Courts below awarded the sentence by taking into account inadmissible evidence when no previous conviction was shown, the Supreme Court reduced the sentence. Nathusingh v. State of H.P., AIR 1973 SC 2783 : (1974) 3 SCC 584 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 62 : 1974 CrLJ 11.

[9833] ● Death sentence—Reduction of.—Apart from the question of what sentence should have been imposed by the trial Court, it is open to this Court under Article 136 to see what sentence permissible under the law would meet the ends of justice when this Court is called upon to consider that question. Assuming the trial Court was justified in imposing the capital sentence on the appellant as he was clearly on terms of improper intimacy with the deceased and was perhaps overcome by a sense of jealousy or indignation of what he thought was unfaithfulness on the part of the deceased, the long lapse of time since the imposition of the capital sentence by the trial Court and the consideration of the question of sentence by this Court, constituted a relevant ground for reducing the sentence to life imprisonment. N. Sreeramulu v. State of A.P., AIR 1973 SC 2551 : (1974) 3 SCC 314 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 940 : 1973 CrLJ 1775 : 1973 SCD 549.

[9834] ● Appeal by special—Leave—New point.—Where a point regarding the applicability of Section 218, IPC, was not canvassed at the trial Court or in the High Court and it requires elucidation of facts, the same cannot be allowed at the stage of appeal to the Supreme Court. Sathi Prasad v. State of U.P., AIR 1973 SC 448 : (1972) 3 SCC 613 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 659 : 1973 CrLJ 344.

[9835] ● Scope of—Appeal by special leave limited.—While granting special leave for appeal the scope of the appeal was limited to the question whether the Probation of Offenders Act applied to the case after considering the whole case. Where the counsel for the appellant contended that the offence for which he was convicted was not made out, the Supreme Court held that it was not open to reconsideration on a point which was open at the time of the argument on the special leave application and the order passed at the time of admission of the application was final and not open to reconsideration and the scope of the appeal should be confined within the limitation specified in the order granting special leave. Jagdev Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1973 SC 2427 : (1974) 3 SCC 412 : 1973 CrLJ 1614.

[9836] ● Summary dismissal of—Appeal by High Court—Propriety.—Where the appeal in the High Court did raise points which were not only arguable but are also substantial requiring critical scrutiny and serious appraisal and evaluation of the prosecution evidence and the circumstance of the case, in view of the lengthy judgment of the trial Court, the importance of the opinion of the High Court on arguable points requiring consideration by that Court when questions of fact or law are open to challenge by the appellant, cannot be over-emphasised. Rajendrapaul v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1973 SC 1180 : (1973) 4 SCC 31 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 672 : 1973 CrLJ 1171 : 1973 Cur LJ 410.

[9837] ● Appeal when raises questions of fact and law.—Where in an appeal to the High Court raises questions of fact and law which cannot be said to be unsubstantial or not arguable, the High Court should not dismiss the appeal summarily by the solitary word "dismissed", but should make a speaking order indicating its reasons for repelling the contentions raised by the appellant in support of the appeal in that Court, for the reasons for dismissal would have been of valuable assistance to the Supreme Court in finally disposing of the appeal on its merits. K.K. Jain v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1973 SC 243 : (1973) 3 SCC 299 : 1973 CrLJ 284 : 1972 SCD 1077.

[9838] ● New plea involving question of fact.—The argument that the Food Inspector took the sample without calling any panch witnesses is one which involves questions of fact and the Supreme Court cannot allow the same to be raised before it for the first time. Chittaranjan Das v. State of Orissa, AIR 1973 SC 2708 : (1974) 3 SCC 383 : 1973 CrLJ 1835.

[9839] ● New plea.—Where the point raised for the first time in the Supreme Court is a pure question of law, not involving any further investigation of fact, the Supreme Court permitted it to be raised before it. The question was whether the prosecution against the appellant under Section 29 of the Police Act was barred by limitation under Section 42 of the Act. The Court held that it was barred by limitation. Pritam Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1973 SC 1354 : (1971) 1 SCC 653 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 282 : 1973 CrLJ 1152 : 1971 SCD 529 : (1971) 3 SCR 971 : 1972 MLW (Cri) 273.

[9840] ● Constitutional validity of statutory provision—New point.—Where the question challenging the constitutional validity of a statutory provision is raised in the Supreme Court for the first time, it can be allowed to be raised being a pure question of law. Santokh Singh v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1973 SC 1091 : (1973) 1 SCC 659 : 1973 CrLJ 846.

[9841] ● Certificate of fitness for appeal.—The word "certify" in the Article is a strong word postulating the exercise of judicial discretion in determining if the question requiring decision by the Supreme Court involves a matter of principle or a substantial question of law of great general importance. Such certificate should not be given as a matter of course on the mere ground that the impugned decision is considered to be erroneous. It is not to be granted so as to convert the Supreme Court into an ordinary Court of further appeal. State of Bihar v. Bhagirath, AIR 1973 SC 2198 : (1973) 2 SCC 257 : 1973 CrLJ 1184 : 1973 SCD 425.

[9842] ● Appreciation of evidence by Courts below—Interference.—The Supreme Court normally does not interfere with the appraisement of evidence of the trial Court and the High Court, but that would not prevent the Supreme Court from interfering if it is found on scrutiny of the evidence that it suffers from glaring infirmities. Where the appeal to the Supreme Court was not under Article 136 but under Section 2 (a) of the Supreme Court (Enlargement of Criminal Appellate Jurisdiction) Act, 28 of 1970, it was, therefore, only proper that the evidence should be appraised by the Supreme Court with respect to all the accused persons, in order to avoid conflict in the conclusions. Apren Joseph v. State of Kerala, AIR 1973 SC 1 : (1973) 3 SCC 114 : 1973 CrLJ 185 : (1972) 2 SCWR 734 : 1972 SCD 1143.

[9843] ● Appeal against acquittal.—In an appeal against acquittal by special leave under Article 136, the Supreme Court has, no doubt, powers to interfere with findings of fact, no distinction being made between judgments of acquittal and conviction. The Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere with the appreciation of evidence or on findings of fact unless the High Court has acted perversely or otherwise improperly or there has been a grave miscarriage of justice, or where it is found that grave injustice has been done by the High Court on plainly untenable grounds or the view taken by it is clearly unreasonable on the evidence on record. State of U.P. v. Iftakhar Khan, AIR 1973 SC 863 : (1973) 1 SCC 512 : 1973 CrLJ 636.

[9844] ● Conclusion of High Court final when.—The conclusions of the High Court are final unless some serious defect in its appraisal of evidence or failure of justice or grave injustice is pointed out. Ranbir v. State of Punjab, AIR 1973 SC 1409 : (1973) 2 SCC 444 : 1973 CrLJ 1120.

[9845] ● Criminal jurisdiction scope.—As a normal rule the Supreme Court does not proceed to review the evidence in criminal appeals under the Article, despite its apparent broad phraseology, unless there is some serious legal defect or a grave irregularity is committed by the Court below in reading the evidence and such illegality or irregularity has resulted in miscarriage of justice. The defects in the trial or irregularity of procedure attracting the Supreme Court's power of interference under this Article may, inter alia, relate to misreading of evidence or pertain to illegal or erroneous admission or exclusion of evidence, but such defects or errors must cause failure of justice. A mere technical defect or error of inconsequential nature does not call for interference. Liyakat Mian v. State of Bihar, AIR 1973 SC 807 : (1973) 4 SCC 39 : 1973 CrLJ 584 : (1973) 1 SCWR 287.
